0 2007 1290468 5
California State Library

Accessions No. 110723 Received NOV 1899

Class

no. 4 Jan. 23 missing

This paper not to be taken from the library
11723

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 1 SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 2, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS.

CLARENCE EDDY TESTING THE ST. IGNATIUS ORGAN

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 2, 1897

CONTENTS

Editorials . . . . . 2-3
The Passing of Abe Warner . . . . . 4
The Czar and the Christ: an address by General Barnes . 5
Things and People; by The Witness . . . . . 6
The Two Funerals: a story from the French . . . . 6
Pax Vobiscum: a poem by Lucius Harwood Foote . . 6
A Park for Christmas . . . . . 7
The Latin Quarter Christmas . . . . . 7
View of Los Angeles' New Park . . . . . 8
Inside an Organ; by Frank Norris . . . . . 9
A Revolt: a story from the French . . . . . 9
A Debutante's Diary . . . . . 10
Meredith Parodied . . . . . 11
Latest Fiction in Review . . . . . 12-13
Harmony in Gowns . . . . . 14

THE FUTURE OF MAYOR PHELAN.

Within a few days Mr. James D. Phelan, our Mayor-elect, will assume the duties and wisely or unwisely wield the meagre powers vouchsafed by our patchwork Consolidation Act to our municipal chief magistrate. Although it is an achievement of no mean character to be selected to govern the city of one's birth while yet in early manhood, it is reasonable to assume that this young gentleman's ambitions are not limited to the narrow boundaries of municipal political possibilities. To be a governor is a something such a man might well aspire to; indeed, a United States Senatorship is among the possibilities of his future. Unfortunately, perhaps, for Mr. Phelan, he is respectable and is a Democrat. To hold the allegiance of the noisy and unthinking—and one might venture to say the predominating wing of that party in California—something of pyrotechnic politics is a necessity, something of demagogy is demanded and something of hatred toward the rich—the very class to which Mr. Phelan naturally belongs—is expected as a matter of course. It is upon these very rocks and shoals that Mr. Phelan may wreck the political bark in which he hopes to sail to future political fame and honor. To avoid these dangers calls not so much for an exercise of rare sagacity and skill as for a strict adherence to broad principles of right. In his predecessor he may find a most elaborate example of a Mayor who courted and toyed with all the things a decent man in public life should most avoid. The reputation that Mayor Sutro has so industricusly and indelibly fixed upon himself is not one that a sober-minded, self-respecting man would care to carry, or carrying, display with any pride. Among men whose good opinions are to be prized as the reward of intelligence, Mayor Sutro is regarded very largely as a buffoon. The rabble he has pleased, no doubt, and by persistently and malignantly attacking particular interests has succeded in fastening the impression among the unthinking of our community that he is a very honest and very good old man.

Unfortunately for Mr. Phelan too, the journalistic spokesman for his party is a very rabid, very unreasonable and very radical opponent of anything that smacks of conservatism or is flavored with fairness toward our railway institutions. A public man of the character of Mr. Phelan cannot afford to follow the lead or adopt the policies of the likes or dislikes of a party journal such as this. To do so would mean political ruin and a loss of confidence among men whose good opinion he would most prize. Within the scope and jurisdiction of his office he is expected to deal out justice with even and impartial hand to all. If matters pertaining to any of these corporations come properly before him, then in good conscience he may give out his determination for or against the pending measure. But if he steps aside from the line of his sworn duty and casts the support that popularly attaches to one in his high office, even in matters foreign to his jurisdiction, then he establishes a precedent that may lead to political dangers now unseen but not undiscernable.

We are solicitous that Mr. Phelan's administration be successful, for to the type of man he is, or most naturally should be, we look with much hope to the future. Governed by well defined and natural principles he must succeed, but the first rule of his official life should be to negative any proposition that squints toward that character of over-officious zeal that prompts one to descend from official duties to officious intermeddling for the purpose of pandering to a popular whim. Set a contrary precedent and there will come a time when he must refuse to engage in some proposed performance and suffer through the failure more than though he had at first firmly refused similar overtures and stood by the principle that discreetly limits the scope of his public undertakings to the boundaries defined by the law under which he must serve. Rich himself, it seems almost imperative that Mr. Phelan should do something to indicate his lack of sympathy with the "classes" and his sympathy with the "masses." If he has further political ambitions—and we are assured he has—to satisfy the element of society that calls for reprisals on the rich, there is danger that he may get upon the thin ice of demagogy simply to give evidence to the world of the unfettered condition of his mind, and to demonstrate that wealth has not spoiled him. The Wave supported Mr. Phelan for Mayor because it considered him the fittest candidate for the position. We trust his administration may so fortify our judgment as to entitle him to further support for further honors.

GLADSTONE.

On Tuesday last Gladstone and his friends celebrated at his home the eighty-seventh anniversary of his birth, and those who saw him on that day prophesied he would see the incoming of the twentieth century. There is in this man's long life of distinguished public service an appeal to the sentiment of reverential affection of men of all nations. Gladstone is not alone the "Grand Old man" of England, but is as well the "Grand Old Man" of America, the venerated statesman and respected savant of all peoples, no matter whether speaking the English tongue or any other. His public career began in 1832 and has continued without a break to this time. Although he retired three years ago from the leadership of his party, he is yet the animating spirit of the great body of English Liberals. His recent denunciation of the Armenian outrages, his appeal to the humane spirit of the English people, was no doubt the moving cause which brought about the speedy union between England, Russia and France to compel Turkey to stay the hand of wanton murder. Gladstone, more than any other man of this century, represents its progressive spirit. In history he will live not only as the greatest of Chancellors of the Exchequer, the most remarkable parliamentary debater of our time, a political leader of exceptional magnetism, force and adroitness, but pre-eminently will he be remembered as a statesman who as he grew older he kept pace with the progressive spirit of his age and who became more liberal as the years advanced and multiplied. His career has been peculiar in this—from his boyhood he has been a success. In everything he undertook he gained distinction. At Oxford he was graduated double first-class, and at once at the age of twenty-three entered Parliament, in which until his retirement he served continuously with the exception of one year. Coming in after the passage of the great Reform Bill of 1832, he took no part in that important constitutional change, but from that time on his vote in the House was recorded in favor of every successful measure which made for the extension of the suffrage and a more just and equitable representation of the people. More than that, he was the father of and the spokesman for more measures of great governmental reform than any other statesman in English history. To him are due the Revised Tariff of 1842, the disestablishment of the Irish Church and the Irish Land Bill of 1870, the modernizing of legal administration, the abolition of the purchase of commissions in the army, the settlement by arbitration of the troubles between the United States and England after the civil war, and the extension of the franchise to large unrepresented classes, besides educational bills, modifications of the Poor Laws and many other measures of a less important character. He entered Parliament as a Tory and soon after attracted national attention by an essay published upon "The Church and the State," which received the honor of a criticism by Macauley and gave to this boy serious standing among the polemical writers of the day. When Sir Robert Peel was converted to the doctrine of Free Trade by the agitation of the Manchester manufacturers led by Cobden and Bright, Gladstone followed his leader out of the Tory party, and from that day has been one of Parliament's brightest ornaments. Twenty-eight years ago he first became Premier, and it may be said that from that day he has been the most distinguished Englishman and shared with Disraeli the concentrated gaze of the English people.

Gladstone's versatility has been greater than that of any man of his distinction in European politics that we can recall. Bismarck is a constructive statesman and diplomatist, a man certainly of the highest genius; yet he has attained distinction in but one line. The Pope, the third of this triumvirate of grand old men in modern Europe, is of scholarly attainment and rare political tact. But neither one nor the other has attempted to excel in so many fields as Gladstone has made his own. In letters he is an authority on Homer and the Grecian classics generally; in theology his works rank with those of the leaders in his school; while as a parliamentary orator, speaker at the hustings, political tactician and general-in-chief of a party, he has had international renown for almost half a century. We have in America no man whose career could compare with him for length of service, or whose parliamentary life could be said to be as important to the nation as is that of Gladstone in England. Henry Clay entered Congress when little more than a boy and remained there with some intervals of absence until overtaken by old age. He too was the personal and magnetic leader of a national party, but in his career he had no such influence upon the history of his nation as Gladstone; for his name now is identified with but one or two measures or acts of historical importance. John Quincy Adams, after his defeat for the Presidency, entered Congress and took a foremost part in the struggle over the slavery question, which finally led to the civil war. Webster in a series of debates and arguments before the Supreme Court made fast in the American mind the true idea of our federal constitution. We have in the Senate now men whose names have been identified with all the important legislation of the last forty years of our history; but withal we have no man whom we can liken to Gladstone in the extent and value of service rendered to his nation. This must not be interpreted to mean that Gladstone is a greater statesman than any we have produced, for Alexander Hamilton can no doubt share with the greatest men in history the glory that goes to creative statesmanship. Nor do we mean that in patriotism Gladstone excels our own men or all of his fellow-countrymen. At times as a parliamentary orator Disraeli has bettered him, and no doubt Pitt, Fox, Sheridan, Burke and Canning, in certain characters of argument or parliamentary appeal have given speeches to the world that will live as long, if they do not outlive, any of Gladstone's. But William Ewart Gladstone was a man of the time, the incarnate essence of the nineteenth century, the embodiment of the growing liberal spirit in the Anglo-Saxon race. He did not need to adapt himself to his environment; he was born to be a leader of the British public. His especial gifts serve even to make him better adapted to reach the British mind and put him in touch with the British character and British ideals. He is commercial, literary, theological, non-humorous and politically sentimental. Take from him any one of these qualities, and he would appeal less to the British heart, he would be less in touch with the spirit of his nation and his time—yet this type of modern Englishman is of full Scotch blood.

THE TRUE CAUSE OF RECENT BANK FAILURES.

During the campaign it was the fashion of "our friends the enemy" to declare that the plank in the Republican platform advocating international bimetallism was a mere subterfuge intended to mislead the people and beguile them into the belief that the Republican party intended to carry out the pledge made in that plank of the platform. Recent telegraphic dispatches from the East, however, do not confirm the campaign charges made by the followers of Mr. Bryan. The financial dangers which threaten any nation that admits independent bimetallism was made fully apparent to the majority of the people of the United States during the late campaign, and the late dispatches indicate that President-elect McKinley heartily endorses the suggestion of the Senate Committee looking toward an international conference on behalf of international bimetallism. Eminent gentlemen who have given the financial subject deep thought and long study tell us that international bimetallism, even if accomplished, would prove abortive and unavailing to increase the price of silver so as to bring it to a parity with gold at the ratio of sixteen to one. The dangers attending an experiment in this direction under international agreement are many no doubt, but they are slight by comparison with the certain ruin that would follow an independent attempt on the part of the United States to accomplish the same thing. The Republican party through the late campaign was sincere in its provisions in favor of international bimetallism, and it is safe to predict that during the administration of President McKinley he will make strenuous efforts to achieve that end. If he fail, the fault will not be with him; nor will it follow, as Mr. Bryan will doubtless claim, that the only alternative left to America is to try the experiment itself.

Silver men are making much of these recent failures. Mr. Bryan himself has taken the opportunity of criticising his opponents as "false prophets," but these criticisms are unjust. They are based upon the assumption that by some miracle the adoption of an honest money standard was to make good the false discounts of mismanaged banks, raise real estate values to a former artificial point, and generally bring solvency out of insolvency, credit out of debt, honesty out of dishonesty and capacity out of incapacity. There was to be no such undertaking. It would have been foolish to promise it. No honest man could have held out such a hope; no thinking man could believe in it.

When Chicago bankers speculate in the stocks of suburban street railways, they must expect to reap the natural result of their sowing. It is certainly not to be charged against the policy of a political party that speculative enterprises, based upon the possibility of land booms, fail. If capitalists in St. Paul carry paper which is secured by assets that cannot be realized upon, no power under Heaven can keep them from going to the wall. Bad business methods in periods of inflation often meet with temporary success, but when the day of settlement comes, as it must inevitably, such methods bring disaster. It surely cannot be contended by any silver man of reasonable intelligence that the adoption of a double standard would make it possible for men to engage in risky enterprises without running the danger of loss, or that by adding silver to our gold we would make solvent again business institutions that had been ruined by bad management.

To be sure, some of these banks that have closed were lacking in money, but it will hardly be asserted seriously that the purpose of government is to give spendthrifts all the money that they need to keep them out of bankruptcy. Would these banks have kept their doors open had Bryan been elected? This is the question to put to every silver man who charges upon McKinley's election these recent failures. There is no reason whatever to suppose that a single one of these banks would have lived ten days after the election of Mr. Bryan. They have found it impossible to live under present conditions; how much less would have been their chance when our foreign credit and the confidence of local capital had been destroyed?

Those who have so strenuously objected to the gold standard because they considered it favorable to the banks have certainly no reason to complain if, when the bankers have had their way, they find they are not protected against the financial troubles which they feared. The truth is, and nothing shows it more clearly than the comments of the press on these bank failures, that the American people have not yet outgrown the idea that all good things and all bad things come from the mysterious government. We look to our democratic king for bread and meat just as the peasants of the middle ages looked to their feudal lords for support, guidance and protection. The government fetich is strong in the American mind. We credit and debit to the acts of Congress the results of natural commercial laws. We look to see enterprises made to flourish and men made prosperous by statute, against whom are contending all the active forces of our business life. Because a few banks fail, we think that the federal election must have been the cause, though that election, according to the very word of the silver men themselves, was favorable to these institutions. McKinley's election does not insure prosperity save in this: it allows business to go along undisturbed and unthreatened in its natural course. Those who looked for a sudden boom in values were children ignorant of the forces which make up civilized business life. We do not want a boom; we want a steady and even progress with our laws affecting trade and finance so settled that men of foresight can figure on the future. We may find other institutions to be unfortunate. It is not to be expected that after three years of severity all the banks and business houses will be able to continue, but with the increasing faith of the business world, renewed activity in enterprises, the coming out of hidden capital and the incoming of foreign capital, there is certain assurance that we are to see a period of prosperity. If the failures of the middle west were due to other than purely local causes, such failures would be as many on the Eastern coast and on this coast as in the territory between. Their fewness and their confinement to a certain section shows that no national policy could have been the cause. We of this coast have reason for congratulation in that our banks, especially in this city, show a better statement, more confidence and greater liberality in loans than at any time since the early part of 1893.

THE COLLEGE MAN AS A FEATURE OF SAN FRANCISCO SOCIETY.

Within the last four or five years a new element has entered into the life and society of San Francisco that was not there before. A new type has appeared—a new type of young man. He is a young man, sometimes a very young man, but he is full of enthusiasm and he makes his presence felt. He is a good sort, too, and the influence he exerts is mainly in the right direction. Before his advent there were several types of young men with which we were all familiar. Most of them were in the offices of uncles and fathers, or enjoyed some vague connection with government positions, or were "reading law" in attorneys' offices, but until the time of the founding of Stanford University and the first intercollegiate football game the college man, such as he is seen in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, was an unknown element in San Francisco. It will not do to say that he existed in the shape and person of those young San Franciscans who went east to Harvard or Yale. Of course there were a number of these, but they spent their vacations away from the city, and as soon as they graduated were caught in the vortex of professional or business life and disappeared from view. The college man is no longer a college man when he has graduated. He changes at once, he loses his enthusiasm and his dash, he steadies himself, he assumes responsibilities, and he talks gravely about finance and economics. The true college man is he who is in his junior or senior year, who still enjoys that priceless and inestimable advantage of having others think for him and relieve him of responsibility and the necessity for taking the initiative in matters of importance.

This type is worth cultivating. He has of late invaded the society circles of this city and you will not be obliged to go far to find him. You will see him at teas and functions—dozens of him—and he is very much in evidence at the dancing clubs. It is really surprising to note how he has taken the place of the other types of men, the insurance clerks and bank accountants. His only drawback is that he is young—but there are worse things than that can be said of a man. Somehow he is popular. If you know him well you are sure to like him. At all events he is better than the Brownie type, the sickly little boy, mature before his time, who has "gone into business" instead of going to college, and whom you will see promenading Kearny and Market streets on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons doing the "cocktail route." For all his youth the collegian is the more manly of the two, and I am sure I would rather hear him talk about the chances of his football team with his excited gestures and deadly earnestness than to listen to the blase youth of the business office drawling about discounts and margins.

There comes a time in the life of every boy when but for college there seems to be no place for him, no niche that he can fill. In all conditions he is tne round man in the square hole or the square man in the round hole. He has finished the high school and is, let us say, anywhere between the ages or seventeen and twenty. He is no longer a boy and he is not yet a man. What are you to do with him? To enter him in business is to pitchfork him into the world with a suddenness and lack of preparation that is disconcerting to most young boys. He goes direct from the companionship of his school fellows into the society of older men and learns many things that are not good for him to discover—so suddenly. As often as not he drinks before he knows how much he can drink, or if he can even drink at all, he comes to regard the cocktail route on Saturday afternoons as "the world," of which he is part.

At college things would be vastly different. I do not say that he would not drink, nor gamble, nor do many other things which are neither meet, right, nor his bounden duty. But he would do these things under any circumstances probably, would almost certainly do them in business life. The difference between "going in for that sort of thing" when he is at college is that he learns little by little to guage himself by other fellows who are his equals in the matter of years and experience.

Better than all, perhaps, he is away from the city and its opportunities. He has found his niche, he is in a world that is made for him. Then the esprit du corps of his alma mater gets into him, and he begins to think about things outside of himself, to strive for that which will benefit, not himself, but the institution with which he is connected, and that unselfishly and without hope or expectation of reward. Surely this is a desirable state of affairs. Can you say as much for the young entry clerk, or accountant? Athletics absorb him; he learns the meaning of the sacrifice of one's pleasures, of the control of appetite, of the discipline of the diamond, the oval and the gridiron. He sees young fellows, poorer than he, with a less exalted social position perhaps, or with none at all, preferred before him and idolized by the entire college, because of energy, coolness and physical strength. He is relegated to his own position, be it high or low, by his fellow collegians, and that with a promptness and decisiveness that admits of no equivocation.

In the four years of his college life his eyes are opened and he gains the knowledge of good and evil, the knowledge that must come to every man sooner or later. The young man who is tossed from the high school to the business office gains this knowledge in a sudden flash that is most like to blind him to that point where he can no longer see the difference between them and knows not upon which path his feet are planted. The college fellow acquires the thing little by little, constantly measuring himself and his moral stamina against the vices of the world of men. If he is the average boy, at the end of his four years he knows himself relatively to the outside world that he then at last must face. He knows himself, knows what he must avoid and where he must draw his line. It is a knowledge that comes to the average entry clerk and accountant only after years of the rudest experience. Sometimes it never comes.

If the collegian never acquired any other knowledge at his alma mater than this knowledge of himself he would have gained inestimably by his four years' course.

For the best things he learns at college are not those things he learns from his text books.

THE NUISANCE OF NOISES.

There is now going on in the larger cities of the East a crusade against noises that we might do well to inaugurate here, for there is neither sense nor reason in permitting the din of drums, the hooting of horns, and all the other disturbing and nerve-destroying nuisances that infest our streets. San Francisco is probably more cursed with this class of municipal pest than any other city in the Union. But a short while ago, within arm's length of the Palace Hotel, a fire alarm station, equipped with a powerful steam whistle, to the great discomfiture of all the vicinity, announced the half-dozen or more fires that took place during all hours of the night and day. One must have lived in its vicinity to appreciate the annoyance of it. Hotel guests were startled out of their repose at midnight by the tooting of this infernal fog-horn under their window announcing a fire perhaps three miles away. To strangers and timid women-folk such a contrivance was calculated to bring consternation. Latterly this nuisance has been abated, but there are other similar fog-horns in operation in other portions of the city which must be quite annoying to their environment. Advertising wagons with bells, drums, triangles, or gongs, are a popular but nerve-destroying method affected by cheap merchants, quack doctors and the like to attract attention to their wares. The percentage of neurasthenic patients is increasing rather than diminishing in the large cities. The Sunday "Times-Herald" of Chicago discusses the question and suggests:

The more the question is discussed the more reasonable appears the suggestion as to the perfect right of the people to protect themselves from the howling mendicants and the screeching peddlers who invade residence districts and fill the day and the night full of nerve-destroying sounds. Physicians claim that it is impossible to treat neurasthenic patients unless they can be placed amid quiet environments, and such a luxury and quietude is hard to find in New York or Chicago.

While nearly every citizen claims the right to be protected from the assaults of the footpad and the highwayman, it is just beginning to dawn upon the residents of the big cities that they have an equal right to have their tympana protected from assault and battery by the man who splits the atmosphere of the night by yelling "Mexican hot tomales!" There is no reason why the howling vegetable venders and the dusky mendicant from Italy who grinds unspeakable confusion of insufferable noises from the "hurdy-gurdy" should be allowed to shatter the nerves and disturb the peaceful repose of a whole community.

While it is perhaps a fact that the dream of a noiseless city will never be realized outside of soothful and reposeful St. Louis, it is also a fact there are a thousand varieties of unnecessary noise in Chicago and New York that might be suppressed without any great damage to their reputations for commercial and industrial thrift, although it might perchance work a hardship upon physicians who wax wealthy by making a specialty of nervous diseases.

People whose nervous systems are continually at a tension are entitled to consideration. We are not all born with the same character of nerves, and what may only prove a passing annoyance to one brings to another misery of a more lasting nature.

The outward indications of "jayness" are displayed in permitting those village practices to continue to the annoyance of the citizen and disfigurement of the streets.

A circular is going the rounds which purports to be an address issued by "the colored citizens of California" to the State Legislature, and requesting the passage of an act to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights. On its face the proposition looks simple and appears innocent, but civil laws with a penal attachment are not, generally speaking, in good repute. Section 1 of the act provides that all citizens shall be entitled to full and equal privileges, accommodations, etc., at inns, restaurants, hotels, bath houses and other places of public accommodation and amusement. No violent objection can be offered to such an act, but it is not apparent that there is any disposition anywhere in California to deny to the colored race equal privileges in the respect above mentioned. Under it, of course, the Chinese would take the same rights and enjoy the same privileges, and doubtless there are many people who would see no objection even to this. The joker in the act is contained in the second section, which makes the violation of the first a misdemeanor and gives to the "aggrieved person" a sum not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars as a species of balm for his wounded feelings. It is not difficult to imagine that some "colored gemmen" whose bad luck at craps had depleted his exchequer might seek to recoup his loses by presenting himself at the Palace Hotel or some other place of "public accommodation and amusement" and there invite the steward or person in charge to put him out. Such a law upon our statute books would give rise to a cloud of blackmailing suits, and should be discountenanced by our Legislature.

THE PASSING OF ABE WARNER

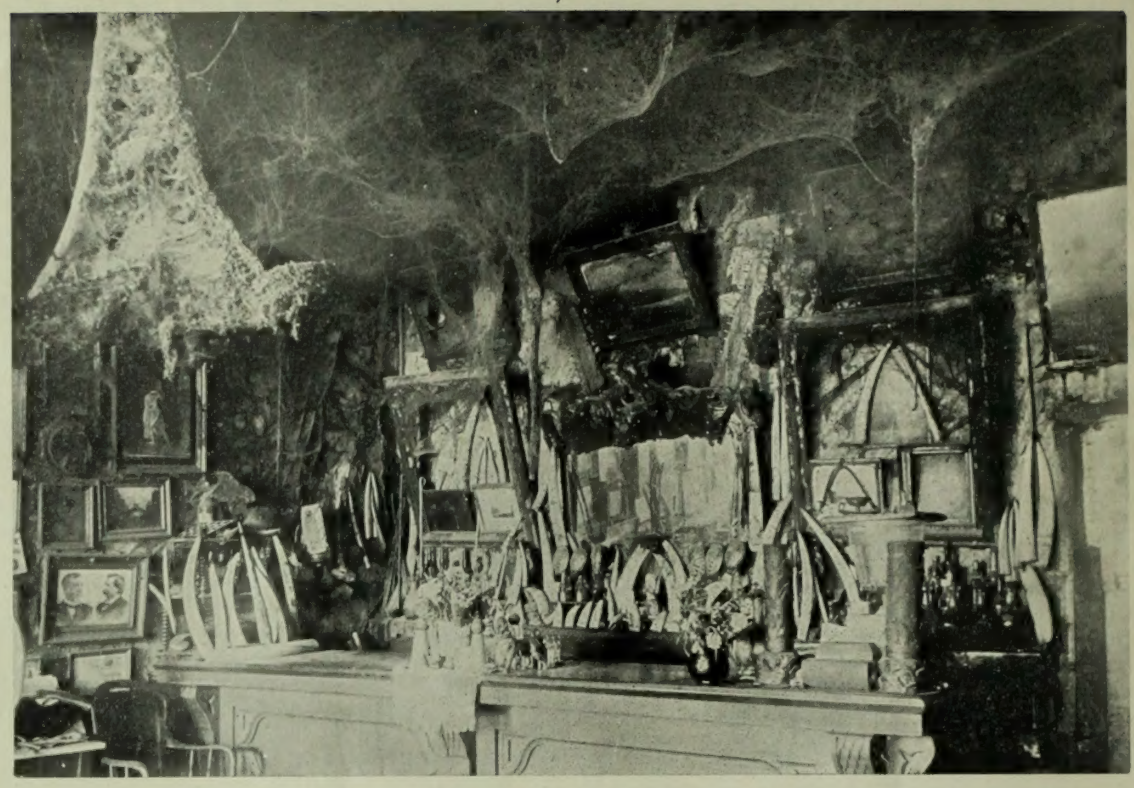
Memories of a Resort at North Beach Where "Weaving Spiders" Found a Home.



THE BAR OF THE COBWEB PALACE

It is significant of the strange fanciful character of San Francisco people and San Francisco institutions that a saloon could become famous throughout the city simply because of the cobwebs upon its ceilings.

Abe Warner and the "Cobweb Palace" on Meigg's wharf vanished at practically the same time, and their passing is significant of these latter days as was their popularity in a former period. The city is changing, has changed with surprising swiftness in the last five years. The old order of things is passing away. A new period is beginning. Time was when San Francisco was picturesque; it had associations, it had local color, it had background and the like. Things happened here, novelists chose the city as the scene of their plots. English story writers caused their characters "to turn up in San Francisco," or to be "seen in San Francisco," after years of absence and silence. Ventures by sea departed from San Francisco. The name of Montgomery street was seen in the pages of Jules Verne's novels. English speaking people in India or China or South Africa knew about Nob Hill and California street. The Cliff House belonged to this period, and Chinatown and the "What Cheer" House and Woodward's Gardens. We had our street characters as well. Emperor Norton, Father Elphick and that old white-bearded man, very much crippled, who even now—the last of his kind—walks with two canes about Kearny street, who plays a little zither-like affair on the corner, the solitary old mendicant whom everybody notices but nobody speaks of.

How all these places and people have suddenly dropped out of sight and notice. The Cliff House has been burnt, Woodward's Gardens sacrificed for building lots, Chinatown renovated by the health officers, the "What Cheer" House forgotten, and Emperor Norton and Father Elphick and the other old faminar faces about Lotta's Fountain gone.

Abe Warner and his "Bar" belonged to this period. The city may not have grown, but it changed, suddenly, brusquely, like the scene shifting of a play, and in the new mise en scene Abe Warner had no place.

I can remember his "Bar" perfectly well. The first, keenest and about the only impression of it was that of confusion, inextricable, hopeless confusion, worse than any junk shop. Tusks by the hundred, engraved and painted; totem poles, models of ships in glass bottles, pictures that were fearfully and wonderfully made, stuffed fishes, the gigantic figurehead of a ship and arrows and javelins from the Pacific Islands barbed with shark's teeth. Overhead the cobwebs hung thick and grey, like the dense smoke cloud that clings to the ceiling after a flashlight picture has been taken, while here and there in unexpected corners and in wicker latticed flasks lurked wine and whisky and Jamaica rum blinking out from under the shadow of the cobwebs with red and yellow eyes, like cats hidden in attic corners.

Then there were the monkeys whom no one ever thought of chaining up, and the harsh, hoarse parrots, and the marmosets and the cats, and the strange nameless birds in curiously made cages of withes and bamboo, straight from the Fijis or the Marquesas or the Navigators. No wonder the old man died when separated from such surroundings, in the midst of which he had lived for forty years. One can fancy how he must have been attached to the old bar, how he must have loved those mats and curtains of cobwebs that he had watched growing for nearly half a lifetime. Can you wonder that when in the break-up of the old place a certain ivory relic representing the descent from the cross went under the hammer for five dollars, old Warner refused to recognize the sale and tried to take the relic back by main strength? Little by little the old places and people drop out of sight and the city is improved. A "Resort" takes the place of the old Cliff House, rows of "model dwelling houses" replace Woodward's Gardens, mission houses and brick tenements rise in Waverly place and Gamblers' alley. Emperor Norton is but a memory—a picture on the walls of the Bohemian Club—the "Cobweb Palace" is razed, Abe Warner dead, buried and forgotten, and we sit down and thank God for progress and improvement, and the rise in values of "inside realty."

---

One of the most influential of the rebels in the Philippine Islands, Juan Luna Noricis, is a painter well known in Madrid, Rome and Paris. He is a Malay by birth and went when a youth to Spain, where he studied art to such purpose that he won a scholarship that enabled him to prosecute his studies in Rome. Unfortunately his Malay blood broke out so violently that he murdered his wife and mother-in-law. He was then lost to view, to reappear as an insurgent leader. The town council of Barcelona has ordered his first picture, which hangs in the town hall, to be draped in crape.

Mascagni, the composer of "Cavalleria Rusticana," has more than his full share of the eccentricities of genius. He is reported to be growing more and more extravagant in dress and manners. His cravats, the cut of his coats, the color of his socks, are continually varied, each being more extraordinary than the last. He is a great believer in the efficacy of charms, and is always getting new ones. One of his crazes is the collection of clocks and watches of all kinds, from an English gold lever to a cheap nickel timekeeper. Three of these watches he always carries with him—one a gold repeater, with his monogram in brilliants, presented by a club of nobles; another a silver watch, the third made of nickel, and three times the ordinary size.

The libel suit of Rev. George Brooks against Henry Labouchere has resulted in a verdict for "Labby" with costs, together with the jury's opinion that "Truth" conferred a benefit upon the public in exposing the "prince of begging letter writers." The press, with the "Times" at its head, has united in a chorus of approval of Mr. Labouchere for his continued exposure of imposters, and it is said to have been developed that he has expended for this purpose over $200,000 in lawyers' fees alone during recent years.

At Mr. Rothschild's house, near Tring, a staff of curators are constantly employed in arranging his superb collection of insects, which is valued at £10,000. The insects are kept in thirty mahogany cabinets, which cost £60 each, and contain forty interchangeable drawers. The very pins which secure the specimens to the cork bottoms are of silver, and cost 7s 6d a thousand.

Queen Victoria has joined the ranks of the temperance party, not as a matter of principle, but on account of her health. She finds that her rheumatic ailments have diminished wonderfully since she has abandoned taking the Scotch whisky and water, which was formerly her favorite tipple, not only before retiring at night, but also at meals.

Lord Mayor Faudel Phillips of London broke down while introducing Ambassador Bayard at a meeting recently owing to the weight of his official robes. He sat down suddenly took the robes off in the presence of the audience, and was brought to with Mrs. Bayard's smelling bottle.

A COSY CORNER BY THE STOVE

THE "MONKEYS AND PARROTS" OF THE ENTRANCE

Courtesy of Nathan Joseph

THE CZAR AND THE CHRIST

Christmas Ceremonies and their Origins—A Contrast and a Reminiscensce.

This is the Christmas address which General W. H. L. Barnes delivered at the High Jinks of the Bohemian Club Saturday, December 26th. Of California's orators General Barnes is the most brilliant and eloquent. He unites to the gift of a magnificent voice a rich vocabulary, a vivid imagination, a fine sense of rythm, and of the arts of oratory. The power of swaying an audience he possesses in a marked degree, for he can provoke both mirth and tears. On the gathering of Bohemians the effect of this paper was notable. A burst of applause followed, which lasted five minutes—a most unusual demonstration for the club.

A little more than two years arter Alexander II, Emperor of Russia, had been put to death by the Nihilists on the Nevsky Prospect of St. Petersburg, Alexander III was, in his turn, crowned in the ancient city of Moscow. Around him stood the great of earthly sovereigns or their representatives; diplomatic delegates from all civilized and many barbarous nations; hosts of bearers of ancient and splendid titles, with showers of decorations and orders of fidelity and glory; wearers of swords and jeweled scimiters; royal and beauteous women robed in the rainbow wonders of all the looms and fretted with diamonds whose galaxy seemed plundered from the sparkling pathways of the stars; legates of His Holiness in purple and scarlet; Archbishops of England in stately dress; lords and archimandrites of the Church of Greece; Persian priests of Zoroaster and fire-worshipers of India, together forming a gorgeous spectacle which defied later description as it then confused the sight and senses of those who witnessed it.

At the moment when the giant Emperor, standing alone, dominating with his huge shoulders the kneeling crowd, took up the ancient diadem of the Czars and placed it on his head, and so became thenceforth the spiritual and temporal master of a nation extending through Ural to Caucasus, from St. Petersburg to the Okhotsk sea—ruler of half of Europe and Asia—four hundred thousand soldiers packed in the great environs of the churches, cathedrals, palaces and towers of the Kremlin sang, "God Save the Czar." In unison with this formidable chorus, hundreds of cannon thundered without intermission; the chimes of churches and convents continuously rang; and the ponderous bells of the Kremlin crashed with a voluminous roar that drowned all other sounds. It was a brave spectacle—this birth of an Emperor—though underneath the woof of all the joy of a submissive and loyal race was woven the dark thread of an agonizing fear that the Nihilists might choose the hour of his glory to deal with him as with his father—send skyward the ancient palace of the Czars and bury Alexander in its ruin.

How different the conditions under which nearly two thousand years before these surpassing magnificences attending the creation of an earthly monarch was born a God! He was declared to be the son of the Most Highest. He was the successor to the throne of David and Solomon—of the stock royal of the poet king and the most wise of Israel. He came not to be the Emperor of the great and hereditary oppressor of the poor, but rather the divine Lord of the lowly; more precious to Lazarus than to Dives. Though born in the city of David, whose heir He was, He came to the world under the cruel domination of the heathen Roman Empire, and from beneath the heart of a woman whose husband was taxed for the glory of Caesar Augustus. He was cradled in a stable under the wondering eyes and sweet breath of ruminating cattle, and from the star-spread night above Him the heavenly hosts chanting the first Christmas carol, "Glory to God in the Highest, and on Earth Peace, Good-will Toward Men," sang for shepherds watching their flocks on the plains about Bethlehem. His diadem was the glorious star whose beckoning flame brought to the manger-throne of the new-born God the wise men of the East with adoration and treasures of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. His reign was to be and is without end. In all lands His humble birth is celebrated by those who bear the name and faith of Christos, with splendid mass or simple service, with grand orchestral music, or artless melody, with smoking incense or the invisible breath of prayer, and His peace and good-will have created for mankind a common ground of sympathy upon which all can assemble with higher and nobler sentiments than those humanity had ever known before His coming.

And so to-night, "Oh! night divine," whether believers or unbelievers, let us sing the carols of the Christmastide, breathe the symbolic fragrance of cedar and holly, look with tenderness in the eyes of those we love, drink to the health of the absent and to the peace of the dead, blot out all record of unkindness or neglect, forgive as we would be forgiven! And though the deceitful vision of Hope's blue mirage—that sea of rainbow dreams on whose bosom have been wrecked so many incoming and outgoing ships of fancy laden with our ambitions and desires—that sea on whose shining shore we stood at the New Year—has vanished, perhaps forever, leaving us to struggle on over arid and burning sands and through the thorny growth of the desert, still let us thank God for this hour of Paradise and echo back the angelic song, "On earth peace, good-will toward men!"

In this simple sentence is the ultimate test of all the creeds. When Cicero in the Second Phillipic against Antony said of the religion of Pagan Rome, "It is everything, or it is nothing," he spoke for and of all religions; from that born of the terrors of the flaming sword of Eden to the music of the sermon on the Mount; of that endless struggle of the human soul to find or create a God, who, when found or created, for the most part has been a God of pain and terror.

The men-made gods have been no better and often worse than the fettered minds which conceived them, and the standards of all the souls which have followed them have been formed to them, whether the divinity has been a filthy, brutal and licentious idol or the sublime Jehovah thundering from Sinai or the crucified of Golgotha. The heathen gods bear fearful testimony of the degradation of man. The deities of the Northmen of Europe, from Tartary to Norway, were numerous; but all were bloodthirsty, revengeful and treacherous. Those of Greek and Roman mythology were characterized, with few exceptions, by gross licentiousness, brutality and vice. Reptiles, beasts and birds were the gods of ancient Egypt. Those of Central Asia were lustful, bloody and cruel. The idols of Africa and the equatorial islands were and are worshiped with cannibalism, terrors and impurity unspeakable. Paganism has never uplifted human life and the longer it has existed the more corrupted and corrupting has it become. Not so with Him whose festal season the Christian and the worshiper of Jehovah equally rejoice to honor. To the one Jesus Christ is a God. By the other he is confessed to be the highest ideal of humanity, a sinless being, supremely wise and infinitely good. Truly no finite intelligence has ever conceived so great a character even when it strove to imagine a God. History, romance and poetry have never foreshadowed such a personality, perfect in all its proportions and illumined with a glory which had no earthly sign or symbol.

Let the story of Jesus Christ be historically true or false, it is the grandest and sweetest tale of all the centuries. No other record will drive it from the hearts of those who have accepted it or supply its place to those who have not. To the end of time it will be the inspirer of those who seek inspiration, the consolor of those who need consolation.

Yet, was the Star of Bethlehem lit in the heavens by the Father for the wonder of the shepherds and the guidance of the wise men of the East to His Son, or was it simply an earlier apparition of the temporary star which nine, twelve and fifteen centuries later sparkled in the bosom of the mother of Andromeda, conspicuous in the sky where Sirius, Procyon, Betelguese and the Twins had been kings, and whose flashing glory astronomers predict may soon again shine as the chief gem of those which to-night glitter in the throne of the Queen of Cepheus?

Like the tale of the Star of Bethlehem may be the history of the birth of the carpenter's Son, His ministry of miracles, His trial, His death, His resurrection and transfiguration. All may be mere human invention and not historical verity; romance and not fact. What if it were? What if the fragrant pine, cedar and shining holly that now testify for Christian church and Christian home that Christmas day is soon to dawn, had long before Christ's coming been pagan decorations, borrowed by the church from the leafy temples of Saturn, stolen from the orgies of Bacchus, reeling and jovial with his ivy crown? What if the blessed Christmas tree with its myriad lights, its silver frosted and gilded ornamentations, its pendent treasures and tokens of parental and childish affection or the passion of lovers, is traceable to the Egyptian twelfth moon celebration of the palm on whose gilded branches Cleopatra may have hung some precious token for her lover whose still distant galley was pointed for the Nile, or whence she plucked his amorous gift of golden bracelets that wearied her slim brown arms as she forever stretched them out toward Rome and Antony? What if long before Christianity had invaded Britain the Druids had softened the grim and uncouth stones which marked the hallowed circle with green everlastings, branches of pine and cypress cut by them with the golden sickle and had borne them with the sacred mistletoe, and its stores of snowy berries marvelous for cure and hostile to evil spirits, to adorn the Yule-tide altars?

GENERAL W. H. L. BARNES
Photo by Marceau

What if our Christmas home-coming of the wanderers from the parental roof, the interchange of all good wishes between friends and neighbors, the overflowing of mighty bowls, the heaping of abundant cheer, the feeding of the poor and the clothing of the destitute, were, one and all, long before Christ, the special characteristics of the Roman celebration of the Saturnalia?

What if all these things have even an origin older than the Egyptian, more venerable than the Roman and Greek, buried in those remote and never to be read records of the world's peoples now unpreserved even in ruin or hieroglyph?

They have accomplished the noblest purposes. If inventions they are the most sublime of all the imaginations of man. They have enriched the poor, humanized the rich and have lifted humanity, wounded in the miserable struggles of this life, to faith in the promise of the peace which shall be his who has kept the faith of religion or honor, and they will continue to bless our [illegible] until the earth's final extinction in the sunless and [illegible]less ether. For whatever else is uncertain, earth's d[illegible] is as sure as the dissolution of the body.

When St. Paul, in his majestic oration to the converts of the Morean city, declared, "I die daily," he might well have intended that each day born out of night, its growth, maturity and decline to twilight and darkness is but the type of a dread anti-type—that perpetual rest which we call death. For so it is. Each day goes to its inevitable grave in the burial places of our years, and there its good or its evil, its peace or its war, its right or its wrong, its holiness or its sin, its virtue or its vice, is buried beyond recall for enjoyment or amendment as completely as if the man had died with it. Over some stand proud and stately monuments gleaming white against the eternal sky, recording success, triumph or glory; over others are only the willow and the tangled weeds which seek to hide weakness and failure.

"I die daily" is the perpetual wail of nature from man to the moth that flutters in the sunbeam. The day god himself is dying. That huge luminary who now holds the planets to perpetual allegiance, who throws his blazing chains from Mercury across three thousand millions of miles to farthest Neptune; that father of the cyclone and progenitor of the hurricane, who coaxes to life the grasses of earth's hillsides and persuades the roses to bloom and emit their mysterious fragrance; who woos toward him the vapors of the seas and throws them back in rain upon the thirsty land, has the shadowy prophecy of death stamped upon his glowing face.

The pencil of the mathematician has halted at the day when his fires shall be extinguished, when darkness and cold treading upon his heels shall take his place in our small universe and overwhelm the intelligent and inanimate nature his rays have so long cherished and nurtured. In that dreadful and everlasting night shall be swallowed up all the earth's cities and palaces, the temples of God and of mammon, its rich and its poor, its toilers and its idlers, all its learning and science, all the teachings of the philosophers, all the histories made by soldiers, statesmen, poets, preachers, orators, judges, scientists, all dogmas taught by priests, all mythologies, from those of Isis and Jupiter to Buddha and Josh, all religions, from those of the Mosaic tables to the sacred story of the Star of Bethlehem, and the crucifixion of our Lord, all, all shall go to oblivion, as though there had never been a God and Christ, His Son, had never lived or died, unless there is somewhere another world-home for those who have lived and achieved in this. Without it, in the long run, the civilized man has no advantage over the savage. Socrates and Plato, Archimedes and Edison, are in the end no better off than the winged ephemeridae, born in the stagnant ditch to live for an hour in the sunlight, without capacity for self-sustenance, created only to propagate and die.

Physicists tell us that matter has always existed and is incapable of being added to, diminished or destroyed; that whatever metamorphosis it undergoes, from the human to the animal, from the cricket to the tiger, from earth to rock, from vegetable growth to the gases that mark the birth or disintegration of the stars, from the sweet odor that drifts out of a bank of violets to the stench of dissolution—all is matter whose infinite molecules always have been and forever will be imperishable and invariable in quantity. If this curious speculation is founded in reason then it is but an easy step to the conclusion that the spiritual and mental molecules whose combination results in all great thought and progress, once set in motion, move on through eternity in this or in some other world, always undying and without diminution of their pristine splendor.

Let us believe, as we hope, that all brave and kindly deeds, all noble thoughts, may be immortal; and though we may justly wonder how and where they shall find their final home; after what excursion into space they shall be gathered together by Him whose fiat commanded them to be, we may yet know that where they are will be heaven and where they are not will be hell!

The Dowager Empress of Germany is one of the wealthiest women in the world. From the Prussian Treasury she receives a large annuity; from the English Treasury $40,000 a year, besides which she has inherited the major part of the great fortune of the Franco-Italian Duchess of Galliera, and an enormous sum, the exact value of which cannot be defined, from her husband, Emperor Frederick. At the time when the latter succeeded to throne there were in the hands of Baron Konn, the private banker of old Emperor William, no less than 54,000,000 marks in cash, which were bequeathed to Emperor Frederick on the understanding that it was to constitute a species of family treasure, controlled by the head of the House of Hohenzollern for the time being, and to be used for the benefit of the family. When Emperor Frederick died at the close of his brief reign of ninety days scarcely any of this money was left. The major portion of it is understood to have been invested abroad by Emperor Frederick's orders in the name of his widow, her uncle, the late reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and her cousin, King Leopold of Belgium, being nominated as trustees. It may be remembered that the late Prince Stolberg, who died last week, resigned at the time his office of Minister of the Imperial Household in a fit of anger, declaring that he would be no party to diverting from the German crown a sum of money accumulated by old Emperor William for the specific benefit of the family. But as there was nothing legally to prevent Emperor Frederick from disposing of the money as he wished, nothing could be done to prevent it, and inasmuch as it was invested abroad there could be no question of its recovery after his death. It is this monetary question which goes far to account for the intense animosity and the utter absence of filial consideration which young Emperor William manifested for some time after his succession to the throne to his mother, the widowed Empress Frederick.

A paper bicycle has now invaded the field. One of them, owned by a bicycle agent, is now in use in London. Paper fiber, similar to that sometimes used in the manufacture of railway carriage wheels, is employed for tubing. The bicycle weighs twenty pounds, and is as strong as any one in use. A factory is said to be contemplated for the production of bicycles of this sort.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

What may the wealthy San Franciscan do with his surplus income? Strange as the term "surplus" may seem in these straitened times, there are men who luxuriate in the enjoyment of means beyond their needs. There are but two methods of disposing of his balance—he may loan money on real estate or on local securities, in opposition to sundry banks, or he may purchase and improve real estate—an enterprise in which he will find many competitors. On 'change the speculation is limited. No longer does one find quoted the stock of innumerable manufacturing concerns which in other and better days lent variety to the Bond list. I am, of course, only considering those forms of investment denominated safe. From this connection mining is barred. There are water and gas stocks, street railway and Southern Pacific stocks, and a few other institutions which, founded on public franchises or the immediate necessities of the locality, preserve existence in spite of the assaults of eastern competitors. It would be ridiculous to assume that there is no financial market in San Francisco because trading goes on here throughout the year and the total is not inconsiderable, yet in comparison with the wealth of our banks and the accumulations of individuals the transactions are meager. Against this showing is the fact that the big fortunes are being preserved by the descendants of the original millionaires. One seldom hears of unwonted extravagances or of reckless dissipations. Rumors of certain limited thousands lost over a poker table occasionally reach the outside world, but one hears later how converted the victim has become and how admirably he hangs on to the parental heritage.

***

This is the real condition of financial affairs in San Francisco as opposed to the impression the world has that Californians are a nation of spendthrifts and millionaires. The truth is, we are a most conservative set, and have been bitten so often by wild speculations that we hesitate about investments in which there is even a minor percentage of chance. We are content with from three to six per cent for our money and regard with astonishment those reckless Englishmen and Frenchmen who are gobbling up the gold mines of the mother lode. No, indeed, our stirling and cautious capitalists would not dream of investing in mines because there was once a stock excitement on Pine street, and ever since mining is a precarious and hazardous occupation. Of course conservatism is an excellent principle of conduct, but the condition which permits the gold and silver taken out of California rock to pass across the Rockies to the enrichment of our neighbors, cannot be justified on the grounds of economy or business policy. Each week the papers publish some new story of mining interests falling into alien hands and there is a vague impression in our public that the vendors have done admirably for themselves in selling. Alas! it is the old story of a birthright sold for a mess of pottage. It is this same principle of conservatism which is really indolence, that permits our merchants to stand idly by and let some Eastern competitor steal their customers away from them.

***

Few newspapermen enjoyed either in or out of journalism the popularity which Ross Jackson had achieved. Not only his own kind cared for him, but likewise the men and women of all the other worlds with whom he came into contact. It was because of an instinctive impression that he wished to be fair and would be true, that he inspired this feeling. He possessed in a rare degree the homely virtue of sincerity; he made few professions, entertained few delusions and never went back on a friend. It may also be said that he was an excellent newspaperman and rarely missed a prize-fight. During his journalistic career Ross Jackson filled many roles. He was a reporter, then a city editor; he became identified with the "Alta" in the days of its decline, but he went over to the "Examiner" and held his own amid the "gang." He could handle men with discretion and get copy out of them no matter how they arrived in the local room and no man who served him ever doubted his loyalty or imagined he deceived him. In the latter days of his career Ross Jackson lived on the income of his father's estate which had descended to him. No man ever retired from journalism with fewer regrets or illusions and more friends.

***

The administration of "Boss" Rainey strengthens the impression of those who claimed that Christopher Buckley had twice the intelligence of his ex-partner. It cannot be said Sam shows that cleverness in deferring to the prejudices of the community to which his predecessor owed half his success. Indeed it must be admitted that his methods are "raw" and he is led by the mere joy of supremacy into taking positions and conferring distinctions which augur but poorly either for his discretion or sagacity. In political circles the ambition of Dr. Clinton to be Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Supervisors was known. He is a man of some experience in city affairs and has a good grasp of the necessities of the municipality. The advantages of position and broad acquaintance he also enjoys and very decidedly he is the man for the place. Certain members of the Board tendered him their support, but at the command of Rainey he was deserted and Dr. Rottanzi was slated for the responsibility. Now this young physician is a very jolly, pleasant and bright young man who has a host of friends, but is quite without that political or commercial experience which enables an individual to direct the complicated affairs of a municipality whose expenditures are many millions per annum.

***

Apropos of Dr Rottanzi, I cannot resist the temptation of relating the funny story of his bond. The Supervisors-elect are required by law to furnish before a certain specified time, a bond, prior to taking office. It is customary to have one's friends who have the requisite securities go on this bond, or if one wishes to be independent any surety company will furnish it for a consideration. It seems that the young doctor had neglected to arrange this little affair, and at the last moment came to Sam Rainey for assistance.

"Give yourself no trouble," announced the new Boss in a patronizing way, "I'll go on your bond for you."

"That's real good of you, Sam," replied the doctor, much affected by his friend's generosity, "but I must have two sureties it seems."

"Well, now, what's the matter with George Maxwell?" said Mr. Rainey.

Mr. Maxwell is Secretary of the Fire Department, a great friend of Rainey's, and the combination made such an irresistible declaration of political amnities and affiliations that it is astonishing Rainey offered it. Rottanzi did not know this, however. He imagined the complication brilliantly solved. The bond was made out, signed in due form and dispatched to the City Hall. Then the young doctor, escaping from the conference, boasted gleefully of his good fortune until one of his friends who had more experience of politics and conditions promptly explained the predicament in which he had placed himself. The situation dawned at once on the doctor. He rushed to the Pacific Surety Company's office, took out a bond, rushed with it out to the Mayor's office just as His Honor was reading the other document.

"Give me that. It's a mistake, an error. It's all wrong," the doctor breathlessly declared.

With a sardonic smile Sutro handed over the bond, accepted the substitute and the episode ended.

***

One cannot but smile over such guilelessness. It gives one reason to believe Dr. Rottanzi, when he comes to understand the conditions of his office and the expectations of the public, will not permit himself to be guided by Rainey, but rather by his judgment and conscience. The evidence of this affiliation may be strong testimony for the prosecution, but I refuse to believe the young supervisor is either corrupt or the obedient tool of a crafty manipulator. He will be told, of course, that no man is a supervisor for fun, that honesty will profit him nothing, that the fool is he who refuses to take advantages of opportunities for plunder and that the community has more regard for a man who fills his pockets than for him who retires into private life poor. The larger experience proves, however, that there is little profit, and no satisfaction in the ill-gotten gains of office. A man who, while a supervisor, is stamped as a member of a "Solid Seven" or "Nine," as the case may be, presents his fellow-citizens with the measure of his personal morality, and he ceases to be a factor. He has been tried and found wanting and for ever his enemies and his children's enemies are entitled to allude contemptuously to his record.

***

It is early to hazard prophecies about the Legislature, but I fear the consequences of the session. There is a boldness in planning which promises better for the legislators than for the State. The predictions of the pessimists may be disturbed by good measures, but rumors of cinch bills fill the air. It is said, however, that the fear of the reformer is active in the hearts of both senators and assemblymen and though they all desire to increase the per diem which the law allows, proper precautions will be taken to subdue the impression of their profit. This ambition reminds one of the career in Sacramento of the young gentleman who now fills the distinguished position of County Clerk of San Francisco. Prior to attaining that honor Mr. Curry served as an assemblyman and while representing the city at Sacramento the correspondents were not slow to connect his name with measures of doubtful repute. Indeed a number of things were stated on which Mr. Curry might have profitably based libel suits. However, the impression that the session had proved unduly profitable to the future County Clerk, was dissipated by his mournful manner and funereal solemnity on reaching his native heath. He lost no time in appealing to the head-restauranter of his district—a genial Dutchman who fed all the political push of the environment, strictly at cash figures. "Old man," explained Curry, "these newspapers are doing me dirt. I've not made a cent. In fact I'm broke and I've just come here to ask you to trust me with grub for about two weeks until I get a place. I've been promised an office sure and then I'll pay up."

***

There was no gainsaying so touching a profession of poverty. The Dutchman gladly gave the required accomodation and the news of the young assemblyman's poverty soon spread through the district. Indeed, on the strength of those two weeks' credit Curry acquired the reputation that subsequently made him County Clerk.

***

A prominent Californian who has recently returned from the East met Mark Hanna in Washington and talked with him over the election.

"I've but one regret," Hanna is alleged to have said. "Only one."

"What is that?" queried the visitor.

"That I did not put $20,000 into McKinley's fight in Nevada and thus left Jones, Stewart and Newlands high and dry. There's not a doubt we could have carried the place for that sum. Not a doubt of it."

***

The latest story about that sensational young person, Mr. Will Hearst declares there has occured a division of properties between his mother and himself in accordance with which he received cash and securities to the amount of five millions of dollars. This is quiet an amount of money and ere it is all expended the "Journal" should be producing an income. No one who has the opportunity of seeing that kaleidoscopic sheet can be blind to its costliness. The corps of novelists, painters, humorists, cartoonists and caricaturists employed by the San Franciscan requires a Golconda to keep them going. However it must keep its rivals skipping because every new idea or scheme of sensational advertising that ingenuity can suggest, is utilized. The latest is a Sunday supplement on the lines of the "Ladies' Home Journal." I understand, however that a combination has actually been made in accordance with which the price of the several big dailies in New York has been advanced from one to two cents.

***

San Francisco has not yet forgotten Mrs. Norton, that delightful singer and charming woman who gave a series of song recitals in this city some eight years ago, and who sang as only the artist can sing, those old-fashioned melodies that no one else in America ever discovered. It is quite possible, so it is said, that Mrs. Norton may return to us for a short visit and give one or two recitals. Certainly her coming would be a great musical treat to all those who heard her fervid and at the same time intellectual interpretations of Schuman, Schubert and Wagner, as well as songs and ballads of all times and peoples.

THE TWO FUNERALS

By PAUL ARENE

Saw to-day two funerals. One moved me to pity. The other almost made me laugh. Certain deaths recall to me the story of the court fool who, dying, ordered that his pall should be broidered on one side with tears, with skulls and with crossbones, and on the other, with masks and bells and cock's combs.

The sad funeral:

The court of the Val de Grace, with its monumental chapel. At the foot of the steps an empty bier. Near by, a guard of soldiers with arms reversed, waiting, while an officer in a long cloak paces up and down the flagging of the court in the crevices of which a few blades of grass are growing.

The doors of the chapel open; a coffin appears, a coffin on which are spread a military tunic and a pair of red epaulets. It is the coffin of a simple soldier carried by four comrades.

At the same moment a cab drives past, an open cab carrying a little serving maid, going away with her trunk, one knows not where. The trunk is by the driver on the seat. And the little serving maid crosses herself, very much moved at the sight of the funeral procession, military and sombre, that is to conduct to his last barracks, the little soldier whom one day, perhaps, she may have loved.

The gay funeral:

The heart of a suburban quarter, inhabited by poor devils only. A porte-cochere opening upon the street, hung in black. In the passageway, a coffin, resting on four chairs. An undertaker's assistant, seated on a horse block and tranquilly smoking a pipe.

A collector's messenger in gray uniform, methodical and correct, appears, hesitates, looks about him at the numbers of the houses, and drawing a stamped paper from his portfolio approaches the undertaker's assistant.

The man in gray interrogates the man in black.

The man in black smiles, and jerking his thumb at the coffin says:

"You're a bit too late, old man."

The collector's messenger puts back the paper. The undertaker's assistant consults his watch.

Then both of them, as if amused by this grim coincidence, which they will tell to their families to-night at supper table, go across the street to a wine shop to drink a round to the health of the defunct, dead so opportunely on collection day.—Translated from the French by R. L.

PAX VOBISCUM

Lucius Harwood Foote has been called the Poet Laureate of the Bohemian Club, at whose Christmas Jinks this poem was read. He is really one of the most distinguished verse-writers of California, but is better known in official life than in literature, having been United States Minister to Corea and Consul to Chili. Unfortunately for his fame, he has preferred to contribute his verse to Californian publications rather than to the Metropolitan magazines.

When the joy-bells ring on this Christmas tide,
For the Crucified Son of Man;
I think of the countless Christs who have died
Since ever the world began.

The Christs of a cause, the Christs of a creed,
The Christs of the sword and pen,
Who, with dauntless courage in word and deed,
Have died for their fellow-men.

Their blood may fall on the senseless clod,
Their dust on the winds be strown;
But the hero-soul is the soul of God—
And ever he finds his own.

And some have borne calmly the cross of life,
And some have drank of the lees,
And some have gone down in the stormy strife,
And some in the cradled seas.

But mated with stars they shine above,
To pilot us on our path;
Theirs is the harvest of labor and love,
While ours is the aftermath.

And onward and upward the trend must be,
Till we find the blameless way;
In the fullness of time, we yet may see
The dawn of a perfect day.

Then fear not to follow, my comrades, when
Our vanguard has gone before;
Peace and good-will to the children of men,
Forever and evermore.

LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE.

The only life positions in the civil service of the United States Government, with the exception of the twelve consular clerks, are held by the reporters of the House and Senate. Five men attend to the stenographic business on the floor of the House and get $5,000 each per annum. The positions are considerable desirable, for during half the time, i. e., when Congress is not in session, they are free.

IN THE CHURCH OF STS. PIETRO E PAOLO

IN YGLESIA DE NUESTRA SENORA DE GUADALUPE

TABLEAUX OF THE NATIVITY

A PARK FOR CHRISTMAS

Griffith J. Griffith's Munificent Gift to the City of Los Angeles.

In the matter of parks Los Angeles is to have, has now, in fact, the largest public recreation ground in the world. This is literally true. Fairmount Park of Philadelphia, with its 2,800 acres, has hitherto been the largest, but the new Griffith Park of Greater Los Angeles embraces in its enormous extent something over 3,000 acres.

Until presented to the city the park was Los Feliz ranch, the property of Griffith J. Griffith of Los Angeles, a beautiful wooded area watered by the Los Angeles river and valued at something over $300,000. It is one of the most picturesque strips of country in the southern part of the State, situated a fraction over a mile north of the northern city line of Los Angeles. It includes fully two and a half miles of the warm foothills bordering on the Cahuenga Valley, five miles of the Los Angeles river bottom, the lands generally known as the Ostrich Farm and the beautiful little valley called the Press Colony site.

But this is not all. The new park is not merely a pretty stretch of ranch land, unimproved, wild and difficult of reclaiming. With the gift of the land goes a water plant, with tunnels and piping that Mr. Griffith at one time erected at the cost of ten thousand dollars, all of which will be of great benefit in the improvement of the park in the days to come.

Nature has done so much for Los Feliz that it would seem as if any work of man were superfluous. However, the City Council is already considering the advisability of securing the services of that greatest of landscape gardeners, Frederic Olmstead, to draw up some plan or scheme for the guidance of those interested in the future development and beautifying of the tract.

Through the center of the park runs a chain of hills which in any other country but California would be called mountains. From the highest peak—an eminence of eighteen hundred feet—the view of the surrounding country is magnificent. Not even upon the summit of Mount Lowe does such a tremendous extent of land and ocean open to the view. You can look down upon the city of Los Angeles, down upon the Pacific Ocean and far out upon the Catalina Islands.

In short, it is the ideal park—the recreation grounds for a whole city. Here you may pluck the flowers to your heart's content; you may keep on the grass, you may climb the trees, and if the fancy seizes you, you may break the shrubbery. You may picnic, how, when and where you like without fear of the park policeman, and you may bring your dog in here without risk of having him shot. There is no such thing as trespassing in the park. It is made to be trespassed on for the matter of that. It is so large and so naturally beautiful that nothing the visitor can do will in any way mar its attractiveness.

The new park is not without its associations and traditions. Here you may see the very Mexican 'dobe that was at one time the headquarters of Vasquez and his gang. Thousands upon thousands of plundered dollars have been hidden in its attic, together with the bandits themselves, lying there perdu between raids while the officers hunted them through the hills, little thinking that the outlaws would choose their place of concealment so near the town.

Mr. Griffith J. Griffith, the giver of this royal Christmas gift to his city, is a Welshman by birth. He came to America in 1866 with his parents and received an education in the public schools of Pennsylvania. In 1873 he came to California, and was for a time a reporter on the "Alta." It was during his connection with this paper as mining reporter that Mr. Griffith perfected himself in the knowledge of mines and mining, and soon took a prominent position among the mining experts of the Pacific Coast. In 1882 he finally settled in Los Angeles, and from that time until now has been one of its most enthusiastic citizens.

Personally Mr. Griffith impresses one as a jovial, straightforward gentleman, full of life and energy, one of the kind who are glad to be alive. Though a self-made man he has none of that arrogance and obtrusiveness that are generally associated with individuals who owe their success entirely to their own efforts. In conversation with him, it developed how really generous has been his gift to the city of his adoption. For there is gold in the soil of the new park. Mr. Griffith's experience as a mining expert and engineer could not fail but tell him that. As far as he knows the gold is of too low a grade to be profitably worked. But it is there, and it is impossible for any one to say how rich it may be in unexplored portions or how the value of low-grade rock may be changed by the invention and introduction of new machinery. Mr. Griffith, however, says he will take his chances. If a profitable mine is ultimately discovered in the new park the city will be the gainer, not he. He has given the park away without a single condition. "There are no strings upon it," as he pointedly put it.

GRIFFITH J. GRIFFITH
Photo by Schumacher

The mysterious personage whom Germans are talking about as concealed behind the extraordinary secret police plot against the German Foreign Office might be described as a kind of blend of the three Counts zu Enlenburg, One, Count Philip, who holds post of Ambassador at Vienna, has denied under oath any direct complicity with the intrigue; another, Count Botho, was the Prussian Home Minister who pulled Count Von Caprivi down from the Chancellorship, but could not save himself from falling at the same time. The youngest, Count Albert, is the Kaiser's Hoff Marshal and inseparable companion, and it is against him that Herr Babel's threats of forthcoming disclosures are directed. The Enlenburgs come of an old Prussian official family, and it is said that Prince Bismarck is their source of inspiration. The public servants against whom they conspired are either not Prussians at all or were born outside the charmed Junker circle which hedges the Hohenzollerns round. Count Caprivi is a Prussian by birth but was not noble until the Emperor made him so. The more recent object of attack, Baron Marschall von Beerstein, is a Badener by birth, and was public prosecutor at Carlsruhe before his superior talent attracted notice at Berlin, while, of course, Prince Hohenlohe, who is also a victim, is a Roman Catholic Bavarian.

It has often been declared that Sarah Bernhardt wears a wig. Her hair, it is true, is white, and therefore has to be dyed blonde or chestnut, whichever color she fancies; but it is all her very own, and, like Madame Patti, she invariably dresses it herself.

LATIN QUARTER CHRISTMAS

How the Nativity is Represented in the Italian Quarter.

Think of a church—a Catholic church—in this American city where you may see on the walls under the "Stations of The Cross" little placards that read, "Please do not spit on the floor." Think of a quarter of this city where the very parrots talk a foreign tongue; where children are born (in thousands, by the way) and grow and die without ever seeing Kearny street, and where in the notices of public picnics and games—these, too, are written in Italian—it is set forth that the first prize will be a "ton of coal."

Sometimes I am inclined to think that San Francisco is not a city at all, in the strict sense of the word, but is a number of smaller cities, a jumble of them loosely bound together.

I am sure that the Italian and Portuguese store keepers of the neighborhood about Filbert street take themselves just as seriously as do the merchants and brokers of the American quarter about Sansome and Montgomery. There can be no doubt that the worshipers in the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, way down there on Dupont street, far beyond the Chinese quarter and the Mexican quarter, regard themselves and their church of as much importance as do the members of Trinity, Grace and St. Ignatius.

A curious custom obtains in this church. At Christmas time in one of the chapels at the left of the sanctuary a little stage effect is erected, a little tableau de theatre, done in all seriousness and solemnity. I suppose it is a relic of the old miracle plays and moralities of the fifteenth century, the graphic representations of sacred history and calculated to inspire a sense of reality and vivid vraisemblance. The priests of St. Peter and St. Paul have built or arranged the scene of the Nativity in this chapel with a simplicity, a naivete that is charming. There is nothing in the least ludicrous about these bisque painted figures and toy lambs. This cotton batting that represents snow, this brown sand paper crumpled to imitate rocks. One should see it all, carefully railed off, the little wicker basket for alms just inside. Against a painted background of a hill city, like those of Perugino's pictures, rises a cave of rocks, with snow in the crevices, which does not prevent some half dozen sheep from grazing upon bunches of gray grass here and there. Two Tyrolean figures—mantelpiece ornaments—of bisque do duty for shepherds, while Joseph and Mary are kneeling figures, highly painted and adorned. Above the whole on a wire is a huge seven-pointed star of gilt paper.

To read about this thing in unemotional black type may cause it to appear absurd. But there is nothing absurd about the sight itself—rather one feels a certain respect for such sincerity, such evident conscientiousness. Can't you imagine the effect of positive awe upon some of the little Italian children of the quarter—some of those, for instance, who have never seen Kearny street? Looking at it, with the tiny red lamps burning about it, there can be little doubt that they feel much the same as you do—at moments—for instance, the other day when Mr. Eddy was playing the "Twelfth Mass" on the great organ of St. Ignatius. You who "have seen Kearny street" and "the world outside" must have a sixty thousand dollar organ and the greatest organist between the oceans before you can rise to the sensation. But a few cheap toys, the manikins of statuette vendors, and crumpled cloth suffice for those little Italians of Dupont and Filbert streets.

And after all, is there so much difference between you?

The record in the present Congress for rapid speaking is held by Johnson of Indiana, who speaks at the rate of 216 words a minute with the utmost clearness of delivery and enunciation. A hundred and fifty words a minute is fast for a Congressman.

The Ameer of Afghanistan has taken to bicycling in a right royal manner. He sits in kingly state in the saddle, and two attendants make the wheels go round. The Ameer had this labor-saving bicycle constructed to his order in London.

LOS ANGELES NEW PARK

THE LOS FELIZ RANCHO PRESENTED BY GRIFFITH J. GRIFFITH AS A CHRISTMAS GIFT TO LOS ANGELES

1. The bandstand. 2. Part of the water plant. 3. The drive to the park. 4 Live oaks by the roadside. 5. The old adobe house, former headquarters of the bandit Vasquez. 6-7. General views in the park.

INSIDE AN ORGAN

How Mr. Eddy's Playing Sounds in the Swell-Box of the St. Ignatius Organ.

The new organ of the Church of St. Ignatius is what is called an instrument of the first magnitude, having four manuals or keyboards, of sixty-one keys each, and a pedal-board of thirty keys. It contains eighty-five speaking stops, seventeen couplers, fourteen adjustable pistons, fourteen combination pedals, three swell pedals, and over five thousand speaking pipes. It is what is called an electric organ. The great advantage of the use of electricity in connection with organs is that it insures a perfection of touch and an absolute promptness of response. In operation, the depressed key makes a contact and causes the electric current to open a valve, which permits the air from the bellows to sound the pipe. The isolation of the bellows plant is a feature of the organ, being located in one of the towers of the cathedral, above the organ gallery. This position does away with all the noise and creaking of the bellows machinery, so disturbing in the musical performance of the organ itself. Another interesting mechanism of the organ is an arrangement of buttons beneath each keyboard, by pressing upon which any desired combination of stops can be secured instantly. Four swell boxes are used, enclosing all the manual stops. This makes possible an immense crescendo and dimuendo and charming effects of tone color by slowly closing one box while opening another.

Perhaps the new organ of St. Ignatius is the largest organ in the world and perhaps it is not—probably it is not. But at any rate it is so big that the difference in size between it and the really biggest organ of the world is not appreciable. You receive this sensation of size, of enormous power and volume even before you have heard the organ play a single note. It was not until I had seen the St. Ignatius organ that I realized the force of Mr. Sill's remark when in speaking of one of the great organs of Boston he said: "It is music just to look at it." That's it exactly. Even as I sat on the rail of the organ loft, before Mr. Eddy had arrived, and looked and looked at the banks of keys, the array of stops, the pedals and the clusters of enormous pipes, I had the vivid impression of vast musical sound, sound held in reserve as a battery of artillery holds its fire. The great cannon-like pipes were literally loaded with sound, loaded and primed and waiting for the touch of a finger upon the keyboard. And herein is another impressive feature of this great engine of music—a bellow of harmony answers the lightest touch, the weight of a child's finger may unchain a tempest of sound that roars through the church till the windows quiver, but that dies to silence the instant that light pressure is relaxed. It is as though the organ had a life of its own, as if it were some huge, vast monster, many-voiced as the sea, strong, terrible, yet docile and obedient, as great beasts, broken to harness, are docile and obedient.

Were you ever inside of an organ when it was being played—inside of such an organ as this when Mr. Clarence Eddy was playing, for instance? Think of it. Perhaps you remember the effect Christmas afternoon when you sat below in the body of the church and listened to that cataract of melody come roaring down upon you from a distance. But imagine for a moment what it must be to stand up in the swell-box, in the very heart of the organ itself, in the midst of all those myriad of shouting, clamoring pipes.

Mr. Eddy had come for rehearsal Saturday morning, and the cathedral though empty of people was full of sunlight and reverberating echoes. Some few of us were standing about him at the console in the organ loft and he was playing—what, I am sure I don t know, just a succession of wandering pleasant musical sounds. Then the idea occurred to me to go inside while Mr. Eddy played, and I suggested as much to him and he told me to go, and at the same time began playing the opening bars.

With Mr. Woods, who is the representative of the builders, I went around to a little door in the side of the organ's enormous case and, entering, sidled down a narrow passage to a ladder that led upward into some darker space above. We climbed up, Mr. Woods shouting directions to me from under his arm—shouting, I say, for already the noise of the pipes was as the noise of machinery. Through narrow slits that opened mysteriously here and there I could catch glimpses of the interior of the church, the sanctuary and chancel, dropping below by degrees. Up we went, and at last reached a narrow platform and a sliding door. I went in the door and Mr. Woods slid it to behind us and turned on an electric light. I was in the solo box, the center and heart of the organ, its very vitals. Here and there I could see little movements in corners, the little movements the organ makes in its living—an indicator traveling slowly back and forth, or the majestic opening and shutting of the huge blinds of the swell box that regulate the volume of sound, and that in action looks almost like the contraction and expansion of enormous gills—gills with which the organ breathes. A world of pipes was all about, thousands of them, rising out of the floor in gradations from the size of a bean blower not four inches in height to the tremendous amplitude of the thirty-two-foot pipe in the lowest octave of the diapason, as large as a liner's smokestack.

But the sound! It was not music in the general acceptance of the word, for the multitude of notes crowded together in that narrow space fought each other as they struggled to escape. One experienced the same effect upon the ear as would be made upon the eye if one stood too close to a painting. Nor was that "mighty rushing sound" discord, surely not that. It was—I cannot say what it most resembled. It was the vast vague roll of the ocean, or the clamor of a great wind in a forest, or the voices of a multitude shouting together, or the snarling of a thousand trumpets.

There was no "tune" that one could distinguish, nor was there any harshness. It was just sound, sound, sound—waves upon waves of it, sound that you could feel thrilling the air about you, sound that you could almost see streaming up from those thousand upright pipes. As Mr. Eddy played, the volume increased, the clamor became terrific. The drums of one's ears quivered and shrank under the shock of that ocean of sound-waves. The blinds of the swell boxes, opening to their limit, disclosed panel-like vistas of the church far below. To be here, here high up in this tiny swell-box, alone with this thundering monster, struck one with a feeling of awe, of positive, downright fear — the intuitive fear of all things huge.

Suddenly the bourdon began, the open diapason, the vast thunder of that lowest octave of the great pedal-organ. Everything shook, wood, iron, and all quivered as the quaking of the earth. It was the thunder of artillery, the bellowing of a tremendous surge, the prolonged crashing of a Niagara, terrific beyond words.

Then in a moment it began to subside, just as a storm might pass off, the thunder getting further and further below the horizon, the wind dropping away by long puffs. One drew a long breath and looked about one as if recovering from a trance. The bourdon sank to a numb vibration, so low as to be no longer sound, but a mere indefinable tremble in the air that one perceived with some sort of sixth sense. Then it stopped. The chaos of sound resolved itself into a something like tangible harmony. The piece was closing, soon it would be finished.

We went out of the solo box and clambored down the ladder, winding in and out of the tortuous passages once more. It took some time, and we stopped often on the way for discussion and comment. By the time we reached the console again the piece was over. A little girl, a child of twelve, standing at Mr. Eddy's elbow, was singing a little love song in a small, fine baby-like voice. Mr. Eddy was accompanying her on the organ, the same organ that had but a moment before shaken the entire cathedral with its mighty thunder, and now its voice was faint and delicate like the warbling of an oaten pipe, as sweet and clear and small as the tinkling of a guitar. The little girl easily dominated it as she finished with a prolonged note that rose high above the tones of the organ, and Mr. Eddy turned about and thrust back the stops.

"A fine instrument," said he.

FRANK NORRIS.

A REVOLT

BY ALPHONSE ALLAIS

Sunday evening, about six o'clock.

Now, have you ever noticed this fact? When it is warm of a Sunday evening in Paris, it is warmer than any other evening, even if the thermometer is the same.

You have not noticed this, you say? It is of no importance? You are not an observer; voila tout.

To continue:

Six o'clock! It is the moment when the Parisians, those who have not plenty of money to spend for their dinner, betake themselves to the cafe to imbibe "aperitifs"—bitters—strange and mysterious beverages, horrible to the taste, but royally inimical to the stomach.

When you have absorbed but two of these philtres you are no longer hungry, you are satisfied with half the usual dinner. It is an economical measure, worthy of consideration during financial crises.

I was sitting on the terrace of one of the cafes of the boulevarde before a certain black liquid that surely must have come from the cellars of the Borgias. At a neighboring table, a man and a woman had just seated themselves, evidently husband and wife. The woman asked for Vermouth, the man for absinthe.

The woman asked for her Vermouth in an indifferent manner, as she might have asked for anything. The man asked for his absinthe in a voice of inexpressible lassitude.

"Give me absinthe," he seemed to say, "not to intoxicate me, but to make me forget a little—allow me to escape, if only for a quarter of an hour, from this intolerable fabric of annoyances that is called life."

He was a fine looking man, this absinthe drinker, about thirty years of age, simply but elegantly dressed. He looked intelligent enough. But, oh, how the poor devil seemed to be bored!

I hope that I am much too gallant to say that a woman is plain, or even unattractive; I would prefer to declare that the wife of my absinthe drinker was purely and simply ignoble. Her homeliness was aggravated by a stupid expression of arrogance and general hostility, and ah, she was vilely dressed—such pretension, such unspeakable bad taste!

Yes, I understood the mental depression of the poor husband. Had I been in his place, saddled with such a burden, I would have drank, not one glass of absinthe only, but barrels of absinthe, rivers of absinthe, oceans of absinthe. I could not always overhear their conversation except in phrases, but the aggressive air of the woman and the wearied expression on the part of her husband gave some indication of the little idyll that was drawing to its close.

All at once the man assumed an air of decision. I could see that he had had enough of this little family celebration. At a single gulp he emptied his glass. Then he folded his arms and looked squarely at the woman.

"Aren't you ever going to give me a sou?"

The woman, the plain, uncomely woman, was visibly discountenanced by the suddenness of the attack.

"Yes," said the man, "you get on my nerves with your reproaches and your insinuations."

"My insinuations?"

"Yes, your insinuations. It's your dowry that you're hinting at, isn't it, hey?"

"But, my dear friend——"

"Your dowry! Ah, yes, let's talk about your dowry. It's a daisy, your dowry. Do you know how much it's worth, your dowry?"

"A hundred thousand francs."

Exactly, a hundred thousand francs. Do you know how much income your hundred thousand francs represents, your famous hundred thousand francs?"

"I—I don't know exactly——"

"Eh bien! I'll tell you. Your famous hundred thousand francs represents three thousand francs income, and that don't include costs!"

"But my dear friend——"

"And three thousand francs income. Do you know how much that represents for a day?"

"But my dear friend——"

"That represents nine francs fifty centimes. You understand, nine francs fifty centimes."

"But my dear friend——"

"In round figures let us say ten francs, ten francs a day. Do you know how much that is for an hour?"

"But my dear friend——"

Ten francs a day, that's forty centimes an hour. That's what your dowry amounts to, forty centimes an hour. Frankly, it wasn't worth while."

"You insult me."

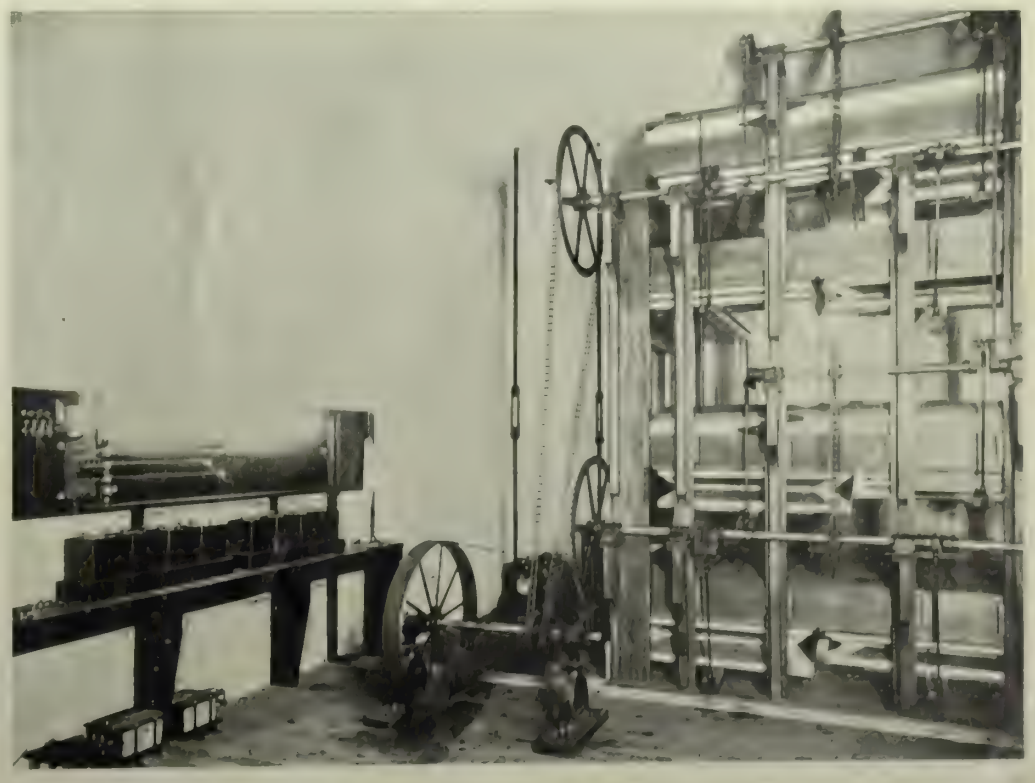
"Look here. There's forty centimes that I give back to you for sixty minutes of liberty I'm going to take. It is half-past six. I'll come back at half-past seven for dinner——"

"You're disgusting."

"And I forewarn you, if the house smells of cooking—oh, the least little bit—and if you're still as sulky as you are now, I'll go dine somewhere else—reimbursing you, of course, a fraction of your dowry, pro rata according to the length of my absence. Au revoir, ma chere." And the man, after paying for the absinthe and Vermouth, went off, leaving the woman starring stupidly at the forty centuries before her.—Translated from the French by F. N.

It is not generally known that there is a strange and striking ceremonial by which the Vatican authorities assure themselves that the Pope is dead. The Cardinal Chamberlain approaches the bed of the dead Pontiff, and bears in his hand a little silver hammer. He prostrates himself before the bed, and calls the dead man three times, not by his name as Pope, but by the name that was given him at his baptism. Then he touches him lightly on the forehead three times with the hammer. The silence which follows this appeal by voice and by touch is final proof that he who makes no answer to it is beyond its reach. After this formality the Cardinal announces to the waiting priests that the Pope has ceased to live.

A Boston man who dines regularly at a prominent hotel was interested to discover the other day that his waiter, whom he has been tipping liberally all along, owns five tenement houses in the Hub, all clear of mortgages, and that his tax bill is considerably larger than his patron's.



THE BELLOWS PLANT OF THE ST. IGNATIUS ORGAN

Here are the electric motors and storage batteries, through whose agency the wind supply is obtained

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Confidential Communications of a Miss in Society.

Dear Diary:—Can it be true that we have already embarked on ninety-seven and I am still unshackled, untrammeled and unengaged? You know I promised myself that I should have at least four scalps to my belt ere half the season had elapsed—and yet here I am as heartwhole as when I made my first bow three months ago, timid as a starling, beneath mamma's capacious wing.

What is the matter with the men that they fail to try the timber of my tones, to test the limit of my attractiveness? Of course I had the usual assortment of boys. My germans are enjoyed two seasons ahead. I never am seated a moment at the cotillion, have partners galore for all the dances—but not a single, genuine eligible has fluttered an eyelid at my approach. And I can't have any real fun with the boys, because papa is so hideously old fashioned. Do you know that he won't permit me even to receive calls unless either mamma or Leila is in the room—and Leila is such a prig. Oh, relations are awful bores—and I might have such fun had I but half a chance.

Last week has been deadly dull. There was Christmas when all the Vanderveldes came to dinner—grandma and grandpa, Uncle John and Aunt Letty, Uncle Martin and Aunt Sybil and the little Vanderveldes who have not yet been launched. Yet I pitied poor mamma. You know how deadly superior Aunt Sybil is. Well, she viewed me through her lorgnettes, ran over my points as if I had been a race horse and said: "Well, Elizabeth, the child might do were she properly built up by an efficient modiste." (I, who pride myself on my willowyness!)

Then, Aunt Letty, who holds the purse strings of the family and for whom I have been named, exclaimed:

"You are quite wrong, Sybil. What does so young a girl need an expensive dressmaker for? Simplicity in my eyes is youth's chief charm."

"Tush! Tush!" was the rejoinder. "That was all very well in your day, Letty, but even in my time"—(Aunt Sybil is well preserved, but I am convinced is Aunt Letty's senior by a half score years)—"girls paid more attention to their toilettes."

The two old ladies were ready to launch into a wordy war when dinner was announced and stopped their comments. Afterwards I went down to the Occidental with Arthur to a dance and had a glorious time. Some of the girls looked just too sweet. Mabel de Noon wore a lovely gown of pink silk and chiffon, and Leila Burton was charming in white. Leila is an awfully nice girl, so simple and unaffected, and is really exceedingly clever and bright, but seemingly unconscious of it. The music was good, and I danced and danced. There were several army fellows there and they always make excellent partners.

I must not forget to tell you, dear Diary, all about the Leap Year dance of the Friday Fortnightly. It took place on Thursday night at Lunt's Hall. You would hardly have recognized the hall, though—that scene of our first triumphs where, when scarcely more than babies, we made our initial effort at the light fantastic. Dear hall, it is as replete with memories as an old beau, but luckily adds silence to its charms. On this occasion it was tricked out of all semblance to its original self. A daintily trimmed tree, laden with trifling trinkets, was in the center, every available cornice or coign of vantage was covered with bright berries and greens and the musicians were completely concealed behind a bower of greens, ferns and palms. There were not nearly so many girls as usual—you will never guess why—but it was a "Leap Year affair," and they were too timid! It sounds ridiculous, but is nevertheless correct.

Genevieve Goad, assisted by Mr. Robbie Eyre, Mr. Milton Latham and Mr. Addison Mizner, led the cotillion. The figures were as usual on the "marching order," the Christmas tree figure being the sole innovation. I wish you could have seen how speedily the trinkets disappeared. Every one wanted a souvenir and it was a case of first come first served. I got a dear little trifle that I have put in my treasure box with Will's violets and my first love letter.

I wish I could dance as well as Susie Blanding. She is by far the most graceful of the girls—skims over the floor and is so light. She looked very sweet. She is fair and of medium height and wore a gown of white chiffon. Miss De Long seemed to me one of the most popular of the girls, and I really don't wonder she is so pretty—is dark, and wore an effective gown of yellow silk trimmed with blue. Annie Voorhies, too, looked radiant in white swiss, with blue ribbons. She is the greatest kind of a favorite with both boys and girls. But the girl I admire most is Ethel Cohen. Were I a boy (but even in my diary mamma won't let me use slang) I should call her a "peach." She dresses so well too, and is such good fun, so jolly and bright. It was great sport seeing which of the boys had the best time and who was the most popular. Arthur and I compared notes and we agreed that Mr. George De Long, Mr. Addison Mizner, Mr. Bob Campbell, Mr. Mort. Gibbons and Mr. Lloyd Baldwin were the most often called out and that Mort. Gibbons and Lieutenant Bent shared the laurels of beaudom. I really think, though, that Mr. Bob Campbell, Mr. Larry Van Winkle and Mr. Harry Scott are the best dancers.

The next cotillion is to be a military affair led by Lieutenants Nolan and Dana Kilburn. Great are the anticipations with regard to the final Fortnightly. It is to be a very smart affair; is to be held in the Maple Hall of the Palace Hotel and we are to have supper in the grill room. The Maple Hall is the place for smart functions now, and I don't wonder, for it is so pretty and so easy to decorate and makes an admirable background for a pretty gown.

I was utterly worn out on Saturday morning, and when Therese opened my blinds and told me it was already 10:30 A. M. I felt that life was too long and wished I could skip a year. However, she brought me in a cup of delicious coffee and I felt somewhat better and by the time I had had my usual massage the sun had commenced to shine. I then decided to go to the Fortnightly, when lo, mamma appeared and said I should not. Of course that made me obstinate, and at 9 sharp I was speeding down to Lunt's Hall in my coupe. The decorations were still fresh and lent a festive air to the scene. The hall was crowded and some lovely gowns were worn. Mr. Howard Adams and Gertrude Bates led the cotillion and introduced some new figures, which were quite complicated, but very pretty. I am always glad when any change is made, as the driving and marching figures follow one another with the regularity of clockwork and are as tiresome as papa's best stories. I never saw Bertha Dolbeer look so pretty . In my eyes she is one of the belles of the debutantes, and I admire her even more than I do Bernie Drown. She wore a very pretty frock of pale blue. Mae Moody, her cousin, also looked very sweet; Gertrude Van Wyck made an effective picture in a pale pink gown; Marie Niesser looked as bright and vivacious as usual in a bright red frock. I wish I had Marie's brain, the boys say she is so intelligent, and I am only piquant and amusing. Well, we can't have everything, I suppose. Ethel Dickson is a handsome girl too, and as jolly as possible. She wore a white China silk gown. Nettie Black also looked fetching in white swiss, with tight red sash and ribbons. Altogether I think I had the time of my life, as I had to divide my dances, and I am so dead that I can hardly see to write. MISS CRICKET.

MRS. BURNS McDONALD
FORMERLY MISS BESSIE YOUNGER

***

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sahlein gave an "At Home" last Saturday evening from 9 to 11 at their elegant new residence on Jackson street. The Misses Fishes, sisters of Mrs. Sahlein, assisted her in receiving, and the affair was in every way a thorough success. A few intimate friends remained later to dance, and carriages were still rolling in the small hours.

Mr. and Mrs. Ignatz Steinhart gave a very enjoyable dinner Christmas night to a few of their friends.

Mrs. I. C. Moore and Miss Jeannie Moore entertained their friends at a Leap Year Cotillion on Christmas night, at the rooms of the San Franciso Verein. Both the ballroom and the supper-room were profusely decorated with mistletoe boughs tied with cardinal ribbons. The fortunate ones received very handsome favors, but every dancer was presented with a bunch of mistletoe with red satin streamers. It was a veritable Leap Year affair. The hostess' most intimate girl friends assisted her throughout the evening as floor managers, and really seemed to enjoy these new duties. Mrs. William Gerstle looked most beautiful in a white gown, veiled in tulle and trailing with pink roses. Miss Neustadter was in pink with white mousslaine, Miss Greenbaum in white tulle over green satin, Miss Lewis looked very pretty in white, and Miss Hilda Levy in a dainty chiffon gown of white, edged with black.

Miss Beatrice Bachman was among the prettiest as well as the most charmingly gowned of the maidens at Mr. Moore's cotillion. She is small, with clean-cut features, big brown eyes and beautiful teeth. Her gown was of pale blue sun-pleated satin covered with tulle. The bodice was draped in pale blue tulle with one American beauty rose on the shoulder and a broad white satin belt around her waist.

Another stunning gown was worn by Miss Sheideman. It was of deep pink silk covered with pink duchess muslin. A full ruche trimmed the bottom of the skirt. The belt and collar were pale blue satin. The belt was folded and finished with about a dozen tiny bows in the back.

Miss Lippit looked very stylish in canary colored figured satin draped in yellow mousselaine de soie. The skirt was inserted with narrow lace and edging. Around her waist and forming bows on the shoulders soft watermelon pink silk was draped.

A very romantic termination of a trip to the Antipodes is the engagement of Miss Martha W. Shainwald and Mr. Leo M. Myers. The couple met on board the steamer Alameda, upon which the prospective bride was returning home, after a nine months' tour of China, Japan and Australia. Miss Shainwald, who is a sister of Mr. Herman Shainwald, the real estate agent, is one of the cleverest of our San Francisco girls. Mr. Myers, whose home is in Auckland, New Zealand, is a barrister by profession, but has devoted most of his time during the past three years to his mining interests. He is a member of the Johannesburg and of the Auckland Stock Exchange, and represents one of the largest English mining syndicates. Owing to Mr. Myers' very short stay in this city, the wedding will not take place until his return from Auckland in a couple of months.

The wedding of Miss Rose Fechheimer and Mr. Alfred Lilienfeld, which took place last Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, was a very quiet affair, only forty guests being present. Miss Fechheimer looked very beautiful in a gown of white satin veiled in tulle. She was unattended. Mr. and Mrs. Lilienfeld left immediately after the ceremony for a couple of weeks' honeymoon, the destination of which is kept a profound secret. Upon their return they will reside at the Colonial Hotel.

Next Monday afternoon Sorosis will give a reception. Mr. Frank Lincoln will be the guest of honor. Mrs. H. E. Huntington is in charge of the program.

Across the bay the air is simply laden with philosophy, and even the Christmas greetings were interlarded with remarks pertaining to the immortality of the soul and the nature of the Deity. I notice that the more intellectual among the Berkeleyites are endeavoring to cultivate an expression of philosophical calm, as that, according to Professor Howison and Dr. Harris is a proof of great development. In spite of this atmosphere of culture the dining and wining of the two philosophers goes on apace. On Wednesday evening the University Club gave a dinner to Dr. Harris. President James E. Tucke introduced the guest of the evening with some fitting remarks. Among those invited were: Rev. Dr. Stebbins, Professor Howison, Professor Bacon, Mr. John Muir, Professor Gayley, Professor Davidson, Mr. Charles Webb Howard, President Martin Kellogg, Mr. John R. Glascock and Mr. Horace Davis. Dr. Harris was also the guest of honor at a stag dinner given by President Kellogg last week. The guests included the members of the faculty of the University, Mr. George D. Metcalf and Judge Garber.

The engagement of Miss Mollie Hutchinson and Mr. Ernest Peixotto has been recently announced. Miss Hutchinson is a very stylish looking girl and possesses considerable talent as an artist. She has spent several years abroad pursuing her studies. Mr. Piexotto is one of our most talented and successful artists. The wedding is to take place about the middle of February.

Miss Ethel Kittredge gave a very jolly evening to the members of the "Twenty-One Club" on Tuesday evening. The young people played whist and had much fun. Several of the girls play an excellent game. They were all gowned in light chiffons and organdies.

A very pretty luncheon was given by Miss Katherine Chabot as a farewell to Miss Florence Walker, who left for New York on Monday evening. The table looked bright with its decorations of holly and red berries. Among those invited were: Miss Pauline Lohse, Miss Bessie Gage, Miss Jean Howard and Mrs. Chabot.

An interesting home wedding was that of Miss Annie B. Wilber and Mr. William B. Chapin Booth. The ceremony was quietly celebrated at the home of her aunt, Mrs. F. W. Cushing, on Grove street, last Wedneday.

The Unity Club and the members of the First Unitarian Church are to hold a carnival of authors in the latter part of this month. It is quite a new idea and was suggested by Mrs. Charles Wendte. During the carnival characters from Shakespeare, Dumas, Dickens, Scott and Irving will be represented.

The ladies of the Ebell Club are to give a big luncheon on Tuesday next at their new rooms. It is to be a very elaborate affair on the order of the breakfast recently given by Mrs. Lowenberg at the Palace. Toasts are to be given and the presidents of the various San Francisco clubs will be present.

DRAMATIC NOTES

Sousa's Concert Band will visit this city on its tour. The leader received the unusual honor of being asked to conduct the Philharmonic Bias-Orchestra in Berlin to the great satisfaction and pleasure of the crowds who gathered to hear him. His great marches were applauded and cheered, and he was compelled to play them again and again.

It is pleasant to note that the management of Lillian Nordica have arranged to send an especially strong operatic concert company with her to this city. It is now understood that Madame Schalchi will accompany the diva.

"The Brownies," the fays, the disappearing demons, Dragonfel and his followers will all say good-bye at the Baldwin Theatre to-morrow, Sunday night, when "Palmer Cox's Brownies" will receive its final interpretation in this city.

"The Old Homestead" will be presented at the Baldwin Theatre on Monday night. Pictorially it presents four views of American life, two at Homestead Farm in Swanzey, New Hampshire, and two in New York.

Joseph Murphy has achieved a reputation as a legitimate actor of superior qualities, and much of that reputation has been gained by his work in the play "Shaun Rhue." The work alluded to consists of lifelike representations of a clear-headed young Hibernian lad of the north of Ireland type.

There are twenty-three people in the play of "The Prodigal Father," which is booked for the Columbia Theatre, all of whom are clever specialty artists in their line.

Somebody has been investigating the relations of the number 13 with the career of Nansen. Among the facts he presents are the following: The expedition numbered at first twelve men, till a thirteenth was picked up in a port in the way north; no one of the thirteen, however, lost his life. On March 13, 1895, Nansen decided to leave the ship himself and press north with one companion. The Fram struck a southerly current on January 13, 1896, and on August 13th she gained free water and Nansen reached land again. On February 13, 1896, the false report was telegraphed that he had been seen in Siberia. Three times were litters of thirteen pups born in Nansen's pack of Esquimau dogs, though it is rare that more than six appear in a litter. And finally it is said that just thirteen publishers attempted to secure the publication of Nansen's book giving his report of his adventures.

J. W. Carmany, 25 Kearny street, carries correct furnishings for Holiday Presents. A special line of smoking jackets and neckwear.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

MEREDITH PARODIED

Max Beerbohm's Funny Imitation of the Great Novelists' Style.

Quite the most sprightly of the younger generation of English literateurs is Max Beerbohm. His formal debut was made in the first "Yellow Book," in an essay on Cosmetics, written in a style as full of affectation as the toilette of Beau Brummel. Because the critics insisted on taking his mincing and exagerated manner as earnest, he commenced his controversial career by denouncing their lack of humor. Since then he has written with mock seriousness of Fops and Fads and latterly has joined the staff of the "Saturday Review" to which he contributes smart articles on books, poets and contemporaries in general. In the "Christmas Garland," published in the "Chap Book," he daringly parodies Marie Corelli, Richard Le Gallienne, H. G. Wells and others of the new school, with real skill and humor and winds up the series with this inimitable mockery of the manner of George Meredith.

The Victory of Aphasia Gibberish.

In the heart of insular Cosmos, stands Gibberish Park, a house of some pretension, mentioned at Runnymede, with the spreading exception of wings given to it in latter times by Daedalean masters not to be balked of billiards or traps for Terpsichore, and owned for unbroken generations by a healthy line of procreant Gibberishes, to the undoing of collateral branches eager for the birth of a female. Passengers in cushioned chambers flying through space, top-speed or dallying with obscure platforms not alighted at apparently, have had it pointed out to them, as beheld dimly for a privileged instant and then forgotten, for the most part, as they sink back behind crackling barrier of instructive paper, with a "Thank you, Sir," or "Madam," as the case may be. Guide books praise it. Wisdom skips.

It is probable that the goblins of this same Lady Wisdom were all ajostle one Christmas morning between the doors of the house and the village church, which crouches on the outskirt of the Park with something of a lodge in its look, they may have whispered, more than of celestial twinkles, even with Christmas hoarfrost bleaching the grey of it in sunlight, as one sees imaged on seasonable missives for amity in the trays marked "sixpence and upwards," here and there, on the counters of barter. Be sure these goblins made obeisence to Mr. Gasbury Gibberish, as he passed by, starched beacon of squirearchy, wife on arm, son to heel. After them, members of the household, rose-chapped males and females, carrying books of worship. The pack of rogues glance up the drive with nudging elbows and whisperings of "Where is Aphasia? Where is the betrothed of Sir Rhombus?"

Off they scamper for a peep through the windows of the house. They throng the sill of the library, ears acock and eyelids twittering admiration of a prospect. Aphasia was in view of them—essence of her.

Sir Rhombus was at her side. Nothing slips the goblins.

"Nymph in the Heavy Dragons," was Mrs. Cryptic-Sparkler's famous description of her. The County took it for final—an unset stone with a fleck in the heart of it. Aphasia commended the imagery.

She had breadth. Heels that sent ample curves over the grounds she stood on, and hands that could floor you with a clinch of them, were hers. Brown eyes looked down at you from swelling temples that were lost in a ruffling copse of hair. Square chin, cleft centrally, gave her throat the look of a tower witn a gun protrudent at top. Her nose was virginal, with hints of the Iron Duke at most angles. Pink oyster covering pearls must serve for her mouth. She was dressed for church, seemingly, but seemed no slave to Time. Her bonnet was pushed to the back of her head, and she was handling the ribbons. One saw she was a woman. She inspired deference.

"Forefinger for Shepherd's Crook" was Mrs. Cryptic-Sparkler's phrase for St. Rhombus. Let it go at that.

"You have Prayer Book?" he queried.

She nodded. Juno catches the connubial trick.

"Hymns?"

"Ancient and Modern."

"I may share with you?"

"I know them by heart. Parrots sing."

"Philomel carols," he bent to her.

"Complaints spoil a festival." She turned aside. There was a silence as of virgin Dundee or Madeira susceptible of the knify incision.

"Time speeds," said Sir Rhombus, with a jerk at the clock.

"We may dodge the scythe."

"To be choked with the sands?"

She flashed a smile.

"Lady! Your father has started."

"He knows the aphorism. Copy-books instil."

"It would not be well that my Aphasia should enter after the absolution," he pursued.

She cast her eyes to the carpet. He caught them at the rebound.

"It snows," she said, swimming to the window.

"A flake. Not more. The season claims it."

"I have thin boots."

"Another pair!"

"My maid buttons. She is at church."

"My fingers."

"Twelve on each!"

"Five," he corrected.

"Buttons . . ."

"I beg your pardon."

She saw opportunity. She swam to the bell-rope and gasped it for a tinkle. The action spread feminine curves to her lover's eye. He was a man.

Obsequiousness loomed in the doorway. Its mistress flashed an order for Port—two glasses.

Sir Rhombus sprang a pair of eyebrows on her. Suspicion slid down the banister of his mind, trailing a blue ribbon. Inebriates were one of his studies. For a second, she was sunset.

"Medicinal!" she murmured.

"Forgive me, madam! . . . A glass. Certainly. 'Twill warm us for worshipping."

The wine appeared, seemed to blink owlishly through the facets of the decanter, reminding one of a hoary captive brought forth into light from subterraneous dimness, something of querulousness in the sudden liberation of it. Or say that it gleamed benignant from its tray, steady-borne by the hands of reverence, as one has seen Infallibility pass with uplifting jewelled fingers through genuflexions of the Balcony. Port has this in it, that it compels obeisance, master of us; as distinguishable from brother or sister wines, wooing us with a coy flush in the gold of them to a cursory tope or harlequin-leap shimmering up the veins with a sly wink at us through eyelets. Hussey-vintages swim to a cossat. We go to Port, mark you!

Sir Rhombus sipped, with a snap of lips over the rim. He said, "One scents the cobwebs."

"Catches in them!" Aphasia flung at him.

"I take you. Bacchus laughs in the web."

"Unspun, but for Pallas!"

"A lady's jealousy!"

"Forethought, rather!"

"Brewed in the paternal pate. Grant it."

"For a spring in accoutrements."

Sir Rhombus inclined gravely. Port precludes prolongment of riposte. He glanced at his time-piece, whistled. "A smart step will bring us for a second lesson, special lesson. Christmas. The Magi." The wine nudged his memory.

Aphasia motioned him to the decanter. The action switched him. He filled, meditatively; returned to chair.

"The Litany is better," she murmured.

"We must not miss it. Three minutes and we start."

"At gallop."

"I am of a mood for kneeling." He drained his glass with an affectionate twirl at the stem. Aphasia eyed him curiously.

"Laid down by my grandfather," she said. "Cloistral."

He swam to the decanter, unsteadily.

"Queer," he muttered, scrutinizing the stopper. "No date on it. Antediluvian. Sound, though."

"Fill up!"

He filled. "Here's to you!"

She sparkled.

"With your permission!" he said, refilling. "Finish it under table. Genius of Port demands it. . . . Pretty carpet. . . . Revolving pattern."

GEORGE MEREDITH.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

You can expect too much of Schilling's Best—it is only tea.

But your grocer gives you your money back if you don't like it.

In packages, full weight.

Mexican Drawn Work

225 KEARNY STREET

Serapes, Hankerchiefs, Table and Bureau Cloths, Doilys—all sizes—4x4 to 36x36 inches. All Hand Work and of Imported French Linen. Largest and best selected stock and lowest prices ever offered in San Francisco

E. P. SLOSSON, Manufacturers' Agent

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Knox hats are swell. Korn the Hatter, 726 Market street.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

REASONS FOR USING

Walter Baker & Co.'s

Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the Dutch process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

King, Moss & Company

DIAMONDS, WATCHES

And High-Class Manufactures in

FINE GOLD AND SILVER

Exclusive European Designs, not obtainable elsewhere, at Manufacturers' Cash Prices

JEWELLERY Manufactured to Order

639 MARKET STREET

ELEGANT CORNER RESIDENCE—$9500—Southwest corner Page and Cole streets; handsome modern bay window house of nine rooms; bath, finished basement, etc.; only one block from Golden Gate Park; lot 30x106:3 feet; easy terms.

WESTERN ADDITION RESIDENCE—$6500—Page street near Devisadero; modern bay window residence of nine rooms; bath, basement and conservatory; newly painted and in good condition; brick foundation; street accepted; artificial stone sidewalk; Devisadero, Haight and Page street cars; lot 25x137:6 feet; terms easy.

MISSION RESIDENCE—$3000—Near 24th and Castro streets; two-story bay-window residence of seven rooms and bath, brick foundation; in fine condition; cheerful surroundings; Castro street cable and 24th street electric roads; must be sold; lot 25 x 114 feet; terms, one-quarter cash; balance on easy terms.

ALAMEDA HOME—$7500—Choice property in Alameda for exchange for San Francisco property; will pay cash difference, or assume small mortgage in a trade.

OAKLAND PROPERTY—$1200—Good lot, 50x150 feet, in Oakland; will exchange for San Francisco vacant lots and assume small mortgage.

Call at office for list of bargains in all classes of city property or country lands.

EASTON, ELDRIDGE & CO., 638 Market Street.

STEVENS, ARNHOLD & CO.

INCORPORATED

Office and Cellar: Corner Townsend and Stanford Streets

INGLENOOK TABLE WINES AND OLD BRANDIES

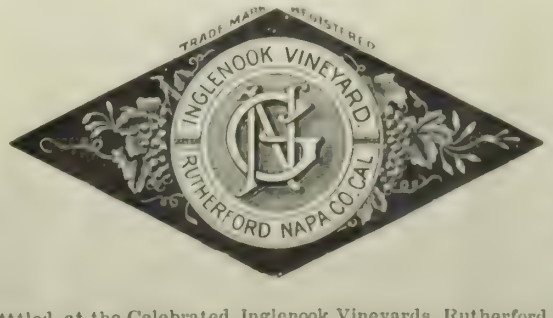
THE STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE AND PURITY

Clarets
Zinfandel
Burgundy
Sauterne
Gutedel
Hock
Burger
Riesling



Private Stock Brandy
Private Stock Port
Private Stock Sherry
Angelica
Muscat
Tokay

Grown and botttled at the Celebrated Inglenook Vineyards, Rutherford, Napa Co., Cal.

CALIFORNIA'S CHOICEST PRODUCTION

We make a specialty of catering to family trade.

VIRTUE AS A PROFESSION

The Rise of a Clerical Schemer, and the Evolution of a Prig.

The fear of the author lest he should be pursued by the fine frenzy of his friends and acquaintances, spitted on a satiric pen and comfortably roasted to please a hungry world, is the cause why "James, or Virtue Rewarded" (Stone & Kimball, N. Y.) remains anonymous as to its source. It is the history of the rise and fall of a British prig, a sort of Sunday-school story turned the seamy side without. The British prig is of the genus described by Burns as the "unco' guid," not at all the same sort of person as "him who prigs w'at isn't his'n," albeit in this special instance James turns out that way.

There is a good deal about the clergy in the book and of these the most interesting is Rev. Theophilus Fullblaster Ffoulke, Vicar of St. Faiths, who had raised to its highest power a form of ecclesiastical brigandage not wholly unknown in this country. Thus is he described:

The Reverend Theophilus Fullblaster Ffoulke was one of nature's clergymen. No matter in what age he had happened to be born he would still have pontificated. To guide the virtuous leanings of his fellowmen; to be the channel through which their charities flowed, to be the organizer of their strivings after human and humanitarian perfectibility, was as much part of him as his hair, his eyes, his teeth, or his integument. He might have been a Protagoras at Athens, a Crispinus at Rome, conducted the mysteries of Isis at Alexandria, or cut mistletoe with the Druids; he might have persecuted with Bonner, or suffered with Cranmer, but he could not have been anywhere without being a clergyman. Happy he was in that being temporally located in the nineteenth century he was also geographically located in England; in the England of today. Under no other conditions could he have united the push of the demagogue with the saintliness of the apostle, the respectability of the priest with the zeal of the reformer, advanced democratic ideals under the dignified wing of an aristocratic establishment.

St. Faith's was a model parish as worked by the Rev. T. F. Ffoulke—ardent curates came from distant parts of England to see how he organized, and went away determined to do likewise. "The Parish must be all in all," he said, "and everything must be part of the Parish." There were parochial kitchens, parochial bakehouses, parochial teas, parochial excursions, parochial baths, parochial everything, except breweries.

There was no excuse in St. Faith's for spending an evening by one's own fireside; if you were not lecturing, you were being lectured to; had you a taste for acting, there was the Parish Entertainment Club training its youthful Irvings and beardless Toolses; if you could sing, you had to sing, and pretty frequently too; the least accomplished could ,at any rate, manipulate the slides of a magic-lantern. Was your intellect inadequate even for this, you could help on the work in the Parish Cricket Club, the Parish Trap and Ball Association, or the Parish Gymnasium. An energetic curate even got together, and kept in working order for at least a month, a Parish Soap-bubble Society for amusing the little children of the very poor on wet afternoons.

And there was no withstanding the Vicar, he buttonholed you in your shop, in the presence of your employes; he attacked you in tramcars, where there were plenty of people before whom you did not care to appear lukewarm; he suborned the wife of your affections, the daughters of your tenderness; he beguiled you by the most virtuous of your weaknesses, by your parental pride, by your wish to do no worse than your neighbors, by your loyalty to your church and its congregation. It was no use to forbid him your door, some day you would return weary from business to find him chatting with your wife in your nice warm study, and it was all up with you. Once captured you were never released. It was a terrific system of ecclesiastical brigandage; the only way to escape was to pay a heavy ransom in the form of subscriptions.

Mr. Ffoulke's most influential, because most wealthy, parishoner was Mrs. Armbruster Smith, a lady of uncertain religious affiliations who had tried all the churches by turns and none of them long. Under whatever banner she might train for the moment, she was a pillar of that church even although the following week, having migrated to another sanctuary, she might blast her late pastor as a son of Belial or a minion of Antichrist. It was whispered that it was owing to her irrepressable energy that she was a widow. "Well," had said the late Mr. Smith, in discussing the difficulties of his situation with a friend, "if she does not want a holiday I do. Last week I had to attend a charity ball, a bazaar, the infirmary meeting, the dispensary meeting, to ladle soup at three very hot soup kitchens, amuse a Board school's children's picnic in the garden, tea them and show them a magic lantern after dark, then I had to make a fool of myself as a waxwork and entertain a missionary afterwards till 2 o'clock in the morning." From which it will be understood that Mr. Smith had to work out his salvation until he gave up the ghost and went to the reward he had earned so hard. However, that sad event did not prevent the migratory votaress, his wife, from sailing on and at last she brought up under Mr. Ffoulke's pulpit.

"The Vicar of St. Faith's had no sooner clapped eyes upon her than he planned a bazaar, theatricals, Band of Hope, fireworks and a jumble sale all to be brought off at the earliest possible date before the widow should have time to cool," which showed his great ability as an organizer besides his knowledge of human nature.

One person only in the congregation viewed Mrs. Armbruster Smith's advent with mixed feelings and this was the Vicar's wife, who felt her own importance threatened. But as the children of light are wise in their generation Mrs. Ffoulke prudently resolved as to the widow, first of all "to pick her bones, suck out the marrow and then send her packing."

The manner in which the "packing" was finally accomplished is shown by the course of a woman's quarrel between the Vicaress and her parishoner concerning the assistance given to an unwelcome suitor for the hand of Mrs. Smith's daughter.

Mrs. Ffoulke had appointed 3 o'clock in the afternoon to receive Mrs. Armbruster-Smith, and she was sitting at her writing-table sorting tracts for the waifs and strays when she arrived; this occupation gave her the advantage of being seated in a higher chair than her visitor, who, she anticipated, would take a settee; but in this she was disappointed, for the widow, on being ushered into the apartment, did not sit down, she remained standing; the Vicaress looked at her interrogatively and provokingly.

"Madam," said Mrs. Armbruster-Smith, quivering—and her headgear, with all the little shining things, rustled as she spoke—"Madam, I am informed that you have encouraged my daughter to disobey my orders." The Vicaress continued calmly interrogative. "I am told that you invited Mr. Howson to wash up with my daughter Emma; I had forbidden her to speak to him."

"My dear Mrs. Smith! How could I know that?" pleaded the Vicaress in coldly measured tones. "Why, he happened to call the day before the bazaar, when she was having tea with me, and they seemed to be very good friends; besides, I knew that he visited a good deal at your house."

"Mr. Howson visits at my house as many other young men visit, on parish business, for religion knows no distinction of classes, but he is not intimate with my daughters, and, with my consent, never will be, whatever may be the custom at the Vicarage;" replied the widow, waxing defiant beneath the cold scrutiny of Mrs. Ffoulke's gray eyes.

"As to what goes on at the Vicarage," replied that lady deliberately, "nobody has any right to express an opinion except myself; and you will pardon me when I observe that I cannot see any impropriety in Mr. Howson's being intimate with your daughters; he is in a very good position in the town."

"Position!" ejaculated the widow, "why he is only a shop-keeper!"

"We are all shop-keepers in Doddersfield," replied Mrs. Ffoulke, steadily, and cheerfully added: "but I trust none the worse Christians; and I am told, Mrs. Armbruster-Smith, that you are yourself interested in the Imperial Emporium."

"But he is the son of a village carpenter," shuddered the widow.

Mrs. Ffoulke fastened her calm gaze upon her, and said piously and reprovingly: "A carpenter's son! the Founder of Christianity was no more."

"Nonsense!" cried the infuriated widow.

Mrs. Ffoulke started to her feet; she rang the bell. "After the painful irreverence of that remark, madam," she replied, "you can hardly expect me to wish to continue this interview;" and, turning her back upon Mrs. Armbruster-Smith, she proceeded to smooth down her dress in front of the fire.

The widow retired; she went straight home and cried for five hours in her own room, then rang the bell, ordered gruel, and went to bed.

There is some municipal politics likewise in the book, enough to show a curious and interesting family resemblance with the plant of the same tribe which flourishes on this side of the water. (For sale by Doxey).

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

It is now the correct thing to have your afternoon tea, luncheon, weeding or dinner party photographed by the clean flash process introduced by Mr. B. C. Towne. Orders may be left at "The Wave" office or at 2121 Hyde street.

Walter Baker & Co., of Dorchester, Mass , U. S. A., have given years of study to the skillful preparation of cocoa and chocolate, and have devised machinery and systems peculiar to their methods of treatment, whereby the purity, palatability and highest nutrient characteristics are retained. Their preparations are known the world over, and have received the highest indorsements from the medical practitioner, the nurse, and the intelligent housekeeper and caterer. There is hardly any food product which may be so extensively used in the household in combination with other foods as cocoa and chocolate; but here again we urge the importance of purity and nutrient value, and these important points, we feel sure, may be relied upon in Baker's Cocoa and Chocolate. Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor

BOWDLEAR'S....

FLOOR WAX

Pulverized. For Dancing Floors. Is not white. Will not ball on feet. Will not soil clothes. All ready. Anybody can use it.

The floor must be clean and free from oil. Sprinkle, and the dancers will do the rest
Put up in pound packages . . . . . .

FOR SALE BY

MACK & CO.

9 and 11 Front St. San Francisco, Cal.

The Leading Hairdresser

Popular prices, equal to others; no imitating; all original styles, varied to suit the features. Competent artists employed; no apprentices. Bernhardt wavers, to wave hair without burning; Eau Broux, to restore grey or bleached hair to natural color. Latest styles in modern bangs, particularly Louis de Lavelliere style. Open Sundays.

Strozynski's

24 GEARY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

ITO, SOTOMI & CO.

Successors to JAPAN CURIO TRADING CO.

Japanese .·. Art .·. Goods

116 SUTTER STREET
SAN FRANCISCO

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

MOTT'S

NEW YORK

CIDER

CARLOAD OF NEW SWEET CIDER
FOR THE HOLIDAYS FOR SALE
TO ARRIVE IN LOTS TO SUIT

COBURN, TEVIS & CO., Agts.

107 Front St., S. F.

Trinity School

Founded 1876

3300 Washington Street, San Francisco

A Church Boarding and Day School for Young Men and Boys . . . .

Prepares for University and College. — A Faculty of Eleven Professors and Teachers. — Boarders limited to thirty-five. — Easter Term opens January 3d.

REV. DR. E. B. SPALDING, Rector.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

Miss Adie's School 2117 California Street bet. Buchanan and Laguna

Day Boarding School. Kindergarten.
English, French, German. Calisthenics. Dancing.

Its Purity
A Surety
Of
Its Excellence

Accept
No
Substitute
None
So
Good
None
So
Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER
SUCCESSORS TO
H. P. GREGORY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO

MACHINERY

Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.
19 Spear St., San Francisco
MANUFACTURERS OF
High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease
DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS
Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

A Home
MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A
GAZOGENE
BUT NOT
If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See
Justinian Caire
521-523 Market St., San Fran.

Electrical Supplies
BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.
523 Mission St., San Francisco

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of
Artificial Stone in all its branches
Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty
Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with
PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES
GIVE THEM A TRIAL

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

STORIES OF THE NORTH

Hudson Bay Romances by Gilbert Parker.

The tragedy of life in the ice-locked wastes of the Hudson's Bay territory, those grim, harsh deserts of snow and solitude is realized in a collection of stories by Gilbert Parker entitled from one of the number, "A Romany of the Snows" (Stone & Kimball). Mr. Parker's work is as remorseless in its development as the merciless land of which he writes. Like the dyer's hand his spirit is subdued to what it works in until you almost feel the biting drip of the melting snows from the forlorn trees. His sardonic humor glitters like an ice hummock and has jagged corners that hurt. The spirit of the beautiful hard north finds expression like this:

Even as he spoke a wind came crying round the house, and the parchment windows gave forth a soft booming sound. Outside, Nature was trembling lightly in all her nerves; belated herons, disturbed from the freshly frozen pool, swept away on large wings into the night and to the south; a herd of wolves trooped by the hut, passed from a short, easy trot, to a low, long gallop, devouring, yet fearful. It appeared as though the dumb earth were trying to speak, and the mighty effort gave it pain, from which came awe and terror to living things.

So, inside the house, also, Pierre almost shrank from the unknown sorrow of this man beside him, who was about to disclose the story of his life. The solitary places do not make men glib of tongue; rather, spare of words. They whose tragedy lies in the capacity to suffer greatly, being given the woe of imagination, bring forth inner history as a mother gasps life into the world.

This little story "Commandments in the Vulgar Tongue," perhaps some thirty pages long, is great enough to make a man's name known the round globe over. Parker, like Bret Harte, has discovered a new country in literature and has made it his own. It is not all tragedy, of course, but the best of it is tragic of the awesome lonliness of those "beautiful wide silences." There is among the others a story in which he figures who once was called "the first gentleman in Europe," who surely was no gentleman at all, as one may gather if nothing more were said than this history of the exile of a faithful friend driven to the heart of a Canadian wild by this shabby stuffed figure of a prince. There is a good honest fight or two in the book for those who love bloody noses and cracked crowns and all that these stand for, as for instance:

Pierre was cool. He said: "Remember, I am for the law. I am not one man. You are thieves now; if you fight and kill, you will get the rope, every one. Move from the door, or I'll fire. The girl comes with me." He had heard a door open behind him, now there was an oath and a report, and a bullet grazed his cheek and lodged in the wall beyond. He dared not turn round, for the other men were facing him. He did not move, but the girl did. "Coward!" she said, and raised her pistol at Borotte, standing with her back against Pierre's.

There was a pause, in which no one stirred, and then the girl, slowly walking up to Borotte, her pistol levelled, said: "You low coward—to shoot a man from behind; and you want to be a decent girl's husband! These men that say they're my brothers, are brutes, but you're a sneak. If you stir a step, I'll fire."

The cowardice of Borotte was almost ridiculous. He dared not harm the girl, and her brothers could not prevent her harming him. Here there came a knocking at the front door. The other brothers had come and found it locked. Pierre saw the crisis, and acted instantly. "The girl and I—we will fight you to the end," he said, "and then what's left of you the law will fight to the end. Come," he added, "the old man can't live a week. When's he gone then you can try again. She will have what he owns. Quick, or I'll arrest you all, and then——"

"Let her go," said Borotte; "it ain't no use."

Presently the elder brother broke out laughing. "Damned if I thought the girl had the pluck, an' damned if I thought Borotte was a crawler. Put an eye out of him, Liddy, an' come to your brother's arms. Here," he added to the others, "up with your popguns; this shindy's off; and the girl goes back till the old man tucks up. Have a drink!" he added to Pierre, as he stood his rifle in a corner and came to the table.

Parker's style is, as he might say himself, as much a part of those solemn hills and bitter wastes as the shining glacier.

Ito, Sotomi & Co., the leading Japanese Curio dealers of this city, have succeeded the Japan Curio Trading Company. This combination means a great deal for the curio speculators of San Francisco, for the reason that they will now be in direct contact with the importers. The firm has the shrewdest buyers in Japan, who are constantly sending to this coast rare novelties. The firm has a retail store at 116 Sutter street, where many curios may be seen.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Sench, proprietors.

Korn the Hatter, 726 Market street, is the sole agent for Knox Hats.

NEW BOOKS

Impressions of the Latest Fiction—Holiday Publications.

The "Wampum Belt," by Hezekiah Butterworth (D. Appleton & Co., publishers), is a semi-historical story of the great treaty between the Indians and the Quakers in Pennsylvania. It is written in a poetical style, which is very attractive. The Indians are described as fierce and warlike, but honest and true and under the peaceable rule of the Quakers they develop the best traits of the civilized man. For sale by Doxey, $1.50.

"The Ring o' Rushes" (Stone & Kimball) is a collection of Irish tales told in the Irish dialect by Shan Bullock. With the exception of two, the sketches are not vitally interesting. The best told and conceived is "His Magnificence," a story of an Irish peasant lad who, having made a fortune in America, returns home to impress his humble friends with his wealth. He is shocked by their surroundings, but does not dream of alleviating them. At last he goes to call on his old love, who had married and expects to cause her heartache by his magnificence. She, a bright Irishwoman, makes him feel his insignificance and small-heartedness. "They Twain," a tale brightly told, describes the curious Irish marriage customs.

"The Sealskin Coat" (D. Appleton & Co.), by Rolf Boldrewood, is a spirited and stirring tale full of dramatic interest. Unlike its predecessors, the scenes of which are laid in Australia, the events of this story occur in England and Egypt. The pictures of Egypt are especially good. The plot is rather impossible, but it is certainly handled with vigor and go.

"My Village" (Chas. Scribner's Sons), is a collection of short French sketches told and illustrated by C. Boyd Smith. To write a good short story is not easy, but these are told in a bright, smart style that catches and rivets the attention. The characterization is especially good, the illustrations very clever and copious and the book is certainly one of the most charming put forth for the holiday season.

"The Sprightly Romance of Marsac" (Chas. Scribner's Sons), by Mollie Elliot Seawell, is the tale of two young French artists who lived with great difficulty by their wits. Their struggles were terrific, till one of them discovered he had an uncle in America. The other, Marsac, decided that the uncle must die and leave a fortune of several million francs. He writes a paragraph to this effect and has it printed in all the papers—and then, presto! everything is changed. Acquaintances become friends, tradesmen servile. Finally (much to their alarm) the uncle actually turns up, the fictitious fortune becomes a real one and all is well. The story is amusing, well told, light and breezy.

"Some Modern Heretics" (Roberts Bros., publishers), by Cora Maynard, is an admixture of Idealism, Socialism and sundry other isms with the usual dramatis personae woven in. The millionaire father, hard, wicked and tyrannical; the maiden aunt with social aspiration; the daughters, one of whom is a veritable angel of delight, the other two heartless and cynical; the son, indolent, dissipated and selfish. The hero of the tale is a wonderful creation in every particular, what Anna B. Shaw would term "the ideal man."

"Curious Punishments of Bygone Days" (H. S. Stone & Co.), by Alice Morse Earle, has figured as a serial in the "Chap Book." The essays contained here are interesting records of the manner in which our forbears punished those who disobeyed the law. The stocks, pillory, branding, whipping-post and scarlet letter are all described and the process of their application defined.

It seems the ducking stool was the most ignominious of all these ancient penalties. Some of us doubtless wish that gagging and branking were still in force, and many authors would still condemn their fellows' work to be burned.

One of the most charming of the holiday books is a collection of old English ballads which the Macmillan Company publishes. It is prefaced by an interesting introduction by Hamilton W. Mabie, editor of "The Outlook," and is further enhanced by a drawing from the pen of George Wharten Edwards. Within one finds the familiar ballads of olden days, "Chevy Chase," "Fair Rosamond," "The Twa Corbies," besides "Flodden Fields" and "The Banks o' Yarrow."

"The School for Scandal" and "The Rivals" in one volume, prefaced by Augustine Birrell, and illustrated by E. J. Sullivan, is admirably gotten up and makes a book well worth having. There is little new to say about the classical productions of Sheridan, but whatever printing and fine paper can add to text has been achieved in this instance. One cannot but commend its typographical excellence. (Macmillan & Co., publishers).

THE GENUINE "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are sold only in boxes. They are wonderfully effective for Coughs and Throat Troubles.

Midst old Diablo's foothills, shut in from the winds and fogs, is Byron Hot Springs. Here invalids come to get away from winter, and bask in sunshine. Only 60 miles—3 hours' ride—from San Francisco; only $3 round trip; only $15, $18 and $21 per week, including physician, attendance, baths, and springs.

Hotel Rafael
SAN RAFAEL, CAL.
The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.
FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.
IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.
The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.
R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE
Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets
IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.
AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN
K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED
OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel
GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors
A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Mira Valle Vintages
Vineyard Mountain View
Santa Clara Co., Cal.
Depot, 604 1-2 Geary Street
SAN FRANCISCO
P. KLEIN, Proprietor.

Union Iron Works
BUILDERS ELECTRICAL MACHINERY
AGENTS FOR STORAGE BATTERY

A Successful Combination
A wholesale cloth merchant makes fine tailoring to order. Everyone should visit the large wholesale cloth house that
CHAS. LYONS, London Tailor opened Wednesday, September 30th, at 721 Market Street, in the Bancroft Building
In conjunction with his retail stores at 1212 and 1214 Market Street and 302 Kearny Street.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—Department No. 3.

Hannah Anglin, Plaintiff, vs. Maurice Anglin, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Maurice Anglin, defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant upon the ground of defendant's desertion and abandonment of plaintiff for upwards of six years next prior to the commencement of this action, and for a judgment and decree awarding to this plaintiff the sole custody and control of Mary Catherine Anglin, the minor child of plaintiff and defendant; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and the seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six (1896).

[Seal] C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By JOSEPH RIORDAN, Deputy Clerk.
Lane & Lane, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Leonard B. Lippert

MASONIC TEMPLE
SHAVING PARLOR
4 Post St., near Montgomery
SAN FRANCISCO

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company
MERCHANT TAILORS
No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

GRAY HAIR RESTORED
to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant to use. $1.00 a bottle. LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle. LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st. N.Y. Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

A. K. DAGGETT
Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

HARMONY IN GOWNS

The Secret of Being Well-Dressed—Fashions in Ball-Gowns.

You say, dearest Betty, that what you admire in me most is the fact that I am always fittingly gowned. I do not shop in a calling gown or wear a reception dress at a dinner. This, if you can only understand it, is one of the secrets of being well dressed. If you wish to look well buy your clothes with a definite object in view. See that they harmonize. Do not be a "thing of patches." I have noticed so often when shopping that half the women will buy what pleases the eye without giving a moment's consideration as to whether the garment in question will harmonize with the rest of their wardrobe or not. They get a silk waist because it is pretty—that is an awful mistake; it will probably swear at every skirt and hat they possess. Then one ought to acquire a sort of individuality with regard to one's clothes. Find out what scheme of colors is becoming to you and stick to that. Get a particular style of your own. You can modify it according to fashion, improve it as your taste dictates and you will find the great bugbear dress has lost half its terror. One soon gets the smaller details—gloves, veils, parasols, to match, and life is simplified. Buy only what you need; make every garment serve a definite end and have no hybrid dresses. Do not save your clothes. Have a few dresses and wear them out.

You want me to tell of the marvelous costumes worn by the Duchess of Marlborough. You know she is in half-mourning for her grandmother, Mrs. Vanderbilt, but nevertheless she has managed to blend the utmost degree of smartness with the decorous observance of her mourning. One dress, that was really a dream, was a combination of white satin and chinchilla; another was of white velvet with a diamond belt holding in a fall of black chiffon.

The Royal Family of England, I learn with concern, does not care for the bright reds that are now so fashionable and taboo them. The Princess of Wales seems to prefer petunia colored frocks for outdoor wear this winter. Princess Charles of Denmark (Maud of Wales) affects all shades of blue and a certain bright pink for her evening gowns. In the day time she wears bright chestnut brown and furs. Princess Victoria of Wales prefers grey, violet and white. The Czarina of Russia is called "the white Czarina" owing to her predilection for white. She has recently ordered a lovely gown of heliotrope silk with zigzag designs in brown, green and pink. Panels of pleated mousselaine de soie show on either side of the front of the plastron of the skirt, which is edged with Valenciennes lace. A square yoke of mousselaine is also pleated and the bodice gathered on it with a ruche. The sleeves are puffed to the elbow where they are ruffled.

There has been a decided change in ball gowns during the past few years. Formerly the low-necked dress was a necessity and the slim girl with deep saltcellars on her neck was obliged to expose them as daringly as her nicely rounded sister did her plumpness. Today, however, the willowy maiden wears a low-necked gown to be sure, but chiffon is gathered over the shoulders and a jeweled collar conceals her, shall we say, scrawny, neck. Most exquisitely light and graceful in effect are the latest models in ball costumes. White satin usually forms the foundation and is covered with laces, spangled nets, tulles, duchess muslins and flaky gauzes. An especially pretty frock has a skirt of shrimp pink satin with demi-train. The bodice is covered with pink chiffon embroidered in pearls—with an empiecement of lace in the back and a broad belt of satin. The sleeves are of lace and pleated chiffon.

BARBARA.

Fin de Siecle Champagne.

The aspiration of every champagne shipper in this present advanced and nerve-taxing age of civilization is to produce well-matured and palatable champagnes containing the least possible degree of alcohol. The ripening and developing process requires several years, and the grapes producing the least alcohol are the most expensive in the champagne district. In consequence large investments are necessary, which only the richest houses are able to make. Among the most successful in meeting the modern change of taste is the eminent and large champagne house of Moet & Chandon, who in their White Seal (Grande Cuvee) have accomplished the task of combining maturity, deliciousness of flavor and lightness. The White Seal (Grand Cuvee) is meeting with good success among connoisseurs in Europe New York, and will also soon be appreciated on this coast, where it is now introduced by Messrs. Wm. Wolff & Co., the importers on Market street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Knox Celebrated Hats. Korn the Hatter, 726 Market street.

Perrier-Jouet Champagne
EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also s, ecially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand
W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB
(INGLESIDE TRACK)
The Only Perfect Winter Track in America
Racing from Dec. 28 to Jan. 9, inclusive
Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine!
First Race at 2 p.m.
Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 p. m. Fare for the round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar.
Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.
The Pommery Sec Stakes Tuesday, December 29th.
The California Oaks Thursday, December 31st.
The Shreve & Co. Cup Friday, January 1st.
A. B. SPRECKELS, President.
W. S. LEAKE, Secretary.

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.
Sunday Night, January 3d, Last time of Palmer Cox's Brownies
Beginning Monday, January 4th
Denman Thompson's Famous Play
The • Old • Homestead
The Original Old Homestead Double Quartette
Select Company of Twenty-three Players
Wonderful Electrical Effects

Columbia Theatre.
BELASCO, MAYER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
One Week, commencing Monday, January 4th, Special Engagement of the Legitimate Irish Comedian
JOSEPH MURPHY
Supported by his New York Stock Company, in the companion drama to "Kerry Gow," entitled
"SHAUN RHUE"
Introducing Mr. Murphy's World-famous song "A Handful of Earth."
Reserved Seats 25c, 50c, 75c, $1. Matinee 25c, 50c, 75c
January 11th "Kerry Gow."

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Jan. 4
A BRILLIANT OPENING OF THE NEW YEAR
HALLEN & FULLER, Comedy Sketch Artists
THE TWO BOSTONS, Grotesque Comedians
ANNA CALDWELL, Singing Comedienne
CHARLES WAYNE, Premier Eccentrique
NILSSON'S AERIAL BALLET and KIRALFY'S GRAND OPERA BALLET
AND A GREAT VAUDEVILLE BILL
Reserved seats 25c; balcony 10c; box seats and opera chairs 50c. Special Matinee New Years Day

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
. . ALSO . .
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 12c inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Murphy, Grant & Co. . . Pacific Coast Sole Agents

YOU KNOW OUR BUSINESS
SO DO WE!
Stationery, Printing, Bookbinding
ANYTHING IN THAT LINE
THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

"A California Fairy"

is the title of an elegant little brochure, relating in charming allegorical language the splendors and delights of

"Sunset Limited"
(EXQUISITELY ILLUSTRATED)

The popular Sunset Route is also the subject of a finely illustrated publication, entitled

"Through Storyland to Sunset Seas"

especially interesting to one contemplating a trip over that great Southern route.

Both books are published by the Southern Pacific Company, and will be sent to any address by T. H. GOODMAN, General Passenger Agent, on receipt of 25 cents postage, or 10 cents for the "Fairy" alone.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. December 26.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, December 5, 10, 15, 20, 26, 30, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. December 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. December 13, 17, 21, 26, 29, and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, 11 a.m. December 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.
The company reserved right to change steamers or sailing date.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Through Sleeping-Cars to Chicago.

The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad runs through from Oakland to Chicago, daily, Pullman Palace Drawing-room, also Upholstered Tourist Sleeping Cars, leaving every afternoon. Annex Cars on sharp connection for Denver and St. Louis. The only line by which the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River can be reached. The canyon is a mammoth opening in the earth two hundred miles long, eighteen miles wide and seven thousand feet deep. It is reached by stage from Flagstaff, Arizona Territory, in one day's ride. Send for beautifully illustrated book descriptive of the Canyon and the Santa Fe Route to the East. Lowest through rates to all points in the United States, Canada, Mexico or Europe. Special rates to regularly ordained ministers of the gospel. Ticket office, 644 Market street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.

OCEANIC Steamship Company 6 Days to Honolulu by Steamship "AUSTRALIA"
Hawaii, Samoa, New Zealand, Australia
S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Jan. 26, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates
S. S. "Zealandia," for Australia, Thursday, January 7, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

HIRSCH-KAHN & CO.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS
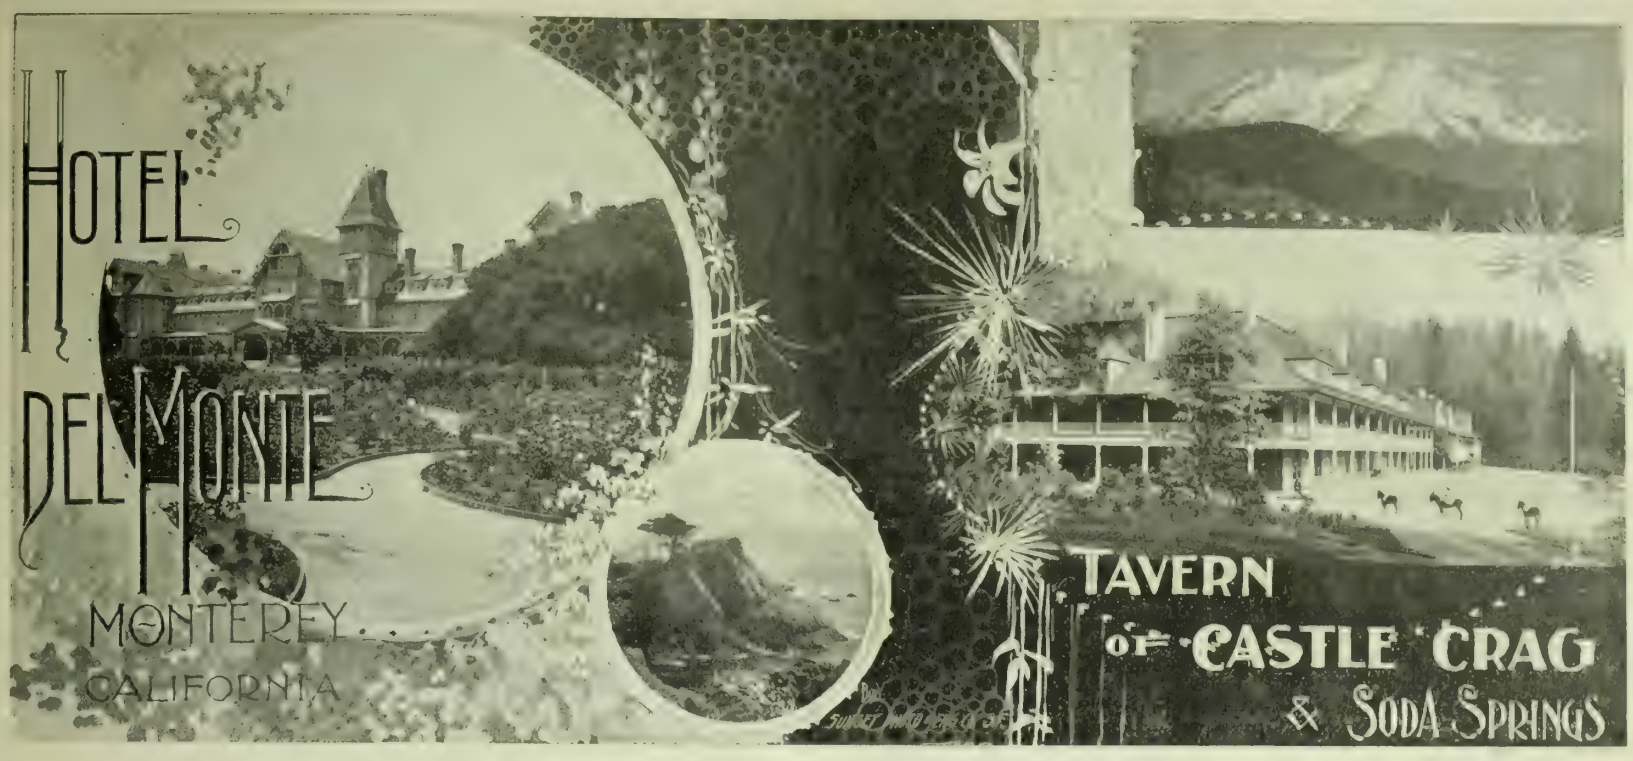
"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)
NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.



CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

THE HOTEL DEL CORONADO

California's • Most • Perfect • Resort !

Which surely has the Most Equable Climate Known to Man !
One is always sure of pleasant days with cool nights !

Visitors can have Hunting, Fishing, Boating, Driving, Horseback Riding

You may enjoy Surf Bathing on a hard sandy beach with no undertow
Hot or Cold Salt Water Swimming in the best tanks on the coast

TOURISTS Remember that a trip to California is not complete until you have seen Hotel Del Coronado

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital actually paid up in cash - - | $1,000,000 00 |
| Deposits December 31, 1895 - - | 30,727,586 59 |
| Reserve Fund - - - - - - | 750,000 00 |
| Guaranteed Capital - - - - - | 1,200,000 00 |

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER — ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE — GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY — DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER — PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
01 Montgomery Street

Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Co.

of Aix La Chapelle, Germany
Capital, $2,250,000.00
Total Assets, $6,854,683.65
United States Department 204 Sansome Street

VOSS, CONRAD & CO., General Managers

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

H. D. LAWRIE, A. J. CARMANY, Managers
OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Some time ago a queer religious imposter invaded the southeastern portion of Ohio and created much excitement among the farmers. Several gave the new "Messiah" all they possessed, and he soon became the center of a large colony of deluded followers. One moonlight night the "Messiah" was sitting on his verandah smoking when a shrewd old farmer came up and saluted him. "Good evening, mister." The "Messiah" raised his hand and said, "I greet you, brother." "You'll excuse me, mister," continued the old farmer, "but my folks are much interested in you, and my wife says she'll stand by you come what may." "Amen," said the "Messiah." "Now, see here," added the farmer. "I am kinder worried about this thing and want to get it straight. Now can you perform miracles—turn water into wine, heal the sick and walk on the water?" "Yea, verily." "Yer ain't jokin' now?" "Nay, brother." "And you can really do it?" "Yea, verily." "Well, I'm mighty glad of that. A lot of them fellers said you couldn't and are coming up here to take you down to that mill pond below and chuck you in to make sure. They will be here in about fifteen minutes, an' I thought I'd tell yer. Glad you can do it, as the water's mighty cold. Good night." The caller bowed and went off. The "Messiah" disappeared and was never heard of again in Ohio. The mystery of his sudden departure was unsolved for a long time, but at last the old farmer told the tale.

A Washington attorney is rather noted for the facility with which he forgets financial obligations. He has owed a certain grocer eight dollars for a year or two, and the grocer determined to get it. One day he approached the lawyer and said: "Judge, I have a customer who has owed me a small bill but won't pay it. What would you do?" "Sue him," said the lawyer. "Very well, I will put the account in your hands," and the merchant gave him his own bill. A few days later he received the following note from the lawyer: "In the case of —— against —— I took judgment for full amount of your claim. Execution was issued and returned 'no property found.' My fee is ten dollars, for which amount please send check. Will always be glad to serve you."

There was in Hampstead Road, some years ago, a pavement artist, and as Du Maurier passed that way he frequently dropped a penny into the man's hat. One cold day, the author of "Trilby" told the fellow to go and get a meal and he would take charge of his hat. When he was out of sight Du Maurier proceeded to wipe out his pictures of faithful dogs, etc., and drew instead society ladies and gentlemen made famous by him in "Punch." Passers-by stopped, and he soon attracted a crowd. When the man returned the hat was filled, but with a scornful glance at Du Maurier's work he said: "Well, that may attract some people, but it ain't art."

A distinguished dramatist tells the following story: "I once wrote a melodrama and was advised to sit in the gallery the first night of the play in order to get the most expert criticism of my work. I picked out a bright, intelligent-looking man for a neighbor and found him quite willing to talk. His remarks ran as follows: 'I like 'er (the leading lady), 'er with the yellow 'air. She's very good, mister.' He liked also the heavy man, 'the cove with the biled shirt and di'monds.' 'But, guvner,' he said in a confidential whisper, 'Muvver love me, wot a duffin play.' After that I attended first nights in the stalls."

Benjamin Ward Richardson, the famous English physician, had been in on a visit to one of the few small towns in England where there was no public house. The resident doctor, a young man, was nearly starving. He came to Sir Benjamin for advice. Placing his hand on the youthful medico's shoulder the eminent doctor said: "Take my advice and go away. Those teetotalers not only shirk accidents, but when wounded heal so fast that there is neither pleasure nor profit after the first dressing."

Apropos of Jewish Lord Mayors, the following tale is told of the late Sir David Salomon: Sir David Salomon, the first Jewish Lord Mayor of London, was a very polished gentleman, and the Bishop of London and the late Prince Consort were discussing his election. "Thank goodness, your Royal Highness," said the Bishop, "we have at last got a gentleman in the civic chair. "Yes, my lord," returned the Prince, "but you had to go beyond the pale of Christianity to find him."

Sole agency Knox Hats. Korn the Hatter, 726 Market street.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE—
PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

FONTANA & CO'S MAMMOTH CANNING WORKS

The firm is composed of S. L. Goldstein, William Fries and M. J. Fontana. They are the largest packers of canned fruits and vegetables on the coast, and their magificent plant as shown in the above view is situated on the Bay of San Francisco, and at the terminus of Van Ness avenue and Polk street. Offices at 134-136 Market street.

PIERCE & CO.

GENERAL WESTERN AGENTS

National Cash Register Company

HAVE REMOVED

their offices from the Chronicle Building to the

PARROTT EMPORIUM BUILDING, THIRD FLOOR

Rooms 312, 313, 317, 318

Opposite Baldwin Hotel — Telephone South 103

SECURITY SAVINGS BANK, 222 Montgomery street, Mills Building.—Dividends on term deposits at the rate of four and one-fifth (4 1-5) per cent per annum, and on ordinary deposits at the rate of three and one half (3 1-2) per cent per annum, for the half year ending December 31, 1896, will be payable, free of taxes, on and after January 2, 1897.
S. L. ABBOT, JR., Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK of San Francisco, 33 Post street—For the half year ending December 31, 1896, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on term deposits, and three and one-third (3⅓) per cent per annum on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1897.
GEO. A. STORY, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE — SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 101 Montgomery street, corner Sutter.—For the half year ending December 31, 1896, a divided has been declared at the rate of four and two tenths (4 2.10) per cent per annum on term deposits, and three and one half (3½) per cent per annum on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after January 2, 1897. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of dividend as the principal from and after January 1, 1897.
CYRUS W. CARMANY, Cashier.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Gould & Curry Silver Mining Company
Assessment No. 80
Amount per share, 15 cents
Levied December 14, 1896
Delinquent in office January 19, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, Feb. 9, 1896
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco

ASSESSMENT NOTICE
Occidental Consolidated Mining Company
Assessment No. 25
Amount per share, 15 cents
Levied November 24, 1896
Delinquent in office December 29, 1896
Day of sale of delinquent stock Jan. 18, 1897
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary.
Office, Room 69, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING Company.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey county, State of Nevada.
Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees, held on the 8th day of December, 1896, an assessment (No. 110) of Twenty-five Cents (25c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 3, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.
Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on MONDAY, the 11th day of January, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 1st day of February, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Trustees.
R. U. COLLINS, Secretary.
Office—Room 3, Stock Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

DIVIDEND NOTICE — GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 526 California street—For the half year ending December 31, 1896, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four and twenty-six hundredths (4 26-100) per cent per annum on term deposits, and three and fifty-five hundredths (3 55-100) per cent on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1897.
GEO. TOURNY, Secretary.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

The Pasadena Rose Carnival — New Years in the Concordia Club

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

VOL XVI. No. 2 — SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 9, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS.

SAN FRANCISCO'S OLD CURIOSITY SHOP

THE FAMOUS PLACE ON CLAY STREET WHERE CURIOS OF ALL NATIONS ARE STORED

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 9, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| Scenes from the Midwinter Rose Carnival at Pasadena | 4 |
| Fox-Hunting in California | 5 |
| A Winter Rose Festival | 5 |
| New Years' Eve at the Concordia Club | 5 |
| Things and People; by The Witness | 6 |
| A Western Curiosity Shop | 6 |
| New Year's at San Quentin; by Frank Norris | 8 |
| The Boom Association; by Boswell Jr. | 9 |
| Scenes at the Meet of the San Mateo Hunt Club | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres; by Peg Woffington | 11 |
| The Golden Girl: a Review | 12 |
| The Magazines of the Month | 13 |
| Fashion Review | 14 |

OUR NEXT SENATOR.

That Senator George C. Perkins will be selected by our Legislature on Tuesday next to succeed himself as United States Senator no man in the possession of the facts and of his senses can for a moment doubt. There is a point where even ambition may be made ridiculous, and the fear is forced upon us that the opponents of Mr. Perkins are doing that much, if not more, for the candidate who is being pushed forward by them in opposition to Mr. Perkins' re-election. It was a matter of common knowledge during the late campaign that the contest for the United States senatorship lay between Mr. Perkins and Thomas V. Cator, the Populist aspirant for that position. The fate of Mr. Cator was determined by the people in no uncertain tone. For a long time, however, it appeared very doubtful whether or not the present Legislature would be Republican. The returns from the election of two years previous indicated that a fusion of Democrats and Populists this year would be most difficult to overcome. If ever a community had an opportunity to deliberate and discuss and determine as to who should be their representative at Washington, that opportunity was given to the people of the State of California during the three months' campaign which has just ended. The "Morning Call," however, is just now loudly demanding time for deliberation and further consideration of candidates for the Senate, just as though the subject had not been a matter of discussion throughout the length and breadth of the State for fully three months. It discusses the senatorial question with a freshness of manner just as though Senator Perkins had not passed through a long campaign and contributed to the victory of the Republican ticket which placed our State in the ranks of respectability. One would think the "Call" had just discovered the senatorial election and was about to "homestead," "pre-empt" or "locate it." If our morning contemporary has any doubts concerning the wishes of the people with respect to their choice in the matter of United States senatorship let it compare the vote cast for the members of the Legislature who announced their allegiance to Senator Perkins and those who did not; let it compare the same votes with the vote cast for presidential electors. The Republican legislative ticket ran several thousand votes ahead of the presidential ticket. If the "Call" has been deluded into a belief that the nonadherence of certain thrifty legislators from San Francisco means the defeat of Perkins it is most sadly mistaken. It must hold legislative honor lightly if it presumes that members who have repeatedly volunteered their support to Mr. Perkins are to be turned aside from their former promises and professions at this late hour and be brought to disregard all the rules of decency and of honor. It is preposterous, and is as well a deliberate insult that will no doubt be promptly and unmistakably answered on Tuesday next. In order at this juncture to oppose Mr. Perkins, the animating spirit of opposition to him must be founded upon a wild belief that it is possible to induce men to break their thrice-pledged faith, to disregard their sacred pledges, ignore and treat with contempt the expressed wishes of their constituents, and deliberately fly in the face of every rule that we have been taught to regard as sacred. We cannot understand it It is difficult to imagine how any one could enter upon such a campaign with a tongue laden with professions of honorable motives and ambitions. Certainly one guilty of such a very questionable performance initiates his campaign by evincing a total disregard for the legislative pledges of others. Honest rivalry in such matters is easy of comprehension. All that was possible and unobjectionable during the late compaign, but it is a dull wit that cannot perceive that the hour of honest rivalry has passed. "The Wave," in common with the people of the entire State, looks ahead with confidence to the vote that will be taken on Tuesday next. We would not insult the Republican majority of the Legislature by questioning for a moment what its action will be.

THE OLNEY POLICY.

An effort is being made by the New York "Journal" to show that a conspiracy has been entered into between Secretary Olney and the Spanish government to put an end to the Cuban war. The lurid dispatches in which this "awful revelation of perfidy and dishonor" is made come from Mr. James Creelman, special correspondent at Madrid, and bear evidence of being prompted by Mr. Taylor, the American Minister at the Court of Spain. Taking for granted all that these dispatches contain, the alleged conspiracy amounts to this: that our government, being anxious to see an end to the war which is so disastrous to American commerce, and is conducted in so inhuman and barbarous a manner, has threatened intervention. We cannot recognize the Cuban patriots as belligerents because they are not such, being lacking in every condition which the international code establishes as a test of belligerency. We cannot rush in to the direct, armed aid of the Cubans without offending every civilized nation on earth and doing serious violence to our national good name. What then are we to do? The guerilla fight between bushwhackers and fever-stricken soldiers has been going on for two years; millions of property have been destroyed and millions more of American capital are threatened. We must either allow this state of things to continue to its disastrous end or intervene on behalf of humanity and insist upon peace. No government could do more than this and receive international sanction, or come within the rights of nations. We can say to Spain, as England, Russia and France have said to Turkey in the Armenian trouble, "You must stop killing these people of yours, or we shall be forced to interfere in the interest of humanity." We would have no right to say to Spain, "You must lay down your arms and allow the Cubans to take possession of the territory which you now hold."

In making this proposition to Spain Secretary Olney named the condition on which our government will intervene, chief of these conditions being the recognition by Spain of the right of Cuba to self-government and the full establishment of a form of local government as complete as that of Canada. This has been the demand of Cuba which has brought on two revolutions within thirty years and led to the loss of over a hundred thousand lives and a hundred millions of property. Spain has promised it but not fulfilled its promise, so the Cubans could have little faith now in any overtures for peace that Spain might make. But if this pledge is given as the price of peace to the United States, it will be made to us and to us will she be responsible for its fulfillment. In short, the United States wishes to give peace to Cuba and self-government to her people, and to this end has entered into negotiations with the only power that can bring these much to be desired results about. By this means we would be practically taking Cuba under our wing without annexing her. She would still be subject to Spanish dominion, but our national faith would be pledged that Cuba would be freed from the unjust and tyrranneous mastery of the mother country.

This policy is humane and goes to the very limit of our rights and possibly some distance beyond our duty.

THE SUTTER-STREET OPENING.

In the agitation having for its purpose the opening of Sutter street, the destruction of Laurel Hill Cemetery and the imposition of onerous and at present useless burdens upon the adjacent property holders, the daily press seems to have lost sight of the proposed extension of Post street which years ago was agitated with equal vigor and finally permitted to die. As far back as 1891, upon the petition of numerous property holders in the adjoining district, a commission was appointed by the Supervisors to lay out the street, assess damages and to take all the preliminary steps necessary to bring about its opening. Considerable expense was incurred in this behalf and much labor bestowed upon the preliminary work assigned to the commission. The proposed opening of Post street followed the line of least resistance. It passed through and over lands not given up to cemetery or other valuable uses, and at the same time accomplished for the Richmond District everything that could be accomplished by the opening of Sutter or any other street. It did not plough its relentless way through monuments and mausoleums or destroy the handsomest cemetery in the city, but in the main made its way over barren sand dunes. It is just as well, however, that the reader have some kind of an understanding of the condition of affairs existing in the Western Addition. At Central avenue four streets come to an end—Post, Sutter, Bush and Pine. The only excuse for opening Sutter street through the cemetery is to afford what is known as the Richmond District additional means of ingress and egress to and from the center of the city. The opening of either Sutter, Bush or Pine streets would involve the extension of those thoroughfares through Laurel Hill Cemetery. In the nature of things this would not only be an expensive undertaking, but would also lead to many complications which could not possibly arise from a similar extension through private property put to ordinary uses. The extension of Post street would accomplish all the objects desired by the Richmond District and would be open to none of the objections so strenuously laid against the proposed extension of Sutter street. Even if sentiment is to be ignored, the matter of expense surely should be considered. Cemetery property could scarcely be assessed for benefits accruing to it through the opening of a street between its tombs. On the contrary, damages might well and probably would be awarded to the owners of such property. Prudence, indeed, common sense itself, would urge completing the Post street extension before action be taken on any of the other streets. The reports, plans, schedule of assessments, and all necessary preliminary data for the Post street extension are on file before the Board of Supervisors. The preliminary work in connection with that undertaking has been completed. Unless there be some legal objection in the way that is not now apparent, the opening of this street should receive the early attention of the Supervisors. The proposition to open Sutter street in course of time may become inevitable, but its agitation at this juncture smacks somewhat of jobbery, which is resented even by the property owners whose property it is asserted will be benefited thereby.

AN IMPERATIVE DUTY.

The fortunes of every stable American interest, industrial or financial, are inseparably linked with the fortunes of the Republican party of this nation. The late campaign demonstrated this fact pretty clearly, if demonstration was necessary. There was a time when the Republican party was yclept the radical party, and the designation was applied to it in a spirit of reproachfulness, yet not because it stood for visionary schemes of government, but because it stood, as it still stands, for the sacredness of human rights; it then stood, as it still stands, for the protection and perpetuation of rights of property. Without property rights human rights are a pretense and a mockery; destroy the one and the other falls beside it. Yet we have come upon a time when rights to property are but lightly regarded, when the citizen and growing youth are taught to regard the possession of property as indubitable evidence that robbery of some sort has been committed in its acquisition; to regard enterprise as being reprehensible, and thrift as an old-fashioned virtue, not at all suited to the new era about to dawn upon human history. Therefore the Republican party has come to be a conservative party, a party which stands for a stable national policy and a prudent administration of affairs, and therefore the fortunes, the maintenance and the prosperity of American interests are, as we have stated, inseparably linked and tied with bands of iron to the fortunes of the Republican party of this nation.

There can be no Republican party except it be the Republican party of the nation. The Republican party of California and of the west must be animated and guided by the same spirit which animates and guides the national party. It must advocate the same principles that are advocated by the Republican party as it exists in the heart of the nation—that region which lies between the Missouri river and the Allegheny mountains, where the seat of national power abides. If we of the west depart from this adherence to national party principles we will be Republican in name only. The change of one thousand Republican votes into popocratic votes would have lost California to the Republicans in 1896, and a similar change of twenty-five thousand such votes in the close States of the west would have cost the Republican party its triumph in the nation, and still left a popular majority in its favor of more than six hundred thousand votes. It is painful to contemplate that such a condition is possible. Its very possibility accentuates our fear and makes it plain, perfectly plain, that the fortunes of the Republican party of the very nation itself may some day be dependent upon the fortunes of the Republican party in this State. It emphasizes the imperative duty of which we are about to speak; to-wit, the reorganization of the Republican party in California upon a broad, permanent and sound basis. Organization is the essential prerequisite of successful endeavor. In our era of aggregated effort nothing is consummated without organization, highly perfected organization. In it lies the secret of modern success, in every line of endeavor, yet between campaigns in California there is practically no Republican party in the State—only a possible Republican party, nothing more. The first two or three months of each campaign are devoted at vast and avoidable cost to the often hopeless task of evolving out of chaos a more or less efficient political organization. After this has been approximated there follows a month or a fortnight of really effective campaigning against odds (for the sowers of seeds of dissolution are ever at work), and then the organization is again suffered to perish, and nothing remains of the ponderous organization but the odor of stale tobacco smoke about the closed committee rooms.

This hand-to-mouth policy should not be longer continued. It has been foolish in the past. In the future it will be dangerous. Exigencies are not unlikely to arise which will render the existence of a thoroughly well equipped Republican party in California, and in her sister States of the west, essential to national stability and to the stability of industrial and financial enterprises.

We may as well be frank about it, but heretofore the Republican organization in California has been looked upon as the creature of a coterie of San Francisco politicians who are not only responsible for its management, but are as well the chief beneficiaries of its victories. This, if it ever has been true, must not continue to be true. A party which depends for power upon the number of votes it can win to its standard cannot exist independently of the people. The very spirit of Republicanism presumes a full-hearted devotion on the part of the people to Republican principles and policies, and from this day forward the work of expounding Republican principles to the people must be undertaken with intelligence and prosecuted with vigor.

The present party managers, who have achieved such a signal victory against such overwhelming odds and almost insurmountable difficulties, should fall to work to perfect their organization throughout the State. Patriotic Republicans everywhere would doubtless render to them a cheerful and effective assistance. Let them unhesitatingly solicit the co-operation of the people of the State, who really gave the victory, and without whose sympathy and support nothing can be done. Let them not forego their efforts until the Republican party has a representative at work in every voting precinct of the State, and the wisdom and safety of Republican principles are well understood in every household in the commonwealth. Populists and Independent Free Coinagists have campaigned from campaign to campaign; and why should Republicans do otherwise?

THE CABINET SITUATION.

The appointment of a cabinet officer from the Pacific Coast still remains undetermined. For the sake of avoiding friction, the birth and growth of new animosities and avoidable rivalries, it would indeed have been fortunate if Major McKinley had earlier taken some step to decisively indicate the direction in which his mind is working with regard to his western selection. To imagine that the incoming President does not understand the local situation in California is folly. Rumors coming from the east would indicate that he is thoroughly posted concerning the political affairs of this State and the number and quality of our cabinet possibilities. According to the telegrams the only names being seriously considered are those of Judges McKenna and De Haven, yet neither of these gentlemen has solicited the place or engaged himself in procuring indorsements from committees, delegations or the like. "The Wave" has said and repeats that if we are honored by the incoming President the appointment will go to some citizen who is capable of understanding the extremely bad taste of attempting to "break in" a presidential cabinet.

Mr. Horace Davis, who as we have said is an honorable man, is also a cabinet impossibility. His indorsement by the delegation does not assist him to the slightest extent, but it manifestly has worked something of injury to the man who is popularly credited with being his friend and sponser in the matter. Mr. Davis' position is certainly a delicate one. He must understand that the indorsement tendered him by the congressional committee does not accomplish his appointment. In the nature of things it cannot carry much if any weight with the President. Being here on the field and cognizant of the injury that may come to Senator Perkins through his friendship for him, it would seem as though it were his bounden duty to withdraw, or request the delegation to withdraw the indorsement which it saw fit to tender Should Mr. Davis take such a step, the very magnanimity of it would stamp him as a man of broad mind and unselfish ambition and strengthen rather than weaken the slim chances that are already his.

That Judge Waymire will receive the cabinet appointment we most strongly doubt, and we do not make this statement with any feeling of unfriendliness to that gentleman. Men who admire him most freely express regret that he should have aimed so high. He is entitled to, and will doubtless receive, unless he manage to undo himself, an appointment commensurate with his abilities and in keeping with the undoubted service he has performed for his party and for Major McKinley. It is urged in his behalf that the relations existing between himself and the incoming President and Mark Hanna are of the most intimate and confidential nature. There is every reason to believe from the current rumors that the incoming President and his closest advisor are thoroughly and completely informed as to the character, attainments, limitations and abilities of Judge Waymire. Why then under these circumstances it should be necessary for that gentleman to engage the support of Tom, Dick and Harry for the cabinet is inexplicable. His course is calculated to belittle himself and render him an impossibility. His advisors, whoever they may be, are not only indiscreet, but they are foolhardy as well; for they have led him to pursue a course that, even in the presence of a willingness to appoint him, is calculated to destroy the prestige he has already gained.

In all of the present muddle it might be well for the enemies of Senator Perkins to consider that in charging the selection of Horace Davis to Senator Perkins' influence, they credit that gentleman with two virtues they would be loath to openly concede to him. They credit him with influence enough to bring the members of a not altogether friendly congressional delegation to uniting on his friend for the highest possible political office that will come to this coast, and they also credit him with that rare and admirable virtue of sticking to political friends in the face of adverse criticism that threatens to imperil if not destroy his own chances of political success. These virtues accredited to Mr. Perkins out of the mouths of his enemies should fortify his friends and redouble their zeal in his behalf.

MISSION OF STANFORD UNIVERSITY.

American colleges are like volcanoes. They occur with but rare exceptions near to large bodies of water. Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Cornell and Columbia are on the Atlantic seaboard, Ann Arbor (the biggest of them all) and Rockefeller's University of Chicago are upon the shores of the Great Lakes, while in our own State the U. C. and Stanford University are within striking distance of the Pacific.

One may generalize a bit further. One may say that great colleges go in pairs, located near each other, but conducted along different principles, one conservative, the other progressive. Thus we have conservative Oxford near progressive Cambridge, progressive Yale near conservative Harvard, and in our own State conservative Berkeley near progressive Stanford.

The conservative college is the one nearest the large city, Oxford near London, Harvard near Boston, Berkeley near San Francisco. The conservative college draws largest from the boys of the city near to which it is located. The progressive college calls to itself young men from all over the country. The Londoner is at Oxford, the Bostoner at Harvard, the San Franciscan at the U. C. While on the other hand you will find Americans and Germans at Cambridge, Californians at Yale and Massachusetts boys at Stanford.

With the opening of Stanford University an educational tide set toward the Pacific Coast. Young men from Oregon and Washington, from Illinois, Arizona, New York and Pennsylvania gathered at Palo Alto who would never have thought of going to college if it had been merely a question of the State University. Of course there are many exceptions to every rule and all generalities are more or less false, but roughly speaking it is the country-bred young man whom you will see at Stanford—just as you will see him at Yale and at Cambridge. Now this fact has a certain significance. We will not consider Yale or Cambridge; we will make the application only as it concerns Stanford and the State of California. We believe it can be proven that it is conducive to the building up of a State's population and material prosperity, to a "development of her resources," if one may use the phrase so dear to the hearts of the speakers at the openings of agricultural fairs.

Suppose our young man—"Prep" I believe is the cant collegiate nickname—hails from Kansas, let us say, or any of the middle west States. He is nineteen years old. He passes his entrance ex's, he is matriculated, he enters at Palo Alto and lives there. Never again is he at so impressionable an age. Never is he so apt to take fire with such enthusiasm. He spends his four years (with the exception of short summer vacations) at Stanford. The college graduate who is not enthusiastically devoted to his alma mater has yet to receive a diploma, and the young man from Kansas returns to his State to, unconsciously and unintentionally, "boom" California by the high colored descriptions of his college days there spent. But this is not all. The Stanford collegian forms associations outside of college and friends that generally last a lifetime. There is a girl somewhere—and he's at an impressionable age; his life accustoms itself to run in particular channels. As often as not a business chance is opened to him on leaving college. Take it altogether now, his best friends are in California, and his business opportunity is here—and the girl is here, perhaps. It is on the cards that he settles here. He is an educated, presumably capable man by this time. He has secured a California education, and as likely as not he gets down to work to "develop" those "resources."

How many such cases does Stanford produce yearly? Let us be very conservative, let us say ten. Ten out of a class of four hundred is surely low enough. In ten years this makes a hundred men—a hundred men whose energies would otherwise have been devoted to the interests of Kansas, or Iowa, or Indiana.

And consider and reflect upon one last point. These hundred men are not a hundred nobodies. They are college graduates, they have trained intellects. Their very forte is the "development of resources." They are the lawyers, the statesmen, engineers, editors and the like of the next century.

AN IDEAL NEWSPAPER.

GOOD JOURNALISM THAT IS NOT THE NEW JOURNALISM.

Theron C. Crawford, formerly London correspondent of the New York "World," and a good all-around newspaper-man, is writing for the "Cosmopolitan" a series of "modern fables" of singular power and interesting suggestion. In the current number he tells of the making of a great newspaper on a new plan, for a field which one might suppose had already been fully exploited. The idea on which the series is hung is that the President of the Universal Trust, finding himself in danger of nervous prostration, is advised by his physician to give up business and try something wholly new. This new thing is to find somebody with a ruling passion, and to gratify that desire to the full, the amusement to be derived from a philosophic supervision of results. In the present fable he takes a newspaper-man, blessed (or cursed) with a keen desire for political power. Of course money is no object, and it is placed without stint at the service of the person who is made the subject of the experiment. Henry La Farge is the name of the subject, and he, being provided with a fund of three million dollars on which to draw, starts in by selecting for his managing editor an officer of the army, for the reason that he would not be hampered by newspaper tradition. The man selected objects that he has no experience, and the story proceeds:

"The trouble, my dear sir, with the average newspaper is that it differs in no essential degree from any of its predecessors. The public has been educated up to a false standard of what is called news, and so the newspapers have become mere publication machines for the registering of what is called the history of the day. They descend to such petty trivialities, and describe such uninteresting incidents, that the newspaper is thereby made such a mass of so-called information that it is read with neither profit nor amusement. The basis of news-gathering of all newspapers of modern times is found in rival associations. We talk about the skill and professional ability employed in making our newspapers, and yet it is a fact that the great news-gathering associations of the country have been for years in the hands of mere telegraph operators.

"Now I lay it down as a matter of principle that there are a large number of people in the world who are influenced by suggestion. The average man who thinks consecutively for himself, with perfect freedom of judgment and lack of prejudice from outside influences, is exceedingly rare, so that the publication of the evil incidents of the daily history of the world in an exaggerated way has a tendency to send out a wave of criminal suggestion to the impressionable people of the world who might be equally impressed by a wave of moral suggestion, if you please."

After the preliminaries are arranged, the new paper makes its appearance:

The "Gazette" appeared without a word of preliminary advertisement. There was not a single announcement on the walls in New York concerning it Its home was a building well adapted to business purposes, in the upper part of New York, facing Madison Square. The proprietor made a sacrifice by limiting the use of the building to the sole production of the newspaper. It had the elegance and cleanliness of a first-class club. Upon its upper floor was a suite of rooms to be used by the bachelor members of the staff kept at the office by late duties. The club idea was carried still further. A restaurant for the use of the members of the building occupied one of the corners of the top floor. The printers also had their own restaurant, where food was furnished them at cost. Down stairs every writer had a room to himself. These were furnished with elegance and great neatness. It was already one of the absolute requirements for a position on the newspaper that a man should be a gentleman, and every employee was so paid as to enable him to dress in accordance with his station. It was Mr. La Farge's idea that the newspaper should be conducted on the lines which ruled the conduct of a gentleman in private life.

A great sensation was created by the appearance of the first issue. There was nothing in the paper to shock or grotesquely amuse. There was a decided sensation, however, at the discovery that throughout the journal there was a careful classification of the news of the world, leaving out the rubbish and presenting, through the hands of specialists, all the events which really should interest people. It was a notable feature that the financial column was in the hands of a man who had a world-wide reputation in the world of finance. Musical criticisms were written by people who actually understood the art of composition. In the same way, special knowledge and character were prominent features of the paper. There was no very serious tone, but instead a light, good-natured, easy way of treating the events of the day. The light touch was more often exhibited than the heavy one. The illustrations were simple and very correct, and the paper itself was a model of typographical elegance. For once the criminal news was subdued to nonpareil type, in compact articles, undisplayed, and briefly reviewing such incidents from the court records.

In the personal column there was not a single mention of a person who was not prominent. Not a single nobody had his name thrust upon the public. But the great sensation of all was created by an exposure. What New York newspaper could appear without an exposure? This was the result of very strict orders given by the editor, that the city editor should lead off by an exposure of some very prominent New York citizen.

"You have spent nearly all your time exposing crime in New York," explained Mr. La Farge. "Let us expose a little virtue. I want you to go out into the by-ways of New York—where everything can be found if there be a man of intelligence to seek it—and discover for me the most conspicuous correct man in New York, some one who is laboring to accomplish a high aim, and expose to me his extreme virtue. I cannot think of anything that is more likely to attract attention."

This unusual sort of newspaper, violating most of the traditions so dear to the journalistic heart, very soon became a valuable property, carrying tremendous influence, with the results that La Farge is elected Mayor of New York, and then goes to Congress, where he is elected Speaker.

The Prize-Winner of the Pony Class

The Best Phaeton, Ladies' Class

The White Uniformed Americus Club

A Six-in-Hand from the Hotel Green

One of the Winners

First Prize, Double Team

The Largest Float on Record: Sixty Members of the Conservatory of Music

SCENES FROM THE MIDWINTER ROSE CARNIVAL AT PASADENA

FOX-HUNTING IN CALIFORNIA

The San Mateo Hunt Club Introduces the Sport.

The sport of riding to hounds promises soon to become a feature of California open-air sports, just as it is in New York and in Kentucky and elsewhere in the United States. The San Mateo Hunt Club has been organized and the hunts are to be conducted according to established usage and custom. The sport is open to all comers, to any one who owns or can hire or borrow a horse. The unreasoned ridicule and caricatures of the daily press notwithstanding, there can be few sports more exciting and exhilerating than a cross country ride after a well-trained pack of fox hounds, and through the generosity of the San Mateo club the sport has been placed within the reach of nearly every horseman—and horsewoman for the matter of that—in San Francisco and the surrounding country.

It is hard to understand why the San Francisco papers should elect to decry every amateur athletic venture undertaken by the people of their own city and State. There is no good and sufficient reason why California gentlemen should not indulge in polo, trap-shooting, pony racing, football, fox hunting and the like. You will not see the press of other cities ridiculing these things. That they are participated in by gentlemen, merely for the love of the game, does not make them "dude sports," as the reporter would have us believe. Football is not the sport of the effeminate, nor is polo—where only the man who is utterly and absolutely reckless of life and limb can expect to be in the game at all—the sport of "dudes." In heaven's name let us have a few "torrowbreds" among us to offset the real "dudes," the Saturday afternoon promenaders of Kearny street, the "Brownies" who go the cocktail route, and whose only fatigue comes of too much dancing.

I take it that the best type of man is he who is "born and raised" a gentleman but who has "sand" and "nerve" and is not afraid of getting hurt; who knows what to do with his hands and feet on the football gridiron as well as in a drawing-room, or who can handle a horse before a five-barred gate as well as he can guide a girl in a crowded ball-room.

It is on the cards that the sport of riding to hounds has come to California to stay. At present the hunts are "drag hunts," where the hounds trail the scent of an aniseed bag. The California fox cannot be hunted on account of his trick of climbing trees, and the club is something averse to importing eastern foxes, to multiply and become a pest. It would not be surprising—a little later when the sport is thoroughly organized—to see the elusive cayote hunted over the ranches of San Mateo county. The thing would be sportsmanlike in every way and typical and characteristic of California, just as the kangaroo hunts are typical of Australia and the boa hunts are of continental Europe. As for the gameness of the little beast in the matter of speed, one has but to remember Mark Twain's description of the "self-respecting dog" and his efforts to pull down the cayote, loping over the ground like "an old hat flopping before the wind." Last Saturday was the initial meet of the club and was successful beyond all expectation. Fifty-eight riders, including eight ladies, started in the hunt. Mr. Hobart's hounds, some twenty couple, were laid on the trail of the bag, and only once, and that but for a moment, lost the scent. The surrounding hills and fields proved to be admirably adapted for cross country riding, and no accidents of any kind occurred. Captain Wainwright laid out a course of about eight miles and the "death" occurred near the Howard residence, just west of San Mateo.

The new year is going to see some changes in electric lighting. That form of lighting is going to be made cheaper. The cheapening will occur in the initial process of producing the current. What has made the electric light cost so much is the fact that we haven't been able to produce it without the intervention of the steam engine. The idea has been all along to make the electric light so cheap that it would supersede gas and all other illuminants and become the one universal light. We'll do away with the steam engine before long and get electricity right from the coal itself. We'll have gas for fuel altogether then.

When snake venom is concentrated by removing the albumen substance and retaining the other two, what is left constitutes the most powerful poison known to toxicology. It has been reckoned that a single thimbleful of it if suitably applied would be enough to kill 25,000 people.

A staff officer in Berlin declares that the Dongola expedition is, on the whole, the most faultless military work done by British officers since the peninsula war.

A WINTER ROSE FESTIVAL

How the Advent of the New Year is Celebrated in Pasadena.

A Rose Carnival in the dead of winter. Think of that! A world of flowers, floats, music, horses and streaming bunting. That's what Pasadena was on the first day of the new year, on the occasion of the celebration of the annual Rose Carnival.

The little city was a literal bower of roses, cala lilies and other flowers; the eye ached and tired of the endless kaleidoscope of color that flashed and faded and flashed again from every house and lamp-post, from every overhanging balcony and from every telegraph pole.

Think of a line of march that covered ten miles—ten miles of marching files, ten miles of pageantry, of enormous floats, of military bands, of bicycle clubs, of four-in-hands, "spiders," drags and the like. Probably no larger nor more beautiful procession ever moved in Southern California than this which defiled through Pasadena on the first day of 1897. Even the Fire Department turned out, its engines and hose carts hidden under whole hothouses of cala lilies and roses.

One of the most fetching lines of the whole procession was that of the directors of the association. They made a noble sight in their white and yellow uniforms, mounted on thoroughbred horses and bearing blue banners. The float entered by O. Stuart Taylor was, I think, the biggest thing of its kind I have ever seen. Fancy sixty people gathered upon one float, dressed in Spanish costumes and singing Mexican national airs to mandolin and guitar accompaniment. The Americus Club, all in glistening white uniforms, was as pretty a sight as one would wish to see. They turned out eighty strong, and I believe won the first prize as the best company entry. They shared the honors, however, with the six-in-hand English drag from the Hotel Green. This was a gorgeous affair drawn by six strapping bay horses and almost entirely covered with pink and white carnations.

It was indeed a gala day in the history of the little city and one long to be remembered. Nothing could have been more successful, and it is to be hoped that the Pasadena Rose Carnival will become a fixture among Southern California flower festivals. Remember that all these roses and cala lilies and carnations were abloom on the first day of the new year—in the dead of winter.

NEW YEARS' EVE AT THE CONCORDIA CLUB

It is the custom at the Concordia Club to celebrate the coming of the New Year with a ball. This photo was taken one minute before midnight.

Flashlight photo by S. G. Williams

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The subject of politics struggles with the elopement of Miss Spreckels for supremacy. The echoes of the marriage at San Jose were hushed by the clamor of Governor Budd's message. Heavens—a whole page of it—even President Cleveland had not more to say for himself, and he discussed the affairs of a nation while Stockton Jim but canvassed the condition of a State. Quantity there was, but of quality who can say? Even the editor of the "Examiner" has not read the thing through, and were it fraught with the wisdom of Solomon, the Governor's reputation has so suffered at his own tongue that his recommendations are discredited in advance. Quite the contrary Mayor Phelan's inaugural. It was a clean, intelligent and well phrased document, punctuated with ideas and abounding in enthusiasm. Though it be true that the courts have stripped the office of its potency, I imagine the cleverness of Mr. Phelan will find loopholes to embarass the associated villains. He will not be the futile and passionate figurehead his predecessor was. Given money and determination, an honest man may be a power even in San Francisco. The resources of a private detective corps and the terrors of San Quentin may impose virtue even on Supervisors obedient to Boss Rainey.

***

There are convenances in every calling. You would never imagine what a code of etiquette there is in ballooning, yet encounter a properly balanced aeronaut and you will learn the exalted nature of their expectations. Among the conditions of night ascents—which are difficult and dangerous—they demand the rising balloon be illuminated by a search light so that the artist may know where he is at and be able to tell at what moment to release the parachute. At the Chutes, the night before New Year's, Vosmoer, a daring aeronaut, had agreed to ascend, and amid the cheers of the spectators had departed, hanging on to the trapeze suspended from the bag. The great searchlight revealed him bravely cutting capers as the balloon soared into the night. Suddenly the light was flashed away from him upon the vast throng of spectators below, just for a second, and then back across the sky. It seems Mr. Hastings, the press agent, had constituted himself illuminator in chief for the occasion, and he conceived it would add to the effect if the element of contrast was added to the spectacle. He tried it—for a minute the Chutes were as bright as noon. Then back into space after the aeronaut. But he was not to be found. The great light flashed across the heavens like a comet's tail but without revealing a sight of the bag. Hastings twisted its beams north and south and not a sign of Vosmoer. At last sick at heart he gave up the quest, determined never again to assay contrast for fun. Very early in the morning the unfortunate aeronaut turned up with his parachute, safe in wind and limb, but highly indignant at the treatment of the searchlight.

***

The Century Club was entertained the other day with an exhibition of Indian curiosities—baskets, utensils and appliances of various kinds—gathered from the private collections of certain prominent citizens. Before proceeding further it should be stated that the Century Club is the premier feminine organization on the coast, being composed of women who unite social and intellectual prominence, and who pride themselves especially on their respectability and exclusiveness. You may imagine their feelings on noting, stationed in charge of the exhibit, an unmistakable policeman. Not one of your plain clothes detectives, but a simon-pure copper in regimentals. Several of the ladies expostulated with the president over the presence of this legal myrmidon, suggesting it as a reflection on the honesty of all concerned.

"But you know," explained that lady artlessly, "this is a very valuable collection, and it is only right we take every precaution to guard it."

***

There is a quaint bit of history in connection with the Thistle mine, the flooding of which has recently made idle one hundred sturdy men in Sierra county. The Thistle was promoted by certain smart Alecks who, having a financial connection in Glasgow, utilized it to sell what they believed was a worthless hole to a handful of respectable but credulous Scotchmen. The representations were admirable of course, but it was only coin the smart Alecks were after. Having obtained a substantial sum they laughed at the buyers, frittered away the capital as it returned to their pockets, and then announced the enterprise a failure. The serious manner in which the news was taken quite upset the promoters, who seemed to think it unnatural the Scotchmen should expect anything else. They reflected sadly on the lack of humor characteristic of the nationality. In the meantime at a meeting of the owners to discuss their predicament, a young fellow named Wingate, who had sunk his patrimony in the enterprise, asked to be sent out to Sierra county to look after the mine. He knew nothing about mining, he admitted, but said that if there was gold to be had he'd find it. As a last resort they let him go. He found himself an object of much amusement in the county, but commenced by discharging the entire force and engaging a new set of men. Then he levied a small assessment and began to dig. He kept his own counsel also. At the end of a year he had found ore enough to defray the cost of further developments. Eight months later the stockholders in Glasgow were horrified to learn that there was a surplus of $100,000 ready to be divided up among them. Since then, for five years past, the Thistle has paid respectable—nay, liberal—dividends, and Wingate, having got the property into fine condition, had just begun to uncover a very rich bed of ore—ore so rich indeed that it meant a big bonus to all the owners. Alas, the final blast dislodged a body of rock which uncovered a spring, and before they realized what had happened the mine began filling with water. The miners barely escaped with their lives. Wingate was not discouraged. He took the first stage for town, bought a big pump and announces he'll pump out that mine and the spring. It is a big job, but you cannot convince any one up in Sierra county that he won't do it.

***

Just glance over the New Year's "Chronicle." Really it is a remarkable paper. Such a collection of statistics, of facts, if made by a government official or bureau would elicit the attention of the nation and evoke editorial comment from every newspaper in the land. Yet we take it here as a matter of course. Such a paper obtains its best appreciation among specialists. The produce dealer and the orchardist will read with the deepest interest the figures relative to fruit raising in California; the raisin grower may base his development on the figures collated by the "Chronicle," which show the degree of production throughout the coast. The miner, the beet sugar farmer, the olive rancher—all are deeply interested in the contents of this great paper which really means more to the State than tons of the fluff and flim-flam which makes the contents of ordinary Christmas editions. I don't pretend to have read through this "Chronicle," but I rode home the other night with a man who has several hundreds of thousands in a big fruit cannery.

"I didn't read all of it myself," he said, "but I have all the figures showing the number of fruit trees planted in the State and the statistics about those that come into bearing this year down in my note book, and I'll venture to say every produce dealer in the State has transferred big hunks of that paper to his scrap book. You might tell me, though, how they gather all that information. I can't get it myself and I'm in the fruit business."

As there are more ways of killing a cat than cutting its throat, there are more methods of exploring a mine than digging a shaft. Of this interesting fact I am forcibly reminded by the lawsuit which the astute Alvinza Hayward has projected against the Rawhide. Next to that rich property is a claim called the Rawhide Extension, and to it Hayward holds title. Doubtless it is a valuable property, but its value remains to be exploited, or rather, laid bare, for it is as yet virgin ground. Now, if Alvinza only knew just which way the Rawhide leads ran, then it would be easy to sink a pit and tap them as they entered his ground. But he does not know, and to find out necessitates much exploring and tunneling at a cost per foot to wither the radiance of a Utica dividend. Information that is not available in one way is often reaped in another, and Mr. Hayward has found a way out of his difficulty. He claims the owners of the Rawhide are impinging on his property and are stealing his ore, and in consequence thereof the Superior Court has granted an order permitting plaintiff (Hayward) to survey defendant's mine. In this way the astute Alvinza will discover not only all he desires to learn about his own property, but will be enabled also to diagnose the condition and promise of the Rawhide, a class of information which he has long desired to obtain.

A WESTERN CURIOSITY SHOP

How Nathan Joseph Collects.—His Theories of Purchase and Sale.

The little shop down there on Clay street, below Kearny, 641 I believe the number is, where Mr. Joseph and his curios live, is a thing to be seen among the sights of this town. It has ceased to become a mere store, a curiosity shop. It is an institution, one of those features of San Francisco to be spoken of with the Seal Rocks, and Chinatown, and earthquakes and the like. Nathan Joseph has collected, and collected, and collected for twenty-seven years. In the early days of the business he would buy anything, barring only old clothes and live things. You can fancy—even if you haven't seen it—the condition of that store after nearly thirty years of accumulating. The apparent confusion is something beyond all words. Matabele assegais—of the stabbing kind invented by Tschaka—lie side by side with the bone weights the Aleuts use to sink their nets, and daggers from New Guinea made out of human bones are spread out upon the skirt of a court dress of the time of the thirteenth Louis.

Just how these thousands of various articles were brought together is something beyond the comprehension of the ordinary mind. Mr. Joseph will tell you that he has correspondents all over the world, from Tasiusak to Buluwayo, but at the same time informs you that these correspondents get their orders as to what to buy from him; that they do not exercise their own judgment in the least. Mr. Joseph says he "keeps track" of the curios the world round; that at one moment he is writing to a missionary in the Marquesas concerning the figureheads set up in the assembly huts, and at another corresponding with deputy port collectors on the Gold Coast in the matter of Senegali gourds. It is a strange life to live when you consider it. You pass the world in review from this little crowded curio shop. By mail, or express or freight messages come to you every morning, direct from the heart of Africa, from Papua, from the Behring Sea, and from the half-forgotten nameless islands of the Indian Ocean. It's one thing to see, let us say, a jade-hilted Hagahn, in a museum, carefully deposited in its case, wired down perhaps, ticketed, labelled and classified, and all that, and it is quite another to see the same weapon in Nathan Joseph's shop, straight from his agent in Teheran, for all I know, where you may handle it and swing it, and wonder who was its last strange, half-civilized owner. Mr. Joseph collects largely for the love of the thing; whether he sells to the casual customer or not is a matter of indifference to him. I saw a pipe in one of his drawers, an Esquimault affair of walrus tusk, etched with scenes from the maker's life, and I fell in love with it—perhaps I would have bought it at a reasonable figure—but Mr. Joseph would not so much as tell me the price.

When you buy a curio in his shop you must not count upon a mere give and exchange transaction, as though it were a matter of a pound of tea, or a hat, or a pair of gloves. You must not expect to secure a war drum from Borneo with as little compunction as a new scarf from your furnishing store. The matter becomes serious, assumes importance; it is not a trade, it is a "negotiation relative to transfer." Nathan Joseph does not care to sell to everybody who comes along. You must know your man. You must be appreciative of the article. You must learn something about it, for, says Mr. Joseph, "a curio without a history is valueless." The whole place is a curio in itself, if you choose so to consider it. Mr. Joseph showed me two places in the ceiling, two white spots of fresh plaster that covered holes made there by burglars at different times. They had rented the rooms immediately above the curiosity shop and had cut through the ceiling during the night and had looted as much as they could. I say as much as they could, for I do not think a dozen men working a dozen hours a day could empty Mr. Nathan's store in less than a week's time. The cellar of the shop is a wierd and gruesome hole, smelling of mold and of earth (suggestive of new-dug graves). In fact, Mr. Joseph does call it his graveyard. Skull-things are here, with rows of teeth, clinched as if in the act of gnashing, and a hideous unwrapped mummy, sitting Buddha-fashion, in a glass case. Then there are cats—black, of course—that look at one over the rows of skulls, and are as wild as panthers. I am sure that if one crept down those cellar steps at about midnight one would find a cat or two gnawing at the skulls or snuffing in the cracks of the mummy case. It's an evil place.

SORTING THE CURIOS: NATHAN JOSEPH IN HIS SANCTUM

The excellent photographs of Griffith Park, Los Angeles, published in the last issue of "The Wave," were made by Stiffler & Gill of 120½ South Spring street, Los Angeles.

Electric March

Jack and the Dairymaids

John J. Raffael as Oberon and Annie Suits as Titania

Miss Anna Schnabel in an Heroic Pose

Hartman and West

Miss Seabrooke as Jack and Anna Schnabel as Princess

Wm. H. Tooker as the Giant and Master Jack Robertson as Puck

SCENES FROM "JACK AND THE BEANSTALK" AT THE TIVOLI

Photos by Bushnell

SAN QUENTIN PRISON FROM THE HILL, LOOKING SOUTH

Photo by Taber

NEW YEAR'S AT SAN QUENTIN

How the Prisoners Celebrate the Passing of the Old Year.

New Year's Day in a Penitentiary! I wonder what they think of on this day—the "cons"—the murderers, burglars, highwaymen, thieves and the like—the striped army of them down there in the prison yard, with the gatling guns of the watchtowers trained on them!

One would like to suppose that the suggestiveness of the day forced itself upon them. If ever there were occasions for New Year Day resolutions they would exist here in the "yard." I should like to think that the sentenced murderer in the condemned cell—number twenty-four, it is—chose the day to think a bit over a mis-spent life; that he attained to a "might-have-been" mood, or that the twenty-year-men checked off the passing of another year that brought them nearer to liberty, or that the "life-timer" gloomily reflected that the advent of 1897 brought no encouragement or hope to him.

Perhaps there are isolated cases of this kind, but they are few and far between. I went all over the penitentiary of San Quentin on the first day of this year, and though I did not get speech of the men in the yard, I talked to some of the "outsiders"—the trusties—who are the connecting link between the yard and the outside world; who are in touch with the "cons" and know them thoroughly; and this was the impression I gained.

New Year's Day in San Quentin is indeed a period of rejoicing, but the "pen" is a distinct and isolated world of its own, having its own ideals and enjoyments and ambitions, absolutely and radically different from any other community that exists. The "cons" make merry over New Year's Day, not because it is New Year's, but because it brings with it two inestimable blessings—fish dinner and that consummate beatitude of the "con's" existence, the blissful freedom from the detested and execrated half-day's work in the jute mill.

I think this hatred of manual labor among certain of the criminal class is a mild form of dementia—a mania, a blind, unreasoned aversion (only intensified a thousand fold), such as some people have of cats—an aversion that cannot be conquered, or argued with, or outlived. It develops in the children of criminal families, like homicidal manias and the like. You cannot understand this thing—can get no idea of the "con's" horror of it until you have visited the "pen," and have listened to some of the stories there told.

Consider the situation a moment. Suppose you and I were "cons," and that for some reason we were not "outside men," but had to work in the mill. It is a regulation that each man who works in that mill must do his tick of a hundred yards of jute per day. With ordinary industry the "con" can finish it at about half past twelve o'clock. After that he can do what he likes with his time until lock-up. The work is of the easiest description—a child could learn it and perform it without difficulty. You and I, if we were "cons," would fall into the regime without complaint, we would get into the habit of the thing, and I've no doubt would come to do our hundred yards of jute ahead of time for the sake of the extra leisure it would insure. Why, for the matter of that, we might even prefer to work rather than to lounge all day idle about the flagstones of the sunny yard.

Not so the average "con." He rages at his task, goes to it with a furious reluctance that no habit can overcome, blasphemes the prison directors in the din of the clashing shuttles, and leaves his machine with a relief that can only be expressed by long rolls of oaths. He hates it as a victim of the Great Persecution hated the rack and the stake—sees in the loom he daily toils before only an instrument of torture, of oppresion, and injustice—is kept to his work only by guards with guns and the fear of the "hole" and straight-jacket. You will not believe the extremities to which he will go to escape from it. You are shown one man in the hospital ward who is shamming insanity. For fourteen months this man has lain upon his back, speaking to no one, in order to persuade the authorities of the prison that he is crazy and unfit to work in the mill. Fourteen months! Think of that—a year and two months in bed so as not to work for half a dozen hours per day! But this is not the worst. A man who's fingers are missing can do no work in the mill, naturally. One of the "cons" (who, mind you, had only four more months of his sentence to serve), took advantage of this fact, and one day deliberately thrust his thumb between the cogwheels of one of the jute machines and let it be crushed off.

"Now let 'em make me work!"

"Huh!" answered his mates. "You'll work just the same. A man without a thumb can tend the machine all right. Doctor Lawlor won't excuse you from work for that."

"He won't, won't he!" shouts my "con." "I'll fix him!" and in goes the whole hand, to come out again with the four fingers ground away.

Only four months more of work, but he preferred maiming for life rather than undergo it. You can't account for this on the ground of simple dislike of labor. It's dementia—hereditary mental obliquity, taking the form of a horror of work.

One custom obtains on New Year's day, and as far as I can see, but one. We arranged to see, or rather, hear it.

On New Year's eve, just before twelve o'clock, we sat ourselves down upon a flight of steps on terrace above the prison, where we could overlook the yard. The last moments of the old year were passing, and the scene, in the night, looking down into the huge dark prison, with its rows of bolted iron doors that stood for so much of the crime and wickedness and perversity of life, should have been impressive. But there was a jarring note. The female ward was the part of the "pen" nearest us, and through the stillness of that New Year's eve came the monotonous and raucous plaint of a woman's voice, flung across the narrow court to some inmate of an opposite cell, the words as distinct as if spoken in the ear:

"——an' after all I've said an' done fur him, that's the way he treated me" (here a long roll of oaths); "why, he might be a-beggin' on the streets if it hadn't-a-been fur me—beggin' on the streets to-day if it hadn't-a-been fur me, an' that's the way he treated me."

This was the theme, repeated again and again, in different words. What did it stand for? What was the grievance this female "con" was lamenting in these moments when the year was turning as the turning of a tide. Was it a slight of yesterday? Was it a wrong that had wrecked a life? Was it true? Was it a lie? Was she old or young, innocent or guilty, I shall never know. It was a mystery. A voice, from a prison, at midnight. The incident of a moment!

"If it hadn't-a-been fur me—an' that's the way he treated—a-beggin' on the streets, an——"

Suddenly it was the New Year. Very far off at the end of the line of guards came a prolonged cry: "Twelve—o'clock and a—a—all's well," and another nearer cry repeated it. But we lost the sound of the answer. With the call of the first guard the prison of San Quentin thundered with noises. Somewhere near by a chorus of bugles sang together, only to be drowned by a vast clamor that rang from wall to wall of the prison, and that split the silence of the night with the clamor of a splitting berg. At that moment the thirteen hundred prisoners of San Quentin were beating their fists upon the iron doors of their cells. A strange noise—strange for its suddenness—stranger when you consider its suggestiveness. The iron barrier that shuts out from liberty and the pursuit of happiness serving as a clashing cymbal of rejoicing—the door of a prison cell used as a bell to sound the New Year in! Surely no stranger New Year chimes were rung that night the world around.

And with all this vast clangor, this strange, reverberating tumult, not a movement, not a sign of human life. The moonlight and the white glare of electricity flooded the prison yard and the building till the very bolts on the doors were visible, but not a living thing stirred. The enclosure roared with the roar of an army with clashing shields, yet remained deserted, desolate, abandoned of all life.

One thing I remember, however, that compensated—one thing that redeemed the gloom and the wierdness of it all. Just after the first guard had raised his cry of "All's well," and just before the thunder of the thirteen hundred fists upon the doors of the cells, a fraction of a second had intervened—a brief moment of time—st long enough for the female "con," she of the hoarse and raucous voice, to interrupt her monotonous complaint and cry:

"Happy New Year, May!"

FRANK NORRIS.

CRANK ALLEY, SAN QUENTIN PRISON

Photo by Taber

Over thirty cities and towns in Ontario have adopted the provincial curfew law. The corporation of Ottawa has decided to apply it to that city. Children under fourteen, unaccompanied by parents or guardians, must not be in the streets after 9 P. M.

Cardinal Gibbons is a believer in the Kneipp cure. He has been under the care of the Bavarian priest for six months, has taken walks in the grass while it was covered with dew and followed out all Kneipp's directions. He is said to have been much benefitted by it.

THE BOOM ASSOCIATION

How Mr. Amos Starling Managed to Work a City.

"The board will come to order."

President Mulligrubs of the Incandescent Mutual Arc Illuminating Company was gloomy. Business had been bad for thrse yeurs without a break and there was always a threat in the air that the Amalgamated Hydrogen and Water Lighting Company might extend it operations.

"Things are looking very dark," said the president to his brother directors.

"We have been compelled, gentlemen," he continued, "to borrow the money to meet the half yearly installment of interest on our bonds. The stock is absolutely unsalable at any price. There isn't any way to get out, and we'll be in the hands of a receiver in three months if things don't take a turn."

It was true. There was "no way to get out," and no soft spot on which to fall, as the president had remarked.

"The business is going to pot," admitted Director Munker, "and the Supervisors milk the company for the last penny they can squeeze out of us on the street lighting contract. It's a shame we can't have an honest government." Director Munker was the gentleman to whom was confided the delicate task of "arranging" for city contracts. This phase of the business had been so costly that President Mulligrubs had once remarked in confidence to one of his colleagues:

"I believe Munker sinks the most of it."

"I've seen this coming," spoke up Director Gilfeather, "and I've got a man outside who has a plan that I think will pull us out of the hole."

"Let's have him in by all means," said the president.

Mr. Gilfeather hastened to introduce to the board his friend, Mr. Amos Starling, late of Kansas City and other towns. Mr. Starling, it appeared, was a bird of passage whose stay in a given locality was usually limited by circumstances over which he had no control, but this matter was not dwelt on with any sort of emphasis. Mr. Starling was introduced. His keen, vulpine chin was clean s ), and he was gifted with a mouth which seemed to bear promise of a fine flow of language.

"It appears to me, gentlemen," said he, fixing a gimlet eye on the president after the introduction, "it appears to me, if I may say so without offense, that you have neglected your opportunities. You have here in this city a very complete organization of district improvement clubs. Why, gentlemen, it's Providence—the Providence, if I may say so without irreverence, that guards the safety of the Incandescent Mutual Arc Illuminating Company. Those clubs are capable of being worked, and I propose to work them with your assistance—for their own good, of course, and incidentally for the advantage of this corporation."

"But how?" interrogated President Mulligrubs.

"The thing is very easy," said Starling. "All we've got to do is to get up a rivalry among these clubs on the matter of illumination of their neighborhood. Get them to calling names and talking about 'silurians' and 'enemies to progress.' That will make the other fellows mad, and if you don't have a boom in street lighting inside of three months it will not be my fault. The newspapers, of course, will fall right in with the scheme. They're all 'friends of progress.' "

"But," objected Director Munker, "how are we going to secure the benefit of this plan for ourselves should we undertake it? You know these things take money to handle. Now, if we work the clubs and pay our good money down we want the full benefit of the outlay. There are plenty of people who have light to sell besides us, and we'd look pretty, wouldn't we, to pay money to fix the ground and then have some other concern step in and reap the dollars?"

"That's easily attended to," replied the airy Starling. "That's part of the scheme, of course. I propose to organize the San Francisco Philanthropic Boom Association. I will be that association. Of course I will get plenty of good names connected with it—no trouble about names. Of course, gentlemen, I will expect your assistance in that part of the work, as I am somewhat of a stranger in these parts. I will appear before the clubs and see the influential members on the side—that may cost a little money—as the representative of the Philanthropic Boom Association, and I will let them know that in the interests of the advancement of the city I have secured from you gentlemen an exclusive contract for lighting at reduced rates provided a certain quantity is taken. That will give us the inside. Oh, we'll get the business right enough."

THE DEATH

"Seems like a good scheme," said the president. "Anyhow, we've got to do something or bust."

"I move," said Director Gilfeather, "that an appropriation of $500 a month for three months be made for the expenses of the San Francisco Philanthropic Boom Association and that Mr. Starling be authorized to sign receipts for the money."

The motion was adopted.

The ingenuous Mr. Starling lost no time in setting to work. A prospectus of the San Francisco Philanthropic Boom Association, setting forth its noble purposes and generous scope, was printed. It was "the dawn of a new era," the prospectus explained, and the S. F. P. B. A. proposed to take charge of that dawn and keep the era moving. Of course all that was said in much finer language, but it comes to the same thing. These documents were distributed to the offices of the several city editors in town, accompanied by an official note signed by the secretary, Mr. Starling, announcing a meeting of the association for a certain afternoon. Every paper in the city gave generous space, and even added encouraging words. When the day of the first meeting arrived a dozen reporters and three or four artists were in attendance. In fact, there were as many newspaper men in the room as members of the association. That did not matter in the least, because the gentlemen selected by Mr. Mulligrubs and Mr. Munker to appear as "prominent citizens" were likewise distinguished for their eloquence, or at least for that sort of substitute which fills the columns of the daily press. The uninitiated who glanced at the headlines of the reports in the next day's papers might have supposed from the space they filled that here was some tremendous upheaval transcending in importance a foreign war. Besides, as nobody dreamed of reading the interminable rigmarole everybody was prepared to speak respectfully about an institution which the papers had taken for granted and might be something of real value. In fact, the S. F. P. B. A. most resembled the recently discovered monster of the North Pacific, which has fourteen arms and a mouth at the end of every arm.

The standing of the association being thus established in the public eye, Mr. Starling began his inside work. For his first operation he selected Mr. Nathaniel Talkington, the well-known secretary of the Magnolia District Improvement Club, as everybody who has time to read the daily papers knows. Mr. Talkington had made a profession of public spirit. His patriotism was of the most intense character, and it covered exactly one-half mile square. Starling introduced himself and invited his brother to a friendly glass over at Schrecklich's corner.

"Mr. Talkington," he said after a preliminary word or two, "the San Francisco Philanthropic Boom Association, of which you know, of course, is watching with no little pleasure the unselfish endeavors of the Magnolia District Improvement Club to ameliorate the conditions of life in this burg. We desire to lend you a helping hand."

"What you need most in your thriving district, old man," proceeded Starling familiarly, "is good street lights and plenty of 'em. Nothing like illumination to boom business—draws the people you know. You know that."

"Lights? Who's going to pay for lights? The city won't pay for any more than we get. Lights cost money," said Mr. Talkington, as he reflected how hard it now was to collect dues enough to pay him his trifling salary and the rent of the hall.

"You've got to take a large view of these things," explained Mr. Starling. "Money! Of course it costs money. That's just where it is. Now suppose you get the district worked up to the point, who'll handle the money? Why, you, of course. You're secretary and treasurer, ain't you? All right, there will be rebates on the quiet that nobody need know anything about. I can fix all that. Of course we'll have to promise reduced rates on lights all round, but there is margin enough for that and more. I've seen the company and fixed them. They won't make no contracts except through me. Now, are you in on it? I've already seen the officers of the Violet Balm district and they're red-hot for it."

This was not true, but Starling understood very thoroughly that variety of patriotism which feeds on local jealousies. Talkington consented to think it over. He would do what he could. Mr. Starling proceeded then with his work of philanthropy, saw the secretaries of the Violet Balm and the Heavenly Heights districts, and so all along the line, making appeals as he went to patriotism and grease. It was not very long before the newspapers began to blossom out daily with scare heads like this:

"FAKIR STREET WILL BLAZE WITH WHITE LIGHT—PUBLIC SPIRIT OF THE CITIZENS OF THIS ENTERPRISING THOROUGHFARE—PIONEERS IN THE LINE OF PROGRESS—INTERVIEWS WITH PROMINENT BUSINESS MEN—CONTRACTS MADE FOR LIGHTING."

Most of the articles read something after this style:

San Francisco has awakened from its long nightmare of silurianism. The spirit of progress is abroad in the land and proposes to turn night into day with a blaze of glory. The enterprising merchants of Fakin street are resolved to be at the head of the procession, and next Saturday night they will hold a grand carnival with fireworks and a brass band to celebrate the illumination of that thriving thoroughfare. Mr. Emile Marker, of the leading dry goods house of Marker, Downley & Co., will be the grand marshal. Mr. Marker is a fine figure of a man, mounted on a white horse, like Napoleon crossing the Alps. One blast upon his bugle horn were worth a thousand men, etc., etc., etc.

It seemed in a short time that a fever for illumination was epidemic. Newspaper readers got tired and sick of the slobber over the "enterprising merchants" of this, that or the other hole in the wall. But the coffers of the Incandescent Mutual Arc Illuminating Company were bursting and there were dividends in sight.

Mr. Starling has moved on.

WAITING TO LAY ON THE HOUNDS

THE DRAGS AT THE MEET

SCENES AT THE INAUGURAL MEET OF THE SAN MATEO HUNT CLUB

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Confidential Communications of a Miss in Society.

I fancy that my confidences will be anything but entertaining this week, everything has been so stupid. The Christmas season is really like the beginning of Lent, and, since then, save a few informal teas, lunches and dinners, nothing of any importance has happened. We are all so grieved over the loss which poor Ida Irwin Barnes has sustained. Her husband died as you have heard. She was one of the most popular girls when her father was stationed out here, and afterwards she spent some time with the Dimonds. She has only been married a short time, and Mr. Barnes was such a clever young fellow, by profession a surveyor, and his death was quite unexpected. I can't imagine her in weeds and cap and all that, she was so bright and lively.

All the girls agree this is the deadest winter for eons, and that I was foolish not to have deferred my debut till next year, as so many others have done. I can't get papa to entertain; he says money is too tight. Ugh, it is abominable that a girl in her first winter should have this rammed down her throat a dozen times a day. I am now going to the Riding School on Pacific avenue; quite a number of us go every afternoon at about five and ride in the ring. The Lents, Mr. and Mrs. George, Mrs. Fanny Lent, whom I think the sweetest woman in town, Mrs. Hooper, Miss Hooper, the Foremans, Mrs. Webster Jones, Baron Von Schroeder and a score of others. It is awfully good fun, and papa says when I can ride well he will get me a thoroughbred.

Do you know I don't think we debutantes are getting a fair deal. The girls who came out last year were simply besieged with invitations, were feted at the 'Varsity Club on all occasions and had a brilliant time in general. But with us it has been quite another story. Of course, we all have had a few dinners. Mrs. Hopkins and Mrs. Crockett have given endless affairs for their girls, but outside of our "coming out" teas we have practically been shelved. Now I think I shall have to become engaged like Julia Crocker and Alice Ames. Do you know Julia has really been engaged four years—just think of it—and very few even suspected. The Crockers are now in their new house and whispers of various small entertainments are going around. She and Mr. Buckbee are most devoted, and we girls are all so pleased. He is so nice and attentive and her ring is too pretty for words. Alice Ames is being entertained by all her friends. Mr. Winfield Jones gave a jolly little luncheon in her honor last week. What a fine looking couple she and Mr. Allen will make. Aileen Goad won't tell us when her wedding is to be, but I think it will take place before Lent. She is busily preparing and is getting dreams of clothes. Jessie Coleman too is engaged preparing for her wedding. She has the loveliest collection of cups, really costly things, almost too pretty to use. I fancy hers will be a June wedding—the lucky month—and Jessie seems especially blessed by the Gods.

Now let me see what I have to say with regard to social happenings. Of course I went to the Younger-McDonald wedding. It seems a long time ago now and yet it is only a week. Bessie made a charming bride, and her gown was beautiful and such a train—fully four yards in length. I thought Dr. Younger looked so handsome as he walked up the aisle with her on his arm. Maud Younger's dress was a poem. I am going to copy it. It was pink, the waist embroidered in greens and browns. Mrs. Duke Baxter looked exceedingly handsome. I think she has improved since she married. Mrs. Younger was gorgeously dressed in brown velvet, with turquoise insertion running up and down the waist. All the bridesmaids looked sweet. It was too bad that Alice Younger was too ill to be there; fancy having a real wedding in the family and to have to remain quietly in bed. I told mamma I should have gone any way if Leila were married, and mamma said "Yes, and a nice little funeral we should have later." Mamma has a disagreeable tendency towards snubbing her favorite child, as I designate myself.

Every one in town was in church. I believe about two thousand invitations had been sent out. The breakfast afterwards at the Palace was the jolliest affair possible.

Every one seemed in excellent spirits, and Bessie was genuinely happy. There were no outsiders invited. Just the real friends—and Dr. and Mrs. Younger make the most charming of hosts. I am glad that at least one of the Younger girls will live here, as they are so popular, and then the Doctor and Mrs. Younger are bound to pay us a visit now and then.

The Monday Evening dancing class met on the fourth. There were not so many there as usual, but that rather enhanced the enjoyment. For my own part I hate a crowd, as some of the "awkward squad" are bound to step on your gown or your toes and you have to bear it with equanimity, which when you have a temper like mine, is very hard. The boys were in the majority. I hope you notice I say "the boys," for there was not one man present. Really, I wish I could persuade some of the older men to go, for except the army and navy officers all the others seem to have tabooed society this season, and it is awfully hard on "we, us and company." Alice Hoffman, I think, was the belle this time. She looked exquisitely pretty. Helen Hopkins was exceedingly handsomely gowned, as was Caro Crockett. Gertie Bates, to my mind, dances more gracefully than the other girls, and although she dresses simply, she always looks sweet. The floor was good and the music inspiring, and I had a perfectly splendid time, but I always do, as I am supposed to be popular. Mamma says I am a greater success than Leila ever was, but papa insists that as Leila's admirers are more substantial he considers her the flower of the family. I wonder shall I cling to the parent stem as fondly as she seems determined to do.

---

I had a letter from Madge who lives in San Jose, and she avers that it is even more monotonous in the Garden City than it is here. I think it must be a lively place—two elopements in a week. How I should love to have seen Miss Spreckels and Mr. Watson's marriage. I should love to elope. Of course, one never gets so many wedding presents and can't have bridesmaids, but still I believe I should prefer the excitement. Miss Murphy's elopement was even more interesting, as she had to positively run away in order to get married, and Mr. Chapman is a nice fellow. Madge says that Mrs. Murphy thought Wilhelmina too young. I don't. She is twenty and most of us know our own minds at twenty.

Madge says the Cotillion Club party at the Vendome was the event of the season at San Jose. It was arranged by Mr. Clarence Urmy, who has a positive talent in managing affairs of that kind. Some of the girls looked awfully nice. Lizzie Murphy and Miss Bowman, it seems, are the most popular of the older girls. Miss Murphy wore a stunning gown of pale pink silk. There are some exceedingly pretty girls among the debutantes—Miss Grace Woodrow, Miss Adel Martin, a piquant brunette, who was gowned in pink and white silk, Miss Hannah Wright, whom Madge says has fascinating manners, Miss Wana Miller, who wore a dainty white frock, Miss May Burrell, who is a graceful looking girl and clever conversationalist, and Miss Agnes Carroll, who was also gowned in white. This was Miss Carroll's first formal appearance; she is a niece of Mr. Nicholas Bowden, the well-known lawyer. Of the matrons Mrs. Frasse was the handsomest and was exquisitely dressed, and Mrs. Frank Wright looked very well and wore a most gorgeous diamond necklace. Madge says every one in San Jose has gone in for Christian science. Is not that curious? I have heard of several wonderful cases down there. Mrs. Pearce, who was in the hands of the doctors for months, was cured through Christian science. It must take extraordinary faith though.

MISS CRICKET.

---

There was quite a gathering at Burlingame on New Year's Day to witness the steeple-chase and to assist at the inauguration of the Burlingame Hunt Club. The beauty of the day naturally attracted a crowd, and much interest was evinced in the steeple-chase, which was won by Richard Tobin's "Galloping Dick," W. Page riding. It was really quite an exciting race. Subsequently there was a great deal of fun over the hunt, though the start was rather late. No longer will the refrain, "The nearest pack of foxhounds was three thousand miles away," have any bearing, for Hobart's dogs are beauties and are capable of giving the institution a new amusemnt. From all accounts the Country Club is now in excellent condition. It has survived the defections of two years ago. While the surplus has not been very great, still there has been a surplus, and now with Mr. Joseph Grant at the helm it is liable the institution will develop something like real prosperity. Fox-hunting ought to afford a new interest, and polo grows more and more popular.

The Carolans have so long been householders at Burlingame that their new move cannot fail to be of interest. They have purchased five acres between the clubhouse and the cottages and propose erecting there the quaint house that Page Brown designed and hoped to erect for himself. The structure is on the lines of an old French chateau and promises to be an ornament to that region of beautiful houses. The Jarboe cottage is well under way, the foundations being already down, so altogether there is to record a substantial progress at Burlingame.

By the way, I am told that Doctor Harry Tevis, who has gone to Bakersfield, has no intention whatever of practicing his profession there, but that the reason of his presence in the south is to lay out in trees a tract of land on the Tevis property there. Doubtless he will return when this task is completed. Mrs. Will Tevis has stopping with her just now, Miss Bessie Bowie and Miss Friedlander.

Quite a distinguished visitor is being entertained here in the person of Mrs. Brown of Washington, who with Miss Brown, is the guest of the Sidney Smiths at their home on Broadway. Mrs. Brown is very prominent in the society of the National capital, and before her marriage was one of its belles.

A very pretty wedding was that of Miss Helen Schweitzer and Mr. Sam Steifel, which took place on Tuesday at the home of the bride's parents. The house was decorated throughout and the ceremony was celebrated in front of an altar covered with pink and red roses and lighted by pink candles. Miss Helen Schweitzer's gown was of white satin completely covered in tulle. The waist was high necked and shirred. Three tulle skirts fell over the satin, the outer one being caught up here and there with sprays of orange blossoms. Around the hem was a wide ruche in which were knotted bunches of orange blossoms. She wore the regulation wreath and veil. Miss Joseph, the maid of honor, wore white mousseline de soie, and the four bridesmaids—Miss Alice Greenbaum, Miss Cora Miller, Miss Bella Gerstle and Miss Agnes Brandenstein—wore pink moire bengaline skirts and pink tulle waists. On their heads they wore black poke bonnets.

The procession was headed by the two little daughters of Mrs. Guggenheim, who were daintily dressed in pink taffeta and wore soft black velvet picture hats. Some very magnificent gowns were worn at the wedding. Mrs. Schweitzer looked very well in emerald green velvet. Mrs. J. J. Mack wore shot green and heliotrope grenadine made over pistache green silk. The waist was made of insertions of black narrow chantilly lace and on the skirt were rows of green and heliotrope embroidery, forming the Greek pattern and running down to the bottom of the skirt. Mrs. M. Schweitzer was gowned in lemon colored crepe trimmed with nile green and royal purple. The waist was finished with a bolero of duchess lace. Mrs. F. Patek wore pistache green silk brocaded in cornflower blue thistles. The waist had insertion of lace covered in spangles. A blue velvet bolero edged with white applique lace and white satin belt and stock completed the toilette. Mrs. M. Brandenstein wore robin blue silk with polka dots of pink, yellow and heliotrope. Her waist was shirred on cords and her belt and collar were of maize colored velvet.

Miss Gerstle was the winner of the bridal ring. Mr. and Mrs. Steigel left for a short honeymoon, but expect to return to San Francisco before they leave for their home in New York.

The New Year's ball of the San Francisco Verein was one of the most agreeable affairs it ever gave. The dance was preceded by a vaudeville performance which lasted almost till midnight. The most striking features were Miss Alice Friedlander's imitation of Loie Fuller and Mrs. Marcus Gerstle, who appeared as a music hall songstress. Both were very clever, Miss Friedlander especially. Indeed her performance was much more graceful than La Loie's. Mrs. Gerstle has lots of talent and chic and her number brought down the house. The New Year was ushered in during the supper and, afterwards, the dancing was kept up until milk wagon time. There were any number of pretty girls present, but a scarcity of dancing men. The damsels who especially struck me were Miss Norma Bachman in white tulle with myriads of ruffles, Miss Olga Triest in white tulle over pale blue and Miss Shainwald in white and grey. Of the matrons Mrs. I. N. Walter looked stunning in pink and green brocade.

The event of the year at the Concordia Club is the New Year's ball. This time the social forces gathered as usual. There were innumerable pretty girls in gorgeous gowns, a bevy of debutantes, including Miss Daisy Schweitzer and Miss Edna Blum, the usual showing of the young married set, together with a background of gorgeously attired matrons. There were five dances before supper. A little before midnight the march for the supper-room was formed and a few moments later the guests had seated themselves around the tables. The spacious hall was beautifully decorated. There were flags and streamers and a rich array of foliage, the whole most artistically arranged by F. W. Pratt. A few minutes later, as the chimes began to ring out the old year and announce the birth of the new, the lights were turned down and there came a brilliant glow from an alcove in which Father Time appeared. He was habited a la Santa Claus and bowed the farewells of '96 amid much cheering. As he faded, there arose in his place, amid a glow of white light with very brilliant effect, a charming young woman, who represented '97. The tableaux were very cleverly handled and aroused much applause. Then there were healths and toasts and the usual jubilance proper to such an auspicious occasion.

The attendance was excellent, quite a number of people coming over from the Verein after the vaudeville there, remaining to the end. There were innumerable pretty dresses. Miss Rose Sachs, I am told, looked especially charming in nile green tulle completely covered with spangles, and among the matrons, Mrs. Maurice Rothschild, Mrs. Emanuel Heller and Mrs. H. G. W. Dinkelspiel looked especially well.

***

In Oakland every one appears to be resting after the Christmas festivities and social events are practically at a standstill. The prettiest dance of the season was the Leap Year Cotillion of the Friday Fortnightly, which was held in the Ebell Hall on New Year's Eve. The hall was decorated with palms, ferns and Christmas berries and calcium light effects were thrown on the figures. Miss Jean Hush, assisted by Miss Florence Sharon, Miss Florence Hush and Miss Marietta Havens, led the german. Miss Hush did eminently well. She arranged original figures and engineered the young people with great skill. The two prettiest of the figures were "the Christmas tree," in which a decorated tree was dragged in, and the young people danced and pirouetted around it, and the balloon figure. Balloons were hung on pliable sticks and half the set formed an archway beneath which the other half danced. Some of the girls looked particularly well. Miss Jean Hush wore an effective gown of pink silk trimmed with flowers, Miss Florence Hush was in pistache green, Miss Florence Sharon wore pale blue silk, and Miss Havens yellow. Miss Pauline Fore was among the most handsomely gowned of the girls. She wore pink silk trimmed with garnet and bright blue. Miss Marion Randall wore flowered organdie over green, and Miss Mary Randall pale pink taffeta veiled with organdie. The costuming was much more gorgeous than is usual—silk, satin and brocades predominated. There were a number of extra boys who acted as rovers and had much fun. The young people danced the New Year in and then had supper.

There were given a number of informal dinners before the dance. The most important by Miss Grace Gorrill, who entertained Miss Hush and those who participated in the first set. Another dinner was given by Miss Crellin to a dozen young people.

There are a number of disadvantages in connection with the Ebell Hall as a place for large entertainments. In the first place the banquet hall is much too small and at the Cotillion there were three relays at supper. Then the dressing-rooms are inadequate, being small and few in number and the young people have much difficulty in finding their cloaks, shoes, etc.

The custom of keeping "open house" on New Year's day has of late years fallen in abeyance, and Mrs. Orestes Pierce alone of the smart set in Oakland continues to receive her friends on that day. Her pretty home was decorated with holly berries and ferns and a large number of maids and men came to offer their New Year's greetings. Mrs. Pierce has the old-fashioned refreshments, and her eggnog is something to remember. Miss Belle Mhoon in pale blue silk, Miss Amy McKee in a stunning combination of yellow satin and brocaded silk, Miss Mary Dunham in black and white silk, Miss Mary Whitney in perforated grass cloth over blue silk and Miss Janet Watt assisted Mrs. Pierce in receiving. Later, Mrs. Pierce gave a dinner to about a dozen of the young people.

Curate—"How is your husband, Mrs. Ballyhooly?" Mrs. Ballyhooly (tearfully)—"Ochone, sir, the doctthor he says if Pat lives till the morning there'll be some hope; but if he don't we must just give up hope."

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Barler's Oil Heaters

"After the Bath"

Are the only oil stoves made which will not smoke or smell. They are guaranteed absolutely odorless. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Made in six sizes. Be sure to see these, or send for catalogue, before purchasing elsewhere

Chas. Brown & Son

807 Market St., Flood Building, San Francisco

Also Coast Agents for the Celebrated

WINTHROP RANGES

Pasteur Germ-Proof Water Filters Rented at One Dollar Per Month

"How can Schilling's Best tea cost so little and be so good?"

Easy. It is roasted fresh every day in San Francisco — like fresh coffee and peanuts.

Other tea is roasted once a year in Japan, etc — like stale coffee and stale peanuts.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

THE THEATRES

A Cynical View of the "Old Homestead," with Remarks on "A Serious Tangle."

The Alcazar has shaken off its "hoodoo"—forever let us hope—and is now winning hands down in our holiday crazed theatrical race.

Its present popularity almost makes one believe that the public knows a good thing when it sees one, almost but not quite, for even a clam (a tender, self-respecting one who knew his value) would have tried to wriggle away from the Baldwin or Columbia during the past week and sit down somewhere else.

Of course this may be called an extreme view of the case, for "The Old Homestead" (though a cross between an asthamatical street organ and a dialect character sketch) seemed to please a large portion of Monday night's audience very much. It must be admitted that the two "boys" are very funny (particularly the one who whinnies like a horse) and the double quartet more than endurable in spots and absolutely indefatigable all through. John Barker—when not weeping or over acting—is often amusing, especially when he talks of his old friends and the man who "got tangled up with whisky, politics and a piece of rope and it kinder gave him heart disease." Owing to the superior attractions of "A Serious Tangle" I saw only a fragment of "Shaun Rhue." Murphy is clever in his way and the cast can boast of a slim maiden, yclept Jeanette Farrell, whose speaking voice is as delightful to the ears as the gurgle of water on a warm day. The play itself, judging from the last act, is very like all the other Irish plays I've seen—the hero in fustian, the villains in silk hats and frowns. As I have said, all goes swimmingly at the Alcazar. The ice was pretty well dissipated by the mere announcement of Osbourne's advent; "Niobe" melted it still further, and now "A Serious Tangle" has totally obliterated all signs of the cold frost from which it has suffered so long.

It may be that my incurable liking for Osbourne's methods (which I have in common with many other people) was at the bottom of my pleasure Tuesday night or perhaps a fit of digestion—it has always seemed absurd to me for American pie-eaters to speak of their chronic condition as a fit of indigestion—but however that may be, the fact remains that I sincerely enjoyed this merry little farce—it almost deserves to be called a comedy—and advise every one to see it. Its incidents flash one after the other like the links of a flying chain; the plot opens out like a telescope—easily, coherently, inevitably. The cast is fair, though one cannot avoid wishing that Beatrice Lieb was possessed of more charm of manner, speech and diction and that Hugo Toland would stop laying things on with a shovel. Still they both have their good points. They were more happily cast in "Niobe" than in "A Serious Tangle." Toland as the "wife's brother," the egoist, was rather clever, while Beatrice Lieb was almost satisfactory in the title role. But to return to Sidney Grundy's play. Osbourne was faultless as "Uncle John" and May Buckley very charming as the little maid—who did not take long to learn a thing or two—so charming that I forgave the overdone sweetness of her "Hattie Griffin" and the ineffably sickening tootsey-wootsey voice she sometimes affects. I say sometimes; as a matter of fact, it is getting to be very often, the habit is growing upon her. When I first saw this little woman she made a very winning ingenue with merely a hint of what first became a great defect and now threatens to permanently obscure her natural attractiveness. If she has a friend in the world he should fast and pray with her until she gives up that spurious sweetness of voice and settles down to the real thing, the simple, modulated, inflections of a gentlewoman. She can have it, but at present prefers that of a doll-baby; pray open her eyes somebody. Pretty little Maud Hines slipped through her walking lady role looking like a saucy kitten. She managed her half dozen lines very well, also her prolonged and enforced silence. Next week Osbourne will display his versatility and possibly a tomahawk, as the laconic "Chispa," a part he played twelve years ago, or thereabouts. It will carry some of us back to our days of short dresses, or knickerbockers, when a theatre was a palace of surprises and a play something to enjoy, not to cavil at or breed headachy fancies. PEG WOFFINGTON.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

DRAMATIC NOTES

The second week of "The Old Homestead" commences Monday night at the Baldwin. Some of the musical numbers are very fine, especially the song "Onward," as rendered by the double quartet.

The opening concert by Nordica at the Baldwin will bring out at the conclusion of a miscellaneous concert the third act of "Faust," with Nordica as Marguerite, Scalchi as Siebel, Mme. Andra as Martha, Berthald as Faust and Dempsey as Mephistopheles.

Modjeska and her company are now actively rehearsing for the opening of the great star's limited engagement. The first week will be devoted to "Marie Stuart" and "Madga." In addition to Mrs. Edgerton, who has a local reputation, the company to support the Polish star will include Miss Francis Jolliffe.

The Frawley Company have been playing San Jose, Stockton and Sacramento this week. Next Monday evening they begin a week's engagement at the Marquam Grand Theatre, Portland. This season's tour of the company will close on February 20th, and they will be seen again at the home theatre in May.

Gustav Walter has succeeded in getting one of the greatest musical attractions of the day for his Orpheum Music Hall. It is the Famous Royal Hungarian Court Orchestra. This orchestra was secured by Mr. Walter on his recent trip to the East, and he says that it is undoubtedly the finest collection of Hungarian musicians that he has ever heard. They will appear on the stage at every performance and at matinees as well, and after the night performance they will be heard in the Orpheum Annex. Another novel feature will be Lieutenant Noble, who is beyond doubt the greatest of ventriloquists. Kiralfy has drilled his ballet to do new marches and other stage gyrations, and Mrs. H. Anderson, the Orpheum costumer, has some new surprises in the way of costumes under way.

The late Eugene Field, the "children's poet," as he was called, was fond of the mysteries of the stage, and quite ingenious in his suggestions as to stage illusions, although sa far as known, he never even attempted to write a play. About ten years ago, when Joseph Murphy was filling engagements with "Kerry Gow" and "Shaun Rhue" on a western circuit, Mr. Field was visiting the Irish actor in his dressing-room, discussing the many beauties both as to text and scenery, and the thrilling climaxes to be found in "Kerry Gow." He was analyzing the blacksmith shop scene, when he said: 'I don't know how it may have been in Ireland, but in this land you never saw a country blacksmith shop that did not have its small-boy lounger just aching to blow the bellows, and on the alert for stray horse-shoe nails. Put such a boy in the scene, and your play will be perfect." The next day there was a special rehearsal, and in the evening Mr. Field's suggestion was carried out. The new feature was a flat failure, much to the surprise of the famed poet, but he accounted for it by saying: "I think that it was a bit of color just a trifle too dainty for the average eye;" and so it was.

The very excellent photos of the Pasadena Rose Carnival, which are reproduced in this issue, were taken by Hill, the well-known photographer of Pasadena.

MRS. SAMUEL STEIFEL
NEE HELEN SCHWEITZER
Portrait by Thors

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

Champagne in Europe.

For some time past the large demand for vintage wines has created a scarcity and increased the value of good brands of celebrated years to such an extent that now only the connoisseur indulges in a selection of the superior vintage years of 1874, 1880, 1884 and 1889, paying fancy prices for same. Pre-eminent amongst these are the wines shipped by the famous house of Moet & Chandon, the largest shippers of champagne in the world. Their brand is highly appreciated in all the prominent cities of Europe, especially in London, where it is the leader and in great favor at Court; their White Seal, Grande Cuvee, of late years has largely increased in sales and popularity.

Removal.

On January first Smith's Cash Store removed from 414-418 Front street, to their new building, Nos. 25 and 27 Market street. They have issued a neat pamphlet describing the benefit buyers may derive in trading with them, and illustrating the methods of handling business in the new premises, many of which are new and not heretofore shown in this city. The store itself is well worth a visit, whether interested in buying or not.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

BOWDLEAR'S....
FLOOR WAX

Pulverized. For Dancing Floors. Is not white. Will not ball on feet. Will not soil clothes. All ready. Anybody can use it.
The floor must be clean and free from oil. Sprinkle, and the dancers will do the rest
Put up in pound packages . . . . . .
FOR SALE BY
MACK & CO.
9 and 11 Front St. San Francisco, Cal.

The Leading Hairdresser
Popular prices, equal to others; no imitating; all original styles, varied to suit the features. Competent artists employed; no apprentices. Bernhardt wavers, to wave hair without burning; Eau Broux, to restore grey or bleached hair to natural color. Latest styles in modern bangs, particularly Louis de Lavelliere style. Open Sundays.
Strozynski's
24 GEARY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

A Home
MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A
GAZOGENE
BUT NOT
If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See
Justinian Caire
521-523 Market St., San Fran.

Trinity School
Founded 1876
3300 Washington Street, San Francisco
A Church Boarding and Day School for Young Men and Boys . . . .
Prepares for University and College. — A Faculty of Eleven Professors and Teachers. — Boarders limited to thirty-five. — Easter Term opens January 3d.
REV. DR. E. B. SPALDING, Rector.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Miss Adie's School 2117 California Street bet. Buchanan and Laguna
Day Boarding School. Kindergarten.
English, French, German. Callisthenics. Dancing

THE GOLDEN GIRL

The Adventures of La Gallienne in Search of a Perfect Woman.

"The Quest of the Golden Girl" (John Lane) undoubtedly suggests an heiress hunt. To the minds of most practical persons a Golden Girl is only a richly dowered maiden, the daughter of some species of millionaire. But Richard La Gallienne is not practical, being given over, in a literary way, to sentiment and romance. So his "Golden Girl" is only the Perfect Woman—the Quite Impossible—She by whom it would be bliss to sit and bliss to touch. In reading the prose of Mr. La Gallienne it is impossible not to assume him the hero of all his own episodes. The point of view is so individual that whatever he permits to happen has the quality of a reminiscence. It would be preposterous to suppose he ever went out into the highways and the byways after a wife as the hero of "The Quest" does, but really had his fancy dictated such an adventure, he would have felt and achieved about what his hero does. But this is taking seriously the thread of a plot which merely serves the writer for the connections of his idylls, reflections and amorous interludes. It does not matter in the slightest whose experiences are embodied in this "Quest," or indeed if they are experiences at all. The fact of their reality would add nothing to the charm of their telling, which is what one looks for in La Gallienne—the sentiment, the poetic expression—pose, if you will. It's the manner and attitude that appeal, and though you may dub the style effeminate and the attitude affected, the charm is undeniable.

However, whether he be Mr. La Gallienne or not, the hero, a lonely bachelor of thirty, whose sister has just married, starts forth into the world after a wife. He is a dilatory seeker and is much taken up, and en route with his thoughts and dreams, discourses liberally on woman kind in general, on their beauty, and decides among other things that the perfection of the Perfect Woman is "nothing more or less than her unique, individual, charming inperfection and that she is simply the woman we love and who is fool enough to love us." All this carries him but a few chapters on the journey. Proceeding further he encounters a wedding and it is the opportunity for some moralizing on the proper methods of getting married. It is La Gallienne himself, I am sure, who says:

Undoubtedly the nicest way to get married is on the sly, and indeed it is at present becoming quite fashionable. Many young couples of my acquaintance, who have had no other reason for concealing the fact beyond their own whim, have thus slipped off without saying a word to anybody, and returned full-blown housekeepers, with "at home" days of their own, and everything else like real married people—for, as said an old lady to me, "one can never be sure of married people nowadays unless you have been at the wedding."

My friend George Muncaster, who does everything charmingly different from any one else, hit upon one of the quaintest plans for his marriage. It was simple, and some may say prosaic enough. His days being spent at a great office in the city, he got leave of absence for a couple of hours, met his wife, went with her to the registrar's, returned to the office, worked the rest of the day as usual, and then went to his new home to find his wife and dinner awaiting him—all just as it was going to be every night for so many happy years. Prosaic, you say! Not your idea of poetry, perhaps, but, after a new and growing fashion in poetry, truly poetic. George Muncaster's marriage is a type of new poetry, the poetry of essentials. The old poetry, as exemplified in the old-fashioned marriage, is a poetry of externals, and certainly it has the advantage of picturesqueness.

When a man adventures out into the highways after a bride he is sure the hedgerows will have messages for him. It is not surprising then that the hero of "The Quest," pursuing further his way, is confronted with a clothes-line as the accompaniment of a rustic cottage. He reflects on the quaint shamelessness with which people expose to public view garments which at other times we are at such bashful pains to conceal and is confronted with a—but let Mr. La Gallienne speak:

However, my business is with the week's washing, which in various shades of white, with occasional patches of scarlet, fluttered fantastically across a space of the garden, thereby giving unmistakable witness to human inhabitants, male and female.

But the clothes-line presented charming evidence of still another occupant; and here, though so far easy to read, came in something of a puzzle. Who in this humble out-of-the-way cottage could afford to wear that exquisite cambric petticoat edged with a fine and very expensive lace? And surely it was on no country legs that those delicately clocked and open-worked silk stockings walked invisible through the world.

Nor was the lace any ordinary expensive English lace, such as any good shop can supply. Indeed, I recognized it as being of a Parisian design as yet little known in England; while on the tops of the stockings I laughingly suspected a border designed by a certain eccentric artist, who devotes his strange gifts to decorating with fascinating miniatures the under-world of woman. I have seen corsets thus made beautiful by him valued at five hundred pounds, and he never paints a pair of garters for less than a hundred. His name is not yet a famous one, as, for obvious reasons, his works are not exhibited at public galleries, though they are occasionally to be seen at private views.

It may be that this is a clue to the "Golden Girl," so the hero investigates with a reckless audacity and emerges the owner of the garment in question which henceforth accompanies his travels. Passing over the frivolous episodes which succeed this whimsical purchase we encounter Nicolette, who is quite the most charming young lady in the book. They meet by a trout stream and discover a literary affinity which lures them into an intimacy. She is adorable, of course, and wayward, being a daughter of the day—and is otherwise the sole and spoiled offspring of a Major-General, who indulges her fancies—said parent, at the moment being off at Wiesbaden. Nothing contents her, but she must essay the role of Rosalind and accompany her Aucassin on his journey. So the necessary outfit is procured and off the train starts

You can readily imagine the excursion is interesting. Naturally they fall in love and Mr. La Gallienne makes love most charmingly.

To picnic by some lonely stream-side on a few sandwiches, a flask of claret, and a pennyworth of apples; to talk about the books we loved; to exchange our hopes and dreams—we asked nothing better than this simple fare.

And so a week went by. But, though so little had seemed to happen, and though our walking record was shamefully modest, yet, imperceptible as the transition had been, we were, quite insensibly indeed, and unacknowledged, in a very different relation to each other than when we had started out from the Morning Star. In fact, to make no more words about it, I was head over heels in love with Nicolette, and I think, without conceit, I may say that Nicolette was rapidly growing rather fond of me. Apart from anything else, we were such excellent chums. We got along together as if indeed we had been two brothers, equable in our tempers and one in our desires.

"Nicolette," I said presently, when I could speak, "it is time for you to be going back home."

"Why?" she asked breathlessly.

"Because," I answered, "I must love you if you stay."

"Would you then bid me go?" she said.

"Nicolette," I said, "don't tempt me. Be a good girl and go home."

"But supposing I don't want to go home," she said; "supposing—oh, supposing I love you too? Would you still bid me go?"

"Yes," I said. "In that case it would be even more imperative."

"Aucassin!"

"It is true, it is true, dear Nicolette."

"Then, Aucassin," she replied, almost sternly, in her great girlish love, "this is true also—I love you. I have never loved, shall never love any man but you!"

"Nicolette!"

"Aucassin!"

There were no more words spoken between us for a full hour that afternoon.

The crowning episode of the encounter reminds one of a tender little story in one of the earliest "Prose Fancies." At the hands of a stronger writer than La Gallienne the little affair at the inn must have emerged a vulgar piece of eroticism, but here it is a delicious bit of sentiment unmarred by a trace of suggestiveness:

The holy angels could not have loved Nicolette with a purer love, a love freer from taint of any earthly thought, than I, a man of thirty, blase, and fed from my youth upon the honeycomb of woman.

It was curious that the first difficulty of our pilgrimage should befall us the very next day. Coming towards nightfall to a small inn in a lonely unpopulated countryside, we found that the only accommodation the inn afforded was one double-bedded room, and there was no other inn for at least ten miles. I think I was more troubled than Nicolette. When, after interviewing the landlady, I came and told her of the dilemma, where she sat in the little parlor, wearied out with the day's walk, she blushed, it is true, but seemed little put about. Indeed, she laughed, and said it was rather fun, "like something out of Sterne,"—of such comfort is a literary reference in all seasons and circumstances—and then she added, with a sweet look that sent the blood rioting about my heart, "It won't matter so much will it, love, now?"

There proved nothing for it but to accept the situation, and we made the arangement that Nicolette was to slip off to bed first, and then put out the light and go to sleep. However, when I followed her, having sat up as long as the landlady's patience would endure, I found that, though she had blown out the candle, she had forgotten to put out the moon, which shone as though it were St. Agnes' Eve across half the room.

I stole in very shyly, kept my eyes sternly from Nicolette's white bed, though, as I couldn't shut my ears, the sound of her breathing came to me with indescribable sweetness. After I had lain among the sheets some five or ten minutes, I was suddenly startled by a little voice within the room saying:

"I'm not asleep."

"Well, you should be, naughty child. Now shut your eyes and go to sleep—and fair dreams and sweet repose," I replied.

"Won't you give me one little good-night kiss?"

"I gave you one downstairs."

"Is it very wicked to want another?"

There was not a foot between our two beds, so I bent over and took her soft white shoulders in my arms and kissed her. All the heaped-up sweetness of the whitest, freshest flowers of the spring seemed in my embrace as I kissed her, so soft, so fragrant, so pure; and as the moonlight was the white fire in our blood. Softly I released her, stroked her brown hair, and turned again to my pillow. Presently the little voice was in the room again:

"Mayn't I hold your hand? Somehow I feel lonely and frightened."

So our hands made a bridge across which our dreams might pass through the night, and after a little while I knew that she slept.

As I lay thus holding her hand, and listening to her quiet breathing, I realized once more what my young Alastor had meant by the purity of high passion. For indeed the moonlight that fell across her bosom was not whiter than my thoughts, nor could any kiss—were it even such a kiss as Venus promised to her betrayer of Psyche—even in its fiercest delirium, be other than dross compared with the wild white peace of those silent hours when we lay thus married and maiden side by side.

Alas for sentiment, however, the Major-General appears a day or two later and takes the tearful Nicolette home. The next episode is the story of Rosalind, who is introduced by virtue of a punctured tire—she is a bicyclist—and affords a most amusing interlude. There is an Orlando, in the background and the raison d'etre of the loneliness of Rosalind is thus explained:

Well, Rosalind and Orlando, as we may as well call them, are two newly married young people who've been married, say, a year, and who find themselves at the end of it loving each other more than at the beginning—for you are to suppose two of the tenderest, most devoted hearts that ever beat as one. However, they are young people of the introspective modern type, with a new theory for everything.

About marriage and the law of happiness in that blessed estate, they boasted the latest philosophical patents. To them, among other matters, the secret of unhappy marriages was as simple as can be. It was in nothing more or less than the excessive "familiarity" of ordinary married life, and the lack of personal freedom allowed both parties to the contract. Thus love grew commonplace, and the unhappy ones to weary of each other by excessive and enforced association. This was obvious enough, and the remedy as obvious—separate bedrooms, and a month's holiday in each year to be spent apart (notoriously all people of quality had separate bedrooms, and see how happy they were!) These and similar other safeguards of individual liberty they had in mock-earnest drawn up and signed on their marriage eve, as a sort of supplemental wedding service.

For further adventures of the hero and Rosalind I refer the reader to Mr. La Gallienne, who has embroidered a graceful series of episodes in which we are introduced to the erring Orlando, who makes a later appearance accompanied by a Miss Sylvia Joy, a danseuse. In this instance the experiment of Rosalind had proved a dire failure. But for the happy rescue of the erring husband. I refer the reader to "The Quest of the Golden Girl" itself. (For sale at Doxey's.)

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

BRONCHITIS. Sudden changes of the weather cause bronchial troubles. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" will give effective relief.

It is now the correct thing to have your afternoon tea, luncheon, weeding or dinner party photographed by the clean flash process introduced by Mr. B. C. Towne. Orders may be left at "The Wave" office or at 2121 Hyde street.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Sench, proprietors.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

THE GRILL ROOM SERVICE
—OF THE—
PALACE HOTEL

Has been extended to what was formerly the City Restaurant. This immense room, which has a direct entrance from Market Street is known as - - - -

"THE LADIES' GRILL ROOM"

NEW DEPARTURE—CHARACTERIZED BY PROMPT SERVICE—MODERATE CHARGES

Its Purity
A Surety
Of
Its Excellence

Accept
No
Substitute
None
So
Good
None
So
Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

MOTT'S
NEW YORK
CIDER

CARLOAD OF NEW SWEET CIDER
FOR THE HOLIDAYS FOR SALE
TO ARRIVE IN LOTS TO SUIT

COBURN, TEVIS & CO., Agts.
107 Front St., S. F.

J. W. Carmany, 25 Kearny street, carries correct furnishings for Holiday Presents. A special line of smoking jackets and neckwear.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital actually paid up in cash - - | $1,000,000 00 |
| Deposits December 31, 1895 - - | 30,727,586 59 |
| Reserve Fund - - - - - - - | 750,000 00 |
| Guaranteed Capital - - - - - | 1,200,000 00 |

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
401 Montgomery Street

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of

Artificial Stone in all its branches

Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty

Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

H. D. LAWRIE, A. J. CARMANY, Managers
OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

THE MAGAZINES

Reminiscences in "Harpers" and the "Century."

"Harper's" is interesting this month. There is a delicious bit of dialogue by Howells and a very good paper by George W. Smalley on English society. Mr. Smalley is pedantic at times perhaps, but he writes good wholesome English and speaks with authority on his subject. Among other things he says:

A word must be said, I suppose, upon the effect which the presence of royalty has on English society. To trace it in all its ramifications would carry me too far, and I can imagine that American readers, with their absence of interest in rank or titular distinctions of any kind, might be impatient of any long discussion upon the rank and distinctions which in England are reckoned highest of all. I will keep to the surface, and if you look only at the surface it has to be said that the social influence of royalty is apt to be a little depressing. No matter how animated the conversation, a hush comes over the company when royalty enters. The tone is lowered; a raised voice is not thought respectful. There comes at the same time a certain constraint. Few even of those who live most constantly in these exalted circles escape it. Groups of men and women who a moment before were entirely at ease are, or appear to be, slightly less at ease. Before, everybody was equal; now, a superior is present. Shocking as the word must be to an American, it has to be used. Royalty in England is still a caste apart, and treated as such.

A lady long used to these royal usages once made a remark on them which has the usual feminine acuteness of perception. A dinner party, carefully composed and long planned for a particular purpose, had been broken up by a summons from Marlborough House to some of the chief guests. There was a good deal of comment on the want of consideration shown—and often shown—by the royalties for the convenience of others. Said this lady: "Don't blame them too much; it is about the last of the old royal prerogatives now left to them, and they cling to it. If they had to consider our comfort, where would be the use of being a Prince?" The other side may be seen in the remark of one of the most amiable of the reigning family: "If you knew how we had been brought up, you would wonder we behave as well as we do."

There is also a paper of considerable scientific interest on California fogs by Alexander McArdie, the Signal Service Observer in this city.

The "Century" continues General Porter's personal recollections of Grant's campaigns, which have a historical value and the advantage of superb illustrations. He tells the story of Grant's famous epigrammatic message after the battle of the Wilderness, which was elicited by Congressman Elihu B. Washburne, then visiting the camp. This is the story:

After breakfast the General lighted a cigar, seated himself on a camp-chair in front of his tent, and was joined there by Mr. Washburne and several members of the staff. At half-past eight o'clock the cavalry escort which was to accompany the Congressman was drawn up in the road near by, and all present rose to bid him good-by. Turning to the chief, he said: "General, I shall go to see the President and the Secretary of War as soon as I reach Washington. I can imagine their anxiety to know what you think of the prospects of the campaign, and I know they would be greatly gratified if I could carry a message from you giving what encouragement you can as to the situation."

The General hesitated a moment, and then replied: "We are certainly making fair progress, and all the fighting has been in our favor; but the campaign promises to be a long one, and I am particularly anxious not to say anything just now that might hold out false hopes to the people;" and then, after a pause, added: "However, I will write a letter to Halleck, as I generally communicate through him, giving the general situation, and you can take it with you." He stepped into his tent, sat down at his field-table, and keeping his cigar in his mouth, write a dispatch of about two hundred words. In the middle of the communication occurred the famous words, "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer."

In the same magazine E. L. Godkin has an instructive and suggestive paper on "The Absurdity of War."

"Lippincott's" long story this month is "Stockings Full of Money," by Mary Kyle Dallas, and there is a paper on "Florida Before the Freeze," which should interest the growers of semi-tropical fruits in California.

The "Ladies' Home Journal" has a striking paper by Stephen Fiske, giving the history of the visit of the Prince of Wales to America. This is amusing:

During the tour through Canada I had attributed the strange conduct of the ladies to an excess of loyalty. As soon as the Prince had left a hotel they would rush into his rooms, seize all sorts of articles, from a furniture button to a soiled towel, as souvenirs, and even bottle up the water with which he had just washed his face. But in the United States the women were equally curious and sycophantic. The luggage of the royal party was carried in small leather trunks—a trunk for every suit of clothes—and wherever the train stopped the crowds would beg that some of these trunks might be handed out, and women would fondle and kiss them. I had not seen that the gentlemen were ever too particular as to whose luggage was subjected to this adoration, and I have had the pleasure of seeing my own portmanteau kissed by mistake. Before the Prince arrived at Richmond his room at the Ballard House was offered by the ladies, and the pillow-slips and white coverlet were so soiled by the pressure of hundreds of fingers that they had to be twice changed by the chambermaids. When he attended church on Sunday the whole congregation rose as he departed and climbed upon the seats to get a better view of him. Every day's mail brought hundreds of letters from women, some addressed to "Mr. Prince," "Mr. Wales," Mr. D. Renfrew." These incidents affected the Prince very little; he turned away shyly when the subject was mentioned; but the other members of the party, that now included Lord Lyons and the Hon. Mr. Elliott, son of the Earl of St. Germains, regarded them with mingled amusement and disgust.

The illustrations that go with the text of this article are particularly good.

Yone Noguchi's Poems.

What can one say of this young Oriental poet, this dreamer of dreams, this shy recluse of the foothills, whose songs, first printed in the "Lark," are now published in book form, to stand or fall upon their merit, rather than by their strangeness? By what standards are we to judge his work, which in both matter and manner is absolutely unclassified in our categories! Were the author an American, one would count him madder than most poets, and with a sigh for this crisis of Decadence, this striving after sensational effects, turn to the next volume, hoping against hope for a touch of sincerity, or if not that, for sanity. Yet, knowing him to be a Japanese, and trusting, perhaps, that the strangeness may be accounted for by his unfamiliarity with our tongue, we may believe such mysticism as this has some logical foundation in the philosophy of the East:

"When the Future shall be the Past, 'I come back to me,' or 'I go on to me,' shall be as one."

and, turning the page, some such line as this may sing to us:

"O, the matchless Mistress Moon in her chamber of unfathomable peace!"

and, held by this surprise, adventure through his fifty monologues to find an hundred other beautiful phrases buried in his incoherent rhapsodies and nocturnes. The whole book is dominated by the minor chord of sadness—the favorite key of the youthful poet—yet here it is no reflection of the "Weltschmertz," but a clear note of the true Pessimism—not the narrow cynicism that the term ordinarily implies, but the logical philosophy of Schopenhauer. This life is but a dream within a dream to Yone Noguchi, and he wonders as much at the beauty as at the mystery of "its myriad changings." He paints with a strong and delicate touch, and with wonderful impressions of atmosphere, all the varying aspects of nature—"at shadeless noon, sunful-eyed"—"in the sober-faced evening"—"wrapped in the warm darkness of the invisible night"—"shrouded in the grey mystery of the mist"—"under the brave upright rains"—"swept by the boneless winds," and "in the audible stillness." Surely Yone Noguchi is no "minor poet," and while one despairs of his meaning at times, there is a sense of power that is impressive when his muse leaves abstractions and enters the visible world. It is by these descriptions that he must find a place in this western civilization, and no doubt a longer fellowship will have a good effect upon his lucidity. And meanwhile, perhaps, to not a few readers, and to psychologists especially, the subjective side of his writings will bind his work together with a strong human interest, for in "Seen and Unseen" this "Homeless Snail" has revealed a unique personality; his songs are his very soul's journal, the record of a young exile, lonely, sad and sensitive—"his way lost in misty doubtfulness."

"Seen and Unseen, or the Monologues of a Homeless Snail," by Yone Noguchi, Gelett Burgess and Porter Garnett, San Francisco; $1.25 net.

The Youth's Companion Calendar.

The "Youth's Companion" Art Calendar for '97 has just made its appearance, and a delightfully original and artistic one it is, too. The "Companion's" yearly calendars promise to become a feature of every well-regulated household in the country. The one for '97 is the most costly one of its kind the "Companion" has ever offered. It is printed in twelve colors, making a true reproduction of the original water-color paintings.

The size is 10½ by 24 inches. It is arranged in four panels, each containing the full-length picture of a beautiful maiden most becomingly and appropriately attired for the season she represents. The high grade of art represented in the designs and in the execution of the calendar makes it a continual delight to the eye. It is admirably suited for an ornament for mantel, centre-table or writing desk.

This beautiful calendar is given free to all new subscribers to the "Companion" for '97, and to all old subscribers who renew and pay their subscriptions for '97. Illustrated Prospectus of Volume for the year 1897 sent free on application. Address The "Youth's Companion," 207 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Health first. Location, surroundings, scenery, climate, hotel comforts and luxuries, society, amusements. Byron Hot Springs offers them all but health first. An invalid's retreat in Winter. Only sixty miles — three hours on the railroad — from San Francisco, but the change is almost as complete as the change from Winter to Summer. Rates $15, $18 and $21 per week, including physician's attendance and use of springs and baths.

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS
Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
Branch Stores: 302 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

FASHION REVIEW

Some Timely Hints on the Newest Things to Wear.

Yes, Betty dear, accordion pleating is all the rage just now, be it on the thin woollen house dress or the most elaborate evening gown of chiffon or duchess muslin. The sunburst style is especially fashionable for very young girls and is arranged thus: The narrow pleats are apparently tight over the waist and hips, but grow deeper toward the hem and thus give the desirable bouffant effect and yet do away with the clumsy effect of too great a quantity of stuff about the hips that seemed necessary to the old manner of accordion pleating.

A simple frock of grey cashmere has the entire skirt arranged in sunburst pleats with two rows of red, dull blue and gold Russian embroidery encircling it at about six and eight inches above the hem, the trimming of course being included in the pleating. The bodice has a small circular yoke and a high belt of the embroidery. In the drapery of the goods coming from under one arm and extending to the shoulder on the other side is an edging of the embroidery. A ruffle of red velvet edges the drapery and meets the choker of velvet with a large bow on the left side. The sleeves are tucked and are small.

Odd and curious are the new sleeves. One which quite fascinated me had rows of circular cording arranged closely together covering the entire sleeve save on the outside near the shoulder, where the cording escaped and formed a slight drapery. Another odd sleeve was arranged in up and down tucks sewed tight to the lining and slashed on the outside. Modes seem to be arrested for the moment. Sleeves are certainly growing no smaller, and as they are becoming more complicated in structure and more embellished with trimming, they appear more important than they did a few months ago.

You wish to know all about the latest fashion in hair dressing. Well, my dear, the bun is now never even seen among the smart set here, and the leaders among the fashionables wear it almost plain and uncrimped with scarcely a wave or undulation in it. It is dressed on the very top of the head in loops or puffings or twisted round a very high comb frequently jewelled, those set in diamonds and pearls being preferred. Waving and crimping the hair is not only out of date, but is considered bad taste and the greatest number of Parisians wear their hair turned back from the face.

Now about "the violet," you say they are more popular with you than they were last winter and want to know are we also victims of the same mania. Yes, indeed, we combine it with everything and unite it with every color. A red felt hat trimmed with red ribbon has quite an erection of bunches of red and white violets on one side. A beautiful large black velvet hat has a white satin crown strewn with sequirs, and at one side a large group of wings and flowers in tawny chrysanthemum shades from a pinky cream to a warm autumnal brown. Under the brim is tucked a large bunch of violets with vivid green leaves forming a cache peine.

Yes, we, the elect, I might say, mix lace with fur everywhere, and I think the effect thus obtained deliciously chic. Only, my dear, don't fancy you can combine a cheap lace or coarse lace with fur. You must have the most exquisitely fine and delicate. The point d'Alercon, Venice point or Brussels point are the most generally used. A lovely cape of sable I saw recently had a frill of cream lace with knots of violets set here and there. Another beautiful collar had a yoke of red velvet embroiderered in black and cream and gold beads set into skunk.

The fans remain very small, and the extremely smart fan is a bijou the tiniest thing imaginable. Watteau designs are in favor as are also fans painted in rose and bow knot pompadour patterns. The black mother-of-pearl is much used for sticks, even more than tortoise shell and ivory. Some fans are entirely composed of ivory, often richly enamelled or jewelled. Combination of lace figures and designs painted by well-known artists make charming fans. Fans of ostrich feathers are not in general use, but fans of soft grey down with pearl sticks ornamented by gold and jewelled snakes are especially desirable and quite expensive.

Don't overdo the beautifying process, my dear Betty. Too much steam and massage is worse than none at all. The Parisian woman never steams more than once a week and then is very careful not to expose her face to the air for several hours afterwards. The milk treatment is good, but is apt to make the skin tender and delicate. Then do not overmassage, as it enlarges the pores, makes the face flabby and has more evil than good results. For my own part, I am averse to tampering with nature and find that a good sponge bath, a sensible diet and attention to the rules of hygiene is more efficacious in preserving my complexion than all the aids of the most wonderful of beauty doctors. Your last letter was very enjoyable and next time you write I want you to tell me all about your pastimes and pleasures—don't forget. Wishing you the most prosperous of years, believe me to be, ever dear, your loving, BARBARA.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

College of San Rafael

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC

SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA

BEAUTIFUL FOR SITUATION — In the outskirts of one of California's most charming towns, with mountain vistas on every hand.
PERFECT IN APPOINTMENT — An elegant modern building, heated by steam, lighted with gas, an abundant supply of pure water, class-rooms and sleeping-rooms large, light and airy.
EASY OF ACCESS — Only fifty minutes from San Francisco, with hourly trains.
AMPLE GROUNDS — A lovely garden, with promenades, tennis courts, and croquet.
DELIGHTFULLY QUIET — An atmosphere of repose pervades the place, with nothing to interfere with study.

For catalogue and particulars, address

MOTHER SUPERIOR, College of San Rafael, San Rafael, Cal.

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.)

Regular Performance Sunday Evg
Now in its Last Nights, remaining for Next Week Only
Denman Thompson's Famous Play
The Old Homestead
Select Company of 23 Players
The Great Double Quartette! Novel Electrical Effects!
Last performance Sunday, Jan. 17th
Tuesday, Jan. 19th, Lillian Nordica Operatic Concerts

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

Second and Last Week of the Legitimate Irish Comedian
JOSEPH MURPHY
Supported by his New York Company, in the greatest of all Irish Dramas
"KERRY GOW"
Played by him with unparalleled success in all the principal cities and leading theatres of America.
"A comedy-drama without an equal," presenting not only realistic pictures of life and love in the Emerald Isle, but an every-day tale in every land
Monday, January 18th, "The Devil's Auction"

RACING! RACING!
California Jockey Club
Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, January 11, at OAKLAND RACETRACK
Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine
Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp
Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.
Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.
THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB
(INGLESIDE TRACK)
The Only Perfect Winter Track in America
Racing from Dec. 28 to Jan. 9, inclusive
Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine!
First Race at 2 p.m.
Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 p. m. Fare for the round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar.
Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.
A. B. SPRECKELS, President.
W. S. LEAKE, Secretary.

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Jan. 11
Direct from Europe The Famous Royal Hungarian Court Orchestra, under direction of P. K Matus, the most famous Clarionet Virtuoso of all Europe
Another European Novelty, Lieut. Noble, Europe's Greatest Ventriloquist
Hallen & Fuller, Charles Wayne, Annie Caldwell, The Two Bostons, Abachi & Masano
Continued success of Nilsson's Aerial Ballet and Kiralfy's Grand Opera Ballet! New marches, etc
Reserved seats 25c; balcony 10c; box seats and opera chairs 50c. The famous Hungarian Orchestra will play in the Annex every evening after the performance

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
"If I Were Only a King!"
Second Edition of Our Holiday Spectacle
"Jack and the Beanstalk"
New Songs! New Dances!
Splendid Cast!
Three Grand Ballets! Four Superb Transformations!
Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER
SUCCESSORS TO
H. P. GREGORY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO
MACHINERY
Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

San Francisco Carpet Beating and Renovating Works
D. MACKINTOSH & CO., suc. to S. S. Ferguson & Co.
Renovating, Laying and Refitting Carpets a Specialty
Telephone South 36 23 and 25 10th St., S. F.

Perrier-Jouet Champagne
EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand
W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.
19 Spear St., San Francisco
MANUFACTURERS OF
High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease
DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS
Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

Electrical Supplies
BROOKS-FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.
523 Mission St., San Francisco

H. S. BRIDGE & CO.
Merchant Tailors
Many Novelties in Imported Wear. Shirts to Order a Specialty.
622 Market Street, San Francisco
(Up-stairs, opposite Palace Hotel)

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
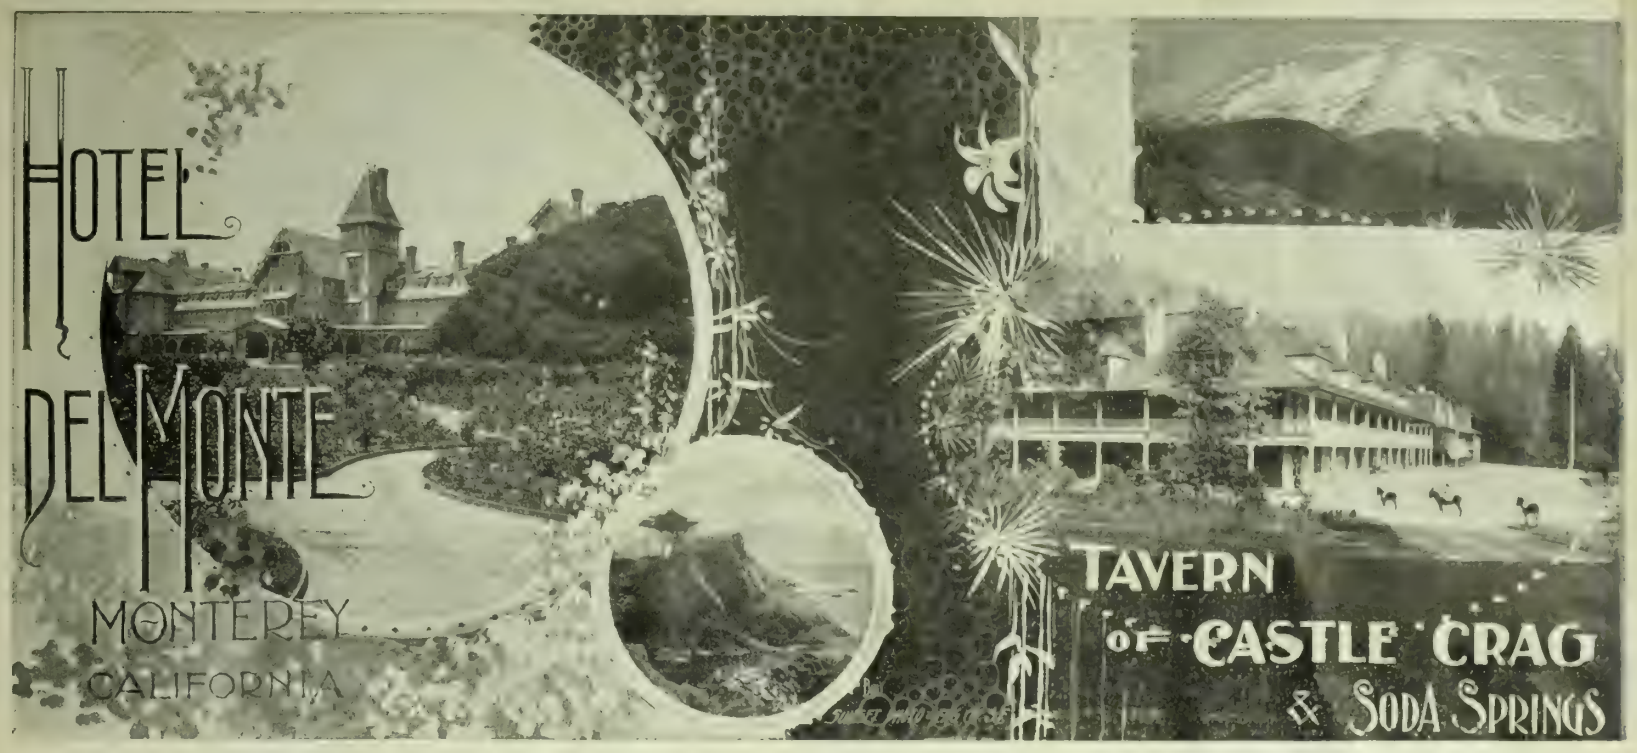
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.



CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

"A California Fairy"

is the title of an elegant little brochure, relating in charming allegorical language the splendors and delights of

"Sunset Limited"

(EXQUISITELY ILLUSTRATED)

The popular Sunset Route is also the subject of a finely illustrated publication, entitled

"Through Storyland to Sunset Seas"

especially interesting to one contemplating a trip over that great Southern route.

Both books are published by the Southern Pacific Company, and will be sent to any address by T. H. GOODMAN, General Passenger Agent, on receipt of 25 cents postage, or 10 cents for the "Fairy" alone.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. December 26.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, December 5, 10, 15, 20, 26, 30, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. December 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. December 13, 17, 21, 26, 29, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, 11 a.m. December 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves right to change steamers or sailing date.

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 — No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

Through Sleeping-Cars to Chicago.

The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad runs through from Oakland to Chicago, daily, Pullman Palace Drawing-room, also Upholstered Tourist Sleeping Cars, leaving every afternoon. Annex Cars on sharp connection for Denver and St. Louis. The only line by which the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River can be reached. The canyon is a mammoth opening in the earth two hundred miles long, eighteen miles wide and seven thousand feet deep. It is reached by stage from Flagstaff, Arizona Territory, in one day's ride. Send for beautifully illustrated book descriptive of the Canyon and the Santa Fe Route to the East. Lowest through rates to all points in the United States, Canada, Mexico or Europe. Special rates to regularly ordained ministers of the gospel. Ticket office, 644 Market street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii, Samoa, New Zealand, Australia

6 Days to Honolulu by Steamship "AUSTRALIA"

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Jan. 26, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Zealandia," for Australia, Thursday, January 7, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES etc
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and other Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—Department No. 3.

Hannah Anglin, Plaintiff, vs. Maurice Anglin, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Maurice Anglin, defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant upon the ground of defendant's desertion and abandonment of plaintiff for upwards of six years next prior to the commencement of this action, and for a judgment and decree awarding to this plaintiff the sole custody and control of Mary Catherine Anglin, the minor child of plaintiff and defendant; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and the seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six (1896).

[Seal] C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By JOSEPH RIORDAN, Deputy Clerk.
Lane & Lane, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MINING Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Virginia Mining District, Storey county, State of Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Trustees, held on the 8th day of December, [illegible] an assessment (No. 119) of Twenty-five cents (25c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 3, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on MONDAY, the 11th day of January, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 1st day of February, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Trustees.

R. U. COLLINS, Secretary.

Office—Room 3, Stock Exchange building, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Gould & Curry Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 80
Amount per share, 15 cents
Levied December 14, 1896
Delinquent in office January 19, 1897
Day of sale [illegible]

Office [illegible]

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 [illegible]

COTTON SAIL D[illegible]

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Drapery [illegible]
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce [illegible]
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company . . Pacific Coast Sole [illegible]
Baltimore

YOU KNOW OUR BUSINESS
X X SO DO WE!
Stationery, Printing, Bookbinding
ANYTHING IN THAT LINE
THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

H. WEKA[illegible] ADOL[illegible]

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS
No. 24 Montgomery Street, [illegible]
SAN FRANCISCO

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgom[illegible]
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRAN[illegible]

DIVIDEND NOTICE. HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, corner [illegible] McAllister and Jones streets. At meeting of the Board of Directors [illegible] ciety, held December 30, 1896, a div[illegible] declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits for the six months [illegible] December 30, 1896, free from all taxes, and payable on and after January 2, 1897.

ROBERT J. TOBIN, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE. GERMA[illegible] SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 526 [illegible] street. For the half year ending Dec[illegible] 1896, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four and twenty-six hundredths (4.26) per cent per annum on term deposits and [illegible] 4.26-100ths 3.55-100) per cent per annum on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable [illegible], January 2, 1897.

[illegible] TOURNY, Secretary.

No 000 000
Age 35
Amount $ 10,000.

MUTUAL INVESTMENT CONTRACT.
Twenty PAYMENT LIFE.

In Consideration of the Application for this Policy which is made a part of this contract, (a copy of which is hereto annexed), and the sum of Three Hundred and Fifty Dollars and Cents to be paid in advance, and of the annual payment of a like amount on or before the First day of September in every year during the first Twenty years of the continuance of this Policy, HEREBY INSURES

John Smith.

of San Francisco County of San Francisco State of California in the sum of Ten Thousand DOLLARS, for the term of life, the said sum to be paid at the Home Office of said Company in San Francisco, California, upon due notice and satisfactory proof of the death of the said insured, to Mary Jane Smith, Wife of said John Smith or in the event of her prior death, to the executors, administrators or assigns of John Smith insured aforesaid.

INCONTESTABILITY.—After this Policy shall have remained in force two full years, if it shall become a claim the Company will not contest its payment, provided the conditions of the Policy as to payment of premiums have been observed.

BENEFITS, CONDITIONS AND VALUES.—The benefits, conditions and values on the next page of this Policy are hereby made a part hereof

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the said THE PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, has, by its President and Secretary signed and delivered this contract at the City of San Francisco this First day of September 1895

Specimen Copy Secretary. Specimen Copy President.

BENEFITS, CONDITIONS AND VALUES

Referred to on the preceding page of this Policy.

Payment of Premiums. All premiums upon this Policy are due and payable at the Home Office of said Company in the City of San Francisco but may be paid to Agents of said Company producing receipts signed by the President, Vice President Secretary or Assistant Secretary and countersigned by such agents

Dividends. After all premiums herein provided for have been paid, and so long as this Policy remains in full force and effect, it shall share in the annual distribution of surplus funds according to the principles and methods which may be adopted by said Company for such distribution Any paid-up insurance issued in lieu of this Policy before Twenty years' premiums have been paid shall be non-participating

Assignment. No assignment of this Policy will be noticed by said Company until the same or a duplicate thereof is filed at its Home Office in the City of San Francisco, and said Company will in no case assume any responsibility for the validity of any assignment.

Service in War. In case of death from or in consequence of service in war unless permission from the Company in writing to engage voluntarily or by draft in any military or naval service has been previously obtained, only the net reserve (computed according to the Combined Experience Table of Mortality, with interest at four per cent per annum), will be paid

Error in Age. If in the application for this Policy, the age of the insured is understated, the amount of insurance payable shall be such proportion of the amount of the Policy as the premium paid bears to the required premium at the true age

Alterations. No alteration or waiver of the conditions of this Policy shall be valid unless made in writing at the Home Office of the Company, and signed by the President or Vice-President, and Secretary or Assistant Secretary.

Loans. After premiums have been paid upon this Policy for not less than three full years, the party having the right of surrender hereunder may borrow upon it, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Company, seventy-five per cent. of its cash value at the time the loan is requested. Any indebtedness to the Company, including any unpaid balance of the current year's premium, shall first be deducted in any settlement of this Policy.

Additions and Values. If all the annual dividends declared on this Policy are used for the purchase of additional insurance, then and in that case the values of this Policy shall be not less than stipulated in the schedule below; Provided, that this Policy is duly surrendered to the Company while in force, or within three months of its date of lapse

SCHEDULE OF POLICY VALUES

| In event of Death Amount payable after Policy Year indicated | Policy Year | Surrender Value In event of termination at end of Policy Year indicated | | In event of Death. Amount payable after Policy Year indicated | Policy Year | Surrender Value In event of termination at end of Policy Year indicated | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Amount | | In Paid-up Life Insurance Payable at Death | or, In Cash. | Amount | | In Paid-up Life Insurance Payable at Death | or, In Cash. |
| $ 10130 — | 1st. | $ — | $ — | $ 11780 — | 11th. | $ 7280 — | $ 2600 — |
| 10270 — | 2d. | 1270 — | — | 11980 — | 12th | 7980 — | 3000 — |
| 10410 — | 3d. | 1910 — | 280 — | 12190 — | 13th | 8690 — | 3480 — |
| 10560 — | 4th. | 2560 — | 400 — | 12410 — | 14th | 9410 — | 3900 — |
| 10710 — | 5th. | 3260 — | 550 — | 12630 — | 15th | 10130 — | 4350 — |
| 10870 — | 6th. | 3870 — | 750 — | 12860 — | 16th | 10860 — | 4800 — |
| 11040 — | 7th. | 4540 — | 1000 — | 13090 — | 17th. | 11590 — | 5300 — |
| 11210 — | 8th. | 5220 — | 1300 — | 13330 — | 18th | 12330 — | 5800 — |
| 11390 — | 9th. | 5900 — | 1700 — | 13580 — | 19th | 13080 — | 6500 — |
| 11580 — | 10th. | 6580 — | 2200 — | 13830 — | 20th | 13830 — | 7450 — |

If any dividend is withdrawn or used in reduction of premium payment, this Policy will nevertheless be entitled to one of the following values: (1) After payment of premium for three full years if duly surrendered while in force or within three months of its date of lapse, for full paid non-participating life insurance in amount equal to as many Twentieth parts of the principal sum of this Policy as there have been full annual premiums paid hereon, together with all of its existing dividend additions, or (2) If in force and duly surrendered at twenty years from date hereof, or within thirty days thereafter, for cash in amount $ 5270. increased by the reserve value of all its existing dividend additions. All reserves to be computed according to the Combined Experience Table of Mortality, with interest at four per cent. per annum.

Extension Condition. After this Policy has been in force three full years, should it lapse and not be surrendered as provided, it shall nevertheless remain valid for the period specified in the Schedule of Extended Insurance following: Provided, that if the insured dies within three years from such lapse, all unpaid premiums, with interest at six per cent. per annum, shall be deducted from the amount insured, and Provided further, that should there be any indebtedness against this Policy, the extended insurance term specified shall be correspondingly reduced.

Schedule of Extended Insurance, Regardless of Policy Dividends.

| Years from Date of Issue | Extension Period Years | Days | Years from Date of Issue | Extension Period. Years | Days |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 3 | 4 | 118 | 12 | 16 | 39 |
| 4 | 5 | 328 | 13 | 16 | 301 |
| 5 | 7 | 185 | 14 | 17 | 176 |
| 6 | 9 | 32 | 15 | 18 | 16 |
| 7 | 10 | 213 | 16 | 18 | 199 |
| 8 | 11 | 351 | 17 | 19 | |
| 9 | 13 | 73 | 18 | 19 | 156 |
| 10 | 14 | 109 | 19 | 19 | 312 |
| 11 | 15 | 96 | | | |

Give the above Contract your careful consideration

It will be to your advantage

No Restrictions! All Guaranties! No Estimates!

ISSUED BY THE

Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co.

OF CALIFORNIA

THE ONLY HOME COMPANY

ORGANIZED 1868

Kilgarif & Beaver, General Agents

Pacific Mutual Building, S. F.

Hunting at Burlingame

The Haunts of the Tamale-Maker

THE WAVE

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

CALIFORNIA STATE

VOL. XVI. No. 3 SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 16, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS.

THE GREEN-ROOM IN THE CHINESE THEATRE ON JACKSON STREET

WHERE THE CELESTIAL ACTORS MAKE UP AND WHENCE THEY EMERGE UPON THE STAGE

From a photographic study by E. W. Jensen

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 16, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 4 |
| The Tolstoi Canard | 4 |
| Utah Women in Politics | 5 |
| A Family Resemblance; by Marcel l'Henreux | 5 |
| A Hospital on a Quagmire; by G. F. Shiels, M.D. | 6 |
| Behind the Sceents | 7 |
| The Alcazar Company in "Chispa" | 7 |
| Scenes at the San Mateo Hunt Club | 8 |
| Where Tamales are Made | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres; by Peg Woffington | 11 |
| The Indian Giver: a Review | 12 |
| Sport; by Benedict | 13 |
| Fashion Review | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

IS IT A PUBLIC VICTORY?

The railway funding bill has been defeated and the "people" have scored another "victory." In black-faced type and with manifestations of journalistic delight in the shape of exultant headlines, the daily press announces that the State is forever relieved from the "thraldom of monopoly." "The clutch of the octopus" has been loosened from the throat of the commonwealth, and bon-fires and flags and braying bands should be employed to evidence the unspeakable pleasure and relief with which the people welcome this "breaking of the chains." To speak otherwise than with enthusiastic joy over the recent action of Congress would, in the eyes of the noisy populace, be treason of an unmistakable and unforgivable character. Personal friends solicitous for the welfare of this journal, misled by the noise that passes for public opinion and having a knowledge of our past attitude in respect to this bill, have urged us not at this juncture to attempt the defense of so unpopular a measure. With due respect to their judgment, we must decline to follow their suggestion of silence and cowardice. Such a course would be as reprehensible as that followed by ignorance which gives countenance to the damnable spirit of spite and hatred that has been the moving force in antagonism to funding. With our knowledge of the facts concerning the subject matter we would forfeit our own self-respect should we join the ranks of malicious ex-employes, who once earned their livelihood through the bounty of the corporation they now so malevolently assail. There would come a burning sting of shame if we abandoned fundamental principles of justice and fairness to unite in the clamor raised by the insincere and thrifty professional railroad hater. We unhesitatingly affirm that the welfare of the State and the interests of the national government demand in most emphatic terms that in some way the railroad indebtedness be refunded, and this corporation compelled to pay its obligation dollar for dollar and cent for cent. It seems inexplicable that such an attitude should be regarded as one of friendliness to the corporation and hostility to the people, if the object to be obtained is the payment of the debt. The defeat of the funding measure prevents the accomplishment of the very thing the government should be clamoring to obtain. It does not insure payment, but on the contrary it does prevent it. It does not solve the problem that is vexing our State, but it does increase its embarrassments and perplexities. We trust that the reader, no matter how he may be inclined to view the funding bill, will in the future bear in mind that notwithstanding the noisy sentiment to the contrary The Wave emphatically denies the wisdom or good policy of opposing the refunding, and that we emphatically and positively assert that to oppose it was a blunder, to defeat it a mistake, and venture to prophesy that its consequences are more than likely to be disappointing and diametrically opposite to the end sought to be obtained.

There were two ways to treat with this railroad debt. One demanded calm and dispassionate deliberation and a settlement upon a purely business basis; the other was to throw deliberation and calmness to the winds, give license to unreason and permit bias to enter into our judgment. The latter course is the one which seems to have obtained adherence in this State. That we will suffer by it, must inevitably follow.

Taking the vote in the House of Representatives as decisively ending the struggle before Congress this may be a good time to examine the future, measure the importance of the "triumph" and take some satisfaction to ourselves over the "conquest." The "victory" consists in this very simple thing: Congress has declared that it will not take additional security and extend the time for the payment of its second mortgage upon the Pacific railroads, the present security for which is confessedly not equal to the face of the indebtedness. Under ordinary circumstances a man having insufficient security for a debt overdue would resist any effort to compel him to take the security in lieu of the debt, and if the debtor proffered additional security for his indebtedness in consideration of an extension of the time for payment, under all the ordinary rules governing monetary transactions the proposition would be received with favor and promptly accepted. A banker who would struggle to bring about such a condition as that which the "Examiner" claims to have brought about on behalf of the people would be a fit subject for a ward in some lunatic asylum. While there was some hope that a deficiency judgment might lie against the stockholders of the Pacific railways; while it was possible that the government might proceed against the private fortunes of the individual stockholders for the loss sustained under foreclosure of the mortgage, there might have been some excuse for the policy that urged immediate and complete foreclosure. But like the other claims of the railroad hater, this hope has been dissipated into thin air, and the highest tribunal in the land has declared that the government has no recourse against the stockholders and must look to its security alone for the satisfaction of its debt.

Of course, the next contest must be legal in its nature and long years of litigation may ensue. Here popular prejudice will be unavailing, and cold principles of law alone will determine the rights and equities involved. The defendants in the action will be the railway companies, who as may be expected will take advantage of every legal right and every equitable defense within their reach, and they are not few. It is possible, indeed it seems almost inevitable as The Wave has before now indicated, that the courts will refuse the claim for equitable relief sought by the government, without making due allowance for the equities of the corporation. It may be that eventually the Pacific railroads will fall into the same hands that now control their destiny and at a cost fully fifty if not seventy-five per cent less than the sum they now offer to pay to the government. It is one thing in public print to dismiss in a contemptuous and offhand manner the equities and contentions that may be urged on behalf of and in defense of the railroad companies, but it is still another to overcome these obstructions in a court of equity where a spade is called a spade and where a breach of faith on the part of the government may estop it from demanding its pound of flesh. The statement has been made, but somehow it has always been received with an incredulous smile, that the Central Pacific railroad company has complied fully with every provision of the United States statutes affecting it; that it has performed not only every obligation to the government but to its private creditors as well. On the other hand, it has been charged and proved that the government has not kept its obligations to the corporations, but has openly and notoriously violated the provisions of the contract between it and the railroads. In a series of articles treating upon this subject The Wave has from time to time directed attention to the delinquincies of the government with respect to these railways and what the consequences might be if the existing differences were brought for adjudication before a court of equity.

In looking back over the past it is apparent that if this whole question could have been referred to a commission consisting we will say of the Treasurer and the Attorney-General of the United States with three Senators and members of Congress, it would have been better for the people and for the government. The temper of the public mind in California, however, would not have permitted a discussion along such lines. The spirit animating the opposition to the funding bill was determined upon achieving a "people's victory," and nothing short of a complete and uncompromising defeat of the funding measure would have satisfied the desires of its opponents.

It is an open secret that opposition to funding in California has not arisen out of any desire to see the national government collect its debt or to compel the corporations to pay. The idea has been to obstruct all measures that squinted toward a settlement and so compel the government to foreclose and sell the property no matter what its loss might be, in the hope that the road would go to other hands and be operated as a competing line of railway, so bringing about a reduction in overland rates.

We have already passed through several periods of low transcontinental freight rates, the effect of which upon the manufacturing enterprises of California has been almost fatal. We are not prepared to say that this community would not be better off with a competing line of railroad, but this we do affirm without fear of contradiction: The inevitable result of low freight rates on manufactured articles from the East would be to close entirely every manufacturing enterprise in the State of California, not in some way peculiarly connected with the products of our soil. Wages, fuel and the other fixed expenses of manufacturing in California are higher than those prevailing elsewhere in the East. Every reduction in transcontinental freight rates is practically a reduction in the price of Eastern made goods. There is no way for a local factory to meet this new condition except to cut wages. The first result would be the closing of our mills; the next would be the resumption of work upon the Eastern scale of prices. A long series of labor contentions will inevitably follow, and in the end the scale of wages paid in this State must fall to the level of the scale paid in the East. Whether or not we will be better off under these circumstances, is a question which we ask the "Examiner" and the labor leaders of the Pacific Coast to answer. The Wave ventures to prophesy that a short while hence the "Examiner" and the people who are so noisily opposing the funding bill, and who now claim to have secured its defeat, will then declare all the efforts of the railway company to secure its passage to have been insincere and merely a trick of the corporation to mislead. We do not hesitate to predict that this will be the attitude of the "Examiner," and the public will come to regard their "people's victory" as a defeat and sorely regret that they did not at this time advocate the passage of a bill which would have compelled the companies to pay one hundred cents on the dollar even though such payment did extend over a period of a hundred years.

SENATOR PERKINS.

There never was any occasion for doubting that the Legislature would re-elect George C. Perkins to the United States Senate. The alleged contest was no contest at all. The supposed opposition of the railroad was nowhere in evidence. True a few political parasites who make cheap reputations through the espousal of wild thories of government and impractical political maneuverings, and who are also credited with employment with the railroad in other conections, did attempt to create an impression that their antagonism to Senator Perkins was inspired by the company that employs them in capacities other than political, but the whole proceeding was a farce of the broadest type. The ordinary politician is not apt to attach the proper significance to the victory achieved by Senator Perkins. The contest for the Senatorship took place during the late campaign before the people and was determined at the polls in November last. Practically the proceedings before the Legislature amounted to the recording of a verdict already rendered by the people. Its action was as certain and as much of a foregone conclusion as will be the recording of the vote of Major McKinley by the National Electoral College. If any ambitious soul should at this juncture attempt to influence the vote of the Presidential electors for some candidate other than Major McKinley, the execrations of the American people would fall heavily upon the unfortunate individual prompting such a course. It was quite as bad taste to invite members of the Legislature to disregard their pledges to their constituents with respect to Senator Perkins, and it is to be regretted that such an attempt was for a moment seriously considered by any one.

Politics in its narrow sense was nowhere visible in Senator Perkins' campaign. That gentleman has demonstrated that the interior of the State may be successful in a political way against the wishes and in the face of the objections of the local San Francisco bosses if it will but unite for decency. This is a something worthy of note by interests and individuals possessed of the idea that political bosses are the necessary adjuncts to political success. The laurels of this contest belong to Senator Perkins—to no one else. He outlined his own campaign and directed the manner and the method of it. He took the people into his confidence and they rewarded him. No political boss was his sponsor or assistant. It was Perkins' individual popularity that brought him success nothing else. As usual The Wave is to be congratulated, for it was the only Republican journal in the city that stood steadfastly by Senator Perkins.

THE NEW INTERNATIONAL COURT.

The arbitration treaty between the United States and Great Britain is one of the notable events of the nineteenth century. No other act of the present administration will live so long in the popular memory or in the records of history. It is the first recognition by the two chief nations of the earth that law and not force, reason and not arms, should govern between nations. Men of the Anglo-Saxon race have long been out of the barbaric state and yet during all these centuries of civilization it has been regarded as necessary that whenever difficulties arose between two governments they should be settled by trial of battle, by strength of arm and armament, rather than by that rational process of legal procedure which obtains between individuals and is made compulsory by the government upon its subjects. Just as the law of personal rights and property has evolved from the will of the original chief of the tribe to the present body of certain determined and authoritative statutes, so can we see the evolution of the international code from the early days of unchecked piracy to the Cleveland-Salisbury treaty of 1897.

We have come to look upon war as the only proper way of settling troubles between nations, but on reflection how ridiculous this method seems, just as foolish and unreasonable in fact as the old-time trial by fire to which the prisoner was subjected as a test of his honesty or innocence. We now can hardly understand how men of the slightest mind could believe that such a trial was any test of a man's guilt, yet for centuries this primitive method of doing justice obtained. After it came the trial by battle in which men having grievances against each other, which in our days would be a matter for the investigation of some court, were brought face to face sword in hand and he adjudged innocent, or awarded the property, as the case might be, who overthrew his fellow. War between nations is just this on a big scale, nothing more. We grew out of these old methods through an increased intelligence of the people. We now subject our lives and our property to the disposition of courts of law acting within statutes with which we are familiar. By their treaty of arbitration the United States and Great Britain have recognized that governments made up of thinking men should adopt rational and modern means rather than the ancient methods of their ancestors. We are to have the first international court known in the history of the world. The leading jurists of both countries are to sit upon that bench, and before them the causes of international interest are to be pleaded. No judicial body so dignified has ever been set up, and the men who sit upon that bench will doubtless be the fathers of a system of international law which will be as solid and well recognized as the codes which now govern in our several States. It will be fitting that Lord Chief Justice Russell, who made so eloquent a plea for arbitration before the National Bar Association, should have a seat in that most august tribunal.

The setting up of this court gives much encouragement to those who hold that notwithstanding local contemporary phases of our in some respects unhappy civilization we are making steadily in the course of wisdom and of justice, the only way that leads to a happy life for governments as well as individuals. Sometimes we are excited and cry out against the spirit of our time and almost believe in our hearts that things are not working toward a higher civilization. We see misery among the poor, bitterness among the unfortunate, riots and struggles among our laborers, cruel oppression and unjust disregard of human rights by wealthy employers, the law defied by trusts and other combinations of capital so great that we have not yet learned how to handle them by law, men in public life without patriotism and false to everything but their pockets, great nations disposed to tyrannize over the smaller and rob them as ruthlessly as the highwayman his victim, but no mature reflection we perceive that the world is making for the better even if its progress is slow, and as Emerson has said:

> Deep love lieth under these pictures of time,
> That fade in the light of their meaning sublime.

Men may be selfish, cruel and shortsighted, but we know no serious consideration that man is growing more and more subject to reason, and with intelligence these evils pass away. The adoption of such a treaty as that here considered has never been possible before in the history of the world because the prejudices and the passions of men were too strong to allow of its adoption. Remark the picture: A body of men set up as it were in the air between two great countries, both rich in men and money and mind, to determine for them finally questions of difference arising out of their international relations. Eighty million Americans will bow before the decrees of that court as the ancient Hebrews prostrated themselves before the law that came down from Sinai. Two hundred million and more subjects of the British crown, men whose nature it is to fight, will accept the decrees of this tribunal as if they had come from their own self-chosen parliament. It is not as if two rulers had imposed some system or code upon their peoples which they had nothing to do but accept. Our position is that of the intelligent man who believes in the control of right and reason under all circumstances, who has seen enough of men to know that courts can be formed to which men need have no fear of subjecting so great an interest as that involved in their country's welfare. Could anything stronger be said, any other fact be adduced going to show the high point of civilization, of confidence in man's judgment, of willingness to be made subject to the law of reason than the establishment of this international court?

Do not misunderstand. War is not done for. War may yet be between the United States and Great Britain, and it is constantly threatened between the most enlightened nations of Europe. Law has not abolished the appeal to arms between men, and so long as human nature is as it is we cannot expect that international law will abolish international appeals to arms. But we will reduce the pretexts; by a public sentiment, we will make it impossible for wars to be indulged in upon the slight excuses that have hitherto obtained. When men have once got into the habit of thinking that questions can be settled in court justly and promptly, they do not frequently appeal to their fists or to the sword; so when nations set up courts to determine differences they will soon grow out of the habit of letting their hands drop upon their pistol pockets on every provocation. The way has been pointed out by which recourse to international strife may be made less frequent, and gradually the whole civilized world will come to see that war between nations is as unjustifiable as the duello.

NATIONAL DIVORCE LAW.

The New York papers are again agitating the question of a national divorce law. The present excitement is due to the decision handed down by Justice Russell, in which he holds that a woman married in New York who goes to North Dakota and there acquires a residence and procures a divorce and again marries, is subject to be divorced from her husband resident in New York on the ground of adultery. Justice Russell in his opinion says:

"Henry McGown and Mary Emma McGown were husband and wife. Neither of them could voluntarily free himself or herself from those obligations. It could not be done by mutual consent. It could not, under the laws of this State, be done by evasive action designed to circumvent the public policy of the State of New York in respect to what is regarded the sacred obligations of marriage."

The Judge then said that for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, "and for that purpose alone, she leaves the State of New York and goes to the State of North Dakota, where a divorce may be obtained upon a residence of ninety days, and where no inquiry seems to be made upon the subject as to whether that residence was acquired for the purpose of obtaining a divorce or for the purpose of obtaining a permanent residence.

"By the laws of North Dakota, therefore, she is the lawful wife in that State of Mr. Bell. By the laws of the State of New York she is the lawful wife of Mr. McGown. Now, that inconsistent relation is something that is very difficult to obviate, but I know of no way, except by adhering first to the ancient rule of the State of New York that the marital tie cannot be dissolved by such actions on the part of either person to that contract, no matter what the consequences are; therefore, I say that under the laws of this State, under the decisions of this State in the highest courts, this lady is yet the lawful wife of the plaintiff in this action.

"Therefore, if she has lived in the marital relation with another man, she has violated that obligation, which gives just cause to her husband for a divorce. Now, that divorce obtained, what follows? The marital tie is dissolved, not only in the State of North Dakota, but also in the State of New York, and all that remains is the usual prohibition against the party marrying again.

"The instant the decree of divorce is obtained in this State, so far as I can discover, there is no State in the Union where these parties must not be regarded as divorced from each other. How far that prohibition will extend in the State of New York to anything like questions of property I do not undertake to say; nor is it necessary.

"I have no doubt that under the present laws a divorce obtained in the State of New York, obtained by the husband, without collusion, for a just cause, the marital tie being dissolved, hereafter this lady, having obtained a divorce in South Dakota and there married, under the policy of that State, any issue of that second marriage would be legitimate anywhere."

The foundation of Justice Russell's opinion is that the courts of Dakota did not have jurisdiction over the defendant, McGown, in New York. He not having been served with summons could not have subjected himself to the jurisdiction of the Dakota court. This seems to have long been the accepted law in New York. Thus the ridiculous situation is brought about that Mrs. McGown is the wife of one man in New York and of another in North Dakota. Another New York decision which shows the necessity for a national divorce law is known as the Baker decision. A man named Frank M. Baker and his wife lived in New York. He wished a divorce, but was unable to secure one on the only ground which is recognized for absolute divorce in New York State; so he took up his residence in Connecticut, and there successfully sued for divorce on the ground of incompatibility of temper. Soon after Baker remarried and returned to New York, where he was found guilty of bigamy and sentenced to a term in the penitentiary. The opinion of the Court of Appeals was written by Judge Folger and concurred in by all but one of the Justices.

New York society is said to be greatly excited over this recent decision of Justice Russell because it is supposed and was announced by the foolish newspapers that it imperils the decrees of divorces granted by courts outside of New York State to various very swell women. It is pointed out that Madame de Steurs, who procured a divorce from her husband in Dakota and later married the dashing Elliott Zborowski, Mrs. Floyd-Jones, Mrs. James G. Blaine junior (now Mrs. William T. Bull), the Countess Zichy and others among the Four Hundred are liable to be arrested for bigamy; but the daily papers overlook the fact that in these cases either service was made within Dakota, where the divorce was procured, or the husband entered an appearance, so the question of jurisdiction does not arise, and the divorces, although not procurable in New York, must be recognized by the courts of that State out of comity between the States.

The agitation of this matter of a national divorce law, although given rise to a good deal of silly talk by our unlearned daily contemporaries, is useful in showing the necessity for several lines of legislation which were not appreciated at the time our constitution was drafted. It has been decided, for instance, by our own Supreme Court that while a court may obtain jurisdiction of the person by the publication of summons, neither the property of that person nor the children in his charge are subject to the order of the court, so that if one flees from the State carrying with him his children, his wife may procure a divorce without his appearance, yet she cannot get alimony nor the custody of her children. Sooner or later there will be an arrangement between the States to obviate these manifest evils, if a federal law cannot be drafted to meet the difficulty of the situation. Our commercial relations are so intimate and the division between the States, in all matters outside of those purely local, is so unimportant that we are coming more and more to see the necessity of national legislation affecting the statutes of persons and certain rights of preperty. The agitation for a national bankruptcy law is still continuing and but for the narrowness of our recent Congress the bill bringing about the reform in this regard would have been passed. It has also been suggested that a uniform statute of limitation should be adopted because of the intimacy of the relations between the people of the different States, and we are fast coming to recognize the unwisdom of continuing the limitation upon the federal legislative in many other particulars.

TWO BENEFICENT MEASURES.

There are two measures that will come up before the pending Legislature which, if they receive intelligent and affirmative action, will have a broad, permanent and beneficial effect upon the administration of public affairs and the purification of politics in the State of California. Civil service it is conceded is a prerequisite to faithful and intelligent public service. There is neither sense nor reason in turning out a faithful and intelligent public servant simply because his political opponents have scored a victory over his party. No private concern in Christendom would be guilty of such a thing, and generally speaking there is no good reason why the rule should obtain in the public service. It answers no good purpose, but it does give birth to a brood of office seekers who barter and trade their votes, who stuff ballot boxes and perform innumerable other questionable political services for the fat offices and slim duties that go with them. To this class of tax-eating parasites we owe much of our political evils. Banish their opportunity to profit by their perfidy and you remove the temptation and destroy the hope that leads them to take to crime as the avenue which most surely leads to public office.

The other measure, which is most important to the State, is the proposed new primary law. Two years ago, through inadvertence, the law adopted providing for a new system of primary elections was defective and led our court to stamp it as unconstitutional. If the spirit of reform lives in this Legislature as it did with the last the civil service measure and a new primary law will go upon our statute books, to the great credit of the State and its Legislature. If either of these laws is to be preferred to the other it is that which looks toward a better primary system.

Quite a notable lawsuit, involving a curious point of professional ethics, was decided recently in a London court. A certain physician thought that his brother's case had been grossly mismanaged by another doctor and commented on it sharply. Physician No. 2 brought suit for libel and won after a prolonged struggle, receiving $75 damages. The obvious moral is that doctors should not talk too much about professional ignorance.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

In these days when the newspapers pursue the unhappy citizen like the Devil on Two Sticks, lifting the roof and laying bare his home it might not seem that there are many mute, inglorious millionaires at large in a town so exhaustively bepapered as San Francisco. Nevertheless there are some wealthy men in this neighborhood who by the simple process of minding their own business have escaped the curious eye of Peeping Tom o' the Press. For instance, there is a certain well-found sailorman—Kitterman by name—who having sworn off the sea has been quietly putting together bit by bit a more than comfortable share of terra firma of the sort that counts. He came from England before the mast some years ago and lives at North Beach. He started a furniture store and lived within his income. He is just a plain, ordinary German of simple habits and small economies. His spare money he has invested in houses until now he owns 106 flats, which give him an income of something like $1500 a month. His single ambition is to acquire more flats.

***

The romance of mining is of endless and infinite variety. You have all heard the story of the Santa Rosalie mine in Mexico, from which John Daggett and his fortunate friends are drawing so much money, but there comes another story from that neighborhood which has far more of the elements of the unexpected. About forty miles from the spot where the Santa Rosalie mine is located a promising lead was discovered some years ago by a Californian prospector. He was a Bostonian of good family and, returning home contrived to interest some of his young millionaire friends in the enterprise. They put up something like a million dollars to develop the prospect and bought all kinds of machinery with all sorts of money. The plant was shipped to Hermosillo on the Mexican coast and started for the mine. The people in charge knew nothing of the difficulties to be overcome in a half-savage country. They began to build a road, but the money and enthusiasm gave out before the road arrived. To this day that expensive machinery may be seen scattered along the line bleaching and rusting under a tropic sun. The company lived on, rather as a parliamentary entity than as an industrial enterprise. It was solemnly called to order at stated periods, but it did no work. Meantime an old Italian was left in charge of the mine. He dug in that mine and said nothing. And he never neglected to send his bill at regular intervals and as regularly it was received and placed on file. When this had run for five years he asked for a settlement. The directors had no money to pay bills. They voted to be rid of the whole thing by giving it away. This solution commended itself to them as a neat and easy way out. Whereupon by a succeeding mail the patient Italian received a quit claim deed to the property and by return post the company had a receipt. Nothing more. This was about eight years ago. Now this old silent man is in a way to become one of the great Mexican millionaires. While the directors had been reading the minutes in Boston he had found a ledge of rock which paid him about $800 to the ton. He got out the rock with his own pick and powder and so got money enough for further development. He is already rich and will be richer, for speech is silvern and silence is golden.

***

Artistic work in whatever field when honest and sincere will very generally bring results expressed in dollars, always of course on the condition that there is some touch of the divine fire about it. W. K. Vickery told me the other day of the profitable and encouraging success of certain young ladies, the Misses Palache, residing, I believe on the other side of the bay. As much for amusement as anything they had made a series of platinotypes of cloud effects on the Golden Gate. These were placed in his hands early in December and had a large sale during the holidays, to that extent that he was able to turn over to the young photographers $750 as their share of the proceeds. Moreover he sent on some of the pictures to a photographic exhibition in London, where they were awarded first prize against the world. Now all this is no reason why every young woman in the country should join the army of the kodak. You may make photographs till the heavens fall and all is blue and never earn a dollar for the output unless you have an eye for artistic effect—a not uncommon gift—and above all, the initiative force which leaves the grooves. To imitate is human, to invent divine.

***

My sorrowful predictions anent the Supervisors are being shared by the community. It seems we have but stepped from the frying pan into the fire. I envy the "Examiner" its task when called on to explain why it so loudly endorsed certain individuals whose reputations are already clouded. Certain of its friends whom it recommended to the Non-Partisan convention and to the city have already shown the cloven foot. However, in comparison with the Board of Education our citizens have given us, the Supervisors will surely prove angels. President Barrington, a man of intelligence and integrity, has a desire to do well for the city, but his colleagues I fear have souls only for their opportunities. On the second day after election, when it became evident that the Rainey Board of Supervisors had obtained the suffrage of San Francisco, the newly crowned Boss visited the private offices of certain of the corporations, by way, I suppose, of establishing direct communication at the earliest possible moment. He found his reception much less cordial than he thought due his new pretensions, and was told that several of his clients had preceeded him—in other words, that three members of the new board had already laid their necessities at the feet of Power.

***

The evolution of morals, or that which passes for morals, in relation to feminine dress and undress, more particularly on the stage, finds illustration in the Seeley episode in New York, where the virtue of that highly moral metropolis asserted itself through the police because certain graceless youngsters of the gilded sort were pleased to be entertained at Sherry's by ladies of the almost altogether. This, one is constrained to admit, is painful evidence of the degeneracy of the gilded youth treading the primrose path that leads to the brimstone pit, but it serves to recall how many things have happened since the pulpits thundered and the world stood aghast peeping between its fingers at the Black Crook in skirts. Perhaps you remember the performance of the Santley troupe of burlesquers at the old California. These well-fed and comfortable young women if placed on a contemporary stage, would seem overdressed to the educated eye. Nevertheless the moral sense of San Francisco was wounded in its dearest place by what the town was pleased to regard as the undrapery of the Santley girls. As in New York, so did the virtue of San Francisco find expression in the action of the police who arrested the whole house one night. Naturally that included a large slice of the gilded youth. Then there was scuttling for cover. Many of the young men were engaged to be married or on the way to that goal. Immediately they had business in Tulare or Siskiyou or the Lord knows where. They hid, to put it plainly, until the storm blew over. For a week the papers were full of the trial. That virtuous jurist Bob Ferrall was on the bench, and the case made a highly moral circus free for all. It was pretended that the court insisted on an exhibition on the witness stand, but one supposes that this was merely Mr. Ferrall's funny way or journalistic wit. The same troupe in the same dresses might come and go to-day and nothing said. In Kansas crusading committees parade the towns scratching theatrical posters off the billboards and, as the philosophic Frenchman remarked, all that is purely a matter of geography.

***

The crop of litigation of the sort that pays fat fees is short this season, therefore the large number of contests for seats in the Legislature. These are mostly frivolous and are instituted with the pleasing sense that, win or lose, there is money in them for everybody concerned. Such contests are usually grounded on some trifling non-compliance with technical provisions of the law and they rarely carry weight so long as the intention of the voters is not defeated. But it has been the practice of the Legislature to appropriate money to pay the costs of contestants no matter how the case may result. So the enterprising and industrious young lawyer hunts up a defeated candidate—any candidate will do—and it is a poor lawyer who, with the help of our confused election laws, cannot devise some sort of technical plea on which to base a fight. The people pay for all, but what is one to do when there are some 3000 lawyers in town and only one big case in the courts? The Fair estate is fat, but not fat enough to go round, and in fact the men who get into these big cases are not of the sort which foments litigation.

***

There is much loud woe over the distribution of the patronage by the Democratic bosses, Rainey and Lanigan. The combination of which Lanigan appears to be very much the controlling spirit at present, does not believe in a hereafter so long as there is anything in sight that may be seized, and neither discretion nor intelligence has been shown in the dispensation. As an instance, Professor Healey Davis, who performs messenger service for Lanigan, has been given four places and a fifth for himself in the Sheriff's office. Joseph E. O'Donnell, who is one of Rainey's men, is made secretary of the Board of Education at $150 a month. Rainey had Daggett insist that the Governor give O'Donnell's brother a place in the Jute mill at San Quentin, paying $110 a month. O'Donnell's father, by a trade of patronage, has been put in Collector Wise's office at $110 a month. Dr Ragan's sisters and cousins and aunts pervade the City Hall. John McGovern, who has hung around Rainey's stables until his shadow is impressed on the wall like a political fresco, has been given a place for his family. The Governor, at the request of Rainey and Daggett, donated to Mr. Donovan a place in the Board of Health. His brother is in the street department and his son under John H. Wise. Some 140 places have thus been disposed of, yet there is not one German in the hall. Secretary Maxwell of the Fire Department, having been given an assistant and having placed all his relatives, now asks for an increase of salary, no doubt because there is less work to be done. It is a grand and glorious time for the political family of the bosses who appear to be better provided with valor than discretion.

***

Time was when the Fire Brigade's horses were the finest in the land. But three years ago the steeds that tore over the cobbles when the bells rang out were the strongest and proudest in the city. At the recent Horse Show the poorest nags in the collection were those of the Department. Wherefore this degeneracy? It cannot be the poor judgment of Chief Sullivan, who is an excellent Chief as well as a sagacious business man. The responsibility for this unfortunate condition of affairs rests with Chris Dunker, who operated the Fire Department of the late Board of Supervisors. I am told he was the purchaser of the Brigade's horseflesh, and comparing prices and purchases one cannot but believe Mr. Dunker was swindled habitualy by those with whom he had dealings. This, at least, is the charitable assumption. I am in hopes, however, that the Rottanzi Board will handle department affairs with a better sense of the necessities of the fire service.

BOSWELL JR.

M. Puvis de Chavannes, the greatest figure in the world of French art to-day, lives in Montmartre. His palace consists of a studio, a bedroom and a dressing-room; his furniture, a big table, a few arm-chairs and a sofa. His working studio is at Neuilly, outside Paris, a bare room, vast enough for his great canvases. Here he works alone on a ladder every day from 9 in the morning until evening, ceasing only for a light repast at noon. His is a life of incessant labor and severe simplicity.

THE TOLSTOI CANARD

How the Novelist Gained Favor With the Emperor.

The thrill that went around the world when it was announced that Count Tolstoi had at last been brought under the ban of the Russian Church and was to be formally excommunicated has given an additional impetus to the popularity and fame of the author of the "greatest modern novel."

Excommunication in Russia in the present day implies much the same thing as it did in Europe in the thirteenth century, confiscation of property, outlawry, imprisonment and, according to Russian custom, ultimate banishment to the lead mines of Siberia. The dispatch announcing the punishment of Tolstoi was, however, badly garbled by the American press, and it has since been learned that it is not Lyoff Tolstoi, but his distant relative Nikola who has incurred the displeasure of the heads of the Russian Church.

Popular belief to the contrary, the author of "Anna Karenina" is well liked in the official and court circles of the Russian empire and enjoys the protection and friendship of the Czar himself. So great is the Emperor's esteem for the author that on one occasion his Majesty sternly silenced a procurator of the Holy Synod who demanded that Tolstoi be called upon to show cause why he should not be punished by the Church for heresy and dangerous socialism.

The novelist's favor at court dates from the time of his interview with Alexander III., who sent for the Count—then in the first days of his success—and in a personal interview requested him to discontinue his attacks upon society and the existing orders. Tolstoi replied:

"Will your Majesty doff for an instant your imperial mantle and judge my writings not as a King but as an ordinary man? If a single word of my books is not consistent with sound common sense and human reason I will cut off my right hand."

COUNT LYOFF TOLSTOI

The Czar was thoughtful a moment and took leave of Tolstoi cordially, but without giving him an answer. Yet from that day to this, the Count has enjoyed the imperial patronage and protection. Even if the report of Tolstoi's excommunication and consequent banishment had been true, it is doubtful if (in so far as his physical, exterior life is concerned) he would have suffered by the change. Confiscation of property would mean nothing to him, for he has long ago made over his entire estate to his wife and children, and for the rest it is well known that he leads the life of the laborer, sometimes working at the plough, sometimes making shoes. Not long ago Tolstoi's shop could be seen in the village where he made his home. From the door of the shop projected the sign reading, "Count Lyoff Tolstoi, Shoemaker." The sign can still be seen, but through the influence of the Emperor Tolstoi has consented to have the word "Count" painted out.

Chaldren used to be taught that yawning was a breach of good behavior; but now, if certain medical testimony may be credited, it is incumbent upon parents to see that the youthful members of their flock not only yawn when nature so disposes them, but even practice what may be called the art of yawning. According to the results of late investigations, yawning is the most natural form of respiratory exercise, bringing into action all the respiratory muscles of the chest and neck.

Both Emile Zola and Henri Becque have been defeated in their efforts to become members of the Academy. It is easily seen why the "Immortals" will have none of M. Emile Zola. Old spite and the contempt so long manifested toward the academical institution can explain that. M. Becque is one of the most prominent dramatic authors of the last quarter of a century and has established himself in the most original manner as the author of the "Corbeaux" and of the "Parisienne."

UTAH WOMEN IN POLITICS

The Balance of Power Held by the Fair Sex in the New State.

I remember a Harvard professor who used to interrupt his lectures to us on French literature to rail at woman's suffrage (it was a pet theme of his), To make his point he invariably asked us to imagine to what pass equal suffrage might bring society, as, for instance, a wife running against her husband for the same office. We always used to laugh heartily at this, as though we had not heard it a thousand times before, but at the same time we appreciated the extravagant humor of the thing, and considered it a pretty good satire, even if it was far-fetched. What a joke if it should happen some day, sometime in the far-distant, undefinable future of the next century, when we should all be old men!

MRS. LILLIE R. PARDEE
Salt Lake City, Secretary of State Senate 1896
Secretary Republican State Committee 1896
Thomas, photo

But already at this time of writing the very fancy of my extravagant French professor has been made fact—is indeed a fact so old that it has almost ceased to be news. It happened many months ago in Utah, when Mrs. Cannon, the "plural" wife of Angus M. Cannon, was nominated as Democratic State Senator from a certain district. The Republicans nominated her husband, and not only did Mrs. Cannon run against her better-

MRS. MARTHA HUGHES CANNON
State Senator-elect Utah Legislature 1897.
Marceau, photo

half, but she actually beat him out in the electoral race, and secured the office.

There can be no doubt that women are to play a most important part in the future of Utah politics. Even now the balance of political power is controlled by them. They are forty thousand strong, nearly every one of them voters. And in passing it will be well to reflect as to what will be the issue when these forty thousand votes are cast by a class, seventy per cent of whom are under the influence of the Mormon Church. But the women of Utah have not succeeded in making for themselves this position—unique, I believe, throughout the world—without a struggle. For thirty years, and with all sorts of discouragements—in the face of all manner of obstacles—they have been working out their own salvation and enfranchisement. Even when the battle was at last won in 1870 (when the Territorial legislature accorded females the right to vote), it had to be begun all over again, for Congress by the Edmunds-Tucker act, in 1882, annulled the Territorial law, and the women of Utah were disfranchised.

MRS. SARAH E. ANDERSON
Member Utah Legislature from Ogden, 1897
Thomas, photo

It is interesting to note that most of the women prominent in the suffrage movement of Utah are not old maids, but are married and the mothers of families. There are such women as Mrs. Emeline Wells, Mrs. Pardee, Mrs. McVickar, Mrs. Isaac Trumbo, and Mrs. Cannon. Indeed, I have yet to hear of an unmarried woman of Utah who has come to the front as a suffrage champion. Rather curious this, and a good answer to certain unfeeling males who declare that the strong-minded women, and those anxious for political privilege, are the old maids—those who are debarred from the delights of motherlove and home.

R. T.

MRS. EMILY S. RICHARDS
Salt Lake City, Chairman Democratic Woman's State Committee
Stevens, photo, Chicago

---

M. Hanotaux, the French Foreign Minister, less than a dozen years ago was lecturing on history at a salary of £6 a month to a small class of four or five in the Sorbonne, Paris. The task over, he generally took his way to the office of the "Republique Francaise," Gambetta's paper, which printed some of his literary and historical contributions. Here it was he met one evening Spuller and Jules Ferry, who gave him a helping hand, for he had already begun to climb the official ladder, being employed in the department of archives at the Foreign Office. The rapidity of his promotion was marvellous. Before the end of 1885 he had been appointed Counsellor to the Embassy at Constantinople and the next year he secured a seat in the Chamber, and at this moment his position is unique.

MRS. EMELINE B. WELLS
Salt Lake City, President Woman's Republican League, Utah; Republican Nominee for State Senate 1895; Republican Nominee for Legislature 1897.
Savage, photo

---

Alexander Salvini came to America in 1881 with Rossi, the great Italian actor, his father's friend and rival. His object was to become an engineer under the tutleage of a railroad official in Baltimore, to whom he had letters. These he never presented, but traveled over the country with Rossi, studying the great actor's methods until Rossi became so jealous that he advised his manager to dispense with the assistance of Salvini. The young Italian went to H. M. Palmer in 1882 and was asked to recite something. However, he did not speak English enough to satisfy the manager, and was so informed. Not disheartened, he rushed home and in two hours knew Hamlet's soliloquy perfectly. He had learned the words, knew what they meant and pronounced them correctly. but his intonation was so hopelessly Italian as to render him unintelligible. But Salvini was a mighty name, and he secured the engagement sought.

MRS. EURETHA LA BARTHE
Salt Lake City, Member Democratic State Committee
Gillingham, photo, Colorado Springs

---

Governor Black of New York is a self-made man and a remarkably frank one. When congratulated upon his election he remarked: "I have been elected Governor and shall do my best, but I presume that I shall not succeed very well. The trouble with me is I have never been at any one thing long enough to give it a good trial. I taught school once, but soon left that for newspaper work. Then I went into law, then to Congress, and now I leave Congress at the beginning of my second term to be Governor. Possibly I ought to abandon these last duties before I begin them." The fact is that Governor Black was a leader at the bar in Troy, and was elected by a greater majority than Grover Cleveland had in 1882.

---

Mr. Nikola Tesla, the electrical expert, recently suggested the possibility of employing electricity as a fertiling agent for the soil. The currents produced by perfected electrical oscillators, he says, are capable of causing the chemical combination of the nitrogen with the oxygen of the atmosphere. If this combination were carried on upon an industrial scale, which he thinks is possible, then the product could be used as a fertilizer, and in his opinion the benefits to humanity would be incalculable.

MRS. ISAAC TRUMBO
Salt Lake City
Bushnell, photo

A FAMILY RESEMBLANCE

BY MARCELLE HENREIN

SHE—So you didn't recognize me at first?

HE—How could I have known you at the first glance, Eddy? The last time I saw you, don't you know, you were only a child, and now, all at once, you are a young lady; you are taller, you are more graceful, your eyes are just as blue as ever, but you smile in a different way. You didn't use to smile like that, Eddy.

SHE—My sisters did.

HE—Your sisters, Eddy? What charming girls they were, so pretty, so fresh, so good-natured. Just to talk with them made one glad to be alive. Do you know you look like them, Eddy, yes, very much like them. The same eyes, the same little mouth, the same manner of walking and of carrying your sunshade and—yes—the same way of flirting. Only you are smaller than they.

SHE—Is it because I look like them that you have made up your mind to walk with me?

HE—Yes and no. That is to say, not altogether because you look like them—the sentiment is complicated. For me you are all three of them in a single person.

SHE—A trinity—is that it?

HE—Yes, a trinity, that's it. I love you all three. When I think of one I think of the other two at the same time.

SHE—You're a strange boy. You say things to me with a sincerity that's—exasperating.

HE—Exasperating! How can sincerity be exasperating? (A pause.)

SHE—Now see here, Jack, listen to me. I'm going to make you remember things—things that happened seven years ago, when I was a little girl. Not so little though but what I had my eyes open and thought about what I saw. Well, do you remember how you were at our house all the time, calling on my sisters? At that time I know you had a preference for Florence.

HE (very innocently)—For Florence? Now, Eddy, whatever made you think that?

SHE—One day, or rather one evening, after dinner, there was only me in the parlor—but you never bothered about me—you drew Florence over into the bay window, and oh! you kissed her, and you swore you adored her and all that, and you said: "Shall we be married some day, Florence?"

HE—Really, did I say that to Florence?

SHE—You said those very words, Jack, and Florence said, "I love you very much, Jack, oh, with all my heart, but you know very well that I am engaged to George Henley and that I can't marry you."

HE—Yes, she said that, and I remember how cut up I was over it.

SHE—You really and truly loved Florence, did you?

HE—Why, of course—didn't I ask her to marry me?

SHE—Yes, but that's not all, Jack. Two years later you began coming to the house again, and you were still calling on my sisters, but now it was Grace you were flirting with. Oh, how you did love Grace, and one morning—it was a morning this time—in the garden you two were walking together. I was right behind you—but you never minded me. You put your arm around Grace, you did, and I heard you say, "Grace dear, let me be your husband"—just like that. And Grace said: "Dearest Jack, you know how much I love you, but what you ask can never be. You know, of course, I am engaged to my cousin, William Hartford."

HE (gloomily)—Yes, yes, that's all true. I never had any luck.

SHE—And you loved Grace seriously when you proposed to her?

HE—Seriously? Of course I did, Eddy. I hoped to marry Grace, just as I had hoped to marry Florence.

SHE—I would never have believed it.

(Another pause.)

HE—You don't believe in anything then, Eddy? And your own heart—did you never know what it meant to have your own heart beat, oh, as though it were near to bursting? (Suddenly) And what if I should tell you that it is you alone that I love.

SHE—Which one of us are you speaking to now? Is it Florence in the bay window, or Grace in the garden? It can't be to me, who have no other attraction beyond resembling my older sisters.

HE—Now you are angry, Eddy. I believe you are really jealous of your sisters.

SHE—I jealous! That would be downright stupid.

HE—Well, you are angry.

SHE—That would be still more stupid. Oh, no, it makes no difference to me. Tenez! I've had a nice walk, you have spoken to me of my sisters only. I know very well that you loved them once, and they certainly did seem to be in love with you. And you never thought about me at all in those days. But let me tell you that to-day my sisters and I are—well, it's no longer the same thing. They are older than I, my sisters, and then besides they are married, they don't count. Tenez (tears come suddenly to her eyes) vous etes un mechant.

HE—Eddy, my dear little Eddy! For heaven's sake don't cry!

SHE—Ah, yes, much difference it makes to you.

HE—But I won't have you cry. Listen, I love you. Oh, so truly, so sincerely! (In a low voice, after looking about him to see that they are unobserved) Oh, dearest Eddy, how happy it would make me if you would consent to be my wife.

SHE—Oh, Jack, I do love you, you must have felt it But our marriage is impossible, for, you know, I am engaged to my cousin, Harry Drysdale.

---

Queen Victoria is in miserable health, both physically and mentally. Her guests at Windsor see very little of her, being led up after dinner in groups of four to where she is seated and exchanging a few brief remarks on conventional subjects. It is thought she cannot last another year.

A HOSPITAL ON A QUAGMIRE

The Condition of the City and County Hospital a Menace to Health.

San Francisco has long been conspicuous for the absence of civic pride. Nowhere in the United States, perhaps in the world, is there a city where this failing is so perceptible. It is evident in the condition of our streets, our public buildings, the management of our public offices and the conduct of our city affairs generally. All these things, however, touch upon the comfort and convenience of our citizens, but though grave and serious they pale before the greater importance of conditions which bear upon the health of the community.

Would an intelligent citizen believe it, were he told that not far from the center of the city there existed an hospital conducted by the city for its sick poor which is founded on a morass of sewage soaked soil? That at the very entrance to the institution there exists an open trench, at the bottom of which flows a brook of noisome, foul-smelling, health-destroying, germ-infected water? That on skirting this trench and entering a small gate at the side of the main entrance one has to foot it carefully to avoid falling into a similar trench within the gates? That resting upon the edge of this open cesspool is a pavilion full of sick and suffering humanity? That, near the main buildings, there are still two more such trenches and finally that skirting the buildings at their very foundations are open ditches exposing leaking and foul-smelling drains?

An example of what the late Board of Supervisors considered good plumbing.

I do not hesitate to say that no sane man could believe in the existence of such conditions without some actual evidence. Glance at the accompanying photographs taken on Tuesday last and such doubt must give way and a sense of horrified and surprised belief must take its place.

Yes, the City and County Hospital is in a condition which for danger to life approaches that of the Black Hole of Calcutta.

This state of affairs has existed for several weeks now. It is the evidence of work begun but left unfinished "for want of funds." Such is the reason given by the Hospital Committee of the late Board of Supervisors, which had for its Chairman one King, who cannot be better described than by the words "Professional Politician." At no time has this city had so highly honorable, so unselfish, so learned and so untrammeled a Board of Health, but its members have been handicapped by a parsimonious and grasping Board of Supervisors, who have made it impossible for them to use their energies to their full value. Let it be said of this Board of Health that in spite of opposition it has accomplished much, and let us hope that, under the new Board of Supervisors, with Dr. Washington Dodge as Chairman of the Hospital Committee, and an intelligent, educated and vigorous body of men to back his suggestions, there will be an immediate and marked improvement in the unsanitary conditions surrounding us on all sides.

I am glad to be able to write that improvement has already begun at the City and County Hospital. The work which for weeks has been neglected has again been taken up, and this morning, on entering the hospital to make my rounds, I noticed a large force of two men lazily shoveling in one of the trenches, and on leaving an hour later this force had been added to by a third. Can we hope that there will be an hourly addition until the number will be one hundred and their orders be to pull down and burn this eye sore, pavilion by pavilion, replacing them by modern and hygienic hospital buildings?

I cannot leave the subject of the Hospital without calling attention to the condition of the interior of this institution. It may be summed up as antiquated, dirty, poorly ventilated, poorly heated, poorly lighted, poorly equipped and poorly managed, while the patients are poorly fed and poorly clothed.

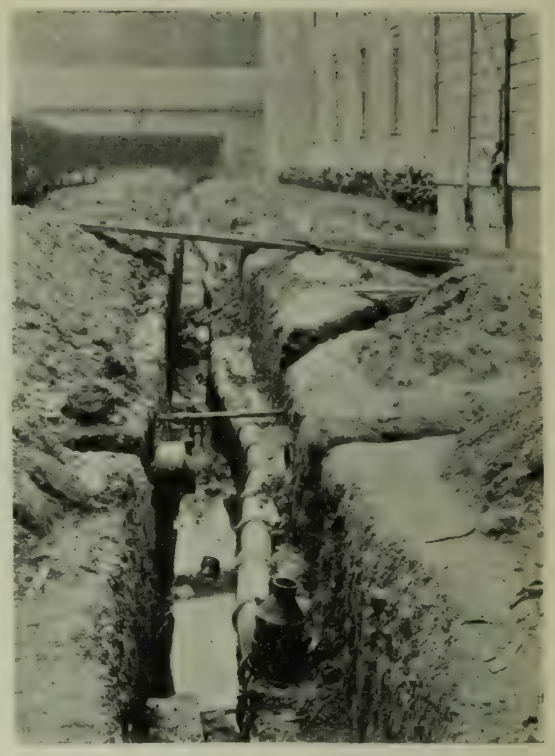
One example can be taken as fair evidence in support of what I have said. Let us take a bed—a few iron slats thrown together, upon which rests a sack of ticking filled with straw, a pillow of the same nature, coarse sheets, the worse for wear and, to finish the picture, a dowdy multi-colored spread. Such are the conveniences of our City and County Hospital.

Were it not for the willing work and co-operation of the Board of Health, the attending physicians and surgeons, the internes and the nursing staff, handicapped though they are by parsimonious politicians, God knows what would become of the sick poor of San Francisco, for let it be well understood that outside of this hospital there is not a single charity hospital in this city or county.

GEORGE FRANKLIN SHIELS, M. D., F. R. C., S. E., etc., Professor of Surgery, Post Graduate Medical Department, University of California.

A brook of sewage just within the gate

The trench just outside the entrance



Representing the hygienic conditions at the base of the Pavilion

Li Hung Chang's recent deprivations and degradations are said to be due to the Emperor's jealousy of the Empress Dowager, and the fact that Li Hung Chang should have called upon her first was not to be endured. He has become restive, and wants to be more than a figurehead. The punishment is, after all, merely nominal. A year ago Li lost his "yellow jacket," but he continued to wear it just the same. The vital question is one of influence and power, and it is being fought out on other lines than these.

Cremation as a method of disposing of dead bodies increases in popularity with succeeding years. At first the prejudice against it was almost universal and it was only after indorsements had been procured from ministers, saying that there was nothing unscriptural in disposing of the dead by means of fire that the masses began to contemplate it. Incineration is very much less expensive than ordinary burial. In the first place the charge for reducing the body to ashes is but thirty-five dollars. The maximum cost of incineration, including the purchase of an urn, the lease of a niche to receive the urn, the door of the niche, and all expenses, need not exceed one hundred and twenty-five dollars.

Curious are the methods employed by the secret police service. Every government in Europe finds it necessary to employ special agents in addition to the regular detective service. They are usually paid by the Prime Minister of the country ,who has a regular fund for this purpose. In England the more important of these agents report directly to the heads of the division of the Home Department in London. Although English people are, as a rule, regarded as inferior to the Russian, German or Latin races in the peculiar qualities considered indispensable to the "mouchard," yet they succeed in performing their work with a minimum of publicity, whereas at St. Petersburg, Germany and Paris unsavory scandals frequently occur. Lord Cowley, British Ambassador to Paris, while discussing the secret police service with its chief, M. Pietri, and bantering him about the ubiquity of his agents, said there was one place they could never penetrate, namely, his embassy, as Lady Cowley was renowned for her exclusiveness. Pietri smiled and said: "The Countess gave a dinner last night, followed by a small reception." "Yes. But what do you mean?" said the Ambassador. "It was a very small affair. No one was present with whom we are not on terms of intimacy." "Tell me, my lord," said Pietri, "did you not say thus and so?" Lord Cowley was compelled to admit he did. But not even the closest examination of Lady Cowley's visiting list enabled him ever to discover the spy.

Li Hung Chang is still the most powerful personage in the Celestial Empire, and although he lost prestige over the defeat of China, still when Li went to Peking for audience ere starting on his Japanese mission, such was magic of his prestige that an army was assembled round the palace to prevent this one man from seizing the throne. Efforts were made to assassinate him, but certain Princes who learned about it interfered. The Emperor has heard that while traveling abroad it was a case of "Ego et mon Roi," and like Henry VIII and Wolsely he has resented it.

Doctor Thomas Conaty, the successor of Bishop Keane as Rector of the Catholic University of Washington, is only forty years old. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, came to America in his earliest youth, and was educated by the Jesuits at Troy Seminary. In church politics he is conservative, and is widely known as a temperance lecturer. He is said to possess a pleasing and magnetic personality.

Maud Hines as Florence

George Osbourne as Injun Joe

May Buckley as Chispa

John Armstrong as Doc Jones

Hugo Toland as Zeke Stevens

THE ALCAZAR COMPANY IN "CHISPA"

Photo by Thors

BEHIND THE SCENES

A Celestial Green-Room, Where the Actors Dress and Make Up.

The Chinese New Year is approaching and all good and true Celestials in San Francisco are preparing to celebrate its advent with the same fervor if not with the same magnificence as their brethren in the Flowery Kingdom. Along the edge of the crowded sidewalks and in the gutters of the streets can be constantly seen of late, the remnants of some family's sacred rites, charred bits of punk, strips of red paper and the ashes of fires, while after nightfall it is no unusual occurrence to surprise the Mongol in the very midst of the performance of his incantations.

Inside the houses, from the second story windows, can be heard at every hour the squealing of fifes, the twanging of stringed instruments and the clashing of cymbols. At the theatre "special holiday attractions" in the form of an entirely new troupe of actors, and "specialty song and dance artists," with all the latest "gags," we presume, from Hongkong and Pekin will "play to crowded houses."

The scene in the Green Room of the Chinese Theatre at 5 o'clock is curious indeed. The actors are all boys, none of them over nineteen and most of them under seventeen. It is here they attire themselves. They are attired in the gorgeous costumes demanded by the play, while those who represent the legendary gods and demigods paint their faces horribly in addition.

A new play is to be put on about the first of February, which promises to be quite an affair, as the costumes are to be imported direct from China and are to surpass anything of the kind previously seen. We are told that they are fairly stiff with gold thread and silver embroidery.

It is not generally known, I believe, that the troupe of the Jackson-street Theatre tour the State regularly, showing in the theatres of the various "Chinatowns" of the California cities.

Wire glass is said to be an effective barrier against fire. It consists simply of a mesh-work of wire embedded in a glass plate. Even when licked by the flames and raised to a red heat it does not fall to pieces and it also resists the shattering effects of cold water poured over it while it is yet glowing.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

John Morley, the English statesman, is a strange creature with a lean, dried-up figure, a bleak face, and an aridly logical mind, no temperament discernible in him anywhere. The practice of politics seems to have blunted his mind and to have settled him finally in the comfortable superstition that what is obvious is true, and the whole truth. Thus saith the "Saturday Review."

President Roosevelt thus throws some light on the savage abuse heaped upon his views on the civil service question by one of the New York dailies: "Just before Thanksgiving a representative of the paper in question came to me and said he was interviewing prominent men as to what they were thankful for. I told him I was thankful I did not read his paper."

M. Meline's protective tariff has almost ruined the toymakers of Paris. One of them is quoted as saying that all of the 300 manufacturers in the city believe high duties are damaging their trade, and that 20,000 workmen rue the day this system was adopted. A Parisian toy exporter, when questioned on the subject, said: "The French have lost their trade in cheap dolls, and only retain that in the most expensive sorts."

The eccentric Earl of Dysart, who lived the life of a recluse in a gloomy house in Norfolk street, off the Strand, would not have a woman near him. So much did he hate the sex that he constructed an apparatus in the wall of his shabby apartment, through which his meals might be passed without giving any view of the interior. His estate, after his death, was found to be worth close on two millions sterling.

No one knows where the Sultan will spend any portion of the day or evening. Every movement he makes is kept a profound secret. He has more than fifty bedrooms, and no one can tell in wnich he means to sleep. These apartments are separated from the rest of the building by iron doors, and are furnished with locks of extraordinary and ingenious construction. It is even said that in the walls and ceilings of these rooms there are secret hiding-places. Two noble St. Bernard dogs lie outside the door of the room in which Abdul may be sleeping.

The Chinese Government has made great strides since the recent war with Japan. The newly appointed Minister to the United States, Wu Ting Fang, is a Cantonese by birth, about fifty years of age, of fine appearance, and speaks English fluently. He has resided in England, studied law and been admitted to practice before the English court in Hongkong. He is a patriotic, progressive man, a pupil of Li Hung Chang, and his appointment abroad will be of great service to his country. The Ministers to Germany and England are also well educated and progressive men.

Lord Aberdeen, the Governor-General of Canada, now bears, in addition to his other titles, the name of "Clear Sky." He has been made a chief of the Seneca tribe of the Six Nations. His initiation took place at the recent fair of these Indians on their reservation. On either side of the Governor-General in the council house were chiefs of the Mohawks, Senecas, Cayugas, Oneidas, Tuscaroras and Delawares. The new civilization was everywhere apparent. There was a band, composed of Indians, who played the national anthem. A bicycle was seen at an Indian house. The red man of Cooper is a thing of the past.

THE WOOING OF THE ROSE

A white rose bloomed in a garden close,
On a tristful autumn day;
Sad was the heart of the fair white rose,
As the summer slipped away.

She had been wooed by the singing bird,
The bee, and the butterfly;
But never a chord of her heart was stirred,
Till she heard the west wind sigh.

She leaned on the trellis, fair and sweet,
With the laughing leaves above,
As he glided in with his noiseless feet
And whispered his tales of love.

A rollicking, restless rover he—
The waif of the salt-sea brine,
And only a white, white rose was she,
The last of her royal line.

He kissed the lips of the Rose in bloom,
And alas, a-lack a-day!
She was despoiled of her rare perfume,
For the wind will have its way.

—LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE.

A CORNER OF THE KENNEL YARD

MR. HOBART AS MASTER OF THE SAN MATEO HOUNDS

A "MEET" WITH THE SAN MATEO HOUNDS

SCENES AT THE SAN MATEO HUNT CLUB

See page 13

INTERIOR OF THE "FACTORY

CUTTING UP CHICKEN: IT IS CHICKEN, NOT SEA-GULL

THE MAKING OF TAMALES

WHERE TAMALES ARE MADE

It so chanced that I came upon the "Tamale place" entirely unawares while loafing about "Little Mexico" and "Little China" in that strange unknown country beyond the Barbary Coast. I came, I saw, I made a discovery, and can now make deposition under oath and over my hand and seal that the chicken in a tamale, is chicken and not sea gull, so that for at least one person, the time-worn, time-honored joke of the local humorous editor has lost its savor. The "Tamale place" is up a bit of narrow lane behind the county jail, a little brick house, shouldered by a huge gray plastered building that is full of gay colored Spanish "filles de Joie" who hang out the windows and make remarks as you go past.

A man by the name of H. Palmer owns and runs the place, and I think is the only American within a radius of four blocks. Twelve men, Spaniards, Greeks and negroes—to say nothing of seven setter puppies—are working under him and they rest not from morn to eve, making the 800 tamales the factory's daily output.

Here you may see the tamale in its details, and you may follow the process from the preparation of the husks with "massa" to the finished article, hot and steaming neatly rolled and tied and stowed in a basket ready for the peddler. In one corner are huge barrels of Spanish olives, which you are told come direct from Spain; in another place are pans three feet in diameter, full of red hot chili, ground to a sort of pulp by sausage machines, and in a sort of store house in the back of the shop are corn husks by the ton, bales upon bales of them, carefully selected, cut to their proper length and packed there ready for use; standing about on the floor are enormous tins of corn (it looks as though it had been soaked) out of which the corn meal is ground. I find that the proper name for this corn meal—the thin coating between the leaves of the tamale is "massa," and is a mixture of corn meal and of—heaven save the mark—melted lard. A few figures now, just to give one an idea of the amount of tamales consumed last year. Fourteen tons of corn leaves were used in the manufacture of tamales in this city, 10,000 pounds of chili peppers, 67,000 pounds of corn and 1200 dozen chickens, while rough estimate places the number of tamales consumed weekly by San Francisco at 25,500, or about one to every eleven inhabitants.

But there is one feature of the tamale industry that will forever be shrouded in mystery. Why is it that it remains a nocturnal article, never making an appearance until after 11 and 12 o'clock at night, eaten oftenest in the small hours of early dawn?

There seems to be no good and sufficient answer to the question.

A VIEW OF "LITTLE MEXICO"

A VISTA IN THE QUARTER

THE HOME OF THE TAMALE-MAKER TELEGRAPH HILL

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Confidential Communications of a Miss in Society.

There has been more of the sparkle and glitter of life this week, dearest Diary, and the dreary dullness of the holidays is somewhat dissipated. But at best, this Winter is like a gray day, and one welcomes with avidity even the stray glimmers of sunlight. On Thursday evening I went to the Whittier dinner, a very swell affair, where we all discussed the prospective weddings. They are now things of the moment, and both Mattie and Lizzie Carroll are deep in the mysteries of trousseaux. I shall be really sorry when Mattie marries, as she will live in New York. She says, however, that she will in all probability spend much time in Californina. I wonder who will be Lizzie Carroll's bridesmaids? They say Gertie Carroll, Evelyn Murphy, Romie Wallace, Beatrice Tobin, and possibly Birdie Fair. Nothing, however, is absolutely certain, save the date of the wedding, which has been set for February 27th, I am told.

What do you think of the new engagements? There are two recently announced. The first is that of Miss Teenie Goodall, only daughter of Captain Charles Goodall, of Goodall, Perkins & Co. She is a tall, handsome, Juno-like girl, very fair, and quite of the Saxon type. Mr. Kiel is Vice-President of Goldberg, Bowen & Co., and a very clever and promising business man. The wedding is to be celebrated in the near future. A second engagement is that of Mabel Estee and Mr. Leonard Everett. Mabel is a bright, jolly girl and very popular. She is the daughter of Mr. Morris Estee. Mr. Everett is a splendid fellow, is in insurance, and papa says he is a real good business man. I like him immensely; he dances well, and is so nice looking. He and Mabel make a handsome couple. He is fair; she, quite a brunette.

On Friday I went to the german and had a perfectly glorious time, contrary to my expectations. There were only fifty couples on the floor, but that rather added to our enjoyment. It did not look so swell as usual, for the hall viewed from the end looked very empty. I wonder what is the matter with the matrons this year, so few of them go anywhere. I remember when Leila went out mamma said it was difficult to find a seat, yet last Friday there were only twenty of the chaperone guard present. It is a shame, as they added much to the spectacular effect; for as mamma says, it is the dowagers who really dress handsomely, the girls, as a rule, do not. This year the lack of new gowns has been most obvious. Some of the maidens look positively bedraggled. You know how stringy and horrible chiffon becomes after you have worn it a few times. Mae Moody was easily the most handsomely gowned girl in the room. She wore a costume of pompadour silk, very stunningly made, with a stiff ruff arranged around the shoulders, that added to its effectiveness. Caro Crockett looked sweet in pale blue chiffon over pale blue silk. Helen Wagner wore her lovely bride's gown of pink dotted crepon, the waist all tucked and edged with lace, the skirt seamed with applique bow knots of lace. Of the debutantees I must say that Alice Hoffman was the most popular. She was called out every time. I had a deal of fun, as I knew all the men, but some of the buds met with a "cold frost," as Arthur terms it. Certain of last year's girls had ever so much more fun, and the belles of two season's had a walk-over. Daisy Van Ness looked very pretty in pink satin. I feel so sorry for the Van Ness family. You know they went to their ranch near Calistoga, and were comfortably settled there, when a defective flue put an end to all their plans. They lost everything, all their clothtes and bedding. In fact, with the exception of some of the sitting and dining-room furniture, nothing was saved. Of the other girls who looked especially well, I should tell you of Jessie Glascock in a yellow brocade, and Rose Hooper in pink satin covered with chiffon. The music was not good. I thought it was altogether too fast. I don't know what has got into Huber lately, but he always plays too quickly to suit me. The Deux Temps girls in Oakland are making a similar complaint. I wish some one would tell him.

The chief topic of conversation in the dressing-room was the disappearance of Lieutenant Carson's mustache. Why has he shaved it off? We girls are simply furious about it, as it was eminently becoming.

On Saturday I went to the football game with a lot of the 'Varsity Club fellows, and was horribly disappointed that we were so badly beaten. I am always sorry when the military chaps win because, strange to say, I am not fascinated by the glitter of gold braid. Leila used to be what I call an "Army and Navy" girl, and she lived to regret it. You see they are rather a fickle set and apt to rush you; then, when they are ordered off, you are left to mourn. There is a rivalry between the army fellows and the civilians, and if you are constantly surrounded by the one, the others will have none of you, and I prefer brooks to butterflies.

Carrie went to Mrs. L. L. Baker's dinner on Friday night. I was asked, but mamma said if I went there I could not go to the Saturday Fortnightly, so I refused. Carrie said it was an awfully jolly affair. Mrs. Baker gave it in honor of her niece, Florence Stone. Mrs. Baker is really giving Florence a lovely time. I wish Aunt Sybil would follow in her wake, but she is so dreadfulyl stingy, the old horror!

On Saturday Arthur, Leila and I went to the Fortnightly, and simply made things hum. There were dozens of pretty girls, and we all had to be as bewitching as possible. You see we have not only to cross swords with the popular older girls, like Laura Bates and last year debutantes, but there are several of next season's debutantes who make quite formidable rivals. Let me see, who were the prettiest of the maidens—I fancy there were about a dozen in all. Miss Mollie Hind, who led with Mr. Douglas McBride, looked exceedingly well; May Weldon, a dark girl of medium height, who is quite handsome, wore a pretty white frock, brightened with red ribbons. Gertie Bates wore a simple little blue organdie frock. Gertrude Van Wyck looked charming in blue and white chiffon. Edith Stubbs was in pale pink moire poplin—a lovely gown and exceedingly becoming—the Stubbs girls always dress well. Marie Oge wore white silk, trimmed with red. Lucy Jackson, a tall blonde, looked stunning in pale blue flowered silk; she and Bernie Drown were the belles, I think. They are quite a contrast—one so dark, the other such a perfect blonde. Jeannette Black wore flowered organdie with rose-colored ribbons. Charlotte Field, Anna Lawlor and Mollie Hind were the most popular of the girls.

We were all dreadfully worried about Alice Younger last week. She was so dreadfully ill with typhoid fever. However, I am assured now that she is out of danger. She contracted the fever in New York, through drinking the water which the city furnishes, I believe. Moral: Don't drink water.

The next affair of great moment to which we are all looking forward is the big Presidio dance on the 19th. I was rather surprised at the form of the invitation, which reads "The officers of the Presidio request, etc." How about the ladies? I fancy there is some breach of etiquette here. Surely the "ladies" should appear on the card of invitation, and the army is such a stickler for propriety. I should never have noticed the deficiency, but papa, who was at one time in the army, drew mamma's attention to the lapse. However, it is to be one of the events of the season. Cards of admission are to be presented at the door, and all that. I am going to have a new gown—a stunner—orange and white; my first colored gown.

I went over to Oakland to the "Wednesday Night." It was quite the prettiest party you could imagine, and all we city girls danced in the first set. There were quite a number of us—Daisy Van Ness, who wore a white satin gown; Fannie Baldwin in yellow; Kate Salisbury in pink satin, and Helen Wagner in pink. The hall was exquisitely decorated in pink, green and white, and the scheme of decoration was continued in the tarleton used in the "Maypole Figure." Think of it—nine hundred yards were bound round the pole and made streamers. The figure was so effective, and they turned different colored calcium light effects on. Mrs. Tom Magee, in a stunning gown of pink and green, led, assisted by her husband. The figures outsideof the "Maypole" were of the usual marching order.

Mrs. Myra Prather looked better than I have ever seen her. She was stunningly gowned. Mrs. Miller gave her a lovely "La France" pink satin for a Christmas gift, and one of her future sisters-in-law gave her some gorgeous rose point applique lace, with which it was trimmed. Idabelle Palmer wore bright pink taffeta covered in tulle. Belle Mhoon was sweetly gowned in a fluffy white organdie over pink, delightfully cloudlike in effect. Florence Selby wore white satin, and Jessie Glascock, pink satin broche with orange flowers and trimmed with accordion pleated chiffon. Miss Wall wore yellow silk covered in tulle. Some of the matrons were stunningly gowned; among them Mrs. Orestes Pierce, Mrs. Henshaw, Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Magee.

I think these are all my doings this week, dear Diary. I am going to Mrs. Fred Coles' tea on Saturday, and the "Deux Temps Saturday Fortnightly" and several informal teas. Till then, yours, MISS CRICKET.

MISS TEENIE GOODALL
WHOSE ENGAGEMENT TO HUGO KEIL HAS JUST BEEN ANNOUNCED
Taber, photo

The wedding of Miss Mary Crittenden Scott and Mr. Neville H. Castle is to be quietly celebrated at the home of the bride's family on the evening of February 4th. Miss Scott is the oldest daughter of the late H. H. Scott and a niece of Mrs. Monroe Salisbury. She is a vivacious and decidedly pretty girl. Mr. Castle is a son of the late Mr. Michael Castle and is practicing law in San Jose. The ceremony will be an exceedingly quiet one owing to the recent death of Mr. Michael Castle. I believe that only the immediate relatives have been invited.

Visiting days continue to be announced. Mrs. Hager and her daughter are to be "at home" on the second and fourth Wednesdays; Mrs. Southard Hoffmann, Miss Hoffmann and Miss Alice Hoffmann are at home the Wednesdays in January, and Mrs. Maynard and Miss May Belle Gwin.

The practice of giving dinner dances that is so fashionable in New York has never met with any degree of success here. Few hostesses care to take the trouble to engineer so elaborate a festivity, but it is nevertheless the most enjoyable form of entertainment. Last Saturday evening Miss Agnes Brandenstein invited about forty young people to a dinner dance. The guests were seated at seven round tables, each one differently decorated. Afterwards the young people danced till the wee sma' hours. A smart little dinner was given by Mrs. Abe Mertief on Thursday evening last in honor of Miss Erhmann of Mission San Jose and Mr. Frank.

A very elaborate affair was the girls' luncheon given on Thursday last by Mrs. Daniel Friesleben in honor of her daughter, Miss Ruth Friesleben, one of the season's debutantes. Miss Henrietta Rothchild gave a girls' tea on Wednesday afternoon. The house was prettily decorated and quite a large number of maidens called during the afternoon.

There is quite a formidable catalogue of weddings for the latter part this month. The first is that of Miss Mattie Ehrmann and Mr. Albert Frank, which will be celebrated at the San Franeisco Verein. Miss Agnes Brandenstein is to be maid of honor and the bridesmaids are Miss Olga Sutro, Miss Grace Hecht, Miss Martha Triest and Miss Ida Son. Then Miss Martha Shainwald and Mr. Leo Myers are to be married at the Colonial Hotel on January 27th at 9 o'clock in the evening. Only the relatives have been bidden to the ceremony, but a large reception is to follow in the parlors of the hotel. Very elaborate indeed is to be the wedding of Dr. J. Graham Sharp and Miss Martha Eppinger, which is to take place at the bride's home on the evening of January 27th.

Of the weddings of the week, quite the prettiest was that of Miss Clemence Reiss and Mr. Adolph Nordman, who were married at the Concordia Club on the evening of January 12th. The ceremony was performed in the ballroom, which was charmingly decorated with gauze and ferns. The bride wore a gown of white satin covered in tulle, caught up with sprays of orange blossoms. Miss Flora Reiss, the maid of honor, wore an effective gown of white tulle over pink taffeta. The bridesmaids, Miss Helen Blum, Miss Bessie Nordman, Miss Wanda Galland, Miss Julie Reiss and Miss Nannette Reiss, were daintily gowned in white tulle over white taffeta and carried bouquets of white hyacinths and pink roses. After the ceremony a swell supper was served, after which dancing was kept up until a late hour. Mr. and Mrs. Nordman went south for their honeymoon, and on their return will occupy their new home which Mr. Reiss purchased and furnished for his daughter, on the corner of Octavia and O'Farrel streets.

Quite an interesting ceremony will be the wedding of Miss Bertha J. Hart and Mr. I. W. Cohen, which will be celebrated on Sunday next. Only the families of the contracting parties will be present at the ceremony.

MRS. ADOLPH NORDMAN
NEE CLEMENCE REISS
Taber, photo

Mrs. F. M. Smith gave a jolly cotillion last Friday evening in honor of Miss Marion Smith and the members of the Oak Leaf Club. The house looked exceedingly pretty in its decorations of palms and ferns, and the young people had a splendid time. The german was led by Miss Ruth Dunham and Mr. Stanley Moore.

A young people's dinner was given by Mrs. Horatio Livermore at Rockridge Park last week in honor of Miss Mattie Livermore. Miss Livermore is one of the most attractive of the debutantes and is a general favorite. A smart little dinner was given on Tuesday evening by Mrs. Wetherbee of Fruitvale in honor of the Rev. Cecil Haskett Smith of England.

Two interesting card parties were given in Oakland last week; the first by Mrs. Cornwall to the Alpha Whist Club—a decidedly smart affair; the other by Mrs. T. C. Coogan in honor of the "Neighborhood Whist Club." During the evening a series of "Living Pictures" under the management of Mr. Oliver were given. Among those invited were Mr. and Mrs. Cope, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Letts Oliver and Mr. Wallace Everson.

Miss Maud Wilkinson gave a large tea on Tuesday afternoon for Miss Ruth Loring, who has recently returned from a year's visit to Japan. Miss Loring looked remarkably well and gave an interesting account of her trip to the "land of the chrysanthemum." The Wilkinson home was prettily decorated and a number of men as well as maids bade Miss Loring welcome.

Among the coming events is a big tea to be given on Saturday afternoon by Mrs. John W. Phillips (formerly Mrs. Henry Martin) and Mrs. Irving C. Lewis. Over a thousand invitations have been issued.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

Maybe you've forgotten how good tea can be.

Get Schilling's Best of your grocer and bring back the good old times.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

THE THEATRES

"Chispa" at the Alcazar and the Rest Nowhere.

Doubtless there are people aplenty who can put Sevres and earthenware on the same table and never feel a pang, for have you not seen women combine imitation Astrakhan and real lace in the same costume, and others visit Kearny street madly attired in a silk skirt and a tailor-made coat? Yea, verily, this and worse, or at least as bad.

Most of us, however, have some trifling sense of congruity and are saved from such clear demonstrations of our incomplete and semi-barbarous condition. Not so that unhappy animal called a theatrical manager, incited by necessity and directed by a nebulous intention to please that hydra-headed monster the public. He picks up the wise and the unwise, the blatant ass, the discriminating artist and the mincing ninny until he has a motley crowd, as incongruous as a cross between an old junk-shop and a connoisseur's collection of articles de vertu.

This is about the aspect of the Alcazar's company at present. It reminds me of my cook's quilt—made, so she says, of scraps given her by the "leddys I've lived wid." In the center of this creation is a circular piece of beautiful old golden velvet, (representing a setting sun I'm told) fine silky, exquisite alike to touch and eye it lies there—with, I fancy, a touch of aloofness,—surrounded by cheap silk, vulgar plush and dirty shoddy, its only worthy companions being two or three honest pieces of blue jeans and two tiny scraps of dimity. The two pieces of dimity behaved very nicely in "Chispa." Maud Hines, as usual, had a walking lady part, and stood about looking like a crisp white bud; while the little Buckley struggled to be a child of nature. Her work was quite good in some spots, and very very bad in others, but throughout it had one good point—she was never vulgar. Many persons would have made Chispa "tough," with her "gee!" and "oh, say!" and doing so, would have done wrong, for the little cowboy was merely untutored and rough.

Hugo Toland was very good, though he could improve on the tieing up of the villain—that villainous villain—while Foster and Armstrong were both excellent in their blue jean roles. Osbourne's Injun Joe is an inimitable creation; every gesture and movement is exactly right, from the carriage of his feet and his peculiar trot (like an Indian on a trail) to the look he threw behind him as he left the stage in the last act, with that expressive "huh!" What a volume of feeling he put into the little ejaculation, how surcharged it was with suppressed fierceness. It is well that the company can boast of this one really good actor, for the rest of them (bar two or three) are so deliriously, painfully bad, that the spectator blushes and looks the other way, as one does when a man cries—or eats with his knife.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

DRAMATIC NOTES

Mr. Hugo Herold, who has returned from London recently, will give a song recital at Golden Gate hall January 29th.

The Heine Trio announce three recitals at Golden Gate hall—the first on the afternoon of Saturday, January 23. Herbert E. Medley will assist.

"Adrienne Lecouvreure" will be given but one representation during Modjeska's engagement at the Baldwin theater, and that on the Friday night of the second week.

An event of social and distinctly artistic import was the musicale given by pupils of Mrs. Carmichael Carr at the rooms of the Sorosis Club last Monday afternoon. Among the participants were Miss Wade, Miss Hush, Mrs. Thomas, Miss Anderson, Miss Lilienthal, Robert Bien, Miss Moulton and Miss Edith Bien.

Among the many new features offered by Charles H. Yale's "Forever Devil's Auction," which is to appear at the Columbia theater next week, is a new absurdity entitled "The Bashful Maidens," a pantomime produced under the sobriquet of "Weary Willie." Another of this season's "hits" is a burlesque on "The Bicycle Craze."

The visit of Nordica has really created a feeling of deep interest in San Francisco. She is the first great vocal artist we have had here in years, and there is something verging on excitement among the musicians thereat. The company that appears with her contains one name familiar to us, that of Madame Scalchi, the famous contralto, who was here before with Adelina Patti. Altogether, the Baldwin is sure of big audiences this forthcoming week, at least.

Among the new acts at the Orpheum next week is that of the celebrated Frantz family. The three men and two women who comprise the team appear in evening dress and perform the most difficult acrobatic feats. Binns and Binns, "The Two Noblemen" in a musical turn, Wilson and Warring, as the tramp and dancing girl, and the Aerial Ballet are other features. Kiralfy's Grand Opera Ballet will be seen in new marches and new dances, including a sailor dance that is said to be very pretty. The Hungarian Orchestra will appear in a change of programme nightly.

Notwithstanding the success of "Chispa" at the Alcazar, it will give place on Monday evening next to the war play, "A Fair Rebel," by Harry Mawson, which was seen in this city some years ago. It will be lavishly mounted and there will be a number of realistic effects, including the laying of the field telegraph line by a corps of linemen, and the receiving and sending of dispatches. One hundred men of Company L, First Regiment, National Guard of California, will take part in the play, and the first three nights of the week will be set aside as benefit nights for "the boys in blue," who each evening will mount a guard of honor in the lobby of the theatre.

The Orpheum Menu.

Abachi and Masard open the bill at the Orpheum this week with a remarkably clever acrobatic act, and are followed by the Two Bostons, who continue the regime of the trained animal with a collection of educated canines, who give a capital performance. Fred Hallen and Mollie Fuller put a life into their work that is noticeably absent from that of most sketch artists. There are "eccentriques" and "comiques" ad libitum, but Charles Wayne is a premier among them all, and his funny acts and funnier sayings cause a great amount of amusement.

There is a soul in the music of Hungary that cannot be found in that of any other country, and why the Hungarian Orchestra does not confine itself altogether to it, is a mystery. But what it does play, it does excellently well. Lieutenant Noble is novel in his ventriloquial act, and since he is so he differs from his predecessors, and his act merits the applause it receives. The performance concludes with the Kiralfy dances and the flying ballet, which is increasing in charm and popularity.

San Francisco Symphony Society.

It is announced that at last a permanent society for the promotion of good music has been formed in this city by the organization of a symphony orchestra, under the management of W. T. Greenbaum. Mr. Gustav Hinrichs has been chosen conductor and will begin a series of symphony concerts at the Columbia Theater on alternate Thursday afternoons, beginning February 4. The orchestra will consist of fifty-five excellent musicians under the direction of Sigmund Biel, who will be concert master. At the first concert the soloist is to be Mrs. Kathrine Flemming Hinrichs, the leading contralto at the Academy season in Philadelphia last year.

It rests with the public to do its share by subscribing for seats and attending the concerts. The founders of the society should receive every encouragement in their undertaking, so that the orchestra can be maintained without loss to the guarantors, and become both a source of enjoyment and instruction.

MADAME NELLIE MELBA

THE BRILLIANT AUSTRALIAN SOPRANO WHO IS NOW SINGING AT THE METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE, NEW YORK

STORYETTES

Commodore Vanderbilt had a poor opinion of the late Wm. H. Vanderbilt and one day told him he ought to get a living by himself and that when he was in trouble he could look toward his support. Some time afterward the Commodore asked his son how he was getting progressing. "Poorly," was the reply. "The crop is not good and the farm needs fertilizing." "Well," said his father, "there is a lot of horse refuse in my stables. I will give you one load—only one," and he wrote out an order for one load. The next day when the Commodore went to his stable the manure had all gone. "Where has that gone?" he asked a stable hand. "William H. took it." "But he had only an order for one load." "That's all he took." "Why, what did he have?" "A flat boat." The old man chuckled and walked off.

Herrman, the magician, was invited to perform for the benefit of some uptown club at the Standard Theatre, New York. After the entertainment some of the club men invited him to a supper and informed him he would be presented with a ring. Herrman felt sure he would be the owner of another diamond before he went to bed. Toward the end of the supper one of the members made a speech and asked Herrman would he accept the ring which would be presented as soon as the speech was finished. The applause which followed was the signal for Herrman's own colored boy to enter the room carrying a big brass gong.

Challemel Lacour, the French statesman, had an appointment with Schopenhauer, the German philosopher and pessimist, one day at a Frankfort hotel. He found the philosopher seated at the table d' hote finishing his dinner. Several officers were at the same table, and before Schopenhauer lay a gold piece. As he arose he said to the Frenchman: "I have had this gold piece on this table every evening for a month, having made up my mind to give it to the poor the first time these officers spoke on any topic besides promotion, women or horses. I still have the money."

On the first night of George Alexander's production of "As You Like It" at St. James' Theatre there was immense enthusiasm. Above the din rose the cry of "Author! Author!" Mr. Alexander was equal to the occasion; he appeared before the curtain and lamented that the author was not in the house. "But," he continued, "should it be my good luck in another world to meet the distinguished Mr. Shakespeare I will convey to him the message of approbation and good will you have given me to-night."

A grocer at the Mission displayed a sign which read, "Eggs guaranteed 20 cents a dozen." A customer finding them unfit for use came back to expostulate. "Well," remarked the proprietor, "We guarantee dem to be eggs. Dat's all. What more do you vant, eh?"

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

New Ideas in Spring Stationery.

Among the new papers for fashionable correspondence this season is the "English Violet," which is being brought out by Cooper & Co., the Market-street stationers. There are also a number of pretty effects in die stamping, and some of the new designs being shown by this firm excel all previous efforts.

Important Announcement.

Prior to departure from business Armand Cailleau, at 40 Geary street, is selling his entire stock of fine cloaks, valued at $125,000, at prices below any ever seen in San Francisco.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

REASONS FOR USING

Walter Baker & Co.'s

Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

"THE INDIAN GIVER"

A Scene from W. D. Howells' Piquant Comedy.

One has seen nothing better in the comedy of the closet—which is not at all the comedy of the stage, but much finer—than that which Howells has entitled "Indian Giver" in the current "Harper's." It is an exquisite picture of the universal and various feminine, the expressive She. It sparkles everywhere and tells the story of the lovemaking of two dazzling women and one unimportant man. Now this, for instance:

Mrs. Ingleheart: "My dear! I will not hear another word. He is yours. The idea of making such a fuss about a little thing like the gift of a young man!"

Miss Lawrence: "It's only that I was afraid you might want him yourself, Mrs. Ingleheart. It would make me unhappy if I thought you had deprived yourself of a cousin you might regret. They don't grow on every bush, I believe."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Such as Jim don't, I'll admit. But I hope I know the duties of a hostess, and the first of them is to get a young lady visitor engaged if possible. You've never seen Jim, have you?"

Miss Lawrence: "Never. What's he like?"

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Are you very fond of tall men?"

Miss Lawrence: "Is he tall?"

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Not so very. I should say he had more breadth and thickness than length."

Miss Lawrence: "Oh, I like them broad and thick."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Do you?" She speaks with a certain intonation of misgiving, and then she has the effect of pulling herself together: "Do you like them brown-complexioned and dark-eyed?"

Miss Lawrence: "Is he brown-complexioned and dark-eyed?"

Mrs. Ingleheart: "He's brown-complexioned and blue-eyed."

Miss Lawrence: "Oh, that sort of contradiction is adorable. The blue eyes always have such a funny look in the dark face. I shall like him, I know. When's he coming?"

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Any moment, now."

Miss Lawrence: "Oh!" She jumps to her feet. Mrs. Ingleheart remains seated, but leans forward to look in through the door at the clock in the hall, from the veranda where, with a pretence of sewing, in her lap, she is talking with her guest. To the right of this hall the windows of a wide drawing-room open to the floor, and people come and go through them as if they were doors. From the veranda, which extends around three sides of the house, broad steps descend to a driveway curving in front of it. Beyond the road green lawns, wept over by drooping white birches, slope to the red rocks that keep Mrs. Ingleheart's place from the sea.

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Or not moment, exactly. He promised to be here by the half past four, but he probably won't come till the five-ten; it's only four, now."

Miss Lawrence: "Time enough to prink, then." She sinks back into her chair, provisionally. "Is Mr. Fairford punctilious about prinking?"

Mrs. Ingleheart: "I see you would dread that."

Miss Lawrence: "I don't know that I should. They have to have some fault."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "And you think that is a fault?"

Miss Lawrence: "I can't say that I do. Do you?"

Mrs. Ingleheart, with an air of great candor: "To tell you the truth, I don't believe Jim cares about women's dress."

Miss Lawrence: "Then he is the most dangerous kind. He'll not see anything, but he'll feel everything. I shall have to dress at his nerves."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "It's clear that you've made your observations, my dear."

Miss Lawrence: "By twenty-six, one has."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "I should never have dreamt twenty-six."

Miss Lawrence: "I haven't dreamt it, myself. In my dreams I'm still sixteen. It's only in my waking moments that I'm twenty-six."

Mrs. Ingleheart, thoughtfully: "You have courage."

Miss Lawrence: "I have conviction. It's best to be honest—unless the man prefers lies."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Don't they all?"

Miss Lawrence: "Nearly all. But if Mr. Fairford should happen to be the exception that doesn't, will you please tell him I owned to twenty-six, but you don't know how much older I really am?"

Mrs. Ingleheart, with open admiration and covert alarm: "You're a strange girl."

Miss Lawrence: "Will that scare him? Should you advise me to be less strange?"

Mrs. Ingleheart, with a sigh: "No, he will like you so."

Miss Lawrence, laughing: "What despair! Poor Mrs. Ingleheart! You're sorry already you gave him to me! Well, you may have him back."

Mrs. Ingleheart, with noble constancy: "No, no; you're the very one for him."

Miss Lawrence: "Then our only hope is that he isn't the one for me."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "You think I'm not in earnest. Well, then, the only thing left is to convince you by practical—"

Miss Lawrence: "Demonstration? I don't see how it can be done. You can't pass this young man along to me without consulting his inclinations. Has he very decided inclinations?"

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Yes, he has. That was the trouble, I suppose."

Miss Lawrence: "So there was trouble?" She smiles intelligently."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "It was a great while ago. It was before I was—there was any—Mrs. Ingleheart. And there would be the same trouble again, if I were not—there were not any—Mrs. Ingleheart. So it's best to have it over before it begins."

Miss Lawrence: "I see what you mean. He's one of those terrible creatures who know their own minds; or think they do; and—may I be a little critical of your gift? I know it seems ungracious!"

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Not the least. People change their wedding presents even."

Miss Lawrence: "I shouldn't wish to change the present; only the name: Jim! If it were only Jack, now, I should know what to do. The Jacks are all alike. They smoke, they flirt desperately, but they are very warm-hearted, and conceal a great deal of sentiment under the mask of cynicism—like Thackeray's men. They would do anything for you—at least any little thing like jumping overboard from a yacht to fish your hat up, or marrying a girl that you've found out is in love with them, and think they ought, though you're dying for them yourself. You can twist them round your fingers; but it must be different with Jims. Jim! It suggests something rather grim; perhaps it's because it rhymes with it. Jim! I should say one's little arts, one's little airs and graces, would be thrown away on Jim. He sounds like a person of convictions; he sounds like a person of opinions, too, and very stiff ones. I suspect that Jim is serious, and he likes seriousness in women. He has ideas of home and a wife, and of being master in his own house. All that could be easily taken out of him if he were Jack, of course; but being Jim, it couldn't. He's masterful; I feel that he's masterful. He has all sorts of preconceived notions. He would be very domestic, and intellectual; and he would rather read to you than talk to you. He would want to respect you, and if you wouldn't let him, he would—make it hot for you. Yes, I know the type; adoring, domineering, devoted, and utterly intolerable."

Mrs. Ingleheart, who has been leaning forward more and more, and edging almost out of her chair, in her intentness: "You've met him! You know him! You've been letting me give myself away!"

Miss Lawrence: "Mr. Fairford? You? I? You've given him away, but not yourself, at least to me, Mrs. Ingleheart. I never saw Mr. Fairford in my life. I never heard of him till I came here."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "Then I don't know but it's worse, for you've guessed him. How you must dread the idea of him!"

Miss Lawrence, thoughtfully: "I don't know. I rather like the notion of grappling with such a —problem. It would be fun to get the better of it."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "And if you got the worse?"

Miss Lawrence: "I don't believe I should get the worse. But now, really, hadn't I better go and prink, Mrs. Ingleheart? I don't believe Jim would like to find me unprepared."

Mrs. Ingleheart: "No. Go and prink."

Of course, when Mrs. Ingleheart, gay young widow, gives Fairford away so liberally and without consulting him, she does not mean it in the least, and Miss Lawrence is not at all deceived. Fairford arrives in time and meets Mrs. Ingleheart on the stoop. Miss Lawrence is upstairs "prinking." She is not aware of Fairford's arrival and speaks to Mrs. Ingleheart from her open window, asking advice as to what sort of dress she shall wear to make a crashing effect on the expected one. Of course, Fairford hears it all, and Mrs. Ingleheart does not tell her friend that he is with her. She explains that he must save her from the appearance of a breach of faith and persuades him, good, easy man, to go away around the corner and return, pretending that he had just arrived. But Miss Lawrence suspects and amuses herself over the situation after their introduction.

Fairford, backing upon a chair, with his bag in his hand and his overcoat on his arm: "Thank you." He falls into the chair, and stares helplessly at her.

Miss Lawrence: "Was your train late, or did you take a later one? You see the fame of your promptness has preceded you, and you were expected at half past four."

Fairford: "The train wasn't late; I'm late. I've been walking."

Miss Lawrence, politely: "From the station?"

Fairford, with a deep breath of relief: "Yes—I walked—from the station, yes."

Miss Lawrence: "Then that accounts for it. And it must take some time for the wayfarer who isn't personally conducted to find his way around to the entrance of Mrs. Ingleheart's house. A house naturally fronts before, but if it has the sea behind it, there's a certain temptation to front in the rear, and Mrs. Ingleheart's house has yielded to the temptation. Don't you think it's like her? So full of unexpectedness!"

Fairford: "Yes; very singular. Very puzzling—if you've never been here before."

Miss Lawrence, keenly: "And is this the first time you've been here?"

Fairford: "I—" Desperately: "I've never been here before to-day."

Miss Lawrence: "Do you mean, never before to-day, or never to-day before?"

Fairford: "I mean, never before to-day; not to-day before."

Miss Lawrence: "Then there is a difference! I'm so glad; I thought there wasn't when I asked." She muses aloud: "Let me see! He has never been here before to-day; but he may have been here to-day before. Is that sense? Let me try it the other way! He has been here to-day before, but he has never been here before to-day." Fairford gazes uneasily at her. "I can't make it out; but I'll ask Mrs. Ingleheart when she comes; she'll know. I'll put it as a conundrum: If a gentleman has never been here before to-day, and yet has been here to-day before, when has the gentleman been here before?" Fairford listens with signs of increasing terror, which culminate in a violent start when she turns suddenly upon him: "Mr. Fairford, I'm tempted to make you a confidence! Oh—ha, ha, ha! Don't be frightened. It's only something psychical. But I have had such a strange impression in regard to you."

Fairford, in alarm: "Me?"

Miss Lawrence: "Yes. I wonder if I may venture to speak of it; but with your frankness—oh, all your virtues have anticipated you; every one was here promptly at half past four!—I'm sure you'll answer me. As you came up the veranda steps, just now, I had that weird sense of its all having happened before. You have had it; every one has; but at this instant it is so vivid with me that it seems as if you must share it with me." Laughingly: "Do you have a been-here-before feeling, too?"

Fairford: "I can't say—I— May I ask what you mean?"

Miss Lawrence: "I don't wonder you're surprised. But I'm so curious to know whether two persons could have that weird seizure at the same moment in regard to the same thing. Of course it's impossible, and I ought really to beg your pardon, but as you came up the veranda steps, just now, it flashed upon me, 'He feels as if he had been here before.' Perhaps it was a strange look—Excuse me; I'm odiously personal. Will you please to make a remark?"

Fairford: "I! A remark?"

Miss Lawrence: "Yes, anything—anything to turn the conversation. I've made all the remarks up to this point. I see you don't like psychical confidences."

Fairford: "Yes—I like them very much. But I wish to say—I ought to tell you—I don't know how to—" He stops and stares at her.

Miss Lawrence, looking down at her dress on either side of her, and twitching it: "Is there something on my gown? A bug? A caterpillar? No?" Laughing: "A woman always thinks something's wrong with her dress when people stare. But perhaps it's only the color? It's a very peculiar shade of gray; I've been told by flatterers that I look like a wraith in it, and you look—excuse me, really, Mr. Fairford! you look as if I did look like a wraith!"

Fairford: "Not at all, I assure you. But I—in regard to your psychical experience, I wish—I feel bound to say—"

Miss Lawrence: "Then you like that kind of thing! Do let me tell you another! It's apropos of this gown, which I wish you to notice particularly, so that you can corroborate me when I tell Mrs. Ingleheart." She rises and puts it in evidence by slowly turning in front of her chair; Fairford starts up, and backs away in a vague alarm. "Should you have thought I put it on for you?"

Fairford, gasping: "For me?"

Miss Lawrence: "No? Didn't you know it?" She fixes him with a piercing glance, and then sinks into her chair again, laughing, while he remains standing, aghast. "It can't be the first time that you've been dressed at by a young lady; it's something that's always happening when men are expected in houses where girls are. Don't you know that?"

The affair ends happily and with a laugh all round, or, at least, so far as the women are concerned, for it is not certain that Fairford ever ascertains the full reality of the queer entanglement in which he had been meshed.

The dialogue is so good all through that it is not too much to place it an easy first among the magazine work of the month.

***

The "Atlantic" does not appear to have touched its usual high level this month, although good in places. There is something too much of the mutual admiration business of advertising literary friends and there is a story by Paul Leicester Ford which is not up to his best work. That is to say there is too much writing for a very little story. It gives promise of improvement, however, in succeeding installments. T. W. Higgenson continues his pleasant reminiscences, which should interest all good Bostonians. He has this to say of the intellectual equipment of a college graduate in 1841:

It is well to state with just what outfit I left college in 1841. I had rather shallow reading knowledge of six languages—English, French, Spanish, Italian, Latin and Greek—and had been brought in contact with classic books in each of thes tongues. I may here add that I picked up at a later period German, Portuguese and Hebrew, with a little Swedish; and that I hope to live long enough to learn at least the alphabet in Russian. Then I had acquired enough of the higher mathematics to have a pupil or two in that branch; something of the forms of logic and of Locke's philosophy with the criticisms of the French eclectics upon it; a smattering of history and political economy; some crude acquaintance with field natural history; some practice in writing and debating; a passion for poetry and imaginative literature; a voracious desire for all knowledge and all action; and an amount of self-confidence which has now, after more than half a century, sadly diminished. It will be seen that this was an outfit more varied than graduates of the present day are apt to possess, but more superficial; their knowledge of what they know being often far more advanced as well as more solidly grounded than was mine. No matter.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

SUNSET LIMITED

The Famous Palatial Flyer

BETWEEN

San Francisco

and New Orleans

SEMI-WEEKLY

EASTBOUND

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Lv. San Francisco | 10.00 P.M. | Tues. and Sat. |
| Lv. Los Angeles | 3.00 P.M. | Wed. and Sun. |
| Ar. El Paso | 4.40 P.M. | Thurs. and Mon. |
| Ar. New Orleans | 6.55 A.M. | Sat. and Wed. |

WESTBOUND

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Lv. New Orleans | 10.00 A.M. | Mon. and Thurs. |
| Lv. El Paso | 8.05 P.M. | Tues. and Fri. |
| Ar. Los Angeles | 7.45 P.M. | Wed. and Sat. |
| Ar. San Francisco | 12.45 P.M. | Thurs. and Sun. |

Agreeable connections in New Orleans with through limited trains for Eastern cities.

To St. Louis in 24 hours; Chicago, 27 hours; Cincinnati, 24 hours; Atlanta, 15 hours; Washington, 34 hours; Philadelphia, 38 hours; New York, 40 hours; Boston, 50 hours.

Delightfully equable climate en route; train service unapproachably superb throughout; quick time; no additional cost.

TAKE SUNSET LIMITED

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. December 26.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, December 5, 10, 15, 20, 26, 30, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. December 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. December 13, 17, 21, 26, 29, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, 11 a.m. December 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves right to change steamers or sailing date.

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Through Sleeping-Cars to Chicago.

The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad runs through from Oakland to Chicago, daily. Pullman Palace Drawing-room, also Upholstered Tourist Sleeping Cars, leaving every afternoon. Annex Cars on sharp connection for Denver and St. Louis. The only line by which the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River can be reached. The canyon is a mammoth opening in the earth two hundred miles long, eighteen miles wide and seven thousand feet deep. It is reached by stage from Flagstaff, Arizona Territory, in one day's ride. Send for beautifully illustrated book descriptive of the Canyon and the Santa Fe Route to the East. Lowest through rates to all points in the United States, Canada, Mexico or Europe. Special rates to regularly ordained ministers of the gospel. Ticket office, 644 Market street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii, Samoa, New Zealand, Australia

6 Days to Honolulu by Steamship "AUSTRALIA"

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Jan. 26, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Monowai," for Australia, Thursday, February 4, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BOWDLEAR'S....

FLOOR WAX

BOWDLEAR'S FLOOR WAX.

Pulverized. For Dancing Floors. Is not white. Will not ball on feet. Will not soil clothes. All ready. Anybody can use it.

The floor must be clean and free from oil.
Sprinkle, and the dancers will do the rest
Put up in pound packages . . . . . .

FOR SALE BY

MACK & CO.

9 and 11 Front St. San Francisco, Cal.

The Leading Hairdresser

Popular prices, equal to others; no imitating; all original styles, varied to suit the features. Competent artists employed; no apprentices. Bernhardt wavers, to wave hair without burning; Eau Broux, to restore grey or bleached hair to natural color. Latest styles in modern bangs, particularly Louis de Lavelliere style. Open Sundays.

Strozynski's

24 GEARY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

521-523 Market St., San Fran.

Trinity School

Founded 1876

3300 Washington Street, San Francisco

A Church Boarding and Day School for Young Men and Boys . . . .

Prepares for University and College. — A Faculty of Eleven Professors and Teachers. — Boarders limited to thirty-five. — Easter Term opens January 3d.

REV. DR. E. B. SPALDING, Rector.

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Miss Adie's School 2117 California Street bet. Buchanan and Laguna

Day Boarding School. Kindergarten.
English, French, German. Calisthenics. Dancing

SPORT

Horses and Horse-Racing, Together with Notes on Fox-Hunting.

The alternate twelve-day meetings at Ingleside and Emeryville seem to run on the whole pretty smoothly, and the authorities at both tracks are entitled to every credit for the care and attention which they devote to their duties. It is beyond question that each and all of them have a big contract on hand, of which, doubtless, no one is more conscious than themselves. No pains are spared to meet the public convenience, and if the transportation arrangements could only be elevated to a somewhat higher plane, the most determined grumbler would be without cause for complaint as regards race-going comfort. This evil, however, seems to beset the racing man everywhere, and no experienced sportsman looks for anything different than a good-natured crowd and lots of it, with at times a pressure that must overtax the best passenger-carrying system in the world.

The clerk of the weather has shown a little favoritism to the P. C. J. C. so far this season, and with their track in more complete condition than the C. J. C. at Emeryville, visitors to Ingleside have gained a point. There has, furthermore, been some advantage on the whole in the more consistent form shown by the horses, and many of the general public, who only put in an appearance at holiday seasons, and are prone to go by the book, reaped substantial benefit thereby. Trainers and jockeys, however, have been pretty well hustled, and in some instances mere suspicion has left nasty marks. This is, perhaps, unavoidable where judges have to concern themselves with the movements of the betting ring and regard certain indications as prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent on the part of persons connected with the horses affected. The gambling public are pretty well able to take care of themselves, and in their protection the rights of owners and their employees should not be forgotten. When a job is discovered, everyone concerned should be dealt with mercilessly, but until then none should be condemned. A little more rope will undoubtedly catch the sharks in the end. It is wonderful how a losing bet sharpens a man's wit in detecting a job. Only last State Fair I was made aware of the foulest insult to an owner who never bets a cent by a gambler who had backed the the former's horse when it got beaten. The latter has since come to an untimely end, that proved the worth of his aspersions of a better man, whose honor is still safe.

The improvement in the way that horses are ridden, and the condition in which they are sent to the post, has been wonderful during the past two or three years. But if some more generally intelligent understanding could be had as to where to put the saddle on a horse's back and, on the part of the boys, how to sit and hold a horse together in his gallop, much would be gained. No horse can extend himself with a lad perched on the top of the withers, sticking his toes alongside the animal's nose.

With the turn of the year comes another breeding season. For every class of horse, from the thorough bred to the draft, the first consideration should be the merit of the mare to be bred. Without make, shape, quality and action of the right sort, and without a due proportion of power, no animal should be allowed to become a producer—no matter for what purpose the foal is to be used. It is useless to breed and raise anything but the best horses, for which there is a never-failing demand. A good mare is a fortune, and whenever put to a good horse, seldom fails to throw a valuable foal. Inferior stock spells poverty.

The establishment of a pack of hounds in the State is a step in the right direction, and Mr. Walter S. Hobart's venture will be watched with much interest, not only locally, but by sportsmen everywhere. How it would wake us all up if we had a pack of hounds in every county in the State, at any rate wherever conditions were favorable! For the present, of course, a live quarry must be foregone, and the drag substituted. Still many a good cross-country rider has been graduated from the hunting of a red herring fortified by aniseed, and if, by and by, a few fox-earth's can be located and a stock of the little red varmints be put together, who knows but that the time may come when San Mateo county will be spoken of in the same breath as the Genessee Valley or Meadowbrook? Here we are always sure of open weather, the opposite of which is the bane of the hunting-man's existence in other places, where the sport is kept going for the enjoyment of all and sundry, men and women, old and young, rich and poor. In Leicestershire the butcher boy is as welcome at the meet as a duke or any millionaire, and no one is more gladly greeted at the covert-side than the man who farms for a living and can show the way, as he so often does, over a stiff piece of country. To be sure, there are the hidden mysteries of scent, and all the interesting details of hound management in field and in kennel, to be studied and mastered in California; but, with heart in the work and a fair stock of patience, the necessary knowledge and experience can be gained. At all events, this is as promising a field, considering climate and other conditions, for the development of a genuine hunt as Melbourne in Australia, where really good sport has been shown for years. Every living creature needs some sort of excitement to give a zest to life, and no more healthy form of it can be found than riding to hounds. It affords the greatest possible exhilaration, and, at the same time, subdues that overstrength which in this buoyant atmosphere too often leads to the various forms of "painting the town." Hunting the fox, if it be practicable, but otherwise the drag, is distinctly to be encouraged, and it is to be hoped that the sport is going to thrive in our midst.

The stockholders of the Horse Show Association held their annual meeting this week and, after a review of the situation and some discussion, the feeling seemed to be in favor of making an effort to secure more general support from those who are engaged in breeding and raising horses, as distinguished from those who keep valuable animals for use as a matter of pleasure. This is as it ought to be, and shows that the lessons which have been derived from the three annual shows already held at the Mechanics' Pavilion are having due weight. In a horse-breeding country like California, properly conducted horse shows, at stated intervals, are an absolute necessity to those who follow the business of breeding and preparing horses for sale, if they expect to keep pace with the times and conduct their operations to advantage. Strangely enough the most extraordinary misconception exists in the minds of many as to the object of the shows held here, and this seems to have been in a great measure propogated by those who are expected to know better. Because the majority of exhibitors have deemed it essential to turn out their exhibits in the most complete and effective style possible, it is laid to their charge that they are un-American and toadies of foreign fashions, while the management is charged with organizing a show that is English in character, and consequently utterly unsuited to the conditions and requirements of California. It is evident that those who make this assertion are wholly unacquainted with what a show in England is like. At no show in that country or in Ireland is the equipment taken into consideration; in judging the animal alone is the subject. Owners do not exhibit their turn-outs for prizes, and I cannot call to mind ever having seen a servant in livery showing a horse at Islington, where all the leading exhibitions are held, though I have seen innumerable shows of all kinds there. The horse is the question first, last, and all the time; anything beyond that in a show ring is characterized as "American," and I cannot for the life of me see why people in San Francisco should be reviled because they model their exhibitions after the pattern successfully adopted by older communities in their own country.

The Horse Show in the last three years has done as much as anything to enliven this young metropolis, and those who promote and support it with their time, money and labor are not fairly chargeable with doing harm to the community or any section of it. Any person who fails to see the benefit it confers on the public generally, and those interested in horses particularly, is wilfully blind and prejudiced. Horse business of every kind has been down in the dumps since the Show was first started. Most people are pushed for ready money, especially owners of stock, and the enlightenment afforded by the first Show discouraged many who had been in a deep rut too long; consequently, the enthusiasm visible at the beginning has not lasted. If the breeders will put their shoulders to the wheel, the Horse Show will furnish the grease, and they can soon get out of the rut into which they have fallen, not necessarily through any fault of their own, but because of changed and changing conditions, which in a measure their circumstances have not permitted them to meet. When breeders like the Hamlins of New York State and Mr. Dunham of Illinois find it answers their purpose to support the New York Show extensively, it is folly to argue that a similar show in San Francisco is a foolish proceeding. How one looks at such matters is merely a question of the point of view, and the knowledge and experience available to be drawn upon for the purpose of forming a correct judgment. It cannot be denied that the Show is capable of improvement. Every right-minded person should be patriotic enough to lend a hand in that direction, or prove conclusively the uselessness of such undertakings. In the meantime, most people who have studied the question rightly and fairly will be found on the side of those who consider Horse Shows a good thing—and, therefore, in the language of the day, to be "pushed along."

BENEDICT.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

MOTT'S NEW YORK CIDER

CARLOAD OF NEW SWEET CIDER FOR THE HOLIDAYS FOR SALE TO ARRIVE IN LOTS TO SUIT

COBURN, TEVIS & CO., Agts.

107 Front St., S. F.

Dr. G. A. Danziger

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed . . . . .

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
Branch Stores: 102 Kearny St. and 1231 Market St.

Mira Valle Vintages

Vineyard: Mountain View
Santa Clara Co., Cal.

Depot, 604 1-2 Geary Street
SAN FRANCISCO

P. KLEIN, Proprietor.

Perrier-Jouet Champagne
EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also a specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand
W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

RACING! RACING!
California Jockey Club
Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, January 11, at OAKLAND RACETRACK
Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine
Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp
Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.
Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.
THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.
Three Concerts Only!
Tuesday Evening, third act of Faust
Thursday Evening, last act of Il Trovatore
Saturday Matinee, last act of Siegfried
Mme. Lillian Nordica
Under the direction of Al. Hayman and Klaw & Erlanger
AND ASSISTED BY
Mme. Sofia Schalchi, Contralto; Mr. Barron Berthald, Tenor; Mr. J. C. Dempsey, Barritone; Mr. I. Luckstone, Pianist. Grand Orchestra!
Prices: $3 00, $2 50, $2 00 and $1 00
Monday, January 25th: Modjeska in "Magda," etc.

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
Monday January 18th
Charles H. Yales Grand Spectacle
"The Forever Devil's Auction"
Everything New but the Title
Every evening including Sunday Matinee Saturday only February 1st, The Prodigal Father

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Jan. 18
MANY IMPORTANT CHANGES
Direct from their Australian triumphs, The Celebrated Frantz Family, the World's Greatest Acrobats
Binns & Binns, the Two Noblemen
Wilson & Waring, the Tramp and the Dancing Girl
Lieut. Noble, Germany's Greatest Ventriloquist
THE ROYAL HUNGARIAN COURT ORCHESTRA
Under the direction of P. K. Matus
Reserved seats 25c; balcony 10c; box seats and opera chairs 50c.

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
"If I Were Only a King!"
Second Edition of Our Holiday Spectacle
Jack and the Beanstalk
New Songs, Dances, Ballets, etc.
The Dancing Cow The Growing Beanstalk
Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre
Last performances of Chispa To-day and To-morrow
Monday, January 18th
"A FAIR REBEL"
The best war play ever written. See the revolving scene, the escape from Libby Prison, the laying of telegraph lines and the receiving and sending of messages.
George Osbourne, Hugo Toland, and the entire company 100 men from Co. L, 1st Reg., on the stage
Grand Benefit Co L, Jan. 18-19-20
Our Regular Prices! 'Phone for seats: Black 991

GOLDEN GATE HALL
First Recital of the HEINE TRIO
Saturday Afternoon, January 23
AT THREE O'CLOCK
Assisted by MR. HERBERT E. MEDLEY
Admission, 50 cents. Reserved Seats, $1.00

A. K. DAGGETT
...ing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

GOWNS IN REVIEW

Up-to-Date Ideas for the Fashionable World.

Now, dear Betty, that the holiday season is over the shopkeepers are beginning to display the spring and summer novelties. Undoubtedly the most popular fabric will be the silk warp barege, the pride and delight of our grandmother's summer wardrobe. We all know that the texture is that of a closely woven Brussels net, and the beauty of the old-time material has not been destroyed by modern designs. The prettiest pieces displayed are those with dark grounds, strewn with quaint patterns in the real old broche colorings. Some dainty pieces have light grounds, flowered in soft greens and pinks. Muslins, lawns and batistes are made over color or white, as one prefers. The bodices are tight fitting and hook in the back. The fronts are made with tucks across, in groups of three each. Below each group is a ruffle of yellow Valenciennes lace. The neck is finished with a collar edged with lace, that simulates a tiny yoke and extends over the top of the shoulder to form epaulettes. The sleeves are either tucked horizontally or else shirred from the wrist to the middle of the arm, where they are puffed. Little ruffles of Valenciennes are introduced among the puffs. Large loops of ribbons are frequently used on the bodices. They begin at the left side of the corsage, about on a level with the bust, and cover the arm seams to the shoulders; two loops falling down, and two standing up—with one end. Shirred ribbons are used as trimmings on all the diaphonous materials. The ribbons are generally of a plain ground, brocaded with flowers and green leaves. The skirts are frequently trimmed with flounces of the gauzy material around the hem and the ribbons are put above these in patterns—ovals, or diamonds, or battlements. Mousseline de l'Inde, a new fabric, with a soft mesh that does not crush, is bound to be popular.

The latest novelty in boleros is of heavy Russian lace, edged with a narrow passementerie of glittering threads and paillettes. Over each shoulder is fastened a series of accordion-pleated chiffon ruffles. A white satin collar and ruche of chiffon completes this dainty accessory.

The continued popularity of velvet for gowns and wraps is a feature of this season's fashions. The latest velvet gown shows an added extra bayance in the trimmed skirt; one example being covereed from the hem to the knee with rows of silk braid set on a few inches apart. Ribbed velvets and velveteens, with a watered finish, are one of the season's novelties. Then there is the new moire poplin, which makes a stunning gown when trimmed with rich lace.

Flower decoration grows daily in popularity. Ruches of thin material trim the skirts, and small clusters of baby pink roses, violets or lilies of the valley are caught into them at intervals. The new artificial flowers are delicately perfumed, which adds much to their charm.

The woman of fashion must possess quantities of real lace, for it has become a necessity this season. Lace vests, boleros and jabots are the principal feature of gowns in general, whether they be of cloth, silk, or velvet, and lace berthas have come in again for evening dresses. A frill of velevet is added underneath the lace to give the shoulders a broad effect. Small bunches of flowers are tucked in here and there. Some of the new evening gowns have a sash, which is simply two long ends without bow or loop. Old-time buckles are being revived with the advent of 1897, and happy is the maid or matron who possesses any real old-fashioned buckles. The square shoe buckle of the Puritan is eagerly sought, and some are willing to pay any price for a genuine one. Then there is the cut silver Dutch buckle, that is both pretty and sensible looking. Buckles are worn on the neck stock, or collarette, the belt, and are frequently introduced into the sleeve puff. Cairngorm buckles are the latest fad for golf stockings.

Bloomers are now considered a necessary adjunct to the wardrobe, and every woman should possess at least one pair. Satin is found to be the best material for these garments, as it is lighter than tweed and less bulky than corduroy. The fashionable bloomer is made of black satin, lined with gay-colored silk or Canton flannel.

It is difficult to say which is the correct slipper just now, so bewitching is the variety. They come in satin, kid, patent leather, and are especially chic when beaded to the toe. Sometimes one, two or three straps are worn. Buckles are seen either with or without bows. The edict has gone forth that the slipper must match the color of the gown exactly. Black slippers are only worn with black frocks, and white shoes with white gowns. And now, Betty, dear, I must bid you a fond farewell. Believe me, dear, ever your loving BARBARA.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Sench, proprietors.

LATE VERSE

The Scientific Sluggard.

'Tis the voice of the scientist, hear him explain;
"Don't get up too soon, it is bad for the brain;
The mind it unhinges," he ruthlessly said;
"If you rise in the morning too soon from your bed."

"Go early to bed and be early to rise,
And so you'll be healthy and wealthy and wise;"
But how about those agricultural hands,
Who do all the year round what the proverb commands?

I passed by his garden quite early one morn,
And saw him uprooting the thistle and thorn;
His limbs are rheumatic, his energy flags,
And as for his trousers and shirt, they are rags.

I spoke to the yokel, still hoping to find
That rising so early was good for his mind
He doddered and drivelled, alas, it was plain
The worthy bucolic was three parts insane.

Said I in my heart: Here's a lesson for me,
That man is a picture of what I might be
Then thanks be to Science, for teaching so clearly,
It's quite a delusion to get up too early.
—Pall Mall Gazette.

Lord God of Battles, Hear!

The earth is full of anger,
The seas are dark with wrath;
The Nations in their harness
Go up against our path!
Ere yet we loose the legions—
Ere yet we draw the blade,
Jehovah of the Thunders,
Lord God of Battles, aid!

High lust and froward bearing,
Proud heart, rebellious brow—
Deaf ear and soul uncaring,
We seek Thy mercy now:
The sinner that forswore Thee,
The fool that passed Thee by,
Our times are known before Thee—
Lord, grant us strength to die!

For those who kneel beside us
At altars not Thine own,
Who lack the lights that guide us,
Lord, let their faith atone;
If wrong we did to call them,
By honor bound they came;
Let not Thy wrath befall them,
But deal to us the blame.

From panic, pride and terror,
Revenge that knows no rein—
Light haste and lawless error,
Protect us yet again.
Cloak Thou our undeserving,
Make firm the shuddering breath,
In silence and unswerving
To taste thy lesser death!

Ah, Mary pierced with sorrow,
Remember, reach and save
The soul that comes to-morrow
Before the God that gave!
Since each was born of woman,
For each at utter need—
True comrade and true foeman,
Madonna, intercede!

E'en now their vanguard gathers,
E'en now we face the fray—
As Thou didst help our fathers,
Help Thou our host to-day!
Fulfilled of signs and wonders,
In life, in death made clear—
Jehovah of the Thunders,
Lord God of Battles, hear!

Rudyard Kipling in "The Seven Seas."

The Song of the Christmas Gift.

Oh, I am the Christmas gift—
I'm a multifarious thing;
To some I bring joy,
And to others annoy,
And often a hidden sting.
At times the result of thrift,
Then "cheap" is the word that I bear;
But when every cent
In a full purse is spent
On me, I'm beyond compare!

And often—too often—I'm giv'n
In a purely reciprocal whim;
My giver sends me
For another which he Expects to be given to him.
And then the enjoyment is riv'n,
Of which I possessed a full store;
For I haven't the art
To dispense or impart
What is lost to return no more.

But, oh, when a true love is brought
To bear on my destined end,
I'm transported, you know,
With affectionate glow,
Transferred to the lover or friend.
'Tis then I am really upwrought
With a feeling that nothing is lost;
On my mission I move
As a signal of love,
And I care not a rap what I cost!
—Journal.

The Burnt Dog.

He never cared for painting,
Nor the decorative art,
Nor any kind of drawing—
Fresco, print, or even chart.
He simply loathed an etching,
An engraving or pastel;
He thought an art museum
Was really worse than hell.
And I'll tell you why his tastes
In that direction never ran;
He'd had a surfeit of it—
He was a tattooed man.
B. N. THORNTON.

Ideal Champagne.

With due deference to the well-known fastidious proclivities of California champagne consumers, Messrs. Moet & Chandon, who, as is well known, are the largest vineyard owners in the Champagne, have concluded to ship henceforth their renowned White Seal (Grande Cuvee) to this Coast. This brand is celebrated as a great favorite among the select circles in London and other large cities in Europe, it being a clean and deliciously dry wine, and the White Seal (Grande Cuvee) is also bound to become popular here with people of a discriminating palate.

BOOK NOTES

"Friendly Letters to Girl Friends" (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.), by Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, like "Faith Gartney's Girlhood" and other of Mrs. Whitney's works is a wholesome and useful series of chats with girls on all subjects. The letters appeared in the "Ladies' Home Journal."

"Under Three Flags" (A. C. McClurg & Co.), a story of mystery, received the third prize in the 'Chicago Record" out of eight hundred and sixteen competing. Later it was issued by the "Examiner" with the last chapter missing, a prize being offered for the solution. It is very exciting, and sensational enough to suit even a reader of "penny dreadfuls."

"A Rebellious Heroine" (Harper and Brothers), by John Kendrick Bangs, is a most aggravating story and does not possess the piquant attraction that makes "The Idiot," "Coffee and Repartee," and all the other of Mr. Bangs' books so popular. The idea is a good one, the heroine sufficiently rebellious, but the plot is too absurd to be entertaining and hardly extravagant enough to be amusing.

The Critic Company of New York announce the publication of a literary magazine to be called "The Month," in Literature, Art and Life. It is to be edited by Joseph B. Gilder and Jeanette L. Gilder of the "Critic." "The Month" is to contain about 100 pages of reading matter and illustrations; and will be made up in part of matter that has appeared in the "Critic."

Two notable pamphlets soon to be issued by William Doxey from his Market-street publishing house are as follows: "Interest and Character as Educational Motives," by Prof. G. W. Howison, U. C., a lecture delivered at San Jose in December, '96, before the California Teachers' Association, and "The Rational Interpretation of Christianity," by W. T. Harris, U. S. Commissioner of Education and Prof. Howison. The last mentioned is the report of a discussion at a December meeting of Presbyterian ministers, that awakened considerable interest and controversy, which has increased rather than abated. Mr. Doxey will also have ready at Eastertime a volume of Clarence Urmy's poems. It will be an attractive book, according to Mr. Doxey's method, and its welcome is assured.

"I wish all these people wouldn't come to the show, said Miss Dresser; "I want to see the horses."
"Why don't you look at them, then?"
"But then how would I know what everybody was going to wear this winter?"—Harper's Bazar.

"I don't quite see why you call Mr. Biggs lantern-jawed."
"Why, because his face lights up so when he talks."—Brooklyn Life.

J. W. Carmany, 25 Kearny street, carries correct furnishings for Holiday Presents. A special line of smoking jackets and neckwear.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

The Improved
Welsbach
LIGHT
is the Aladdin's lamp of the nineteenth century. It has brought a wealth of comfort and convenience to present day people, unsurpassed even in the tales of magic.
Have you investigated it?
Burns half the gas—gives 3 times the light.
For Sale at 134 Ellis Street
W. W. Gillespie,
San Francisco Agent
All genuine goods have trade-mark—"Welsbach"—on each box.

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

HIRSCH·KAHN & Co.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at
128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Pacific Towel Co.
Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco
GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF F. M. L. PETERS, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Martha E. Peters, administratrix of the estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administratrix at the office of Gavin McNab, Esq., her attorney, 47, seventh floor, Mills Building, the same being her place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

MARTHA E. PETERS,
Administratrix of the Estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, January 14, 1897.
Gavin McNab, Att'y for Administratrix.

DIVIDEND NOTICE — HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, corner Market, McAllister and Jones streets.—At a regular meeting of the Board of Directors of this Society, held December 30, 1896, a dividend was declared at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum on all deposits for the six months ending December 30, 1896, free from all taxes, and payable on and after January 2, 1897.

ROBERT J. TOBIN, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE — GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, 526 California street—For the half year ending December 31, 1896, a dividend has been declared at the rate of four and twenty-six hundredths (4 26-100) per cent per annum on term deposits, and three and fifty-five hundredths (3 55-100) per cent on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Saturday, January 2, 1897.

GEO. TOURNY, Secretary.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—Department No. 3.

Hannah Anglin, Plaintiff, vs. Maurice Anglin, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Maurice Anglin, defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant upon the ground of defendant's desertion and abandonment of plaintiff for upwards of six years next prior to the commencement of this action, and for a judgment and decree awarding to this plaintiff the sole custody and control of Mary Catherine Anglin, the minor child of plaintiff and defendant; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and the seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six (1896).

[Seal] C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By JOSEPH RIORDAN, Deputy Clerk.
Lane & Lane, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

The Wave's Clubbing List

For 1897

By special arrangement with the publishers THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list
Subscriptions must be paid in advance

| | |
|---|---|
| THE WAVE AND ARENA | $5 00 |
| " " ARGOSY | 3 35 |
| " " ART AMATEUR | 5 75 |
| " " ATLANTIC MONTHLY | 5 75 |
| " " BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE | 5 70 |
| " " CASSELL " | 3 75 |
| " " CENTURY | 6 00 |
| " " CONTEMPORARY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE | 3 35 |
| " " CRITIC | 5 30 |
| " " DELINEATOR | 3 50 |
| " " DEMOREST MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " FORUM | 5 00 |
| " " FRANK LESLIES MAGAZINE | 4 90 |
| " " HARPER'S BAZAAR | 5 70 |
| " " " MAGAZINE | 5 50 |
| " " " ROUND TABLE | 4 90 |
| " " " WEEKLY | 5 70 |
| " " ILLUSTRATED AMERICAN | 5 75 |
| " " JUDGE | 5 50 |
| " " LESLIE'S WEEKLY | 4 50 |
| " " LIFE | 6 75 |
| " " LIFE'S COMEDY | 3 35 |
| " " LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE | 4 50 |
| " " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE | 7 75 |
| " " MC CLURE'S MAGAZINE | 3 35 |
| " " MUNSEY'S " | 3 35 |
| " " NEW ENGLAND " | 5 00 |
| " " NINETEENTH CENTURY | 6 25 |
| " " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW | 6 50 |
| " " N. Y. JOURNAL, DAILY | 5 00 |
| " " " SUNDAY | 3 75 |
| " " " R. N. DAILY | 8 00 |
| " " " SUNDAY | 4 50 |
| " " N. Y. WORLD, SUNDAY | 4 75 |
| " " OVERLAND MONTHLY | 4 75 |
| " " PUBLIC OPINION | 4 50 |
| " " PUCK | 5 50 |
| " " REVIEW OF REVIEWS | 4 70 |
| " " SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN | 5 00 |
| " " " SUPPLEMENT AND | 6 50 |
| " " SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE | 3 10 |
| " " ST. NICHOLAS | 3 00 |
| " " TABLE TALK | 3 00 |
| " " TOWN TOPICS | 3 75 |
| " " TRUTH | 5 50 |
| " " VOGUE | 6 75 |
| " " YOUTH'S COMPANION | 3 50 |

SUBSCRIPTION RATES
Three months, 75c. Six months, $1.50
One year, $3.00
Check or Money Order, payable to THE WAVE, should accompany this slip.

Fill out this blank and send it with the amount of subscription to

THE WAVE

24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Inclosed please find $_____ for _____ subscription to THE WAVE, beginning with Number _____, or date _____ 189__

Name _____ Residence _____

City and County _____ State _____

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital actually paid up in cash - - | $1,000,000 00 |
| Deposits December 31, 1895 - - - | 30,727,586 59 |
| Reserve Fund - - - - - - - | 750,000 00 |
| Guaranteed Capital - - - - - | 1,200,000 00 |

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726
Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
91 Montgomery Street

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of

Artificial Stone in all its branches

Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty

Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

H. D. LAWRIE, A. J. CARMANY, Managers
OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

The following incident occurred a few days ago at a ball in Berlin. A colonel advanced toward a young lieutenant, who bore on his breast a large badge richly set with diamonds. "Tell me, young man," he said, "what is that thing you have got there?" "It is an order, my colonel," replied the lieutenant. "An order?" exclaimed the colonel. "It is not Prussian then, for I don't know it." "It is an English order, my colonel," replied the juvenile officer. "Ah, indeed!" said his superior; "who for goodness sake could have given you such an order?" "My grandmother, colonel," was the reply. "Your grandmother!" ejaculated the colonel, bursting out laughing; "what is her name?" "Her Majesty Queen Victoria, Queen of England," answered the young lieutenant, who was none other than Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein. The colonel suddenly disappeared.

At one time the United States District Attorney of Chicago was a lawyer of some ability but was chiefly distinguished for his fearful pomposity. He would permit no familiarity, and would brook no contradiction. At one time he was trying a case before a court and jury and was anxious to have the court rule with him on a certain point. The court was equally determined not to. "It is a question of fact," said the judge. "It is properly a matter for the jury to decide." The lawyer tried to get the ruling in another form. He failed. Again he tried with the same result. "It is a matter for the jury," repeated the court. The lawyer leaped to his feet and thundered, "Does this court mean to imply that I am a fool?" "That also is a question of fact for the jury," said the wise man on the bench, and the lawyer subsided.

George Bardsley, one time Sheriff of Ellis county, Texas, had a most original fashion of appointing his deputies. One night he was called to a saloon where a desperado, "Texas Frank," was shooting out the place, firing his gun at every one in sight. Sheriff Bardsley grabbed a weapon, proceeded to the saloon and ordered "Frank" to throw up his hands. The response was a bullet. Then the Sheriff let off both barrels and the desperado fell, riddled with shot. He was not killed and on his recovery was seen serving papers and making arrests. Some one approached Bardsley and said: "Is Texas Frank your deputy?" "Yep," was the reply. "How is that?" was the next inquiry. "Well, most sheriffs like to appoint their deputies, but I like to shoot mine."

When the corner-stone of the Jefferson Davis monument was laid, in the midst of the speech-making an old negro pushed his way through the crowd and approaching the Governor said: "Please, Governor, will you show me whar Missus Davis are standin'. Point her out to me." The Governor complied with his request. "Thank'e Gov'nor, thank'e. I ain't see my ole Missus sence Massa died way down in Mississippi. I done heerd she'd be here to-day." The old slave tottered towards where Mrs. Davis and her daughter were standing. As soon as the lady saw her servant her voice broke into a glad cry of recognition. The old darkey knelt and kissed her hands while tears streamed down his cheeks. All were much affected by the incident.

A politician of considerable reputation but of low instincts was eated between two clergymen at a public dinner. During the meal he tried to make them uncomfortable, and when he got up to speak he ridiculed them. One of the clergymen had spoken humorously and eloquently. The politician followed, beginning with an appeal for sympathy at being sandwiched between two sanctimonious sinners and ending with several obscene stories of ministers. Then the second clergyman stood up. "The speech to which we have just listened," he remarked, "I would describe as a bit of foul tongue sandwiched between two clean pieces of bread." He sat down and with an abrupt "Good night" he left the room.

George IV of England on being told that a certain peer was his most polite subject, answered: "I will test him," and showed Lord Blank to the royal carriage, holding the door for him to enter first. The peer stepped in and the king remarked, "You are right; a lesser man would have troubled me with ceremony."

A COUGH SHOULD NOT BE NEGLECTED. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are a simple remedy, and give immediate relief. Avoid imitations.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

It is now the correct thing to have your afternoon tea, luncheon, wedding or dinner party photographed by the clean flash process introduced by Mr. B. C. Towne. Orders may be left at "The Wave" office or at 2121 Hyde street.

Just near enough—sixty miles—three hours' ride for a business man to take a run up there of a Sunday or a Holiday. Just far enough to be away from the fogs, winds and dampness of the Coast. Byron Hot Springs is a model winter resort—the charges $15, $18 and $21 include the services of physician and use of the seven famous mineral springs and baths.

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

ELECTRIC. . .

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS

409 MARKET STREET

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER

SUCCESSORS TO
H. P. GREGORY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO

MACHINERY

Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS-FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

Ask your Blacksmith to shoe your horse with

PHŒNIX HORSE SHOES

GIVE THEM A TRIAL

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST., San Francisco, Cal.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

. . ALSO . .

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company . . Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

YOU KNOW OUR BUSINESS
X X SO DO WE!

Stationery, Printing, Bookbinding

ANYTHING IN THAT LINE

THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION

. . . REGARDING THE . . .

Ladies' Grill-Room

. . OF . .

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

The Passing of "Little Pete"

The Plague in Central India

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 5 SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 30, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

BATHING IN THE GANGES

IT IS THE OBSERVANCE OF THIS RELIGIOUS CUSTOM THAT IS MOST FATAL IN SPREADING THE PLAGUE IN INDIA

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 30, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| The End of a Feud | 4 |
| "Wolf;" by Pompon | 5 |
| The Plague in India; by Sarah D. Hamlin | 5 |
| Life of a London Exquisite | 5 |
| One Kind of New Woman; by R. Allen | 6 |
| Passing of Little Pete; by F. Norris | 7 |
| Things and People; by Boswell, Jr. | 7 |
| The Plague Districts of Central India | 8 |
| The Entre Nous Club—a Flashlight | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres; by Peg Woffington | 11 |
| The Greatness of Hugo; a Review | 12 |
| In Bookdom | 13 |
| As Seen in Paris | 14 |

THE ANTAGONISTIC SOUTH.

A recent visit in the southern counties of the State has revealed to the writer a most curious condition of affairs. There has grown up in this "sun land" of ours an intense jealousy of the North and an irrepressible and mean spirit of slanderous animosity that is simply intolerable and scarcely conceivable. While our Los Angeles neighbors and the feeling here spoken of is nowhere so marked as in that county—were working off their boomtown lots and orange groves upon t..e eastern tourists who came to their country in quest of a mid-winter sun, we of this Northern community regarded the extravagant falsehoods of the land speculator, attributing arctic conditions to this portion of the State, with something of amusement and unconcern. We then believed these romantic achievements would be of an ephemeral character and soon die away, but, bless you, the ready lie of the real estate dealer has developed into an accepted and incontrovertible fact. A haphazard story of sleighriding along Kearny street has settled down to be a something .nat may be readily fortified by affidavits of prominent and reputable citizens, and the general impression of this country that any stranger would receive from the lips of the South would be that our winters are more severe than those of Canada, and our country covered with snow during the greater portion of the season. .he writer tested the sentiment of tion of the season. The writer tested the sentiments of the South land people but a short while ago, and from the lips of those who ordinarily come in contact with the incoming strangers learned much of this climate that was hitherto unknown. The party consisted of visiting strangers from the snow-bound East. For a time the writer pretended to be a tourist seeking information. Of all the Southern citizens — speaking of Los Angeles county now—who drove our party around to view the sights, of all the fruiterers and druggists and tradesmen, not one had a kind word, or for that matter a truthful word, to say of any other portion of the State. There was one honest-hearted soul who must be excepted from this list, and who emphatically proclaimed that he had "rather live in San Jose than in any other city in the State, but that his wife, who was an invalid, preferred Pasadena." One gentleman — we did not attempt to verify his statement — advised us srongly "not to go North unless we were prepared for cold weather, for he had read," so he stated, "in a Pasadena paper that San Francisco had experienced a heavy snowfall, and that coasting was good up there, as the city was almost all hills, anyhow." The official reports show that on the day of the "snow" the weather was clear and warm, with a westerly breeze, and of course no indication of snow. The deliberate, studied method of the lie was irritating; the persistent manner in which it was repeated was appalling.

The beauties, the advancement, the growth and the prosperity of the Southern counties were to the writer as much a matter of State pride as they could possibly have been to one born in that environment, but appreciation of these things was marred by the manifest spite which had a rich growth in harmony with the semi-tropic verdure displayed on every hand.

Recent dispatches to the daily press record the fact that our spiteful little neighboring community has been visited by snowstorm—not such a visitation as would deserve that name in the East, but still in such a climate as this a snowstorm, nevertheless. One can readily imagine, should this freak of nature have taken place with us, how our narrow friends would have pounced upon it and enlarged upon it, until the falling of a few flakes of snow had been magnified into a storm beside which the blizzards of the Northwest would be as a balmy nothing. The truth is that if in the South the climate is more evenly temperate than it is here, it is equally true that during the summer months it grows inexpressibly and intolerably warm as well. A great deal of stress is laid upon the fact that the South country is also a citrus country, but the increase in the orange acreage in the North threatens soon to exceed that of the South. For years it was supposed that the raising of oranges could not be carried on as an industry outside of a limited portion of the State, but this fallacy has long ago been exploded. Some years ago they had a Northern and Central California Citrus Fair. The South attempted to spread the report that all of the oranges there displayed were grown in Los Angeles county. For years this fruit had only been grown for ornament north of Tehachapi, but within the past twelve years thousands of acres have been set, and thousands of acres have annually come into competition with the acres of the South. This fruit is now successfully produced in more than three-fourths of the counties of the State, and the development of this industry promises to be greater in the North, for here irrigation is not necessary and the fruit ripens and is marketable at a somewhat earlier date.

At Santa Barbara none of this spirit of rivalry was noticeable; at least, it did not take the form of abusive declarations concerning other portions of the State. The Santa Barbara native has found it possible to be proud of his county and its wonderful productiveness, but refuses to run to smaller meannesses in his characterization of his neighbors. If Los Angeles keeps up this system of abuse, it may be necessary for the other counties of the State to establish there a Bureau of Information, which shall show to visiting tourists, free of charge, the true conditions as they here exist and explode one by one of the falsehoods of the Los Angeleno, who is not an angel, by the way!

THE SAN PEDRO HARBOR INVESTIGATION AND ITS DISCOVERIES.

Now that the dailies have abandoned all reference to San Pedro and Port Los Angeles harbors and the United States Commissioners ahve returned East, and the sensational quality of the discussion has been worn threadbare by the sensational press, perhaps it might be as well to pick up the subject where the dailies left off and calmly review the controversy which has been productive of so much noise and so much ill-feeling in the South. To some extent San Francisco is interested in this affair, and we certainly should be anxious to get at the truth of it. Language can scarcely convey even a faint idea of the willful and deliberate falsehoods published concerning this harbor controversy. The press, with the diligence of a paid advocate, concealed the defects and magnified the advantages of San Pedro, and quite as industriously ignored the merits of Port Los Angeles, and distorted out of all semblance to the truth the advantages claimed for and the defects charged up against that port. So deliberate, so persistent and so manifestly intentional and systematic was this misrepresentation that even a casual observer must conclude that its instigators had an eye cunning to the future. As the investigation proceeded it was soon discovered that the drift of the testimony was running strongly in favor of Port Los Angeles. To conceal this fact from the Commissioners was impossible, but it was possible to conceal it from the public and so distort the press reports as to excite a strong public sentiment in favor of one harbor and against the other. The purpose of the misrepresentation could not have been to deceive the Commissioners, but it was intended to and did deceive the public mind to such an extent that, should the Commissioners render their verdict in favor of Port Los Angeles, there is little doubt but that "mass meetings" may be easily convened to protest before Congress against the "unfair" and "unjust" report of its Commissioners. Such a protest might be honestly supported by a public which had no light upon the subject other than that afforded by the newspapers.

The truth of this matter is that all the hubbub which has been kicked up originated with the Los Angeles Terminal Company, a corporation which enjoys some exclusive wharf privileges at San Pedro. Very adroitly, and very successfully, too, these men have "worked" public opinion to such an extent as to lead the people to believe that theirs is the "people's" harbor. They are using public opinion as a catspaw to pull their chestnuts out of the fire, and yet have been cunning enough to hide their own individuality in the controversy. For years Wilmington, or San Pedro harbor, afforded the only entrance-way by water to Los Angeles, but it was then and is still impossible for large coasting steamers to dock in that harbor. Passengers and freight must be transferred to lighters and towed into the port of Wilmington, which is, in fact, little more than a shallow estuary. Some three years ago the growing necessities of trade in Southern California demanded better facilities. A wharf was constructed at Port Los Angeles to accommodate this trade, and since that time the large coasting steamers have wholly abandoned San Pedro to the light draft vessels. This in itself is evidence as to the respective merits of the two ports.

The question to be determined is not, as is popularly believed, whether a harbor shall be created at Port Los Angeles, but whether the existing harbor shall be further improved. Naturally, the Los Angeles Terminal Company, having something of a monopoly at San Pedro, viewed with alarm the efforts to improve any harbor except the one in which it is interested. Hence the hubbub. The Terminal Company is not in a strict sense a bona fide undertaking. The property is for sale and could be purchased by Mr. Huntington if he chose to accede to its demands, which up to this time he has refused to do.

The evidence put in on behalf of Port Los Angeles, its availability and its safety, seems to be almost unanswerable. It is cheering to know that a complete report of the proceedings before the Harbor Commissioners is to be made available to the misled citizens of Southern California within a very short time, when they may have an opportunity of testing the accuracy of the newspaper reports beside the certified proceedings as they actually took place. In no sense can it be claimed that either Mr. Huntington or the Southern Pacific Company has a monopoly of interest at Port Los Angeles. It was shown upon the hearing that 75 per cent of the land abutting on the proposed protected harbor is in the ownership of individuals in no wise and in no manner connected with the railroad corporation. But in addition to all this the very act of Congress making the appropriation compels the Southern Pacific Company, before any governmental expenditure can be made, to execute and file with the Secretary of War an agreement giving the use of its tracks and approaches on equal terms to any other corporation that may choose to enter there. And more than this, in case of a dispute arising between such corporations, the Secretary of War is made final arbiter in the matter. No such concession is demanded of the Terminal Railway at San Pedro, and the senseless cry that to create a harbor at Port Los Angeles would be to create a monopoly, falls to the ground in the face of this statutory provision, and would, indeed, be more applicable to the "People's" at San Pedro than to the other.

THE MURDER IN CHINATOWN.

The murder of Little Pete has revealed a condition of things within this city which is almost without parallel in the civilized world. We have a Chinese population of approximately thirty thousand, which is nominally subject to our laws, yet is, in fact, controlled within itself by a few autocratic leaders. Little Pete, through his superior intelligence and knowledge of the ways of the white boss, had come to be Director-General of the Sam Yups. His methods were those of the forceful, unscrupulous man of money, and his policy, so far as can be learned, was one which would have centered in the merchant class of Chinatown controlling power in the direction of that little world's affairs. He had done American politics with Mr. Christopher Buckley, knew the art of pulling wires and of bringing pressure to bear, was not nice as to methods, realized the potency of money, and played for high stakes in business, on the turf and in Chinese politics—in short, he modeled himself so far as possible after the type of the American political boss. To succeed, he had perforce to make enemies. He came to be regarded by the poorer classes of Chinese as the representative of wealth and authority. He stood for those influences, the possession of which makes a man envied and arouses hatred, whether among Chinese or Christians, Turks, Tartars or Californians.

The murder of Little Pete is the expression among the Chinese of the same spirit that develops Nihilists in Russia and Anarchists in America. No doubt, if we could know the truth, we would find some individual rival of Little Pete to be the instigator of his murder; possibly not by direct offer of money as a reward for the crime, though this is the generally accepted theory, but quite certainly by an appeal to the prejudices and hatreds of the poor and powerless. If there was a Little Pete to intrigue and scheme himself into power by the aid of wealth, there was, we may be sure, some Mongolian demagogue, some bequeued Cator, who made the murderers feel that their crime would result in blessing the Chinese people, or that it was a common wish to which few were bold enough to give expression by act.

We do not idealize the Chinese nature. The murderer of Little Pete is not a Brutus or a half-crazed Booth. Neither can we believe that he is nothing more than an ordinary thug hired to kill. If the reports given by the daily press can be relied upon, the fued which has been going on between the Sam Yups, or wealthy, and the See Yups, or poor, is but a manifestation of the greater struggle going on throughout our civilized world between the many and the few, and the murder of Little Pete is but the Chinese expression of those feelings which animate the more or less unfortunate million. There is a kind—the Little Pete kind—of man in America, who has no scruples in business, no honor in politics, no consideration for his fellows, no regard for anything but his own success, and this character of man is bringing trouble upon all men with money. We hear much talk of revolution. Sober-minded, sensible men fear that their sons are to see a period of blood and bitterness. The mob talkers on the street corners hardly attempt to veil the promise that if things are not righted by the ballot they will be by the bullet. There is talk current, as there was before the Civil War, of an irrepressible conflict; this time between the House of Have and the House of Want.

But this is no country for revolutions. Our territory is too big, our cities too many, our population too generally contented, our wealth too widely distributed, our political power always with the people, and theirs always the blame if there is misgovernment. The curses that are called down upon the heads of our men of distinguished wealth come not from the injustice and cruelty of our economic or political systems, but rise from the bold and unscrupulous acts of a few, who, without conscience and without tact, without honor and without consideration for public opinion, make their wealth and power a standing insult and a cause for the hatred of men more honorable but less clever. There is no reason why there should be a feeling of antagonism toward wealth in the United States, and there would be none were it not for our queueless Little Petes.

THE DECLINE OF THE MAGAZINE SHORT STORY.

Is it possible that the short story—the American short story—is on the decline? And if so is it because the authors have ceased to produce work of a high standard, or because the public—that particular circle of the public for whom the magazines cater—have ceased to demand it?

Four years ago the name of Richard Harding Davis was in everybody's mouth. Now he is writing syndicate articles for the daily press on "special topics," and Gallegher Travers and Cortlandt Van Bibber are fast fading from the public's memory. Is Mr. Davis a type? Has he reached the limit of his productive capacity, or have the magazine editors—who feel the tastes of their public as a skillful rider feels his horse's mouth—dropped him as as an author who has lost popular favor? In either event the result remains the same; Mr. Davis' stories have ceased to appear in the magazines. But on the other hand, one would expect to see his place filled by a new popular favorite. According to immemorial custom this should be the case, yet somehow a successor has failed to appear. Owen Wister claimed attention for some dozen or so issues, but now he too is dropped, is out of the race, is a back number. Kipling is never seen in the three big magazines, and but rarely in McClure's. Now why should this thing be? Why is it that the best magazines should fail to publish the best class of stories? Why are not the names of Kipling and of Arthur Morrison and Stephen Crane seen in "Harper's" and in the "Century" and in "Scribner's" as often as those old, old familiar standbys, the veterans, the "steadies," Brander Matthews, Octave Thanet, Charles Dudley Warner, Thomas Janvier, Ruth McEnery Stuart and so many other "magazinists"? Do you remember how Caliban spoke of Setebos, how that some day he might "doze, doze, doze, as good as die?" That expresses it exactly. These good people, these professional magazinists write, and write, and write; to all ends and purposes they died long ago. Can there be anything staler than Brander Matthews' stories of New York life? anything flatter than Min Stuart's dialect stories? anything more unprofitable than the foolish maunderings of Thomas Janvier, with his "out of the way hotels," his foreigner, his new-married couple? The three more important magazines have snoveled this tasteless, vapid sort of thing at one so long and so persistently that one has at last come to accept it without a great deal of comment; one takes it is a whole, much the same as one would shrimps.

To put it tersely, the stuff is absolutely stupid. We have met the same characters, witnessed the same scenes, gone through the same worn, hackneyed, hashed-up situations again and again and yet again. The short stories of "Harper's," "Scribner's" and the "Century" have become deadly dull. There is in them no freshness, no originality, no vitality, no close, keen grip on life or nature. They are mere empty forms, out of which the substance has long since vanished, and one accepts them only because of the reputation of the magazines in which they are published. We ourselves have read stories in recent issues of the "Century Magazine" which, had they been sent anonymously to this paper, would have been decisively and promptly rejected with a distinct understanding that their "unavailability" did most certainly "imply a lack of literary merit."

The great merit of the stories of these "magazinists"—the one quality which endears them to the editors, is that they are, what in editorial slang is called "safe." They are safe, it is true, safe as a grave yard, decorous as a church, as devoid of immorality as an epitaph. They have not the vigor or decisiveness to offend the most invertebrate taste. They adorn the center table. They do not "call a blush to the cheek of the young." They can be placed—Oh crowning virtue, Oh supreme enconium—they can be "safely" placed in the hands of any young girl the country over.

It is the "young girl" and the family center table that determine the standard of the American short story.

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.

The "Examiner" is dabbling in the law again, and is, as usual, making a sorry mess of it. It is impossible to dovetail legal principles with wild schemes of confiscation, but our ingenious contemporary may lay claim to having "tried its hand" at the thing. This time water and gas rates, and the laws bearing upon their regulation, are the things which tempt to absurdities our morning contemporary, and it very naturally indicates its contempt for the law by endeavoring to demonstrate that the decisions of our Supreme Court sanction and justify the wildest extremes of radicalism in rate regulations. In common decency there should be a point somewhere for this kind of hysterical and unseemly agitation to stop, for it is costly, unprofitable and ineffective, except for harm. There must come a time wheu the public officer, the taxpayer and the finer spirit that lives with our great general public will rebel against it, and refuse to be blindly ledin to turmoils of litigation and spite, to gratify the animosities or to fill the purses of a little knot of mischievous marplots. We, in common with many others, have grown sick, tired and disgusted with the whole performance—sick of this everlasting churning up of hatreds, and tired and disgusted with the extravagant demands, the insincsre suggestions, made ostensibly in the public welfare, that emanate from an ill-balanced and disordered journalistic mind, which refuses to learn anything save only to be more indecent. These never ending agitations breed an unwholesome fever of unrest, and plant in the minds of ignorance a yearning for something that is impossible of achievement, and repugnant to the spirit of American institutions.

We have come now to a point where resistance to such teachings is a duty. The State has only just passed through a useless and expensive bit of litigation in the matter of regulating freight rates. The experience is still fresh in mind. Led by the same influences, it attempted to do a thing in the teeth of the law. The result has been our inglorious defeat, and an enormous bill of expense. The attorneys' fees in this litigation have amounted to more than thirty thousand dollars, and, curiously enough, one of the gentleman laying claim to the reward is likewise the attorney of the "Examiner," which was the leading spirit of the agitation. The State has nothing to show for its vast expenditures of money except Experience. Experience is worth something, but to be worth anything we must profit by it and avoid the course of error. This municipality would be something more than foolhardy, its legislative body something more than over-zealous in its duty, if it does not take wisdom from the experience of the State, and flatly refuse to loosen the strings of our depleted municipal purse that the greedy hands of the "Examiner's" attorneys may dip into our dollars.

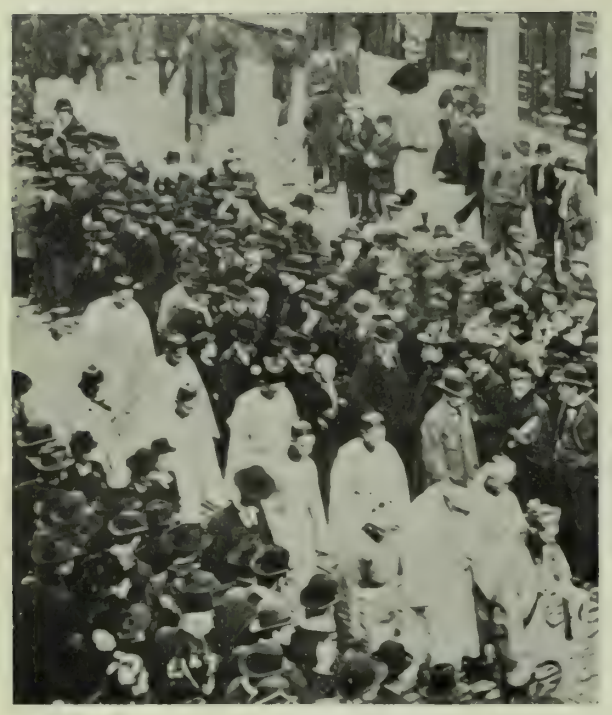
Mayor Phelan, it is reported, is drafting a message to the Board of Supervisors concerning gas and water rates. The sensational end of the daily press is busily at work attempting to urge both the executive and the legislative branches of our municipal government to a course of action similar to that followed by the State, and which, if followed, will certainly result in similar disaster to our municipality. The law bearing upon the regulation of rates is plain and unmistakable. There is no excuse for overstepping its bounds or attempting to distend to bursting point the powers of regulation lodged with our Supervisors. Mayor Phelan certainly does care for his reputation, and caring for it, he should exercisela watchful vigilance, and refuse to be led into the ways of demagogy. Even the influences that strongest urge him to course of action repugnant to his conscience will hold him in higher esteem if he adheres strictly to the course of dececy and reason. There is a well defined and unmistakable limit beyond which Supervisorial interference may not with impunity go. The thinking public would be justified in believing that our Mayor was concerned in gathering to himself a cheap political fame, rather than in serving the public welfare, if he avoids touching upon the limitations which the State has just learned to respect at great expense to itself. The Supervisors would be justified in the belief that the Mayor was purposely shirking his duty and shifting the burden of all this controversy upon their shoulders, if his message recommends reductions, without at the same time referring to the wel settled principles of law governing their action. Tabulated statements of rates, all the world knows, do not constitute a fair basis for comparison or for regulation.

The young man who writes ignorantly of the law upon the "Examiner" takes no profit from the decision in the Railroad Commissioners' case. He leaps over the line of Federal decisions that sustained the doctrine laid down by Judge McKenna, and grasps at a decision of our Supreme Court made years ago, which, in the light of subsequent rulings by the Federal Courts, cannot stand as authority. In such legal proceedings as would follow an attempt at unjust regulation, the Supreme Court of our State would not, if it adhered to the decision quoted by the "Examiner," constitute a court of last resort. The defendant would have a clear right to prosecute his appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That Court has held time and again that the imposition of an unjust and unfair regulation operates to deprive a citizen of his property wihout due process of law, and is therefore in violation of the Federal Constitution. This ruling makes its jurisdiction in such cases clear and unmistakable. To acquire an understanding, then, as to the ultimate result of such litigation, and the probable action of that Court one needs only to consult its rulings in similar cases.

The judicial history of the power of the State to regulate charges of quasi-public corporations begins in 1876, and is therefore but twenty years old. At first the power of the State to regulate at all was seriously questioned. Then followed a stubborn contest as to the right of the State to delegate that power to subordinate bodies or branches of the government. In both of these contentions, which extended over a series of years, the power of the State was finally sustained, and the governing principles of law clearly and defininitely settled. The next series of questions that arose involved the settling and determining of the limits or extent of this power which should govern the State in its attempts at regulation. It was early claimed, and not without some justification, that the action of the legislative branch of the State could not be reviewed by the judicial branch; that even though the rate fixed by the regulating power was found to be unjust and unreasonable, the courts were powerless to to interfere for the protection of the aggrieved. The enormity of such a doctrine soon became all too apparent. The power vested in the State is a reasonable, not an unreasonable power, and what we said in "The Wave" some weeks ago while criticising the opinion of Judge McKenna is equally applicable here, and will bear reproduction.

Reasonableness is the essence of the power. Unreasonable rates are the very things that bring into operation the machinery of the law. Its purpose is to check the rapacity of corporations, and to prevent unjust, unequal and exorbitant rates. It is the perpetration of injustice that gives birth to the necessity for State regulation, but in exercising this power the State is impotent to perpetrate another injustice, or exact a rate which would be unreasonably low. To contend otherwise would be outrageous. A State regulation which would limit the earning capacity of a corporation to an extent sufficient to prevent it from paying its operating expenses would be an injustice on its face, for manifestly it would be destructive of the thing itself. Likewise, any State regulation which compels a corporation to collect rates sufficient only to defray its operating expenses, and makes no allowance for the payment of the interest or the principal of its debt, would be an injustice and destructive to the corporation itself. The power abiding with the State is not to destroy, it is not even to punish; it is simply to regulate transportation charges upon lines fair and equitable to both the people and the transportation company. The stockholder of a corporation is not a brigand or an outlaw. He is entitled to a fair profit upon his investment, and any regulation which makes toward denial of his right to profit is legislation in contravention of the principle of law applied by Judge McKenna in the Railroad Commissioners' case. So often has this phase of of the law been discussed, so thoroughly is it woven into the spirit of all our codes and of all our constitutions that it is absurd to consider it as a debatable point.

These views are applicable to the case in point, and it is idle folly to butt our heads up against a principle so well defined and so clearly established. The Mayor and the Supervisors should "look before they leap."



The Priests and Chief Mourners

Burning Sandalwood at the Chinese Cemetery

The Head of the Cortege on Grant Avenue

The Procession Forming in Front of "Pete's" House

The Family Carryall, in which Mrs. Pete Followed the Hearse

THE END OF A FEUD

BURIAL CEREMONIES OF "LITTLE PETE," MURDERED BY THE SEE YUP TONG OF THIS CITY ON SATURDAY LAST

"WOLF!"

By POMPON

I am "out" with Lady Darlington, and a great pity it is, for my habits and mode of living will be at sixes and sevens for the rest of the winter. This was the manner of it. I called last Thursday, and while I was sipping tea with her in a cozy corner of the drawing room I said:

"Do you know that you are not to see me next week. I go a hunting in the Vosges for three or four days with Fontmartin."

I confess I expected—well, if not reproaches—at least a little show of petulance, of vexation—something that would have flattered my masculine vanity. But my dearest Anglaise fetched an adorable smile and said, "Charming! There are wolves in the Vosges, hein?"

"Wolves, sometimes," said I imprudently (but I thought the declaration would add a certain "allure" to my hegira.)

"Eh, bien, bring me back a wolf skin to put alongside my bed."

"But wouldn't you rather have a boar, anice, pretty little boar, a—"

"No, no. You don't understand 'cherie.' Do you think I intend to put my feet down on the bristles of a boar-skin when I get out of bed in the morning. No. I must have a wolf-skin."

Next day I set forth for the Vosges. Fontmartin is a great crony of mine and boasts a splendid preserve three leagues distant from Epinal. It has only one drawback. The voyage by train lasts—I shudder to think of it—nine and a half hours from Paris, and one must change cars three times en route. Enfin. I arrive in time for dinner, am presented by Fontmartin to the family. It is quite a ceremony,—so serious is the family Fontmartin—Fontmartin's wife, very tall, and dried up like a hop pole in November, and Fontmartin's mother-in-law, with her thick nose and assortment of chins, looks like a bad bust of Louis XVIII—sit on either side of me throughout the meal. I endeavor to keep the conversation to the subject of wolves, even going so far as to quote the famous letter of Louis XIII to Anne of Austria. You remember the line in Hugo's Ruy Blas.

"Madame. The wind is high and I have killed six wolves."

But Fontmartin was daft upon gossip of Paris, would have details of the boulevards, the latest marriages and scandals and I don't know what else. Only when we foregathered in the smoking room did I have the chance to tell him of my promise to Lady Darlington. He fell a laughing immoderately upon the instant.

"Wolves," he exclaimed. "Do you imagine you will find a wolf hereabouts as easily as you would a hare or a pheasant?"

I shrugged my shoulders.

"Que veux tu," says I. "I've promised."

"And you address yourself to me to satisfy the caprices of—of—of Lady Darlington, enfin?"

"Well, we can only try our luck. After all it's not so impossible. I remember I killed a wolf here two years ago, at the edge of the woods down by the brick-kiln. Let's go down to-night at any rate."

So Fontmartin called up the old beater Prenoie and gave him instructions to get a lamb from the farm and tie it to a stake near the brick-kiln. He loaded me down with a rifle—it must have weighed thirty pounds at least—a double barreled Express, one barrel loaded with a huge cartridge, the other with buckshot.

The night was clear, the sky had a steely look and it was unusually cold. Fontmartin was furred to the ears as if for a polar expedition. On the way to the kiln I hazarded a pleasantry on his accoutrement.

"Shut up," he muttered authoritatively. "We're not here for fun. Throw away your cigar."

"Can't I smoke?"

"No."

"Nor even talk?"

"No. Shut up."

This was gay.

Have you ever remarked the fact that the most amiable and good natured fellows become sour and irritable and assume a great pose of mystery the moment they become involved in the sacred rites of hunting? The least little slip will bring upon you a sarcasm or cutting observation; a real blunder entails abuse and personal vilification.

I kept silence and thought of my nose that was growing red and my eyes that wept beneath the gusts of the icy wind. At length, by long detours over glacial paths we arrived. Fontmartin posted me against the trunk of a tree, and ambushed himself some twenty metres away. Before us the poor lamb circled about its stake uttering the most doleful lamentations I have ever listened to.

An hour passed and no wolf. It grew colder than ever. I declare I was numb from head to foot. Every now and then my teeth rattled like castanets. Here was a pleasure party for you. The line from "Ruy Blas" occurred to me. "The wind was high," and that was true enough, but at least Louis XIII had killed six wolves while I—I—! The veterans of Napoleon must have felt precisely as I did during their retreat from Moscow, numb and freezing and maddened with an insane desire to accomplish something, no matter what, in order to relieve the monotony—to move—to cry out—to shoot—anything, in fact.

Every now and then I glanced over at Fontmartin and executed a despairing pantomime with my arms and hands. He only scowled and muttered. At length I could contain myself no longer. The strain was too intense. For an hour I had watched that miserable mutton turning and turning about his stake, always with the same lamentable cry; a certain absession grew upon me. I felt that if I did not fire I should certainly fall sick; how it happened I don't know. My rifle came up to my shoulder, apparently of its own accord. I sighted, pulled the trigger—and piff—paff—the lamb dropped dead.

"Ah, very well," remarked Fontmartin with great deliberation as he came out of his hiding place, "we can now return home and go to bed calmly, for after your admirable exploit, it is hardly probably that the wolf will pay us a visit to-night. It is scarcely worth while to put yourself to so much trouble in order to bring back a roast of mutton to Lady Darlington."

I excused myself as best I could on the pretext of some sort of nocturnal hallucination, and we went home, Fortmartin in execrable temper.

The next day of course I was riddled with all manner of gibes and jokes. The family and guests were never done with their allusions to the hunter from Paris, the mountaineer from the Boulevard des Italiens, the bloodthirsty killer of lambs. I suppose it was very funny, but wearied with posing as a butt for the wit of these provincials. I suddenly returned to Paris—and to Lady Darlington.

Her welcome seemed a little cold, but curiously enough she had nothing to say about the hunting of wolves.

Instead she showed me a magnificent white bear-skin, that had been given to her in my absence, together with a superb Russian gentleman, captain in a regiment of Preobiazinski, whom it seemed had come from the same country as the bear-skin.

He had a self-satisfied air, this captain, as of one who had gone forth in search of—wolves let us say—and had not returned empty handed. But these English ladies are so original.

THE PLAGUE IN INDIA

Conditions of Life Among the Natives The Burning Ghats.

It is partly the way the Hindoos live, and partly their religious customs, that make the plague so terrible. Added to this is the famine, prevalent in many parts of the country, and the fact that so many millions of the natives are always on the verge of starvation, rendering them ready victims to any disease. It is not so much that their abodes, whether house or hovel, are so crowded with human beings, as the utter absence of all sanitary arrangements, and the inmates' utter indifference to them. If their ancestors thus lived without them, so, they, reason why should they wish anything better?

The houses of any pretensions are built around courts, on each of the four sides of which may be seen an open ditch, carrying away the refuse water, and throwing its unhealthful odors into the air. Even the streets of the native quarter of Bombay have these open sewers. In the villages mud-huts with thatched roofs abound, which soaks up all offensive things, but which do not thus vanish. In both places the only disinfectant is the cow-dung, applied freely on floor and wall, sacred as well well as cleansing. Vermin abound. India is the Paradise of rats, for the orthodox Hindoo will not take the life of any animal. The ant is ubiquitous. The Englishman is obliged to sleep with the posts of his bed resting in jars of water. It is these rats and ants that are said to be disseminating the plague to an alarming degree.

In the dry season the men sleep anywhere, under the trees, on the house-top, and even in the dust of the highway. It is a sight to remember to see a village arise in the morning and literally shake off the dust of slumber. Their first operation is to clean their teeth, calling upon the god Ram. They crowd to the wells and bathe by pouring water over their bodies. If a sacred tank is convenient they bathe in it, descending into the pool and partly immersing. The more filthy the water the greater its religious purity. One may see hundreds in the dirty waters of the Hooghly, at Calcutta, any morning of the year. All rivers which flow into the sea are sacred, and are much used for bathing and for cremation. No place in the world has, however, such sanctity as Benares, and no waters are so sacred or so filthy as those which lave this sacred city. Here are half a million idols and thousands of temples; here are princely mansions and squalid hovels. The streets are narrow and crooked and almost impassable. One jostles against the sacred bulls, which have everywhere the right of way; the holy monkeys bound overhead, and the holy crows snatch at some article of wearing apparel. The passer-by slips in the slime of the Ganges brought to be poured over the idols; he breathes the noisome air reeking with the odors of decaying fruit and flowers. The people are incongruous, painful to behold, and the temple courts are thronged with devotees from all parts of India.

They come to Benares to die, assured that thus all their sins will be blotted out, even those who have committed the deadly sin of eating beef. So they come in health to take their chances, they come in sickness with that joyous faith that is better than health. Tney are going to Benares in multitudes at this time of the Black Death. They are brought thither in death, that the smoke of their funeral pyres may mingle with the winds that blow from the River Ganges, and their ashes be mingled with its waters. While thousands are bathing hundreds are burning, and the sick are lying on their charpoys, their feet in the river, waiting death.

The spectacles at the burning ghats are curious. Some of the dead are partly immersed in the Ganges, awaiting their turn to be cremated; others, entirely disrobed on the pyre, await the simple funeral rites and the touch of the funeral torch. Down the steps and through the winding lanes come the bearers of the dead, sometimes preceded by grotesque dancers and sometimes in stately, solemn procession. The dead are in all stages of cremation, while over the dying ashes of wood and humanity linger the relatives to collect the now sacred remains. Above, on a large platform, are crowds of spectators, friends and relatives of the dead, sitting on their heels or squatting in Oriental fashion, while as a background are gray buildings of palace and temple.

The river banks are thronged with devotees, some shivering in the cold waves, (for in winter the water is cold even in India), others dipping it with their hands, drinking it, throwing it over their bodies, and praying with a loud voice. The air is filled with dissonant clamors, ejaculations, and prayers in all the dialects of India. Under huge umbrellas sit the gurus or teachers, listlessly droning to attentive hearers passages from the holy books, while brightly-clad women trip down the steps with silver or golden or brazen trays piled high with fragrant flowers or sweets, which they offer to the goddess Gunga.

SARAH D. HAMLIN.

Edison, the well known inventor, has sent a quantity of war supplies to Cuba for which his company has not been paid. His impression of the veracity of the Cubans is not a lofty one.

LIFE OF A LONDON "EXQUISITE"

Scented Newspapers and Marvelous Broughams of London's Curled Darlings.

In the matter of how the young swells of London live, I have been told some things, have read others, and have seen a little myself from the outside, of course. Recalling the general impression received from these various sources, it seemed to me that here was a chance for the publication of a little handbook under such a title as "How to Spend Money," or "The Science of Extravagant Living," or "The Art of Being Rich."

I think that I may safely say that the wealthy young men of the Western hemisphere have not as yet mastered even the rudiments of this "Science" or "Art," or whatever it is. People of the United States have their own convictions in regard to male millionaires. They must possess and they must do certain things, and generally the millionaire lives up to the popular ideal. With us of America great wealth is always associated with yachts—steam and otherwise—horses, town and county clubs, packs of foxhounds, polo ponies, brownstone fronts in New York and such things. If you will pause and consider you will see that most of the things in which the rich young American delights are of an athletic or sporting nature.

Now behold how the Londoner of the same type and class orders his life; reflect upon the delicacy of it, the refinement of it—refinement as Mr. Kipling would say—to six places decimals. I knew a London boy once—three years out of Oxford—who caused his morning papers to be scented with the perfume of iris. It is hard to believe this, perhaps, but it is literally true nevertheless. He went even further than this, did my Oxford lad. Observe: I was talking with him one morning about this very subject of the daily press, and he said, pressing an electric button with his foot:

"I'll show you now how to read the papers."

His valet brought the papers, scented with iris, as I said, but ironed stiff and crinkly. The advertisements had been cut out, and the sporting articles marked in blue pencil. We started off with this as a beginning, and he told me how he lived. Says he:

"In the matter of tobacco, now, I prefer the cigarette to anything else. I get mine from Constantinople twice a week, and by the way, my cigarettes are scented with Haschis,—very difficult to obtain, believe me—medical order absolutely necessary, and all that. There are very few dealers, however, who can be trusted to mix it with the tobacco so as to produce the maximum enjoyment with the minimum of harm. Here," he continued, "is my bedroom." We went in. "Bed," he remarked, laconically, stabbing his index finger toward the huge piece of furniture; "Nothing extraordinary, only the sheets, pillow-cases and night gown are silk—silk's a bit heavy, too," he observed, running his finger over it, "Change 'em every night and have 'em sent to France, South of France, to be laundried, quite the thing with us chaps now-a-days to send linen and things to France. Let's go see my blooming tailor."

We rode to his blooming tailor's in his blooming brougham, and he called my attention en route to the devices and appliances of the affair. Pneumatic tires, electric lamps—on the inside, mark you—electric foot warmers, a row of a dozen ivory knobs, like the stops on the consol of an organ, by which he communicated with the coachman, a small dressing-case, cigar box, card case, mirror, flask and the like.

As we alighted at the tailor's—I suppose it was in Bond street somewhere—he said:

"We," that is his class, you understand, "visit our tailor's daily—great institution the London tailor. See now," he piloted me about the great institution, "separate departments for the trousers, waistcoat and coat. Coatman never makes trousers, waistcoat-man never dreams of making coat, and see here, model of my figure, life size, so as I can judge effect myself."

Coming from the tailor's we went to lunch at his dining club, which he and his "set" maintain. For the pair of us—and we had nothing lavish, either—the check was four pounds ($20). He told me the butter, even the cooking butter, came from Paris, and that the asparagus, (we were in October) was the same description and had been procured by the same methods as that eaten by the Czar during his Paris visit in October last.

For the first time in several years Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett is occupying her home in Washington, and is a conspicuous figure in society. She has grown stouter during her residence on the other side of the water, and her hair, always her chief beauty, is thickly sprinkled with white, but she seems to have lost none of her vivacity, and is as gay and enthusiastic as she was at the beginning of her successful career twenty years ago. Her play, "A Lady of Quality," is quite ready, but she has locked horns with Mr. Frohman over its production, all on account of the leading lady. Mrs. Burnet has chosen for the principal role Miss Eleanor Calhoun, a young and beautiful woman, if only a mediocre actress, and one of Mrs. Burnet's intimate friends. Mr. Frohman has selected Miss Olga Nethersole to fill the role, and won't have any one else.

Madame Calve, the Metropolitan prima donna, lives on the top floor of the Plaza Hotel and is the most difficult of all the great singers to see. Her manner is a combination of ingenuousness and of very obvious acting, and she has a way of welcoming her guests with extravagant histrionic dignity which is quite amusing. She announces her intention of going to Germany next year for the purpose of learning German in order to sing Wagnerian opera.

Herbert Barnum Seeley, whose dinner has made him an international notoriety, is a grandson of the great P. T. Barnum. His mother was the showman's favorite daughter, and when she was young she sang in vaudeville and assisted in gathering certain of the parental dollars. Young Seeley inherited nearly half a million from the Barnum estate, the income of which went to pay for the recent revel.

ONE KIND OF "NEW WOMAN"

A Girl of Twenty Who Has the Frame of a Sandow.

I don't remember now exactly what I expected to see. A huge red-faced woman, no doubt, with a trumpeting voice and calloused hands, bull-necked and aggressive. I surely thought she would be big, very tall and broad—especially broad—and I imagined she would have the condescension, the vaguely contemptuous manner that goes with great physical strength. A "female Sandow" should have such attributes. You would fancy yourself defrauded if she didn't.

So with this and that and the other I was taken all aback with the sight of Alcide Capitaine. She is positively small—you would call her a "little" woman—and, ignorant of who she was, you might even yourself assume the certain condescension of manner that men—some men—display when talking to the "weaker" sex. You would do this until Alcide (or whatever her real name may be) allowed you to make the attempt to clasp her upper arm—at first with one hand, then, failing in this, with two—the web of flesh between thumb and index stretched to its utmost. A man must have large hands to do the thing, for the bicep measurement is fifteen and a half inches. Think of fifteen and a half inches of pure muscle, tough and hard as sole-leather!

I asked Alcide Capitaine how she came to choose the profession of a gymnast. I knew what her answer would be. Invariably they tell me the same thing:

"My father was in the profession before me," says she, "and I began to exercise and practice when I was three years old."

It's always like this with acrobats and gymnasts and wire-walkers and the like. Their fathers or families were "in the business" before them, and they took to it naturally. You wonder how their fathers came to do the thing. There must have been An Original Acrobat somewhere, some man—it couldn't have been a woman—who arose one morning and said:

"Go to; I likewise will be a gymnast" (or acrobat, or high-wire man, as the case might be), and forthwith was one, and begat a family to follow his profession.

"I commenced," said Miss Capitaine (or perhaps one should say Mlle. Capitaine) "by imitating my father, just as an ordinary child might imitate anything it saw its parents do. I slept in a curtained bed, I remember, with tassels at the end of long cords, and I would try to do the things I had seen my father do at the theatre, tumbling and balancing and all that."

"And he saw that you were clever at it and encouraged you," I suggested.

Apparently not. Capitaine Senior was not particularly anxious that she should elect such a profession as his.

"My people didn't like the idea," said she, in reply. "It was all very well when I was little, but when I grew older they tried to talk me out of it, but I liked it and kept at it, till they let me have my way—and here I am."

It is not easy to talk to the female Sandow, or rather it is not easy to get her to talk. It is not only from a physical point of view that she is puzzling. I have talked to plenty of actresses of approved fame and personal reputation who were a deal more at their ease than this girl who has spent the nineteen years of her life in the performance of muscular feats. The fact of the matter is that Capitaine is a quiet, retiring sort of little body. She has received the education of a gymnast, and developed certain sets of muscles to a wonderful extent, but otherwise she hardly differs from the average Italian girl of twenty or thereabouts.

Another point. Capitaine, though small, is marvelously well-proportioned. I managed to suggest as much to her.

"That's from my dancing."

"Dancing?"

"I dance every morning just to develop my leg muscles.

"Waltz?" (Imagine waltzing with a woman with such a waist and back and arms!)

"No; skirt dancing and that sort."

I fancy she must dance admirably. At least she knows all about skirt dancing. A day later I saw her in the wings of the Orpheum, where she had come to supervise the arrangement of her trapeze, etc., and she permitted herself to indulge in more than one sarcasm as to the dancing of one of Mr. Kiralfy's girls, who was practicing a new step.

"There is one thing that I am rather proud of," said Capitaine to me on this same occasion.

I became attentive.

"See now," (she was in trapeze costume) "when I let my arm fall naturally, there is nothing extraordinary about it, is there?"

I have seen stouter arms at many an evening function; plenty, even, that were not so smooth.

"But when I muscle up," she went on, "as now, for instance——"

Really it took one's breath away. Tom Sharkey himself would be proud of that arm.

It is the same with Capitaine's back and shoulders. The muscles do not show when she stands "at ease." But when she straightens up, and bends up her arms and throws back her shoulders, the flesh dimples deep, with sudden hollows and ridges, and the knotted muscles go rippling and sliding down over the hard, firm bones, till you wonder and wonder how this thing came to be—this superb, marvelous anatomy—this frame of a pugilist in the person of a girl not yet out of her teens.

MUSCLES OF THE BACK AND SHOULDERS
Photo by Marceau

MISS ALCIDE CAPITAINE
The Graceful Gymnast Who is Now Appearing at the Orpheum

SHOWING THE BICEPS AND CHEST MEASURE
Photo by Marceau

WHAT THE DOCTORS SAY OF HER

Capitaine, the wonderful little athlete of the Orpheum, is far more a "perfect woman" than Sandow was a "perfect man." She is more graceful, more trim and lithe and finely proportioned. Besides which a thorough medical examiantion by Dr. Franklin Shiels of heart and lungs proves those organs to be absolutely sound. As much could not be said of Sandow, whose heart was notoriously weak. The following are some of the results of Dr. Sheil's examination.

Capitaine has spent nineteen years in her profession, constantly undergoing the most violent physical exercise, such as lifting weights, tumbling and gymnastic exhibitions of all kinds; yet as far as can be seen there is no evidence of any over straining or undue exertion. She has never missed a performance on account of ill health, fatigue or accident, which is rather a remarkable record. The normal condition of the heart, so rare with weight lifters is explained by the fact that Capitaine is not only very regular in her habits, but also takes two months' complete rest every summer, as a precaution against an exhaustion of reserve energy.

Her measurements are: Height five feet three inches, neck thirteen inches in circumference, waist twenty-two, chest forty——which is a taper enough surely—hips thirty-nine, biceps fifteen and a half, forearm ten—only—calf thirteen and a half, thigh nineteen and a half. One interesting feature of these measurements is the extreme smallness of the waist and forearm when compared to the size of the biceps and the upper arm.

The framework upon which this enormous tissue of muscle is stretched is thoroughly and distinctly feminine, the bones small and delicate. It is this peculiarity combined with the perfect symmetry in the construction of the muscular tissue that renders Capitaine so graceful. There is not the slightest danger that she will ever become muscle-bound. The muscles are not bunchy but are evenly and proportionately developed throughout the whole extent, and lay close to the bone.

Dr. Shiels finds that the most powerful of Capitaine's muscles are the trapezius, the right and left deltoids, the pectoral muscles and all those muscles arising from the force and acting upon the arms. There is no adipose tissue, Capitaine is made of bone and muscular fibre and of very little else. The hands and feet are noticeably small, the skin of the face clear and healthy as a child's.

A LOVE SONG.

The gay lark loves the lilting time
That comes with dawn of day;
The sunlight loves the murmuring stream
That runs in woodland way;
The bluebell loves the ferny brake,
The lily loves the limpid lake,
The white star loves the pale moon's wake,
And I love thee.

As long as rippling streamlets run
From mountains to the sea,
As long as whispering breezes blow
In sighing symphony;
As long as skies are overhead,
Until the days and years are fled—
Aye, when the moon and stars are dead—
Shall I love thee.

—HENRY SEBASTIAN KIRK.

General de Boisdeffre enjoys to a great degree the confidence of the government and political element. He has been sent on two occasions as special Ambassador to St. Petersburg and may be said to owe much of his eminence to his intimacy with the Russian Imperial court. His chances of gaining supreme command of the French army depend very much on the relations existing between Paris and St. Petersburg. He entertains a high opinion and regard for the Emperor of Germany—a sentiment based on personal acquaintance. On the occasion of the visit of the Emperor William to the Czar of Russia, General de Boisdeffre made his acquaintance and they entered into the most friendly relations. They discussed all military matters, and now keep up a correspondence on the subject of war tactics, etc.

R. ALLEN.

A GLADIATORIAL POSE
Photo by Marceau

PASSING OF "LITTLE PETE"

The Funeral Rites Held Over a Famous Chinaman.

When a man is vulgar he is vulgar according to fixed standards. He conforms to a certain common type of vulgarity; but every woman is vulgar in her own way. There is the brutally vulgar woman, the meanly vulgar, the self-consciously vulgar, the brazenly vulgar, and the modestly vulgar. There is the vulgar woman who knows that she allows herself to be vulgar and is ashamed of it, and there is the woman who is proud of her vulgarity, and calls it liberty and equality and fraternity and democracy and independence and I don't know what, and who trumpets her vulgarity to the four winds of heaven, and is only ashamed when men fail to take notice.

That is the kind of women who was most in evidence at the funeral ceremonies of a certain wealthy man, known by the name of L. F. Peters, who was shot to death this month of January, 1896.

Perhaps I have seen a more disgusting spectacle than that which took place at "Little Pete's" funeral ceremonies, but I cannot recall it now. A reckless, conscienceless mob of about two thousand, mostly women, crowded into the Chinese cemetery. There was but one policeman to control them, and they took advantage of the fact. The women thronged about the raised platform and looted everything they could lay their hands on; China bowls, punk, tisue paper ornaments, even the cooked chickens and bottles of gin. This, mind you, before the procession had as much as arrived.

The procession itself was rather disappointing—from a picturesque point of view. Perhaps one expected too much. There might possibly have been a greater display of color and a greater number of bands. Nor were there any of the street ceremonies in front of Pete's Chinatown residence that you had been told to look for. The company of chief mourners, in blue and white cambric, was too suggestive of a campaign club to be very impressive, and the members of the carriage orchestras refused to take themselves very seriously, seeming more interested in the crowd of spectators than in the funeral cortege.

At the cemetery, however, things were different. There was a certain attempt here at rites and observances and customs that would have been picturesque and striking had it not been for the shameless, the unspeakable shamelessness of the civilized women of the crowd.

A few mandarins came first, heads no doubt of the Sam Yup, one of them in particular, with all the dignity and imposing carriage of a senator. He was really grand, this mandarin, calm, austere, unmoved amidst this red-faced, scrambling mob. A band of women followed, the female relatives of the deceased.

"Here comes his wife!" screamed half a dozen white women in chorus.

Pete's widow was wrapped from head to foot in what might have been the sackcloth of the Bible stories; certainly it had the look of jute. A vast hood of the stuff covered her whole face, and was tied about the neck. Two other women, similarly dressed, but without the hood, were supporting her. A mat was unrolled, and after the white women had been driven back from the platform by the main strength of two or three men, not yet lost to the sense of decency, the mourners kneeled upon it, forehead to the ground, and began a chant, or rather a series of lamentable cries and plaints. "Ai yah, ai-yah-yah."

A gong beat. A priest in robes and octagon cap persistently jingled a little bell and droned under his breath. There was a smell of punk and sandal wood in the air. The crouching women, mere bundles of clothes, rocked to and fro and wailed louder and louder.

Suddenly the coffin arrived, brought up by staggering hack-drivers and assistants, a magnificent affair, heavy black cloth and heavy silver appointments. The white women of the crowd made the discovery that Little Pete's powder-marked face could be seen. They surged forward in the instant. The droning priest was hustled sharply; he dropped his little bell, which was promptly stolen. The mourners on the mat, almost under foot, were jostled and pushed from their place, or bundled themselves out of the way hurriedly to escape trampling. Just what followed after this I do not know. A mob of red-faced, pushing women thronged about the coffin and interrupted everything that went on. There was confusion and cries in Cantonese and English; a mounted policeman appeared and was railed at. There can be no doubt that more ceremonies were to follow, but that those in charge preferred to cut short the revolting scene. The coffin was carried back to the hearse, a passage at length being forced through the crowd, and the Chinese returned to the city. Then the civilized Americans, some thousand of them, descended upon the raised platform, where the funeral meats were placed—pigs and sheep roasted whole, and chickens and bowls of gin and rice. Four men seized a roast pig by either leg and made off with it; were pursued by the mounted police and made to return the loot. Then the crowd found amusement in throwing bowlfuls of gin at each other. The roast chickens were hurled back and forth in the air. The women scrambled for the China bowls for souvenirs of the occasion, as though the occasion were something to be remembered.

The single mounted police, red-faced and over-worked, rode his horse into the crowd and after long effort at last succeeded in thrusting it back from the plundered altar and in keeping it at a distance. But still it remained upon the spot; this throng, this crowd, this shameless mob, that was mostly of women. There was nothing more to happen, the ceremony was over, but still these people stayed and looked.

This was the last impression one received of Little Pete's funeral—a crowd of two thousand men and women, standing in a huge circle, stupidly staring at the remains of a roasted pig.

FRANK NORRIS.

"LITTLE PETE" IN THE BOSOM OF HIS FAMILY

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Major Delaney of the Supervisors is impressed with himself and his high office. He is a born figurehead and as proud as a wooden Indian on wheels. He is docile as a sheep to the hoot of the herder, and from that sheep there hangs a tale, told by Dr. Clinton, inviting a guffaw.

Drs. Rottanzi and Clinton both wanted to be chairman of the Finance Committee. Clinton and Delaney were friends. On the afternoon before the caucus Clinton called on Delaney to ask for his support against Rottanzi. "Do you be thinkin' they'd be after appintin' that crazy Dago chairman of the Finance Commitay?" protested the polite major. "Why, sir," he continued, "it 'ud be an insult to the community." Clinton was pleased. "I'll tell you what we must have," he suggested. "We must have an open ballot and let every man announce his vote." Delaney was pleased. "The very thing," he said. "Sure we must show the boss upu an' not let that crazy Dago get away wid us." That night the third man called in the caucus was Delaney, and his vote was for Rottanzi, his "crazy Dago."

***

Another story about Delaney. Colonel O'Conner of the ————regiment got his young men to vote for Delaney, who is something of a military hero himself, albeit only a major. After election O'Connor said: "Now, Delaney, I have only one request to make. You can even up that little score with me if you will see that the horses of the Patrol are stabled at Hirst's place on Mission street."

"Oh, sure, that'll be all right," protested the major. In due course Delaney was made chairman of the Health and Police Committees. The very first night he sent the horses to Hirst's stables. Next morning early Hirst was rung up and the wire was tremulous and resonant with the Delaney brogue. "Is that you, Misther Hirst, sor? Will you sind thim horses back to St. George's stables widout delay?" "What's the matter?" asked Mr. Hirst, who did not like that way of doing business. "Something's the matter that I can't tell you be telephone" came in troubled waves over the wire. Later Colonel O'Connor called on Delaney and asked him to explain. "Colonel, dear, I'm a good friend of yours, as good as ever, and that's no lie," pleaded the major, "but," he went on, "there do be things in politics a man can't explain."

***

The guild of Arts and Crafts is dead— that is, all but dead. One lonely member survives to carry all the burden of the imposing name. The hardy survivor is W. D. Armes of the State University, recently the protagonist of the Oakland library trustees in controversy with Father Yorke. The guild was or might have been a good thing in proper hands, but as might have been expected, the usual tribe of poseurs and fakirs got possession and wanted to run things. Very soon one of our fine old-fashioned California squabbles developed, and clique met clique in slanderous strife. Latterly the guild was little more than an organized row. Louis Lisser, a musician who had been elected president, doubtless to promote harmony, resigned. Soon afterwards Willis Polk sent in his regrets; others followed suit, until at last Armes, unterrified, is left like the elderly naval man who swallowed in detail the crew of the Nancy brig. There is, it might seem, a place for such an institution in San Francisco if the poseurs who like to fasten themselves like a blister on anything that promises advertising, can be squelched.

***

Rupert Schmid is the one sculptor in California and John Stanton is his prophet. If by chance you have never heard of Mr. Schmid, that is your misfortune, and probably your fault besides. If, peradventure again, you have been laboring under the delusion that there are others, it is time to consider and purge your bosom of such perilous stuff. There is, as you must be aware, a comfortable fund provided for the erection of a fountain on the corner of Market and Battery streets to commemorate the virtues of the late Mervyn Donahue, after the fashion of other eminent persons whose good deeds are writ in water and cast in iron so that their memory may not perish from the earth unless, for example, they experience the fate of the effigy of good Dr. Coggswell, tumbled from its pedestal by an infuriated people. There will, of course, be no objection to the surrender of space on the leading thoroughfare for monumental purposes, the cemeteries being already uncomfortably crowded, and if there are corners enough to go round—assuming that corners can go round—let the municipality hasten to invite the prominent citizen to choose. There was a time when St. Paul's cathedral in London was devoted to this pious purpose, and one may still see on the walls of that fane the effigy of that distinguished Mayor Threebottles, or words to that effect, ascending to heaven seated on a stone cloud. Imagine, for instance, the noble artistic possibilities of an image of Nick Luning sailing heavenward on the wings of an ironclad mortgage.

***

In pursuance of this devout purpose Mr. Stanton has turned over to Mr. Schmid the work of making the designs for the Donahue memorial fountain. As Mr. Stanton knows that Mr. Schmid is the only sculptor in California, he did not think it worth while to ask for designs or ideas from Douglas Tilden or Marion Wells, or, in fact, anybody but Schmid. The only Schmid may be congratulated on the judgment of Stanton, which is not expressed in fancy, but in good red gold.

***

Nevertheless and notwithstanding the decisive Stanton, who dispenses indifferent justice with a light heart, Douglas Tilden is doing some particularly good work on the Native Sons' monument, for which James Phelan foots the bills. The work shows genius, and will be an ornament to the town. But he is not Schmid.

***

Possibly you may have heard of old Donald Davidsonu, one of the eccentric characters of old Tuolumne, but shrewd withal for his eccentricities, usually turned up on the right side of the ledger. He owned the thing like two million dollars before it was shut down. There was a strong rivilry in the early days between the owners of the Grizzly and the Soulby mines. Both were paying properties and once the president of the Grizzly bantered old Davidson for a bet on the output. Davidson was game and the figure was $10,000 on the production for a single month. The time was named and both mines were worked for all they were worth. At the end of that time the Soulby cleaned uup $40,000 and the Grizzly $28,000. Davidson pocketed his $10,000 bonus on the month.

***

Now it seems that the Soulby is to be re-opened after a long quiescence. It was thought to have been exhausted, but certain Scotch capitalists believe otherwise and are backing their opinion liberally. John Sharswood is the man who induced the money to come here and he was assisted in his argument by the success of the Jniper mine, which likewise has been developed by Glasgow coin. Sharswood pushed down further on the lead and showed something very good in sight. He has moreover taken hold of the Grizzly with excellent prospects.

***

It must be obvious that all this recent mining development of which we hear so much from the Sierra, means a great deal more than the immediate dollar dug out of the ground. It means for one thing, the exploitation of the tremendous waste water power of the magnificent tumbling rivers of the mountains which, converted into electricity, will supply power and heat capable of transmission to future manufacturing centres. For instance, the California Exploration Company is now constructing an electric plant on the mother lode with a capacity of six thousand horse-power. There is waste power enough in the Sierra to supply a dozen big manufacturing cities.

Hill People of Central India, whom the Plague Most Affects

A Starving Indian
From "The Sketch"

Street Scene in the Native Quarter

Burning Dead Corpses of the Plague at the Ghat, Benares

The Burning Ghat: Cremating a Plague Victim

IN THE PLAGUE DISTRICTS OF CENTRAL INDIA

A COTILLION OF THE ENTRE NOUS CLUB IN THE MAPLE HALL OF THE PALACE HOTEL

From a flashlight photograph by The Elite

IN SOCIETY.

Entertainments and Happenings in Town and Out.

Mrs. Stanford's reception in honor of Bishop Newman brought out the oldest set, and was very imposing socially. So few of the first generation of San Franciscans survive that it is seldom one sees the people who gathered at her invitation. It seems a pity that the Stanford mansion is not oftener opened for hospitality, for it is inimitably adapted for entertaining. Those magnificent apartments, opening into one another in a splendid series of spacious parlors, accommodate an immense gathering. The guests wandered from room to room examining the treasures of bijouterie and the fine canvases which adorn the richly decorated walls—canvases which are rarely on view. The floral decorations for the occasion were magnificent. Mrs. Stanford received in a rich black brocade trimmed with black lace. She wore some magnificent diamonds from her collection of jewels, which, I am told, is the best on the coast. Mrs. Newman made a most picturesque figure in black velvet and Duchesse lace. She is an impressive-looking lady, whose snow white hair, arranged pompadour style, gives her the aspect of a matron of the age of Louis Quatorze.

The wretched weather of the past few weeks has precipitated a luxuriant crop of colds. I hear of innumerable attacks of la grippe, besides aches and ailments of all other varieties. Mrs. Jimmie Robinson is ill with typhoid fever. I regret to learn Mrs. Tallant's child succumbed to an attack of diphtheria, and that the Von Schroeders' little boy is also quite ill. Miss Helen Wagner is quite sick. Mrs. Julius Kruttsnicht sent out invitations for a luncheon the other ady, but she was so ill that she had to ask a friend to receive for her. Then there was Miss Frances Curry's tea last Saturday afternoon. Though Miss Curry is a very popular girl, the affair was not nearly so well attended as I had anticipated, owing to the number of girls who are confined to their rooms with the prevailing malady.

MRS. LEO F MEYERS
NEE MISS MARTHA SHAINWALD

The last meeting of the Saturday Evening Class was the most successful it has had this winter. There was a big gathering of young people and quite a delegation of young matrons. Mr. James Bishop and Miss Van Vlack led, and introduced one new figure, a football formation, which was rather more novel than successful. The football appeared minus its original decorations of blue and gold ribbons. It seems that an enterprising Stanford boy robbed it of these adornments on the ground of undue preference. The question of who the belle was is one of individual preference, but to my mind Miss Bertha Dolbeer, who was attired in yellow satin, looked particularly stunning, and rather carried off the honors. The Misses Moody, Miss Pratt of Fort Mason, and Miss Ethel Dickens were all notably well gowned, and the recipients, also, of much attention. There is considerable complaint about the music. It seems to be a bit fast for the taste of most people.

Miss Salisbury has quite recovered from her attack of fever and was entertained at a luncheon of the University Club Wednesday noon by Miss Mary Eyre. There is much relief among the members of the Friday Fortnightly over the abandonment of the domino mask idea. Masks under the most favorable circumstances are not comfortable. Lieutenant Bent and Miss Ida Gibbons led the dance.

Little has been said about the performance of "Cast" which is to be given some time in February at the Bush Street Theater by certain ambitious amateurs. The performance is in aid of the Children's Hospital and the Armitage Orphanage for Boys. A good deal of interest is centered in the performance. Miss Leila Burton, Miss Rose Hooper, and Messrs. Frank Mathieu, Frank Norris, and Charles Dickman are to have the leading roles.

Among the important coming events is the marriage of Miss McKenna and Mr. Peter Martin, which has been delayed by the illness of Mr. Martin, who is now taking the rest cure. If he is sufficiently recovered the marriage will be celebrated before Lent, but will be a very quiet affair, in consequence of the recent death of Mrs. Peter Donahue.

The week has been notable for the number and luxury of its weddings. On Monday Mr. Hugo Keil and Miss Teenie Goodall were married at the Goodall mansion, on McAllister street. It was a very quiet wedding, the families alone being represented. After their honeymoon the happy pair are to reside at Mr. Keil's villa at Belvedere, which, in the meantime, Willis Polk is rearranging for the comfort of the bride.

It was an orange blossom wedding, the ceremony which united Miss Lizzie Carroll and Mr. William Whittier. The happy pair were made one underneath the boughs of an orange tree sent up from Southern California by Mr. Cal Byrne. The odor of orange was in the air, a bit oppressive perhaps, but thoroughly characteristic of Hymen. Every one was deliciously happy, bride and bridegroom, parents on both sides, friends, relatives, and bridesmaids. The latter rejoiced in the possession of lovely little pearl pins from Miss Carroll, while Milton Latham, the best man, sported a fleur de lis diamond pin, the gift of Mr. Whittier. General Patricio Murphy did the honors with the air of a Spanish grandee, and altogether the affair was solemnized with tremendous eclat. Miss Carroll made a very pretty bride and her gown was charming. As for presents, they are worth an additional chapter. They are really magnificent. From Whittier pere came a great chest of silver, made in New York, with forks and spoons of gold. Miss Mattie Whittier, herself soon to become a bride, donated a silver tea and coffee set of the latest style. From General Patricio Murphy came a beautiful diamond and emerald ring, and from Mrs. Carroll a diamond crescent.

The Hotel Colonial was the scene of a very interesting wedding on Wednesday night—that of Miss Martha Shainwald and Mr. Leo Myers of Auckland, New Zealand. The ceremony was performed in the apartments of the bride, the happy pair standing under a Sabbath lamp which has been in the Shainwald family for nearly three hundred years. Only the very intimate friends witnessed the ceremony, but afterwards there was a reception in the parlors of the hotel. The young couple stood under a bower of pink almond blossoms and received the felicitations of their friends. These congratulations were generous and emphatic, as Miss Shainwald has been one of the most helpful and is one of the most popular girls in her set, and everyone in her circle is happy at her happiness. She was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Jack Shainwald and the Misses Alice and Florence Greenbaum. Her gown was of white satin with two skirts of tulle, caught on one side with a bunch of orange blossoms. The high corsage was also of tulle made into a mass of tiny ruffles with a huge white satin bow and orange blossoms at the sleeves. In the assemblage I noticed Mrs. William Gerstle looking very charming in white taffeta and tulle, topped off with a large picture hat; Mrs. I. N. Walter, in tan cloth trimmed with white satin; Miss Alice Adler, in white cerise velvet; Mrs. R. Shainwald, in white and black chiffon, and Mrs Mertief, in Prussian blue velvet and silver. Mr. and Mrs. Myers are to spend their honeymoon at Del Monte, and will leave for Auckland on the Monowai February 4th.

There was a great deal of interest in the nuptials of Miss Ehrmann and Mr. Frank, who were married Thursday evening in the rooms of the San Francisco Verein. The affair was so very distinctly a love match, though in that particular it did not differ any from the others which I have mentioned. It was a very happy pair, however, that joined hands under the usual bell of floral blossoms. The bride was magnificently gowned. Her dress was of cream satin covered with cream Brussels net and a full skirt ornamented with orange blossoms. Miss Agnes Brandenstein, Miss Ida Son, Miss Grace Hecht, and Miss Olga Sutro were the bridesmaids, and wore gowns of white organdie trimmed with pink ribbon and long streamers behind. After the ceremony there was dancing until supper.

Quite a round of dinners and receptions is offered this week for record. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Steifel had a theater party Friday evening last for their bridesmaids and ushers. On Monday evening Mrs. Morris Greenbaum entertained a number of friends at dinner and later took them to the Baldwin, where they occupied three stage boxes. Miss Sussman had a dinner Saturday night last, at which she entertained some thirty young people. On the previous Friday evening Mrs. Max Levy had a dinner in honor of Miss Shainwald and Mr. Myers. Miss Alice Greenbaum had eighteen of her girl friends to luncheon on Wednesday, and on Tuesday night, at Beethoven Hall, the Laurel Hill Club gave a dance in honor of Mrs. I. Lowenberg, one of its most prominent members.

The budget of the week's gossip from Oakland presents the usual arrangement of old names—the names that occur with such emphatic regularity. There are no special features, but one marks general activity. In Oakland some one is continually doing something, although no one tries very hard to do anything in particular, and the average of activity is far ahead of that on this side of the bay. There is to record the Deux Temps Club's dance at Ebell Hall Tuesday night. The usual crowd of young people gathered in their usual splendor. As leaders there were Mr. Al. Moore and Miss Bernice Landers, one of the debutantes and a decidedly striking looking maiden, at that. Already her popularity is quite marked, and I presume her favor will grow more general as the months elapse. Among the prettiest of the girls present were Miss Nellie De Fremery, Miss Mary Whitney, Miss Lillian Strong, and Miss Carr.

MRS WILLIAM WHITTIER
NEE MISS LIZZIE CARROLL

Though it cannot be said that heiresses are a drug in the Oakland market, it must be admitted they don't get more than their share of attention. There are a dozen damsels highly available from a monetary point of view whose survival in the realm of singleblessedness is rather a reflection on the financial acumen of their partners, though, incidentally, a flattering testimony to their highmindedness. The entrance of a new heiress into the swim, however, will always constitute an event, so the coming-out dinner of Miss Ermina Smith at Claremont on Saturday evening last is entitled to figure among prominent events. Miss Smith is tall and dark and decidedly good looking, vivacious and quick-witted. As is proper for a debutante, she wore white silk. Her mother, Mrs. Smith, wore violet velvet. California violets formed the table decorations, and there were sixteen people of the younger set present.

The Friday Fortnightly was a great success. Mr. Paul Selby and Miss Pauline Fore led, assisted by Miss Hattie Kittridge. There is generally lots of swing to this club's dances, and the last affair was no exception. Miss Fore wore a pale-pink silk waist covered with spangled blue chiffon. Of the assemblage, I particularly noticed Miss Kate Chabot, a tall, striking-looking girl, who wore a pale-blue silk gown very effectively cut. Among the most noticeable of the maidens at the gathering were Miss Gertrude Allen, in white organdie, Misses Florence and Jean Hush, in pink and white silk, Miss Grace Gorrill, in white with pink ribbons, and Miss Etta Havens, in pink silk trimmed with black, an especially effective combination.

There was a pleasant mingling of society and the literati at Miss Bertha Monroe Rickoff's matinee tea on Saturday last. Miss Rickoff has recently shifted her Lares and Penates from Bancroft avenue to a comfortable villa on Channing Way. The house was prettily decorated with violets and greens. There were men and maidens innumerable, quite a number of them from this side of the bay.

"Aladdin, or the Wonderful Lamp," an operatic spectacular in four acts, written by R. C. White, the author of "She," "Little Cinderella," and other successful works, with music arranged and adapted by Max Hirshfield and Carl Martens, will be presented ta the Tivoli Opera House next Saturday evening. Careful preparations, in regard to scenery, costumes and accessories, were being made for this production during the run of "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Guille, the tenor, who sang with Patti here some years ago, has been brought from France by the Orpheum management and will sing for the first time Monday night. Alcide Capitaine, who has more than proved her right to the title of "the perfect woman," and Bessie Clayton, will continue their exposition of unusual female accomplishments.

It will be a gain to all concerned when Schilling's Best teas are so well understood that people and grocers buy and sell them as staples.

We take the risk of your trying them.

A Schilling & Company
San Francisco

59

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

ROYAL is the only baking powder made on scientific principles. Trained chemists in every department. All ingredients must test to standard strength and absolute purity. If you care for your health, or if you study plain, simple, every-day economy, it is imperative that you see to it that no baking powder but the ROYAL enters your kitchen. The low-grade, cheap powders contain alum and lime and injuriously affect the stomach and kidneys.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW-YORK.

THE THEATRES

Modjeska as "Magda"---The German Parent vs. a New Woman.

It is almost impossible to speak of "Madga" and not moralize, for the pivot of it (this question of two standards of morals, a masculine one for men and a feminine one for women) presses very heavily upon the hearts of most upright women, gives the "Sarah Grands" matter for their hysterical farragoes and most men a sour smile and—even sourer thoughts. The gallery, which seems always to have the courage of its convictions, and an earnest desire to make a noise, declares emphatically for an impartial application (to both sexes) of a common standard. It applauds Magda's "new-woman" remarks as loudly as it does "the man who lays his hand upon a woman in aught save kindness," etc. If we put aside this question, which is much too big to be figured out by any one except Time, there is little left to discuss in the story of Magda. It is the history of the disasters brought about by an honorable but tyrannical old formalist, whose uncompromising and dominant nature drove his daughter from her home to the world, where her voice brought her fame (much to papa's disgust) and her suffering development. The chief defect of this deeply interesting though gloomy play is in the time given to explaining its construction. It takes about half an hour for the existing circumstances to be shown—half an hour to tell us that Magda, world-famous, is singing in the town where she was born, that she loves and is loved by by her younger sister, and constantly drives past her old home. Perhaps all this would be less tiresome if the step-mother, "Marie," and the old aunt were made more human and natural than they are at present. However, the first four scenes through with, the story develops coherently and naturally; it grows and is not made, as so often happens. It would be difficult, as every one knows, to put the title role in more skillful hands than Modjeska's. Her work is at once subtle and strong, finished yet vigorous; it is always boldly conceived and delicately carried out, and she can express special emotion, not merely emotion unlabeled, as so many actresses do. There was a striking example of this in the last act, during Magda's terrible scene with her father. In this scene, while threatened with death and facing the pistol, her voice and manner expressed mere grief and terror, but changed when her father fell, apparently lifeless, to the most poignant accents of horror, remorse, and despair. There is a wide range of emotion in this act, and she ran the gamut most discriminatingly. I have been seldom so moved as by the cry she gave as she turned from the rector's confession of love. It was only a little inarticulate sound of suffering and regret, but you felt she was thinking of what might have been, that a vision of what she had lost was pressing upon her poor, distracted brain.

MISS JOLLIFFE
A SAN FRANCISCO GIRL WHO HAS MADE HER DEBUT WITH MODJESKA AT THE BALDWIN THEATER.
Photo by Thors

When you come right down to the facts of the case, I don't believe we could screw up a single tear for Magda's loss of Lonergan's "Dr. Weber, rector." In one or two spots he was very good, indeed (as over the table, in the second act), but the whole was rather lacking in charm and warmth. However, the rector is a superhuman, cloyingly good sort of a person, so we will hope that Mr. Lonergan has better things in store for us.

It distressed me so to see our dear Osbourne in such a revolting role that my powers of observation were blunted, but I've a notion that he was not up to his usual form, and I'm very sure that no villain, however callous and cowardly, could look more unattractive than he did in that dreadful wig and beard. They made his fine head look like that of a Dutch comedian at the Orpheum.

Haworth's "Major Schubert" is, I'm told, a very excellent piece of acting. It must be admitted that it has its merits, nevertheless he fails to arouse in me one atom of sympathy for the Major's attitude, though it is one with which I am not unfamiliar and have always considered somewhat justifiable if not agreeable. Miss Jolliffe looked very handsome in her pretty frocks, and, barring a tendency to be artificial and use a "foix celeste stop," did fairly well, though she seemed to be under the impression that "Mar-r-gda" was a long-lost sweetheart instead of a newly found sister. On the other hand, she looked well—and never at the audience, a fact to be proud of, as so many of her acquaintances were present.

Perhaps the most charming pictures to be seen in "Magda," as given by this company, are the ones made by Miss Perkins (I don't know whether her name is Polly or not, but that she's pretty I do declare) in her German peasant's dress. Her face, with its fringe of fair hair and its clear eyes, looks as innocent as a lullaby and suggests a pastoral idyl.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

DRAMATIC NOTES

"Maritana" is on at the Tivoli this week to fill in time preparatory to the new burlesque "Aladdin." It is sung no better nor much worse than the general run of Tivoli performances, the orchestra, probably, being the best feature. Rhys Thomas sings the part of Don Caesar well, but there is a great deal of room for improvement in his acting. J. J. Raffael as Don Jose gave "In Happy Moments" with an effect that was more pleasing than anything else in the whole performance.

We are to have "The Prodigal Father" at the Columbia next week. It is now a farce comedy, with specialties, and has a number of clever people ,who will do amusing things. The play itself briefly tells the story of a scientist who starts out to explore Africa, but, meeting a serio-comic vocalist, he gives up his journey to chase after the actress. When he comes home he tells his family all about his trip to Africa, and then his troubles begin.

On Monday night next the Modjeska Company gives us "Macbeth," with Madame as Lady Macbeth, and Joseph Haworth as her unfortunate partner. This play goes on Tuesday and Saturday nights, and on Thursday "Adrienne Lecouvreure." To-night, and Wednesday and Friday evenings, and Saturday matinee of next week, "Mary Stuart." It will be seen that Madame Modjeska is here given an opportunity for being very unhappy in several important roles. However, one forgives this, because her sorrow is excellent of its type. Thus far the engagement is quite the most brilliant the Polish actress has played here in many a moon.

MADAME MODJESKA
Photo by Aime Dupont

"All the Comforts of a Home" has drawn large houses to the Alcazar Theater all the week, and the comedy has gone in a manner comendable to the company. It will be played for the last time at the matinees to-day and to-morrow and at the evening performances. Next Monday Gillette's famous comedy-drama, "A Legal Wreck," will be presented.

HORSES

Racing, Breeding, Horse Shows, Drag Hunting

Added interest has now been given to racing by the appearance of the new year's two-year-olds It is needless to say that, for the most part, they have exhibited much greenness, and no youngster has so far made any great impression. The first two-year-old event of the season was brought off last Saturday, and went to the credit of Tennessee by the prowess of Queen Blazes, by Blazes, a son of imp. St. Blaise, and the property of Burns & Waterhouse, the filly just beating Flacon, by imp. Rayon d'Or, another ultra-State bred one. On Gua Nita and Duke of York II have since made their mark, winning first and second, the positions being reversed on each occasion in two races. The honors of the track of late, however, have fallen to the share of the three-year-olds, conspicuous among them being Caspar (imp. St. Andrew—Cuisine), who, by his running last Wednesday, taking a line through David, proved himself about the equal of that good five-year-old, Libertine, at even weights. Another three-year-old son of imp. St. Andrew, The Sinner, made small potatoes of his field on Tuesday last and showed that this coast is fortunate in possessing so good a scion of the great St. Simon, who, with his relatives in the old country, is doing so much to prove the value of the Blacklock strain. St. Andrew in himself is a remarkably stout-looking little horse, and, with the notable success attending his first days of stud life at Rancho del Paso, we may be sure that he will now be well cared for in selecting suitable mates for him during this and following seasons. As it is there has seemingly been the best of judgment shown already in this respect.

The card on Wednesday last was a striking one: Four races of one mile, one 1 1-16 miles, one 1½ miles, all on the flat; besides a hurdle race of 1⅛ miles. Notwithstanding unfavorable weather, there was a big crowd at Ingleside and the track record was improved slightly in the long race, which was run by Morte Fonso, 106 lbs., in 2:38½. The popularity of long-distance racing is unquestionable, and the Ingleside management has shown the right sort of enterprise in making a noticeable departure towards its encouragement. Depend upon it, the public will respond to its attractions, while as to the benefit it must work in raising the class of horses engaged in racing there can be no doubt. The really valuable thoroughbred must have bottom as well as speed, and California will add another wreath to her brow if this feature should become marked in her racing campaign. The State would soon become noted as a field for horses, not only swift, but stout of make and strong of heart. The blood is here and it only remains to develop its most valuable qualities from a horse-breeding point of view.

Looking on at the series of races over a fair distance of ground and at the end of the day taking count of the manner in which they were run last Wednesday, one could not but be struck by the indifferent way in which they were rated by the riders on the whole. A little more practice, and the experience which the boys will derive therefrom, must alter this, so that we should have an improvement, not only in the class of horses racing, but in jockeyship also, if the long-distance movement goes on and prospers.

Salvation, 5 years, has confirmed his right to be considered the best of Salvator's get to date by winning with top weight, 115 lbs., his first time out this winter. He is at present rather on the big side, and if his understandings hold out in front, he will, no doubt, show himself capable of winning again before long. He is a remarkably bloodlike looking horse and is stamped, as are all of his sire's progeny, with the beauty of forehand, for which the old horse is so remarkable.

The future of racing, as controlled by the law of the State, has become a question before the Legislature, and the doings at Sacramento should be watched by all interested in the sport. As long as the interests of true sport are studied, no one can have cause for complaint; but there must always be a fear that the faddists, who can see nothing in racing but the inevitable gambling adjunct and its evils, will work mischief to one of the greatest enjoyments man possesses. They are not fair-minded, and therefore dangerous, if they get power.

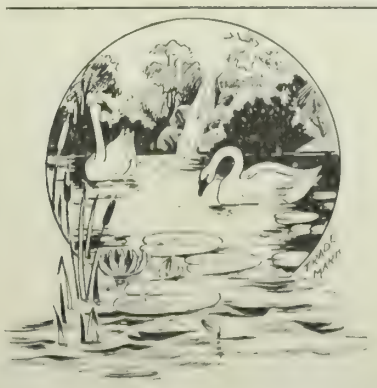
BENEDICT.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

REASONS FOR USING
Walter Baker & Co.'s
Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.



QUEEN LILY SOAP
BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE
Patronize Home Industry

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION
. . . REGARDING THE . . .
Ladies' Grill-Room
. . OF . .
The Palace
Direct entrance from Markt Street. Open until Midnight

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital actually paid up in cash - - | $1,000,000 00 |
| Deposits December 31, 1895 - - | 30,727,586 59 |
| Reserve Fund - - - - - - | 750,000 00 |
| Guaranteed Capital - - - - - | 1,200,000 00 |

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. HOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

H. D. LAWRIE, A. J. CARMANY, Managers

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
91 Montgomery Street

GREATNESS OF HUGO

A New Biography of the Eminent Frenchman.

How very important a figure in the literary history of France the author of "Les Miserables" succeeded in being, one learns from "A Memorial History of Victor Hugo" (Estes & Lauriat). His was a superb genius; he was great merely by the exercise of his splendid faculties. It was not the extraordinary capacity for taking pains that converted his poems, novels, and dramas into masterpieces; it was not for the polishing that his phrases shone. No; it was because they were the expressions of a great brain. Literature that revolutionizes an art is rare, but rarer still is the book or play which upturns both art and politics. We are told in the biography the story of the evolution of "Hernani" and Marion Delorme.

As soon as Hugo renounced the hope of having "Cromwell" acted, he began "Marion Delorme." The first line of this drama in rhymed verse was penned on June 1, 1829; on the 24th the piece was completed. The fourth act had been written between sunrise and sunrise. The title at first was "Un duel sous Richelieu." The author read it in the presence of an assembly which included Balzac, Delacroix, Musset, Dumas, Vigny, Sainte-Beuve, and Merimee. The reading of the play at the Comedie Francaise was as great a success as it had been at the poet's home; but the report of censors recommended its prohibition. Hugo pleaded his cause before the Minister, M. de Martignac, and finally, before the King himself. M. de Martignac reminded him that "Le Mariage de Figaro" had been fatal to the old monarchy, and Charles X., in an interview which forms the subject of a poem in "Rayons et Ombres," objected that there was "one terrible act" in the drama. The King, however, caused the Minister to offer the poet a pecuniary indemnity, which was at once refused. "Marion Delorme" having been prohibited, the Comedie Francaise needed a new creation without any delay. Accordingly, "Hernani" was begun on August 29, 1829, and finished on September 25th.

It will be noticed that almost all of Victor Hugo's plays were written each in less than a month. The battle which took place in the theatre between the classicists and the romanticists on the production of this drama has been repeatedly described. It is well known that the tremendous success gained by Hugo on this occasion was a literary revolution—the forerunner of a political revolution. The fourth act was irresistible, and the sixth proved "a complete intoxication." Toward the close of the fourth act a publisher hurried the author out of the theatre and into a tobacconist's shop, and, for the sum of ten thousand francs that he had with him, obtained the right to publish the drama in book form. This is the piece of which, when it was read at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Secretary of the Ministry said, "It's stupid." The dispute concerning the merits of "Hernani" provoked many a duel in France, and, in Toulouse, a young man lost his life. After the fall of Charles X. "Marion Delorme" was brought out at the Porte Saint Martin. Again there was a battle in the theatre, and again the poet won a brilliant victory, but this time the romanticists were divided and there was a riot in the streets.

The history and the gossip of history that bears on "Les Miserables" takes interest from the splendor of the work, for, despite its frequent perilous wobble on the line between the sublime and the ridiculous, it is nevertheless one of the great prose epics of the century.

"Les Miserables" was to have been published somewhere about 1848. The original title was "Les Miseres," and the first part was called "The Bishop's Manuscript." Years passed. The book received considerable development. "The entire work," wrote the author, in August, 1861, "revolves around one central character. It is a kind of planetary system circling around a giant soul, which is an incarnation of all the social misery of the times." The last pages were finished in Hauteville House, Guernsey, at the beginning of 1862. The first part, "Fantine," appeared on the same day at Brussels, Paris, London, Leipsic, Madrid, Rotterdam, Lisbon, Budapest, Warsaw, and Rio de Janeiro. The Paris edition of twelve thousand copies was sold in twenty-four hours. The novel was quickly translated into the language of every people that reads. A French traveler came across a Russian version in the depths of Tartar Muscovy. Several editions were published in Japanese. During the civil war in the United States, Victor Hugo's romance formed one of the staple sources of intellectual nourishment to the combatants. A special edition was printed for them—"The Volunteer's Edition." In the Netherlands a Dutch translation of "Les Miserables" was read by the pastors in the pulpit in presence of the assembled faithful.

"Les Miserables" was violently criticised. Lamartine denounced it as an epic of the vices. Goethe said it was stupid. Lamartine's words are written from the point of view of the man who believes it the first duty of the artist to point a moral before he attempts to adorn a tale. He is a near relative of the man who condemns "Paradise Lost" because Milton has made Satan his hero.

Nobody is so bold a mark for hostile criticism as Hugo, largely because of the lack of the saving sense of humor which might have protected him from the not infrequent lapses into absurd bathos in his later writings, characterized by a hard, sardonic humor wholly irreconcilable with the occasional tawdry sentimentality of his old age.

THE LITTLE REGIMENT

Stephen Crane's Latest Pen-Pictures of War.

There is a certain breathlessness about Stephen Crane's style that is admirably suited to the character of the events he narrates—rapid, swift-changing impressions, most like the shifting pictures of a kinetoscope running slowly and out of order. Mr. Crane is not a writer so much as a picture maker. He makes one picture and then another, puts them side by side and offers them to view. The relation between these pictures is what creates the interest on the part of the reader. The stories contained in the "Little Regiment" (D. Appleton & Co.) are told in this fashion, especially the initial tale of the two brothers, that gives the name to the volume.

When I read this story it was impossible for me to feel any sense of narration in it. There is hardly any beginning, and it was quite impossible to foresee just when it was going to end. It might have ended anywhere, with any paragraph, after the sixth chapter, and have lost none of its interest

It would be unfair to judge the pen-pictures of the "Little Regiment" as stories in the generally accepted sense of the term. "Studies" is perhaps an insufficient word, but it will serve for want of a better. In each one of these "studies," then, there seems to be two rather distinct elements—the picturesque and the metaphysical. On one side we have the sharp, incisive strokes that hit off the pictures of battle and of sudden death, the bayonet charges, the skirmishes and the killings of the war, while on the other is the painfully minute and detailed dissection of emotion, motive and purpose of the minds of the men involved. As, for instance, this from the "Little Regiment" where the two elements occur in juxtaposition. Dan has just shot a Confederate soldier.

"The man, smitten, lurched forward, while his exploding rifle made a slanting crimson streak in the air, and the slouch hat fell before the body. 'You got that feller, sure enough,' said a comrade to Dan. Dan looked at him absent-mindedly."

The best "study" in the book, from a picturesque point of view, is the last, where we meet Flemming again. The thing is admirably true, with its drunken Swede, its "strangled, tangled" cattle of the burning barn, and its little boy with his shattered idol in the person of the old soldier who confessed to having run. From the analytical, metaphysical standpoint the first "study," the "Little Regiment," is far the best, though one is apt to doubt whether Dan could, or, rather, would have remained so imperturbable in the closing scene. And I am not sure but that Crane has taken up too much space merely to show that in spite of externals the two brothers did care for each other, after all.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are a simple yet most effectual remedy for Coughs, Hoarseness and Bronchial Troubles. Avoid imitations

Recognition from Abroad.

Pierre Klein, proprietor of the Mira Valle Vineyard, has just received a diploma, gold medal, and a beautiful clasp, suspended by a ribbon, representing the Goddess of Health, which were awarded to him at the International Association's Exhibition for the Progress of Hygiene, at Brussels, Belgium. They are beautiful pieces of work, and speak well for the purity and quality of wines for which they were awarded. They can be seen at the office and depot of the Mira Valle Vintages, 604½ Geary street.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Sench, proprietors

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Gold enough?

It is somewhat cold in the city and on the coast, but not so at BYRON HOT SPRINGS—the weather is delightful—regular Spring weather. No fogs, no winds—only sunshine. There is a steam-heated hotel, with all modern conveniences and a resident physician.

Byron Hot Springs

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

GEO. GOODMAN Patentee and Manufacturer of

Artificial Stone in all its branches

Schillinger's Patent Sidewalk and Gardenwalk a Specialty

Office, 307 Montgomery St., Nevada Block, S. F.

BOWDLEAR'S....

FLOOR WAX

BOWDLEAR'S FLOOR WAX.

Pulverized. For Dancing Floors. Is not white. Will not ball on feet. Will not soil clothes. All ready. Anybody can use it.

The floor must be clean and free from oil. Sprinkle, and the dancers will do the rest
Put up in pound packages . . . . . .

FOR SALE BY

MACK & CO.

9 and 11 Front St. San Francisco, Cal.

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

521-523 Market St., San Fran.

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

Dr. G. A. Danziger

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed . . . . .

HIRSCH-KAHN & Co.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS

IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC

333 KEARNY STREET

SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

Why not

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
Branch Stores: 302 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

IN BOOKDOM

The Reconstructed "Chap Book," with a Note on New Fiction.

The "Chap Book" comes out in enlarged form, twenty-three pages of double columns and two of illustration. This step should go far to place the "Chap Book" in the ranks of the greater periodicals of the country. As a miniature magazine it would have been difficult, even for Mr. Stone, to have made of the little pamphlet anything more than a petite revue pour rire. The larger size lends a certain appearance of seriousness and earnestness to its articles that was apt to be lacking hitherto. The contents of the new "Chap Book" are readable and interesting as ever. One of the most fascinating articles is by Tudor Jenks, who sets out in a rambling way to write an essay without a subject. Mr. Jenks starts with a diatribe on the restrictions imposed by a title, and wanders on through "star clusters" and dice, has something to say as to the greatness of great men as seen by their contemporaries, and winds up with remarks on clothes. It is the kind of drollery that has been called clever fooling, and does very well—for three columns. Other articles are "What Maisie Knew" (Nos. I, II, and III), by Henry James, a charming little sketch of child life, "Pa's Head," a fairly strong story by Katherine Bates, and an essay on essays by Mabie.

A dainty little volume of collected fiction has been published by Herbert Stone. It is made up of some dozen stories that have appeared from time to time in the "Chap-book." The title of the volume is "Chap-book Stories," and such authors as Octave Thanet, Grace Ellery Channing, Maria Louise Pool, and Clinton Ross are represented. Nevertheless, the reader feels that in each of these stories there is something lacking. In "The Appeal to Anne" and "In a Garden" there is a great deal lacking. The stories fail in that quality so essential to all fiction—there is no life in them. They seem to have been written from the closet; their authors biting their pens for their imagination, instead of standing at the window to watch the world go by, recording impressions thereafter.

"The Relation of Literature to Life" (Harper & Brothers) by Charles Dudley Warner is an admirable series of talks on timely matters written down in Mr. Warner's perspicuous style. In the title essay Taine's theory that the literature of a people is the mental history of that people, is considered in another way. Mr. Warner combats Taine's idea throughout many pages of extremely interesting matter and brings up several good arguments to substantiate his statements. In the essay on "Equality" the author points out the evils which have followed the common error of regarding the word as a synonym of "uniformity." In "Simplicity" Mr. Warner's theme is that if literature is to endure it must be born of that which will appeal to the heart. He has something to say on the facts and faiths of later-day writers, as distinct from the real literature that lasts. "Mannerisms, of course, will not deceive us," says Mr Warner, "nor extravagances, nor the straining after effect by the use of coined or far-fetched words and prodigality in adjectives. But style! Yes, there is such a thing as style, good and bad; and the style should be the writer's own and charbook is less an essay than a charming description of a night spent in the Tuilleries garden.

In "Daphne," Marguerite Meringt n takes one to the land of Phyllis and Corydon in a delightfully nonsensical way. "Daphne," or "The Pipes of Arcadia," is a comic opera, or as Miss Merington herself is pleased to call it, "Three Acts of Singing Nonsense." Nonsense it is almost entirely, but it is nonsense of a pleasing kind, and as for merit it had enough to be awarded a prize by the National Conservatory of Music some years ago in a competition which had among its judges such men as Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Eugene Field. Some of the lyrics possess a charm that is truly pastoral, and need only the music that might have blown through the reeds of Arcady to make them doubly delightful. The prologue, which is to be sung with oboe accompaniment before the curtain rises, is in particular, prettily written; it contains both grace and feleing and is probably the most pleasing thing in the whole book. The humor of the piece reminds one very much of Gilbert, and the characters cover ground and the scenes change with a rapidity that may be found only in the land of comic opera. The work is prettily bound in green and gold and is cleverly illustrated by F. T. Richards. (The Century Co., publishers).

THE ENTRE NOUS CLUB

A Successful and Old-Established Social Organization.

The fancy dress ball given last night by the Entre Nous Club draws general attention to a social institution which has been in existence longer than any of its contemporaries. It was organized in the winter of 1890, and is composed of fifty girls and sixty-five men. Since then it has given every year six assemblies and cotillions at the Palace, its parties latterly taking place in the beautiful Maple Room, which is really the handsomest assembly hall on the Pacific Coast.

During all these years the Entre Nous Club has had Sanford G. Lewald as its leader, and a most painstaking and industrious manager he has proved. He is assisted this year by a committee composed of Robt. F. Haight, Herman H. Herzer and Charles W. Spalding. The initial assembly of the club each winter is quite a notable affair, inasmuch as a number of buds always make their debut there, and the institution is is therefore their social sponsor. In the membership are any number of very pretty girls—as may be seen from the full page picture on page 9, taken on the night of December 18th, in the Maple Room.

The Fancy Dress last night was quite a brilliant affair. It was led by S. G. Lewald and Miss Beatrice Hughes. There were some very handsome costumes worn, and the affair went off with great eclat. Following is a list of the club's members:

Wallace Alexander, Lewis Byington, J. Edward Bigelow, Edward J. Banning, Wm. E. Brodersen, A. A. Borlini, Edward G. Carrera, Dr. Herbert Clement, Geo. W. Craig, Geo. A. Christenson, H. E. Carter, J. J. De Haven, Charles Drury, Dr. T. J. Frazer, W. W. Funge, Jr., J. R. Forest, J. Monroe Goewey, Jr., O. H. Hoag, Jr., Fred G. Gantner, J. Oscar Gantner, Egbert Georges, C. A. Groezinger, Herman H. Herzer, Robert F. Haight, Wm. F. Hook, O. M. Howard, Chas. L. Hildebrecht, Geo. W. Haas, Adolph Helk, Chester A. Judah, Robin Jones, Wm. Kelly, Frank H. Kerrigan, John A. Klein, Jas. Korbel, Jas. T. Ludlow, Louis W. Lovey, Walter S. Lyon, W. Y. Loaiza, Arthur H. Meussdorfer, Fred. T. Martens, Jas. W. Merrill, Robert G. Nunan, Ernest R. Pearce, Gaston Roussy, Merritt D. Robinson, Chas. W. Spalding, Wm. E. Smith, J. M. Salazar, Dr. Mark V. Stone, J. J. Van Nostrand, Jas. Proctor Whitney, Henry A. Whitley, J. H. Wheeler, Marshall Woodworth, Fred A. Wieland, Jesse Whited, H. C. Warwick, Wm. Westerfeld, Walter J. Wiley, Robt. Tittel, Clarence E. Musto, R. C. Thompson, Emile Wieland, Henry de la Vega, Wm. G. Barr.

Misses M. T. Alexander, Kate J. Byington, Clara Byington, Marie Babin, Sarah Boyle, Frances Burton, Annie Barrington, Lottie Barrere, Lillian Bowman, Elinor M. Croudace, Mae Folsom, Maud Folsom, Romilda Frapolli, Mizpah Friederich, Charlotte Fricke, Charlotte Gruenhagen, Albertia Gruenhagen, Annie W. Hayes, Sadie Gardner, Jullette Greninger, Emily Herzer, Emma Hoesch, Beatrice Hughes, Lizzie Heyer, Maud Haas, Louise Heppner, Mabel Hollis, Felice Kingsford, Martha Korbel, Jessie B. Lyon, Mae B. Ludlow, Mabel MacFadden, Edna O'Brien, Emma Prosek, Emma Redmond, Carrie Strehl, Marcelle Green, Rosa Sweeney, Olga Westerfeld, Leah S. Young, Mrs. Louis W. Lovey, Mrs. Jas. P. Whitney, Hattie Clifford, Lottie Musto, Maud Bonney, Fannie M. Bonney, Etta Gehrels, Elsie Warren, Lita Woodworth, Nelye Giusti, Anna Papp, Lizetta Papp.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses, billiard tables, brewers, book binders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

Perrier-Jouet Champagne

EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand

W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

Army and Navy Club

Is the only WHISKY on the market, every package of which bears an AFFIDAVIT guaranteeing it to be absolutely PURE and over SIX YEARS OLD

MEYERFELD, MITCHELL & CO.

116 Front Street San Francisco

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets

Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 106

Miss Adie's School 2117 California Street bet. Buchanan and Laguna

Day Boarding School. Kindergarten.

English, French, German Calisthenics Dancing

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from Jan. 25 to Feb. 6, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine!

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar. Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

The Tarpey Stakes Saturday, Jan. 30th
The Hobart Stakes, Saturday Feb. 5th

A. B. SPRECKELS, President.
W. S. LEAKE, Secretary.

---

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.)

Next Week, Second and Last of

MODJESKA

Supported by MR. JOSEPH HAWORTH

AND A COMPLETE COMPANY

Monday, Tuesday and Saturday Nights, MACBETH
Wednesday and Friday Nights and Saturday Matinee
MARY STUART
Thursday Night, Only Time, Adrienne Lecouvreure
Monday, Feb. 8th: MR. LOUIS JAMES

---

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

And now come the acme of them all!

Great Cast! Great Comedy! Great Comedians!

That famous, uproariously funny Farce-Comedy

"The Prodigal Father"

Third annual review! All new features, more less up to date! A company of twenty people!
Titenia, Jeanette Ardelle, Mme. Loretta, Marjorie Fair, Rose Nelveille, Carrie Graham, Lynn Welcher, Chas. Boyle, Mat. M. Wills, D. J. Halpin, Frederick Walz, Joseph Vokes, George Nichols.
The greatest mirth-provoking Farce-Comedy ever written February 8th: "Chimmie Fadden"

---

Orpheum

Week Commencing Monday, Feb. 1

The Celebrated Frantz Family; Binns & Binns, Wilson and Waring and the Dancing Girl; Bessie Clayton, the prettiest, daintiest, mostbewitching Dancer that ever dazzled an audience
Alcide Capitaine, Europe's Marvelous Aerial Artiste
The Royal Hungarian Court Orchestra
Engaged at an Enormous Cost! GUILLE!! The World's Greatest Tenor!
Ward and Curran, the Clipper Comedians

Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; box seats and opera chairs 50c.

---

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

TO-NIGHT--Our Up-to-Date Extravagance!

ALADDIN

Or the Wonderful Lamp

A Hodge Podge of Mirth, Music, Ballets, Beauty

The New Electric Dance des Fleurs
The Floating Palace in Mid-Air
The Superb Ballet of Cleopatras
The New and Novel Specialties

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

---

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : : MANAGERS

Last performances to-day and to-morrow matinees and night-, of the great comedy
"All the Comforts of Home!"

Monday, February 1st, first time at popular prices of Gillette's Famous Comedy-Drama

A LEGAL WRECK

The greatest success of Madison Square Theatre
Realistic effects a scenery! Everything new!
Hugo Toland, J. B. Polk and all the favorites!

Our Regular Prices! 'Phone for seats: Black 991

---

COLUMBIA THEATRE

Thursday Afternoon 3:30

First Symphony Concert

Fifty-five Musicians

GUSTAV HINRICHS, Conductor

Soloist, KATHERINE FLEMMING HINRICHS, Contralto

Brilliant Programme!

Reserved Seats $1 and 50c. Gen. Admission 50c.

Box office now open

---

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST., San Francisco, Cal.

---

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

AS SEEN IN PARIS

What the Gay Parisiennes are Wearing These Winter Days.

You ask, dearest Betty, do I never tire of the ceaseless whirl of Parisian life—the everlasting rushing hither and thither in search of the latest novelty, the newest sensation. No, I fancy not. I am a good deal like the alchemist who ever sees the philosopher's stone within his grasp and then finds it merely a mirage. After all, I am becoming a philosopher, and my castles of Spain are now built at my dressmaker's. I attain happiness with a becoming toilette. You will arrive at the conclusion that I am sacrificing my ambition on the altar of fashion. And why not? Is not "Beau Brummel" as familiar a figure as "Charley Fox"? Is not the creator of a new fashion as famous as the inventor of a phonograph, the discoverer of a germ destroyer? Really, dear, you have no idea of the piquant exhilaration afforded by seeking the new sensations in toilettes. Such schemes of color as one sees on the Bois; such combinations of materials! Even a Fortunatus' purse would cease to yield to my demands upon it after a while were I to allow my fancy full play on these delightful days, where fur, feathers and frivols play the biggest part in life.

Have you seen the new "Poster" stocking, the latest extravagance of the fin de siecle maiden? It is of black silk, of sufficiently firm texture to serve as a canvas for the wonderful figures that are painted upon it. From top to toe it is a bewildering succession of Medusa-headed girls, strangely clad dancers executing impossible steps, and weird landscapes in every color that the palette of the decadent artist has ever revealed. It will, of course, be seen that the "Poster" stocking is only to be worn on fitting occasions. It is the accompaniment of the Kimono, and the maiden who invites her girl friends to a "boudoir" tea now selects her most gaudy Japanese gown, a slipper that merely consists of a toe, and the stocking! Some of these cost $50 a pair, so the "poster" fiend lives in the pleasurable certainty that they can never become common.

Another of the latest eccentricities of fashion is the ruffle of fur to be worn around the neck. A ruffle, my dear, not ruff or collar, but a genuine, real ruffle, coming up high over the ears! Then one sees every day the most curious conceptions in fancy jackets. One I saw recently was of black and white striped velvet, pleated from the shoulders to within about two inches from the lower edge; this arrangement forming a flounce which was edged with black ostrich tips. The neck band is formed of tips and smart bows of cerise ribbon. Feather bands become more prominent on evening toques, and would you reach the acme of eccentricity, you have your sealskin coat trimmed with gray and white feathers.

Fluffy bodice arrangements are worn with all the new evening waists. White mousseline de soie collars, fashioned with innumerable ruffles on the shoulders, are very becoming to the long-waisted, willowy maidens. By the way, Betty, I saw one which I shall send you. It is of white moussseline appliqued with renaissance and finished with spangles of shaded green sequins. You wish me to tell of the sealskin Harry gave me for Christmas. Well, it has wide revers, collar and pointed cuffs of brown kid, beautifully perforated and embroidered. Two or three jeweled buttons, fastening a loose, double-breasted sacque, and you have it, my dear, the most effective garment I have ever seen. Was he not a dear to think of it, and I only bought him a set of curious old studs I found in an old shop across the river.

---

The gowns for Miss Carrol's wedding are exquisite in tneir simplicity and beauty. The bride wore a gown of white satin, with two overskirts of white Bussel's net with a ruffle of the net at bottom; handsome wreathes of orange blossoms were festooned over the skirt. The waist was of white shirred tulle with very small sleeves and a belt of wide pleated satin. Miss Carrol wore a tulle veil, and has the honor of inaugurating a new custom, for she was married with a wreath of orange blossoms in her hair instead of the spray which has been in vogue for so long. Her trosseau is very handsome. Among the most noticeable costumes in her trosseau is a dinner gown of blue brocaded satin, outlined in silver pearls, with small tulle sleeves caught up with roses; the skirt is of the brocade. A calling gown is of dark robin-blue covert cloth, a bolero brocaded in tubular braid and small buttons, made over a white cloth blouse embroidered in gold stars. The bolero closes on one side and is finished with a jabot of cream lace. The collar is of torquoise-blue velvet. The sleeve is very small and is tucked almost to waist; the cuff is of white cloth; belt of black satin.

At the wedding Mrs. Carrol wore an elegant black velvet gown, the waist made with bands of insertion crosswise of lavender pearl beads and a jabot of Duchessed point lace. Mrs. Argues wore white silk covered with black Chantilly lace. Miss Gertie Carrol wore a white mousseline de soie skirt, one mass of ruffles of the mousseline de soie fluted and edged with Valencienne lace, a broad white satin belt completing the costume.

The other bridesmaids, Misses Remie Wallace and Julia Crocker, wore yellow tulle gowns made over pale yellow silk shirred waists, with peau de soie satin belts and ribbons.

Mrs. Shainwald's wedding gown was of white satin, with a double overskirt of white tulle festooned with orange blossoms.

BARBARA.

---

Moet & Chandon was exclusively served at the Patriarchs' Ball, the Belmont New Year Party and the Washington Gridiron Club's Banquet. Connoisseurs pronounce it excellently matured and the cleanest wine on the market.—Exchange.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, carries correct furnishings for Holiday Presents. A special line of smoking jackets and neckwear.

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS

409 MARKET STREET

---

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER

SUCCESSORS TO
H. P. GREGORY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO

MACHINERY

Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

---

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

---

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

---

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

---

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Julia Con. Mining Company

Assessment No 28
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied January 21, 1897
Delinquent in office, February 26, 1897
Day of sale of Delinquent stock, March 19, 1897
J. STADTFELD, JR., Secretary
Office, Room 56, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

SUNSET LIMITED

The Famous Palatial Flyer

BETWEEN

San Francisco and New Orleans

SEMI-WEEKLY

EASTBOUND

| | |
|---|---|
| Lv. San Francisco | 10.00 P.M. Tues. and Sat. |
| Lv. Los Angeles | 3.00 P.M. Wed. and Sun. |
| Ar. El Paso | 4.40 P.M. Thurs. and Mon. |
| Ar. New Orleans | 6.55 A.M. Sat. and Wed. |

WESTBOUND

| | |
|---|---|
| Lv. New Orleans | 10.00 A.M. Mon. and Thurs |
| Lv. El Paso | 8.05 P.M. Tues. and Fri. |
| Ar. Los Angeles | 7.45 P.M. Wed. and Sat. |
| Ar. San Francisco | 12.45 P.M. Thurs. and Sun |

Agreeable connections in New Orleans with through limited trains for Eastern cities.

To St. Louis in 24 hours; Chicago, 27 hours Cincinnati, 24 hours; Atlanta, 15 hours; Washington, 34 hours; Philadelphia, 38 hours; New York, 40 hours; Boston, 50 hours.

Delightfully equable climate en route; train service unapproachably superb throughout; quick time; no additional cost.

TAKE SUNSET LIMITED

---

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. December 26.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, December 5, 10, 15, 20, 26, 30, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. December 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. December 13, 17, 21, 26, 29, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, 11 a.m. December 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves right to change steamers or sailing date.

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

---

Through Sleeping-Cars to Chicago.

The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad runs through from Oakland to Chicago, daily. Pullman Palace Drawing-room, also Upholstered Tourist Sleeping Cars, leaving every afternoon. Annex Cars on sharp connection for Denver and St. Louis. The only line by which the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River can be reached. The canyon is a mammoth opening in the earth two hundred miles long, eighteen miles wide and seven thousand feet deep. It is reached by stage from Flagstaff, Arizona Territory, in one day's ride. Send for beautifully illustrated book descriptive of the Canyon and the Santa Fe Route to the East. Lowest through rates to all points in the United States, Canada, Mexico or Europe. Special rates to regularly ordained ministers of the gospel. Ticket office, 644 Market street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.

---

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii, Samoa, New Zealand, Australia

6 Days to Honolulu by Steamship "AUSTRALIA"

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Feb. 23, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Monowai," for Australia, Thursday, February 4, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

---

YOU KNOW OUR BUSINESS
SO DO WE!

Stationery, Printing, Bookbinding

ANYTHING IN THAT LINE

THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.

22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

---

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS-FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

---

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—Department No. 3.

Hannah Anglin, Plaintiff, vs. Maurice Anglin, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Maurice Anglin, defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant upon the ground of defendant's desertion and abandonment of plaintiff for upwards of six years next prior to the commencement of this action, and for a judgment and decree awarding to this plaintiff the sole custody and control of Mary Catherine Anglin, the minor child of plaintiff and defendant; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and the seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six (1896).

[Seal] C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By JOSEPH RIORDAN, Deputy Clerk.
Lane & Lane, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF F. M. L. PETERS, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Martha E. Peters, administratrix of the estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administratrix at the office of Gavin McNab, Esq., her attorney, 47, seventh floor, Mills Building, the same being her place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

MARTHA E. PETERS,
Administratrix of the Estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, January 14, 1897.
Gavin McNab, Att'y for Administratrix.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT IN AND for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, Department No. 9—Probate.—In the matter of the Estate of SARAH SMITH, deceased.—Notice is hereby given, that Thursday, the 11th day of February, A.D. 1897, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, and the court room of Department No. 9 of said court, at the New City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the will of said Sarah Smith, deceased, and for hearing the application of W. R. Felter for the issuance to him of Letters of Administration with the said will annexed.

Dated January 20th, A.D. 1897.

CHAS. F. CURRY, Clerk.
[SEAL] By W. F. Northrop, Dep. Clerk.
F. P. KELLY, Attorney for Petitioner.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

ASSESSMEMT NOTICE—BULLION MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 49) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the offices of the company, room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of February, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday the 11th day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, S. F.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE—BEST AND BELCHER MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 26th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 61) of twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on 2d day of March, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Tuesday the 23d day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

The Wave's Clubbing List

For 1897

By special arrangement with the publishers THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list

Subscriptions must be paid in advance

| | |
|---|---|
| THE WAVE AND ARENA | $5 00 |
| " " ARGOSY | 3 35 |
| " " ART AMATEUR | 5 75 |
| " " ATLANTIC MONTHLY | 5 75 |
| " " BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE | 5 70 |
| " " CASSELL " | 3 75 |
| " " CENTURY | 6 00 |
| " " CONTEMPORARY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE | 3 15 |
| " " CRITIC | 5 30 |
| " " DELINEATOR | 3 50 |
| " " DEVOTEST MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " FORUM | 5 00 |
| " " FRANK LESLIES MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " HARPER'S BAZAAR | 5 70 |
| " " " MAGAZINE | 5 60 |
| " " " ROUND TABLE | 4 00 |
| " " " WEEKLY | 5 70 |
| " " ILLUSTRATED AMERICAN | 5 75 |
| " " JUDGE | 5 60 |
| " " LESLIE'S WEEKLY | 4 50 |
| " " LIFE | 6 75 |
| " " LIFE'S COMEDY | 3 35 |
| " " LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE | 4 50 |
| " " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE | 7 75 |
| " " MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE | 3 35 |
| " " MUNSEY'S " | 3 35 |
| " " NEW ENGLAND " | 5 00 |
| " " NINETEENTH CENTURY | 6 25 |
| " " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW | 6 50 |
| " " OUTING MAGAZINE | 5 00 |
| " " " SUNDAY | 1 75 |
| " " " CURRENT | 5 00 |
| " " " SUNDAY | 4 50 |
| " " N. Y. WORLD SUNDAY | 1 75 |
| " " OVERLAND MONTHLY | 4 75 |
| " " PACIFIC UNION | 4 50 |
| " " POET LORE | 6 50 |
| " " REVIEW OF REVIEWS | 4 60 |
| " " SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN | 5 00 |
| " " " SUPPLEMENT | 6 50 |
| " " " AND " | 11 00 |
| " " SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE | 5 00 |
| " " ST. NICHOLAS | 3 00 |
| " " TABLE TALK | 1 25 |
| " " TOWN TOPICS | 5 50 |
| " " TRUTH | 3 75 |
| " " VOGUE | 5 50 |
| " " YOUTH'S COMPANION | 3 75 |

An Advantageous Offer!

Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan McClure's Magazine
Ladies' Home Journal Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

Why I Insured in the New-York Life.

JOHN A. McCALL, President

BECAUSE: It is one of the strongest companies in the world.

BECAUSE: It has over $187,000,000 in assets.

BECAUSE: It has over $26,500,000 in surplus.

BECAUSE: It earned for policy-holders last year from interest and rents over $7,500,000.

BECAUSE: It is purely mutual, and all of its assets, surplus and earnings belong to its policy-holders.

BECAUSE: It has an honorable record of 52 years, during all of which time it has steadily increased in strength and prosperity.

BECAUSE: Its policies as now issued contain no restriction as to residence, travel or occupation, habits of life or manner of death.

BECAUSE: The sole condition is that if premiums are paid the Company will certainly pay the policy immediately in the event it becomes a claim by death, and thus I shall leave my widow or my estate a legacy and not a law-suit.

BECAUSE: My policy cannot be forfeited after three years, and if I allow it to lapse, I shall receive the full benefit of my payments either in a paid-up policy, or extended insurance, as I may elect.

BECAUSE: I have a grace of one month in the payment of premiums.

BECAUSE: My policy will be re-instated at any time during the five months following the month of grace if I pass a medical examination and pay the back premium with interest.

BECAUSE: I can borrow money from the Company at 5% per annum, upon the security of my policy.

BECAUSE: I do not have to die to win. If I live 10, 15, or 20 years I can settle my policy in any way that best suits my circumstances at the time—for cash, paid-up insurance, annuity or other options.

BECAUSE: My insurance is not a luxury, nor an expense, without tangible return, but is an investment of a small sum each year to mature 10, 15, or 20 years hence, if I live.

BECAUSE: If I live to the end of the term I shall have made a substantial provision for myself in old age, and if I die before the end of the term I shall have made a substantial provision for my family or my estate.

BECAUSE: It is the most valuable estate I shall leave behind me, more certain in its results than lands, houses, stocks or bonds, as its value does not rise and fall with the market.

BECAUSE: The New-York Life Insurance Company is the only Company in which I can get ALL of these benefits.

BECAUSE: I want the very best—the most privileges and the fewest restrictions, whether small or great—and the New-York Life's Accumulation Policy furnishes it.

...BECAUSE...

The New-York Life Insurance Company is composed of over 275,000 policy-holders who ARE the Company, who OWN the Company, and who ALONE receive the PROFITS of the Company.

x x x x

The cash profits to be distributed during 1897 amount to over $2,500,000, which is $335,000 more than in 1896.

x x x x

CHAS. A. McLANE, Agency Director for Pacific Coast.

ROOMS 17 TO 23, 2ND FLOOR,
MILLS BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO

Training the U. C. Track Team — Benedict on Horses and Racing

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Paper not to be taken from the Library

VOL XVI. No. 6 — SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 6, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS.

JUDGE JOSEPH M'KENNA

OF THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF CALIFORNIA

President-Elect McKinley has selected Judge McKenna to be Secretary of the Department of the Interior in his Cabinet.

Photo by Thors

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 6, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| The U. C. Track Team: by F. N. | 4 |
| Guilbert, the Misunderstood | 5 |
| Between Dances: a story by Drysdale | 5 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 6 |
| Theatrical Stars in Transit | 8 |
| A California Artist; by Frank Norris | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres; by Peg Woffington | 11 |
| "Urban Dialogues". a Review | 12 |
| Horses: by Benedict | 13 |
| As the World Wags | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

AN EXTRAORDINARY TARIFF SCHEME.

The American speculators who dig nickel out of the face of nature over in Canada are a resourceful and ingenious lot, to say the least. They have treated the student of economy and the national legislature to the most startling and novel tariff proposition ever devised by a foreign industry to escape the operation of our tariff laws. Wise men may differ as to the solution of the broad economic problem, but no wise man or prudent legislator, be he Democrat or Republican, Free-Trader or Protectionist, can for a moment countenance the absurd and dangerous doctrine advanced by these gentlemen. They appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House recently, and contended seriously and vigorously, plaintively and insistently, that no duty should be placed upon nickel ores and matte, because, forsooth, the stockholders in the Canadian mining company were with one exception American citizens. They did not openly assail the doctrine of protection, they do not claim that the mining of nickel is not an American industry, they do not deny that the American nickel miner will suffer through their gain; they simply advance the bald, naked claim that "the character of the ownership" should influence Congress, and exempt the product of their foreign mines from a reasonable duty.

Certainly this is a most novel and extraordinary plea. If such a shallow excuse lead Congress to exempt their product from duty, then by the same token a multitude of other foreign products might seek shelter under a similar device. As everyone knows, the adventurous American has not been limited in his speculations or his operations to the boundaries and limits of this nation. He owns coal and lead and copper mines in British North America and in Mexico, and he ships in large quantities the products of these mines to our markets. Large tracts of timber land in British Columbia are in the hands of Americans whose lumber enters into competition with the product of our mills. Other American citizens own and control miles of Mexican territory, over which graze vast herds of cattle intended for American consumption. Recently American capital, attracted by the low wages of Japan and China, has gone thitherwards for investment in industrial pursuits. Mills and looms that once gave employment to American labor have been dismantled, taken apart, and the machinery transported across the broad Pacific to Japan and China, where the docile coolie will weave and work at a scale of wages that would mean starvation in America. Soon the itinerant manufacturer will be knocking loudly at our doors with the fabrics of his looms, and the handiwork of his coolie craftsman, demanding in the name of his American citizenship that Congress admit his merchandise free of duty.

The claim is outrageous and insolent, and so long as it rests upon its present untenable and dangerous ground, even the Free Trade Democrat, who is such from principle alone, should not hesitate to administer to this impudence the rebuke it merits. To accede to their demands would be to encourage the American to transfer his capital to the development of foreign industries, permitting the undeveloped resources of our country to lie inert, untouched, and dead. It would set a premium on disloyalty and strike a blow at American enterprise at home. If nickel ore and matte is to be admitted free of duty because of "the character of its ownership" the door is thrown open to every product from every country that has been invaded by the adventurous American manufacturer. A doctrine more mischievous to a nation was never seriously advanced by a nation's subject. So far as the American people are concerned their desire, with respect to tariff legislation, was expressed at the election last November. Protection to American labor and American industries was one of the shibboleths of the campaign. There are large deposits of nickel on the Pacific coast. It is a matter of common knowledge that the mines from which this ore may be taken now lie idle because it is impossible to compete with the cheaper products of their Canadian competitors. A duty of ten cents per pound upon nickel ore and matte would put new life into these great properties and furnish employment to hundreds of our citizens. Such a duty would enable our local miners to overcome the cost of transportation to the Atlantic seaboard, and place their products in the markets of the world in competition with the products of the world.

The duty upon nickel once ranged from twenty to thirty cents per pound. This high tariff permitted the refiner Wharton, who was then the owner of mines in Pennsylvania, to compete with the product of New Caledonia. Nickel was then worth from three to eight times more than its present value. Under this kindly legislation Mr. Wharton was enabled to amass something of a fortune in the mining of a very low grade nickel ore, but now by the irony of Fate the individuals who so long enjoyed the full benefit of the protection of this industry, have acquired the ownership of Canadian mines, and now strenuously and selfishly oppose the protection of the industry in America. If there ever was a reason for placing a duty upon nickel ore and matte, there now exists a greater reason. The nickel industry at the time of the tariff mentioned could scarcely have been called an industry at all. Recent discoveries, however, have developed large bodies of this ore situated at a long distance from market, which cannot be successfully worked if the Canadian ore is admitted free of charge. The price of this metal has fallen from two dollars to twenty-two cents per pound, and if nickel mining is to survive in America it must receive kindly consideration at the hands of Congress.

One of the arguments offered by the Canadian miners to secure entrance for their products duty free is based upon the assertion that the United States Government is a large consumer of that metal in the manufacture of armor-plates, and that such a duty would only operate to increase its cost to the Government. But as these gentlemen also asserted that the mines of America could not compete with the Canadian product even though the duty were levied, it is manifest to the most casual observer that the increased cost would be apparent, not real. The Government could not possibly be the loser, for the amount paid as duty would operate as a setoff to the increased price, if increased price should be the result.

DR. JORDAN ON THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN RELIGION AND INTOXICATION.

Long ago the poet Byron observed and put down the observation in his profane rhymes, that there is a marked similarity between the exaltation that is due to rum and the emotional result of "true religion." Dr. David Starr Jordan, the man of science, is naturally more explicit than Byron, the poet with a license. The Doctor sees an identity between the species of intoxication produced by the two stimulants referred to by the poet, and goes farther to say that drunkenness from one source is just as little entitled to respect as that from the other, the mania in both cases being but a temporary insanity. On last Sunday Dr. Jordan delivered, before an audience composing a religious society in Berkeley, one of those lay sermons which he seems to be willing to deliver at odd times, and which will add to his fame and his influence, already great in this community, so long as he continues to preach them. In this discourse the Doctor, according to the reports, said:

"Stimulants produce temporary insanity. Whisky, cocaine and alcohol bring temporary insanity, and so does a revival of religion, one of those religious revivals in which men lose all their reason and self-control. This is simply a form of drunkenness, no more worthy of respect than the drunkenness which lies in gutters. * * * * There is merely fictitious happiness in any kind of mania. The crazy saints who are continually looking up toward heaven and doing nothing, are incapable of doing anything."

Now there is a ring of common sense about those words which will surely commend them, and the man who spoke them, to any commonly sensible person. They deliver no assault on religion, and any pious man or woman whose piety is coupled with intelligence can read them without offense. Whoever disagrees with the Doctor's plain statement must by his disagreement go far toward implicating himself in a belief in the virtues of hysterics as a means of grace, and a reliance on the toxic effect of revivalists' exhortations as an index of the workings of salvation. But the application of common sense to any question or matter touching upon the subject of religion seems invariably to secure the prompt and vigorous resentment of those who are most prominently, not to say clamorously, religious; and Doctor Jordan's words had hardly reached the public before the expression of the revivalists' resentment began to resound. It is not at all probable that Doctor Jordan has been disturbed in his sleep or in his labors by this echo of dissent from common sense.

The Rev. Dwight L. Moody is probably the foremost leader among the professional revivalists. When Doctor Jordan's words were reported to him he found nothing better to say than to repeat some rubbish about the presumption of a man of science who undertakes to deal with a question of religion; that Doctor Jordan had erected a man of stray, which he—the Reverend Moody—was under no obligation to overthrow; and, finally, that the Doctor's discourse was unworthy of serious consideration, anyway. Another protagonist of theory that truth is evidenced by neurotic phenomena is the Rev. Mr. Munhall, a professional revivalist now operating in the white fields of Oakland. On Monday evening the Rev. Munhall, in the approving presence of a corps of evangelical clergymen, delivered in a crowded church a strange "reply" to Doctor Jordan's statements. The reverend gentleman called the roll of those who are reported in the Scriptures to have been miraculously raised from the dead, citing these as instances of the happy effect of "revivals," but modern instances, due to the labors of himself and his fellow evangelists, were strangely lacking. He quoted the vision and conversion of St. Paul as another result of revivalism, though the presence of any professional revivalist, manifestly necessary to make that incident parallel with more recent exhibitions of what is called spiritual awakening, is not set forth in the Scriptural account of the miracle. He further rebuked as "carping, cavilling Pharisees" those—and be it remembered that many of them are stanch churchmen and firm believers—who are bold enough to criticize or to disapprove, in silence, the methods of himself and his co-workers, who believe that the outward evidence of inward spiritual enlightenment is identical with the appearance of one who is "drunken with new wine." Finally the preacher rebuked the "learned and scholarly man," Doctor Jordan, presumably—who, without previous spiritual enlightenment, as by a neurotic convulsion, assumes to be able to know anything about theology—theology, in the vocabulary of the Rev. Munhall and his kind, being, apparently, synonymous with religion, or, even more narrowly, with Christianity.

It is to be observed that Doctor Munhall and the other apologists of revivalism have nothing whatever to say as to the effect of an appeal to the nerves, in lieu of the reason in cases where their own brand of "theology" is not in question. Surely they might, with profit to their audiences, explain wherein their methods really differ from those of the howling and whirling dervishes of Islam, or those of the inspiring medicine man of the Sioux who wrought a very satisfactory revival among his flock, which, being short in his vocabulary, he called a ghost-dance. It might be well also to show how much real spiritual regeneration of the permanent kind, is effected by the temporary mania brought on by the disturbances which are characteristic of the noisy cohorts of General Booth, not counting what is due to the attention which the Salvationists, wiser in this than any of their fellow revivalists, bestow on the material welfare of the brands which they pluck from the burning. When these things have been done the reverend gentlemen will be in a much better position than they now occupy to "reply" to Doctor Jordan. And if the man of science feels a liking for the subject he might find some philosophic satisfaction for himself and do the public a further service by showing how the methods of revivalism, when applied to politics, were found most effective in recruiting the cohorts of that body of crazy political heretics who go by the name of the Populist party. And if he will do this it needs not the spirit of prophecy to foresee that from every prairie cross-roads in Kansas there will rise up some believer in temporary insanity as an evidence of truth to assure us that, no matter how wise and learned Doctor Jordan may be otherwise, he cannot understand the mysteries of Populism until he has become somewhat demented himself and thereby politically enlightened. It is not probable that Doctor Jordan will care to pursue this subject further, but in speaking plainly, as he has spoken, on a subject which a man of smaller stature in this community might well fear to approach, he has done a good service to all the people, and most of all to those who have at heart the real interests of religion as a guide of life.

SECRETARY M'KENNA.

At last California is to receive national recognition at the hands of the President of the United States. It has been definitely announced that incoming President McKinley has selected Judge Joseph McKenna to serve as Secretary of the Department of the Interior. No one will envy Judge McKenna his promotion nor deny his fitness for the place, for besides being a man of exceptional ability he also enjoys a wide popularity. Judge McKenna is still in the prime of life. He was born in Philadelphia August 10th, 1843. As a mere lad at the age of twelve he came to California, and since his early manhood has been active in public life and efficient in public service.

The first official position held by Judge McKenna was that of District Attorney of the County of Solano. His faithful service there was rewarded by his party and his people with a seat in the State Legislature. He entered upon his legislative career with a love for it, was untiring in his labors, positive and courageous, yet kindly and popular. These qualities and attributes followed him into Congress. Four times he was elected to represent his district at Washington, where he soon acquired a high place in the national legislature. Just as his last Congressional term was about to expire he was appointed by President Harrison to the United States Circuit Court, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Lorenzo Sawyer. Upon the performance of his official duties he entered with great zeal. His intimates have always declared that he would achieve still greater distinction, and prophesied that ultimately he would sit upon the Federal Supreme Bench.

The whole State must congratulate Judge McKenna and itself as well upon his and its good fortune.

JUDGE M'KENNA'S SUCCESSOR.

The selection of the successor of Judge McKenna has been the topic of general discussion among lawyers and laymen ever since it was definitely announced that the present Judge of the Circuit Court would be appointed to a place in President McKinley's cabinet. The office that will be made vacant by his resignation is the most important Federal judicial office in the State, and it is a matter of grave importance to the State and to its bar that the place be filled by some man of high and unimpeachable integrity as well as deep learning in the law. It would be scarcely proper at this juncture to review the good, bad and indifferent names which have been suggested as possibilities for the vacant judgeship. Indiscreet friends have affected to be engaged in promoting the candidacy of some of the gentlemen who at present adorn our Supreme and Superior benches. Doubtless in many instances the names of these gentlemen have been used without their knowledge, and therefore in advance of a definite announcement from them it would be unfair to discuss their merits and demerits.

Among the leading lawyers of this city whose good opinion we value and whose learning we respect, the judgment has been almost unanimous that the place most naturally should go to ex-Justice J. J. De Haven, and in this selection we heartily concur. Judge De Haven needs no certificate at our hands. His integrity has never been so much as questioned. His ability is known wherever the decisions of our Supreme Court are quoted as authority. He is modest and retiring almost to the point of indiscretion, but notwithstanding his aversion to the ways of the political judge, he is more than popular, he is respected and held in honor by the people. His appointment to the Circuit judgeship would be followed by an almost popular demonstration of approval. The press and the bar of the State, Democratic and Republican alike, should join in endorsing for this position a man whose past official record has been one of such unswerving honor and fidelity. His ability none will deny, his honor no man will question, and in his case we would say that it is only necessary to indicate to the President that his appointment would meet with an approving response at the hands of the people of the State for the appointment to follow.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

A "Wave" reader, who fondly imagines the Board of Supervisors "have a cinch on gas and water rates," asks: "How is it possible to get away from the decision of our Supreme Court which declares that 'after the Supervisors have fairly investigated and fixed what they believe to be reasonable rates, the courts cannot set aside and nullify their action because upon a similar investigation it has come to a different conclusion as to the reasonableness of the rates fixed."

The discussion of legal problems is not ordinarily a thing of public interest, but every taxpayer and every ratepayer in this municipality is or should be interested in the fair determination of this question, and, as it promises to be a thing of public discussion for a long while to come, "Wave" readers should have some definite and correct information as to the fundamental principles that must govern the action of the Supervisors in the exercise of that very elastic power known to the law as the police power of the State.

The decision referred to by our correspondent was rendered in January of 1890, over seven years ago. The doctrine quoted by our correspondent as being there laid down (which, by the way, was obiter, as will be shown), was upheld, so far as it was upheld by Federal authority at all, by the case of Munn against Illinois. In the Illinois case it was decided practically by the United States Supreme Court that property used in a manner calculated to affect the community at large became, through its use, clothed with a public interest; and that States had, in their legislative capacity, the inherent right to regulate charges thereon. The court also intimated that while this power might be abused, this was no argument against its existence, and the aggrieved complainant was told to "look to the ballot" and not to the courts for protection against legislative abuses.

This decision was rendered twenty years ago, but no court in America to-day would have the temerity to elaborate that doctrine or give it application. Immediately following this decision, all over the Union where cupidity or hatred or malice could creep into the councils of the State, the iron hand of regulation fell heavily and mercilessly upon the unfortunate citizen whose investments, coming under the blight of this most comprehensive definition, were subject to this most despotic power. The very extremes that malice prompted and legislative cupidity devised, the flagrant and outrageous abuses of this unrestricted license that immediately followed, accentuated the possibilities of wrong under such a ruling, and gave birth to its remedy. Slowly but surely, within the past twenty years, the law governing State regulation has been taking on a form more definite and more harmonious with the spirit of American institutions. The almost barbarous demand, "Go to the ballot for relief," no longer thunders in the ears of the outraged, alarmed and bewildered citizen whose property is threatened with legislative destruction. The radical views which once were regarded as the spirit of this decision, but never accepted as the true and final solution of the problem involved, has now been deeply and forever buried by the kindly hand of Reason. The despotic doctrine, "unrestricted and untrammeled State regulation," has been mercifully blotted out of existence by more rational and more reasonable adjudications. That the law upon this subject has reached its ultimate form, no lawyer familiar with this line of cases will admit.

Here in this State we have progressed, but as litigation of this character is infrequent, we are not abreast of the prevailing judicial current. The portion of the case quoted by our correspondent was doubtless the law seven years ago. The case of Munn against Illinois was the law twenty years ago. They are forceful no longer. To-day they serve merely as milestones that mark the progress of a nation's jurisprudence. They form a part of history rather than of legal precedent. Since the rendition of these opinions great strides have been made toward a clearer and better solution of the problem of State regulation. The unchecked, unlimited and unreviewable action, the untrammeled power to cripple, harass and destroy, under the guise of regulation, once claimed for the State, can now, under the recent decision, only be exercised in a just, a fair and an equitable manner, after a just, fair and impartial hearing. The quality of reasonableness must underlie the regulation, else it will fall purposeless and unavailing.

The Constitution of the United States places express inhibitions and restrictions on the power of the State with respect to property and to persons. To-day the trend of decisions runs to the effect that the power to regulate cannot exceed the scope of these constitutional limitations. It would be most curious and absurd if the legislative power to regulate was not subordinate to the Federal inhibitions and restrictions wisely placed upon the State. It would be idle for our Constitution to prohibit the State from making aggressions upon the property of its citizens, and, at the same time, breathe life into an irresponsible body that might in hatred and with malice, in obedence to the passing popular whims, destroy the thing our Constitution holds so sacred and takes such infinite pains to protect. It is conceivable that under the lash of a sensational press and popular excitement a Board of Supervisors might be induced to promulgate a schedule of rates that would in effect be just as far reaching and just as destructive to the regulated thing as though the possession and title to the property itself were wrested from its rightful owner. But a doctrine that would uphold such an infamous proceeding would be a travesty upon justice, repugnant to the spirit of our laws and absolutely intolerable as well.

Had the decision rendered by our Supreme Court been withheld a twelvemonth, the portion of it quoted by our correspondent would never have been written. That case was decided by our Supreme Court January 1st, 1890. The complaint alleged that in fixing water rates the Supervisors had acted without making an investigation or exercising any judgment whatever in the matter. In other words, the corporation asserted that the rates so fixed were mere guesswork and plainly arbitrary. As the demurrer to the complaint admitted these facts, the court refused to uphold the action of the Board, and promptly set aside their order. Whatever was said in that opinion as to what would be the probable effect of an order made after the investigation and consideration by the Board of Supervisors, was manifestly aside from the question presented for determination in that case. It was mere obiter, which every student of the law understands is not controlling as a decision. Within three months after this opinion was rendered, the Supreme Court of the United States, in a similar case arising in Minnesota, held squarely that the courts would in all cases investigate and determine as to the reasonableness of a rate or charge fixed by the regulative agency of the State. The language of that opinion is clear, concise and decisive of this point. It says:

"If the company is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property, and such deprivation takes place in the absence of an investigation by judicial machinery, it is deprived of the lawful use of its property, and thus, in substance and effect, of the property itself, without due process of law, and in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and in so far as it is thus deprived, while other persons are permitted to receive reasonable profits upon their invested capital, the company is deprived of the equal protection of the laws."

The Supreme Court of the United States has therefore held that no matter how much investigation or procedure may be indulged in by the regulative authority before fixing rates, it cannot hide a malicious intent or an exorbitant rate beneath the cloak of an apparently thorough investigation. If the rates to be fixed by the Board of Supervisors are challenged by the gas and water companies, it becomes the duty of the court under this decision and those following it to investigate as to the reasonableness of the rates so fixed, and if they are found to be unreasonable it becomes likewise their duty to set aside the regulation in question. This doctrine has been emphasized in what is known as the Reagan case, and in the argument made on behalf of the Railroad Commission before Judge McKenna it was not even contended by counsel for the Commission that the language used by the Supreme Court of California in the Spring Valley case was the law. On the contrary it was conceded by all counsel that if in any case the rates were found upon investigation by the court to be unreasonable the regulation must be set aside. That our Supreme Court will follow this line of decisions there can be no doubt, but even should it fail to do so, a writ of error would take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the law has been clearly and definitely settled as we state it. Hence we repeat our advice of last week to the Supervisors, "Look before you leap."

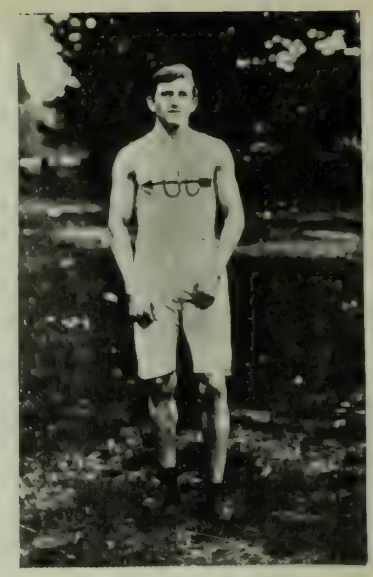
The statement of President Jordan of Stanford to the effect that the university property is annually assessed and compelled to pay thirty thousand dollars for State and county taxes must have been a surprise to the Legislature and to the people of the State. Certainly, the mere statement of the case is sufficient to put an end to this apparent unfairness. The Stanford endowment was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, ever made to an educational institution in the world. Its munificence has attracted universal attention and admiration, but the astonishment evoked by the munificence of the gift will give place to a similar surprise that we should have taxed the interest and the income of this noble donation. Of course, the State is not to be blamed in this matter, for in assessing and taxing the property assessors have only followed the general rule in respect to taxation; but now that the matter has been brought to public attention the remedy will doubtless be applied at once. As a State we cannot afford to have it go out to the world that we accept the generosity of our citizens and then diminish the value and impair the efficacy of their gifts by levying a tax upon benevolence. The legislature will probably act promptly in this matter, and when the people come to vote upon it they will give to that action their unanimous and hearty approval.

Doctor Herman Knapp, the most prominent of New York's oculists, is credited with an annual income in fees of $250,000. Joseph H. Choate earns a similar sum and Colonel Ingersoll's fees are supposed to be at least $200,000 a year.

T. L. BARNES
220-yard dash, 22 4-5 seconds

H. E HUMPHREY
440-yard dash, 52 1-2 seconds

MELVILLE DOZIER
Broad jump, 20 ft. 9 in.; high jump, 5 ft. 7 in.



RALPH LLOYD
16-lb. shot-put 41 ft. 6 in.; pole vault 10 ft. 9 1-2 in.

THE U. C. TRACK TEAM

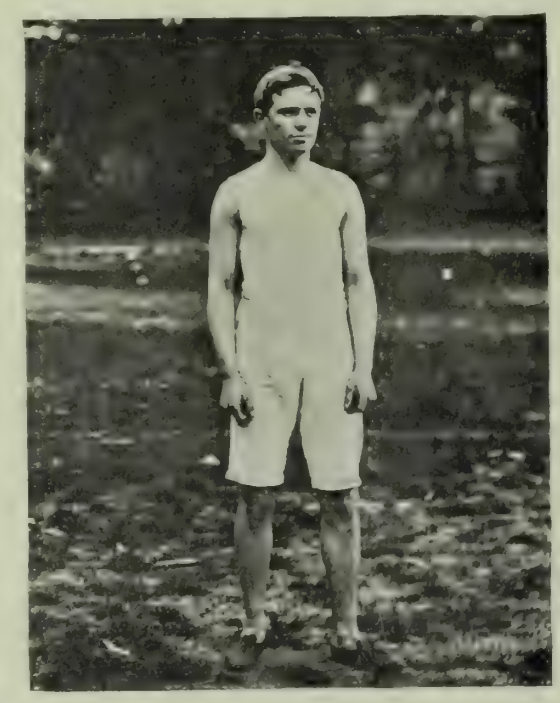
Developing the Material for the Inter-Collegiate Games.

Captain Everett Brown and Al. Lean, the former trainer of the Reliance team, have settled down to the serious work of bringing the U. C. cinder-path athletes into championship form. The team was worked rather severely over the track just previous to Christmas, but since then the practice has been lighter. Both Brown and Al. Lean have a very wholesome fear of falling into the error so frequently committed by the football coachers—that of sending the team up to the match hopelessly overtrained. It is safe to assume that (with the possible exception of the eleven coached by Gill) every football team turned out by the U. C. has been practically stale from overwork. Such, however, has never been the case with the track teams from Berkeley, working under the direction of home coachers, and it is quite possible that to this more than to anything else is due the U. C.'s phenomenal record in track events. The team has never been beaten on this coast, while its really wonderful performances in the east are still fresh in the memory. It should be no difficult task to maintain this prestige and win out handily from Stanford in the 'varsity games. Brown seems to be going about the matter of training and exercise with a very commendable caution. Most captains have the mistaken notion that in order to show their energy and capability they must work their teams hard. Brown, however, laid off his entire force for nearly a month during midwinter, and only set to work again about two weeks ago. The present scheme of training, as laid out by the coachers, does not include actual work on the track; this will come later, when the men begin to specialize in their particular events. At present the practice is of a general character, calculated to develop wind and stamina, and to loosen the leg and chest muscles.

There are fifty men in training (a good showing when it is remembered that there are but a dozen first places to be filled). Captain Brown assembles these men in the gymnasium every afternoon and puts them through a half hour's grind on the chest weights, after which they are put on the indoors running-track of the gymnasium for about fifteen or twenty minutes. The coachers have decided upon varying the work as much as possible. This is an admirable idea, for it may be said, speaking in a general way, that in preliminary training four quarters of an hour, spent in four different kinds of exercise, is far more beneficial than one hour's work at one particular exercise. Consequently Al. Lean frequently lines up his athletes for a game of basket ball, twenty on a side, or leads them a zig-zag chase over the lower floor of the gymnasium. The afternoon's work closes with a bath and a rubdown. Brown has his men well under control, and new men, or those who are slightly injured, are given the lightest kind of work.

In general the policy of the coachers is not to get the men into condition early in the season, and to spend a precious amount of energy in keeping them in good form, but rather to train them slowly and gradually, bringing them into championship shape only a day or two before the meet, in order that the runners, jumpers, weight-putters and the like may be, as nearly as possible, in the very pink of condition when they shall compete with their cardinal rivals.



E. J. BROWN
TRACK CAPTAIN OF THE U. C. TEAM
One mile run, 4:38 1-2

One of the best men of the lot is Everett J. Brown himself, the captain. He is a long-distance man, and the college looks to him to capture the mile run. He was chosen for the eastern trip, but at the last moment was unable to go. He now holds the U. C. record for the mile run.

Harry Humphrey is one of those "all-round" athletes who could be trained to excel in almost any event. He will make a specialty of the 440-yard run, in which he has never been beaten. In '94 he won the quarter-mile run and also a place in the high jump.

Melville Dozier was the bicycle rider and broad jumper of the Eastern team. At Denver in '95 he entered his first high-jumping contest, and won at five feet eight. Dozier will not go in for bicycling this year, but will devote himself to high and broad jumping. Great things are expected of him in these events. In his Freshman year he broad-jumped 21 feet 11¾ inches.

Barnes is the U. C.'s crack sprinter. He was a member of the Eastern team and on the trip did the hundred in 10 1-5 seconds and the two-twenty in 22 2-5 seconds. There is no telling how fast Barnes may run, as he has continued to improve steadily during the last two years.

Ralph Lloyd is another "all-round man," with remarkable records in half a dozen different events. In practice he has put the shot 42 feet. He broad-jumps over 20 feet, and high-jumps 5 feet 5 inches. He holds the pole-vaulting record for the P. C. A. A., at 10 feet 9½ inches. Owing to a bad knee Lloyd was unable to finish the pole-vaulting contest with Stanford in the last inter-collegiate meet, but gave it to Dole when the cross-bar had reached an altitude of 10 feet 10½ inches.

F. N.

"SET!" Humphrey and Barnes starting for the two-twenty; Brown, starter

Cardinal Richard, Archbishop of Paris, has forbidden any priest in his diocese to leave his home without wearing his cassock, and threatens suspension to any clerical appearing at a theatre or even a matinee. They may go to the circus, however. "Figaro" suggests that priests may wear a short cassock and cover it with a great coat, but this is an unworthy subterfuge.

Count Muravieff, who sucuceeded the late Prince Lebanoff as Minister of Foreign Affairs, has represented Russia in the Danish court. He is an able, calm and gracious diplomat, and as Secretary of the Russian Embassy at Berlin was the one man who estimated at its true political value Bismarck's professions of friendship for Russia. It is said he is especially trusted by the ladies of the several empires related to Russia, and his selection is a proof of the saying that in Russian diplomacy Copenhagen is in the direct route to high promotion.

The young queen of Holland is a brisk, bright damsel, and is determined not to be treated as a child. Quite recently she entered the Council Chamber and addressed the president very gravely. "I think it very strange, Monsieur le Ministre," she said, "that the postage stamps still have my likeness as when I was six years old. I wish them altered." Between the young queen and her governess the bicycle has proved a source of trouble. The governess condemns the exercise as indecorous, while Her Majesty is insistent. She loves her wheel and rides it at every opportunity.

Washington society numbers among its members four oriental women, the wives of the Chinese, Japanese and Corean ministers and Mrs. Morighian, who, in the absence of the wife of the Turkish minister, presides at the Sultan's legation. Most conspicuous of the set is Mrs. Pom Ye of Corea, a little broad woman with almond-shaped eyes and a typical Chinese cast of countenance. She enters into the social life of the capital with great enthusiasm and her gowns which are richly embroidered silks, and satins, are generally admired. Mrs. Hoski, the wife of the Japanese minister, dresses in European style and entertains generously.

The story of William Fransioli, who has recently been made general manager of the Manhattan Elevated Roads, has a moral in it for young men. Mr. Fransioli is thirty years old now and has a salary of $12,000 a year. Some years ago he was very poor and was glad to get a place as ticket seller in the Elevated, where he had to be at his post at 4 A. M. He went to night school, and his brightness and intelligence recommended itself to his employers. He was taken into the general office and soon became Superintendent Hain's confidential man. So efficient did he prove that after Hain's death George Gould gave him the position.

[G]UILBERT, THE MISUNDERSTOOD

The Great Artist as She Is Away From the Footlights.

Yvette Guilbert is what no one could possibly be, no one but a Frenchwoman, one Frenchwoman, and that one Yvette herself.

To see her behind the footlights in her simple gown, her long black gauntleted arms hanging idly beside her, a lot of carelessly arranged copper-colored hair fringing a calm, mobile face, lit up with large round eyes, to hear her drone out in a strange, yet musical voice, the story of "La Soularde" is one thing, and to see her away from the illusion of the stage, to know her as she is in her every day home life, is decidedly another. In fact the two phases of the life of the chanteuse are so much unlike each other as to be paradoxical.

She stands before her audience in her long plain gown and her long black gloves, and she sings, or rather half chants, with hardly a gesture, with expression nowhere save in her face, the story of "La Soularde." She tells of the horrible existence of the woman drunkard. It is terribly real—it makes one shudder it is all so terribly real. She sings of the gutters of Paris, of the misery and shame of wretched lives, and how she sings! Her wonderful eyes open large with terror, her face becomes transformed into that of "La Soularde" herself; it makes one's flesh creep; it is hideously repellant, and yet it draws one to it, for it is so terribly true. It is true, but it is fearful; the shame and degradation of it makes one almost sick; and how Guilbert sings it! And then, when it is all over, she washes the paint from her sad, calm face, goes back to her hotel, and sleeps the sleep of an infant.

The singer of the cafe is a vivacious creature behind the footlights. She sings and she smiles, and she dances a little, if she can, and she is gay; and when she leaves the stage we think her gayety continues. We always associate her with late suppers, and popping corks, and a misguided little "Johnnie," and all that sort of thing, but as for Yvette—she will have none of it, none of it whatever. But in her home she is gay, she is volatile, she is interesting; she has the thousand and one little gestures that only a Frenchwoman has, and a thousand and one more that belong only to Yvette. She is at the Savoy, and occupies the very apartments that were those of Princess Eulalie. And such apartments—such a drawing room, all daintiness and delight; but one forgets it all when Yvette is there.

"Bon jour, monsieur," and she rushed raptuously towards me. "Je suis charme de vous voir," and taking both my hands, she shook them as though I were truly a friend of many days. "O, I am well," she said, "very well, merci. I am well and happy, very happy; why should I not be, when I have everything to make me so? With such a boudoir," and she looked around the dainty room, "and such remembrances," and up from a little gilded table came a huge bunch of exquisite violets, "such remembrances, and such friends," and half of the violets fell upon the floor before me.

I was indeed gratified.

"Do I like America?

"Oui, monsieur, why not?" and her eyebrows almost touch the roots of her hair. "Do I love America and all of the people? Certainement! They are so good and so kind, and they give me so much applause. O, oui, I love the people of America, all of them."

"Including Mr. Moody," I put in.

"Monsieur Moody," and she laughed. "Monsieur Moody. Vraiment—and why not? He is a good man, un bon homme. He says we must love everybody, and if I did not love him I would not be a good woman. Certainment, I love Monsieur Moody too."

The hum of the city came up buzzingly from below. Yvette looked out of the window silently, and after a pause she looked out enthusiastically.

"O monsieur, but it is a great country, a great country—everything is so grand," and she almost made a circle of the room. "And your houses, they are high, so high, almost to heaven," and up went her arms to the painted ceiling. "Soon we will be able to go to the clouds in an elevator," and she laughed like a child, and I laughed too. "But, monsieur, to be serious. I sing and I sing, and I tell people about 'La Soularde' and 'La Pierreuse,' but I am getting tired of it. Je suis bien fatigue," and she drew her chair a trifle nearer to me, and leaned over as though in confidence. "I am tired of it; I want to be more than I am; the people think me not deep, they think me—oh, what you call it en anglais?" and her hands beat the air.

"Frivolous," I suggested.

"Oui, oui," she answered, much relieved, "that is it, but I am not, croyez moi, I am not. I am the premiere of the cafe, but I would be more—I would be premiere, I would be une grande artiste of the comedie."

I started a little in surprise. "It is true," she continued, "it is very true. Croyez vous I would do well?"

YVETTE GUILBERT
THE SINGING-ACTRESS IN A CHARACTERISTIC POSE

and she assumed a tragic pose that was not half bad.

I assured her that I thought she would, but I ventured to ask as I rose to leave, if she did not think the Parisians might refuse to take her seriously, at least at first, considering that she had been a chanteuse for so long, and the difference between the two was so great.

O oui, monsieur, the difference is a great one, I know, I know it well—but I shall make it, I shall make it all. I shall be une grande artiste some day, you wait and see. The Comedie is not the only theatre in Paris, there are others, what you call it on the beach? O oui, pebbles, n'est ce pas? Oui, that is it."

The Prince of Wales has been nominated—the twelfth time in succession—for the office of Grand Master of the English Mark Masons.

BETWEEN DANCES

BY DRYSDALE

"Let's go outside," he said bending towards her. "It's a heavenly night."

"The people talk so" she said at last weakly.

"Oh! nonsense, what a lot of old ganders they must be why at West Point—"

"Well, get your cape," she said at last recklessly, "and bring it around to the other door; I'll wait there for you."

She looked with something of pride at his tall, straight figure buttoned up in the full-dress uniform. He was by far the most distinguished man in the room, except—her eyes wandered shyly to a tall, slight civilian bending over a little frivolous thing, gowned in pink. He was laughing gaily, and playing with her fan. The girl shut her teeth on the inside of her lips, and a strange hurt feeling crept over her heart. What did it all matter, what was the laughter, the gaiety, the music—what was anything in the world?

"Now, isn't this better?" he said, as they came out into the cool of the night. He drew her hand in his under the folds of the cape, "aren't you glad you came?"

She nodded her head.

"Very glad."

"Let's walk down by the corral," he said, "I know of a seat there, and I'll show you how we fix these capes at West Point."

His hand slipped up and rested on hers.

"Are you prudish?" he said, half jokingly.

"That depends upon what you call prudish."

He coughed.

"Do you object to the little pleasantries of life?"

"What do you call pleasantries?" she murmured, pulling her roses to pieces.

"This for instance."

They had reached the end of the board walk, and he was pointing to a tiny seat wedged in between two bushes, almost entirely in shadow. She looked into his merry eyes, and saying not a word, let him draw her down on the bench.

His arm slipped around her waist, his face was very near; she put up her hands warningly.

"Where do the pleasantries end?" she said severely.

He looked down. "We might go one step further."

"You mean—?" she questioned abruptly. Then added: I have never allowed a man to kiss me."

"Oh! come now,' he laughed.

She put her hand on his chest. "And you think a girl don't lose anything by it?" she questioned.

"Oh, you mustn't dissect everything, it's an experience."

The word struck her fancy. An experience, yes, it was an experience, she thought recklessly. Why not try? Why not let as many men as asked kiss her, just to do something novel. She was tired of the old way, tired of everything that night. The strong arm drew her nearer; he bent his head and kissed her cheek once.

"Leslie," he w "supposing I said —"

"I wonder who that is?" It was a woman's voice. She jumped up. "Oh! we must go in," she said, "the dance must be over."

She went out with three other men during the evening. She heard a woman say that she had lost her head. She did not care, it was almost the end, and she hated the music and dancing and happiness around her.

At last HE came up to claim his dance at the end. He had left the girl in the pink dress, almost reluctantly it seemed, and said as he reached her side: "Shall we sit it out?"

She nodded.

"Outside? It is a splendid night, and I see you have

SAN FRANCISCO'S FUTURE POSTOFFICE
AITKEN'S DESIGN FOR THE BUILDING ON MISSION AND SEVENTH STREETS

been taking advantage of it." She looked up in his strong face; he was smiling a little bitterly.

"Is there anything in going out?" she asked.

"Nothing, except that you have always refused before this."

She shook her head gaily.

"Well, I have changed for to-night," she cried. "I find it much pleasanter to be outside than in this close old room. I don't believe goodness pays." She found time to wonder at her recklessness.

He did not answer her, but a little frown settled on his brow as he led the way to the side door.

"Where shall ge wo?" he said as he fastened the clasp at her throat, "to the bench by the corral or on the chapel steps?" She smiled to herself.

"Certainly not to the carrol."

"Let's walk, then."

He looked down curiously at her face in the shadowy light. "How changed you are to-night," he said, 'you are altogether different; I would hardly know you."

"Simply because I have walked outside a little?"

"Oh! no, not that, but your whole air is different. I don t know—"

"You don't know what?"

"I don't know that I like you as well," he finished banteringly.

It was in jest, but it cut her deep. How little he cared. She was nothing to him but a little girl, who was pretty enough to spend idle moments with, while he—

"And so you don't like the change," she said at last looking up into his face. "It is rather hard to please you. I believe my old manner found little favor."

He did not notice the hurt tone in her voice; neither did he see the piteous, hungry look in her great, childish eyes. He pressed her hand warmly.

"I always thought you the prettiest little thing in the world," he said lightly:

"Do you think a man could fall in love with a woman just for her looks?" Her tone was doubtful.

He squeezed her hand under the friendly cape.

"I don't know about that, but I know ONE man who could come pretty near doing anything for a pair of big brown eyes."

The eyes in question dropped under his.

He grew restless.

"Come here," he said persuasively.

They were opposite the little chapel, and he held her flimsy skirts away from the wet grass as they walked up the path. She sat down on the steps, and he leaned toward her. The loose tendrills of ivy clinging to the stone threw their flickering patches of shadow on the dainty face—she was very beautiful. He drew nearer—after all he might do worse than to fall in love with her. She was a dear, innocent little creature, and he was tired of the world, and all the weary worn women of it. He took her hand from where it lay in her lap, and looked at it.

"Let me take your glove off," he said at last caressingly, "your hands look much prettier without them." She shee her head.

"No they don't. I have been biting my fingernails."

"Why do you do such things: don't you know it ruins your hand?"

"Yes, but I didn't care, I don't care for anything tonight."

There was a note in her voice that made him look sharply at her averted face. A thought flashed across him—she was too easy; he had always been fascinated before by something out of reach, elusive, about her.

He unbuttoned her glove, and, drawing it off her arm, looked at the small fingers ruefully. They were not pretty, as she said. He bent his head and kissed the pink of her arms; she made no resistance, her manner was almost listless.

"Supposing I said," he whispered slipping his arm around her, "supposing I said, Leslie—"

She bent her head quickly.

"You mean?" she said.

"Don't you know?"

"You want to kiss me," she said, curtly, bluntly.

He dropped his arms.

The speech offended him more than anything else she could have said to him. It seemed almost coarse. It was out of keeping with the situation. Then he looked at her fresh, lovely face, and he kissed the small, bare hand passionately. "And if I said I did—"

She laughed.

"Do you know," she cried, "that I have determined to let every man who asked kiss me to-night, just for the experience?"

He started; he did not understand girls, after all, especially this one. Well, he was rather glad—if she wanted experience. His lips curled in the dark.

"I can tell you a better plan than that," he said in a low voice, looking straight into her face with his strange, magnetic eyes.

"What is it?" her voice was a whisper.

"Let the one man who wants to above all others kiss you." He clasped his arm about her waist; she could not move.

"But how can I know the man?"

"Wouldn't instinct tell you?" He bent nearer.

She trembled in his arms.

"Don't, don't," she said faintly, but he had bent his head, until their shadows blended into one.

"And to think that just as we are beginning to know each other, I must leave," he said at last regretfully.

"You must leave?"

"Yes, you know I have been out here a long time."

She ran her fingers up and down her arm mechanically.

"Yes, a long time," she repeated.

"You won't quite forget me when I go, and let all these other fellows cut me out?"

She shook her head.

"There are no other fellows." They were still for some time. He looked at her regretfully; he was sorry that she had turned out this way; he was sorry that he could not care for fruit that dropped into his hand; he was sorry for it all.

She got up and drew her skirts tightly around her.

"I think I hear the next waltz," she said brightly.

They walked along in silence; he tried to press her hand once in the shadow, but she snatched it quickly away from him. At the door she hesitated and shivered in the warm light.

"Are you cold?" he asked.

She turned her great eyes upon him for a moment, and he looked full in her face.

"Yes, I am cold," she said slowly, something choking in her throat, "so cold that I don't think I ever will get warm again."

THE BUBONIC PLAGUE

History of the Terrible Disease That is Ravaging India.

Much has been said and written about the plague which is now raging in India. Photographs depicting its horrors have been published, and whole volumes of descriptive literature have found place in the columns of the daily press. We have been told tnat it is a new and all-destroying disease, and that the whole world must guard itself against its ravages, and be constantly on the alert to prevent its spread.

This being the fact, it behooves us to make a logical investigation of its nature, based on science, and to acquaint ourselves with the best means of preventing its introduction among us, always provided that such means are necessary.

Having begun our investigation, each book, each pamphlet, each paper that we read, plus the personal investigation of Dr. Donald Gedge (who has kindly supplied me with valuable information, acquired while he was in China) show that this supposedly new epidemic is nothing more than that ancient scourge, the Bubonic plague, with its many aliases—black death, the pest, Asiatic plague, etc.

The disease originated in Egypt, the cradle of humanity, and according to Rufus (A. D. 98-117) it was eudemic and epidemic in Egypt and Syria 2,000 B. C. Its earliest appearance in Europe was during the reign of the Emperor Justinian, A. D. 527-565, where its ravages were most horrible, and extended over the entire limits of the then known world, marked by a mortality of awful dimensions. It then remained a permanent resident of Europe, with occasional epidemics for the next 1,200 years. From this time on it apparently disappeared from Europe and was confined to the far East, no doubt on account of the increase in hygienic and preventive measures. In the interval between this great European outbreak and recent reappearance as an epidemic in China and Japan, and subsequently in India, it occasionally was known in individual cases.

Workers in the field of scientific medicine had not overlooked the existence of this monster, and we owe it to the investigations of that able Japanese bacteriologist, Dr. Kitasats, who discovered the germ of the disease, that we now possess a definite knowledge of its nature. From what he tells us, added to the contributions of Dr. Wilson of Hong Kong, Dr. Lawson and Dr. Aogama, we may be certain that it is identical with the ancient plague which devastated Europe.

Recent popular journalistic literature leaves little to be said or depicted of its frightful nature, and for once they have not exaggerated.

Let us picture a laborer, sound in body and limb, engaged in his daily work. Suddenly he is attacked with a violent fever and is soon prostrated; his face is pinched and anxious, his eyes clear but sunken; rapidly his features become blue and dusky, and his eyes congested and staring; the lips are dry and parched, the tongue becomes swollen and black, the glands in different regions become enlarged and filled with matter, then comes complete collapse, and finally death. Now and then a chance recovery brings out in bolder relief the terrible mortality of the disease, but more often the victim dies before the symptoms described have had a chance to develop.

Under the most favorable circumstances the mortality has always been over eighty per cent.

This disease, like all other contagious maladies, develops and thrives where filth, poverty, over population, and ignorance exist. The more marked these surroundings the more dangerous and vicious the disease, not only this disease, but all other germ diseases.

Happily we are to a greater or less extent free from these conditions, and epidemics are rare among us, but having knowledge, and knowing commerce is the means of spreading infection, it behooves us not to sleep when we should be awake, and to impress upon our quarantine officials that they should be doubly watchful.

It might not be amiss to say in closing that the first great step in prevention of disease is to know the cause. Pasteur and his followers have taught us that most of the dangerous and contageous diseases are due to low forms of vegetable life known as germs. The best soil for the growth of these germs is where we find filth, over-crowding, ignorance and poverty.

Therefore let our watchwords be cleanliness, intelligence, and sanitation.

GEORGE FRANKLIN SHIELS,

The net amount cleared by the Sugar Trust during the past year is estimated at fully $10,000,000, out of which dividends of $7,023,120 were paid to holders of preferred and common stock. The Trust is to move for a slight increase in the sugar tariff to exclude the beet sugar of Germany. Last year sixty-five million tons of German sugar was sold in America.

The Paris correspondent of "The London Times" says that the widow of Baron Maurice Hirsch, of Vienna, has resolved to present 2,000,000 francs to the Pasteur Institute as a memorial of her husband. This will make it possible to enlarge the building by chemical and biological laboratories, which, it is estimated, will cost 800,000 francs. Some of the professors, moreover, at present receive little or no salary.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

A good deal of interest has developed anent the identity of the Bradley-Martins, whose big fancy dress ball is to be the event of the social season in New York. Bradley-Martin is the son of a wealthy and prominent banker of Albany, and comes of one of the best of the old New York families. The money, however, is from the estate of Isaac Sherman, father of Mrs. Bradley-Martin. The death of the shrewd old speculator brought to hand one of those rarest of all rare occurrences—an estate whose value had been under-estimated. The old man was believed to be a millionaire, but the will disclosed a fortune of twelve millions salted down in excellent property, that has since increased to such an enormous value that the Bradley-Martins may call themselves one of the richest families in New York. Miss Sherman was a pretty young girl, a blonde, slender and graceful, and I believe that she met her husband at a West Point dance; at all events, they have always occupied an enviable social position, and it is hard to understand why certain disaffected journals should decry the ball. Their motives cannot be the same as those which prompted the Vanderbilt entertainment, when that family lanuched itself into the social swim of Manhattan. The daughter of the Bradley-Martins is married to the Earl of Craven, and they spend most of the year in Europe. Their country seat in Scotland is a magnificent estate, and they entertain visiting Americans lavishly.

***

A few years ago, just after the marriage of their daughter, the Bradley-Martins paid a visit to this city, and were for a time guests at the Palace. Their rooms were on the third floor, just over the suite occupied by Mr. De Forrest Grant, well known in the exclusive circles of New York society. The young couple stopped at Monterey, and on announcing their intention of coming to town, Mrs. Martin mere wrote to De Forrest Grant asking if he would give up his rooms to her daughter. The gentleman's answer was prompt, if somewhat startling: "Dear Madam," so ran the note, "does your daughter drink?" Mrs. Martin, assuming that a leader of exclusive Manhattan could not be guilty of an attempted rudeness, responded quietly and politely in the negative, and asked the wherefore of the inquiry. "As your daughter does not drink," wrote Mr. De Forrest Grant in reply, "it will be easier for her to get to the third floor than it is for me to get to the second."

That closed the incident.

A story on Judge Garber comes to light. Many, many years ago, when the Judge was suffering from an acute attack of ambition only to be allayed by his election as District Attorney, he found himself opposed at the polls by a certain shrewd Yankee by the name of Stearns, who was languishing from the same complaint. In one of the logging camps in the mountains were some fifty Virginians whom the Judge considered so safe that he did not think it necessary to stump the environment. Stearns, however, went to the camp, and representing himself as an F. F. V. won the hearts of the Virginians, and ultimately their votes. The result was that Stearns was elected. Garber investigated, found in what part of the fence the nigger lay perdu, went to Stearns and expostulated.

"You are no F. F. V." cried the Judge. "You are a Yankee. In what way, sir, do you justify such duplicity?"

"I beg your pardon, sir," retorted Stearns, "I have deceived no one. I said I was a descendant of the F. F. V.'s, and my people, sir, are one of the first families of Vermont."

***

The troubles of a lawyer with a ranch furnish many a text for dissertation on the vanity of worldly possession. Assemblyman Caminetti, recently returned to his practice in Amador county, is the happy (?) owner of a fine, large tract of land, quite the prize farm of the region. The farm, however, is to be included under the category of things luxurious, since, though it is fertile and admirably situated, it costs much more to keep than it can be made to produce. The gentleman from Amador has built him a charming villa in the most desirable nook of the property, but as the drive from Jackson is quite lengthy it will be seen that he is often compelled to leave his office too early and arrive too late to have much time for the transaction of office work between whiles. It may be added that there are other luxuries, in the shape of mortgages, and truthfulness compels the statement that the happy owner has already paid in interest more money than the place is worth. Yet what is a lawyer without a ranch? Some time ago, when Mr. Caminetti represented his district in Congress, the United States Government was seriously considering the location of an Indian reservation upon the property and its environment; negotiations were entered upon, and it was found that Uncle Sam would be disposed to be liberal. A committee from Washington visited the property and reported favorably. The bargain was about to be closed, and great was the rejoicing in the family Caminetti. Just at this juncture some unfortunate busybody resuscitated a long-forgotten statute forbidding the Government to have financial dealings with Congressmen. Negotiations were immediately broken off with the gentleman from Amador, but a little later the Government purchased a tract of land imbmediately adjoining the Rancho Caminetti, and located thereon some three hundred Indians, who now make it a point of honor that the Congressman shall grow neither crops nor fruit. Mr. Caminetti still enjoys the luxury of his ranch.

***

Few women have come into the world with such an endowment of native ability as the late Mrs. James C. Flood possessed. She had that rare quality—correct taste—together with a degree of tact which made her a charming hostess. To speak of her social qualities, however, is to be reminiscent, for she has never entertained since the death of her husband. Hers was a reserved, a reticent nature. She was a devoted wife and mother, and aroused in her children a reciprocal feeling. It may be said Mrs. Flood never really recovered from the death of her husband, to whom she was indeed a helpmate. She retired from the world, and her daughter kept her company, refusing all temptations to desert her. In later years they have lived most of the year at Menlo Park, occupying their California street mansion but a month or more every winter. They saw only a few intimate friends of olden days, and went nowhere. Mrs. Flood was, of course, a very wealthy woman. The ex-

SENATOR THOMAS H. FLINT OF SAN JUAN
President pro tem of the Senate of the California Legislature tent of her fortune is hard to estimate, but the revenues that have accrued since the unfortunate wheat deal have undoubtedly repaired the ravages caused by that disastrous speculation. Besides, her son, Mr. J. L. Flood, in whom is vested the control of the family property, has shown great intelligence and judgment in its administration. His investments have proved remarkably successful, and have added to the total of millions which the Bonanza King left.
Photo by Hodson

***

I have alluded to the correctness of Mrs. Flood's taste. It is exhibited in the two splendid mansions, which were built under her direction. The great brownstone palace on California street is one of the most magnificently furnished residences in America. The details are all thoroughly artistic, and the collection of pictures is easily the best on the coast. Indeed, it is one of the best in the country. As for the Menlo Park mansion, it has long been a show place, surrounded as it is by magnificent gardens and tropical foliage. She showed this same admirable discrimination in the selection of bric-a-brac and in the arrangement of her treasures. There was never an error, never a note out of harmony. The funeral ceremonies were conducted with the utmost privacy, both Mr. and Miss Flood being determined that the rule of their mother's life should not be violated at her death. There was absolutely no ostentation, and only the few people intimately concerned were present. Since the sad event Miss Flood has been very ill. She will probably, it is said by those who know her well, devote herself to certain charities in which she has a deep interest.

***

It may not have been the ideal life that the late Tom Madden led, but within its limits I believe he was satisfied with it, if not happy. Of course happiness is a compromise, and is largely the condition of not needing anything that you cannot obtain. Tom Madden took a room in the Occidental Hotel when that caravansary was first opened for business over a quarter of a century ago, and he lived there ever since. He was one of its institutions; he had his own table, his own waiter and his ways were respected from the attic to the basement. Indeed, there were many good reasons why he should have been respected, for not only was he upright, honorable, intelligent, but he possessed a remarkably keen wit and a faculty of epigrammatic retort which made him a dangerous antagonist in an argument. Though he had nearly attained the fullness of three score and ten years, his manner was absolutely vivacious. He was to the end full of liveliness, sympathy and intelligence. Indeed, there were few of the girls among the Occidental's guests who would not sacrifice for a few minutes with Tom Madden the society of their best young man. This was due, I suppose, to the fact that he was ever ready to appreciate and to advise. For he was very much of a philosopher, was Tom Madden; he had enough to live comfortably on, and declined to make more money than he needed; he did the things he preferred, ate what he wanted, said what he thought, went to the theater whenever there was a new play, and never permitted any one to bore him. He never married, for a reason, of course. He had loved in his early manhood a beautiful and ambitious girl. Then he was poor, too poor to marry. He had prospects, but the girl was impatient. The affair was broken off, and she married another. But Tom Madden remained single to the end of his days.

***

So a scion of the Heydenfeldt family has opened a saloon. Not one of the contesting Heydenfeldts, indeed, but a legitimate offspring of the old Judge who left at his death over half a million dollars. A saloon, of all things —the very last resort, one might think, of a Heydenfeldt. Unfortunately the Judge made his own will, together with deeds and other devices which his deep legal learning and experience suggested, to render sure and safe the property he had to bequeath. Yes, and the heirs and the lawyers have made hay of the fortune. There have been twenty-five suits in the Superior Court and twenty appeals to the Supreme Court. The papers in the various causes would make a library, and between decisions and compromises not a shred of the testator's intentions have survived. So much for the lawyer who has a fool for a client. And yet Heydenfeldt had a fine legal mind, had been a Supreme Judge in the ante-bellum days and really was a great man. It all came of the number and variety of his descendents, for he left two full-fledged families, and others who claimed paternity. Such a litigious crew was never seen. One by one the progeny have been segregated under their rightful heads, but in the process the estate has dwindled and dwindled until what was once a competency is now a mere pittance.

***

Half a dozen English and Eastern syndicates have men in the field with the single purpose of looking for the good things that California has to offer in a mining way. Among local capitalists Lane and Hayward keep two experts constantly examining claims and suggesting new outlets for the Utica's surplus earnings. Recently one of these agents reported to Lane that the Griffith mine at Bryan Point, Shingle Springs, was likely to prove very good. Lane has the final word for the syndicate and he went to the Grizzly to examine the lead. He liked the prospect but thought it rather too small an affair for the firm. In fact the owner offered a two years' bond for $15,000. Then E. R. Stent, who developed the Juniper mine, took hold of the claim, and after seven months' work had an offer of $200,000 for the property the other day.

***

The beautiful dining room of the Lick House took on something of its old time gaiety last Saturday night. The Veteran Fireman gave a banquet there and indulged in songs and speeches besides. A full orchestra played throughout the evening, and the fire-laddies of ancient days gave themselves over to the enjoyment of the hour. Colonel Andrews presided as toastmaster and chairman for the evening with the grace that belongs peculiarly to the Colonel. Henry Highton, Judge Robert Ferrall, Colonel Stonehill and others responded to toasts, and Auditor Broderick, after a neat little speech, sang "Alice, Ben Bolt," for the boys. The old time fire songs were revived for the evening, and many a graybeard who had not raised his voice in many a year joined in the chorus of "Our Engine is Housed on the Hill." Much of the success of the evening is due to Colonel Andrews, who was indefatigable in his labors to make the evening go off with eclat.

***

The State of Pennsylvania is mourning the death of a railroad president. George D. Roberts, of the Pennsylvania Central Railroad passed into the other world last week, and men of high and low degree, men in private and in public life, hasten to do him honor and to give evidence of their great respect and affection for him. The press throughout his State is lavish in its demonstrations, and has nothing but words of praise to say of the dead magnate. The people of the State of Pennsylvania are proud of the Pennsylvania railroad, and are as deeply interested in its welfare and advancement almost as the owners themselves. Its system covers several thousand miles of railway, and wherever the line penetrates in the State of Pennsylvania, there the corporation may lay claim to the affection and support of the people.

THE LATE GEO. D. ROBERTS
President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company

Mr. Roberts began service with the Pennsylvania railroad as a rodman in its engineering corps. Although his promotion with this company was rapid, his services attracted the attention of another corporation, in whose employ he remained for a short while. His ability and his knowledge of the affairs of the Pennsylvania railroad were so marked that in a few years he was induced to return to that company. Early in the sixties he was appointed assistant to the president, and in 1869 became fourth vice-president. Five years later he was elected first vice-president, and in 1880 became the president of the road. To Mr. Roberts' ability and far-sightedness much of the present popularity of the Pennsylvania railroad is due. The employees of that company owe much to him, for he founded the system of civil service that prevails with that institution, and ties the interest of the lowest employee to the interest of the corporation with bonds of iron and clasps of steel.

The portrait of Mr. Roberts, presented in another column, is the best to be had on this coast. A careless observer would fail to note in his face the man's strength of character, but though quiet and deliberative, he was a man of rare force and ability.

SECRETARY OF STATE RICHARD OLNEY

THE NEW POSTOFFICE

A Melange of An Apartment House and the Madison Square Gardens.

Architecture in our day is something about which every citizen has an opinion that he does not hesitate to express. The architect, tutored or untutored, may devote much or little consideration to a design, and it will make no difference in the verdict of his critics. Acting on this principle, the officials of the Treasury Department ignored the protest of the American Institute of Architects as a body and as individuals. The eminent standing of the late Richard M. Hunt availed nothing towards correcting the abuse of the abortive system of grinding out postoffice designs in the Government plan factory at Washington.

The San Francisco postoffice design is but another production of the system. In looking at the drawing, on page 5, one must remember that it is a drawing, and a cleverly rendered one. It looks neat. It is neat. So make allowances accordingly. Mark the monotony of the facade; that was intended for simplicity. Observe the pediment in the center; it was intended to be interesting. Note the treatment of the ends. They detract from the repose of the whole. Singly they would serve admirably as elevations for theaters. The decorated arches at the entrances were borrowed bodily from a well-known Spanish Hotel de Ville. The intervening plain arches are supposedly a concession to our early Spanish history. The towers are like the traditional mule—without pride of ancestry or hope of posterity, and, unlike the mule, in that they are useless. There is one characteristic touch to the design which renders it suitable to our conditions. It is the two Chinamen strolling across Seventh street. Quite a concession from Mr. Carlisle's Treasury Department.

But these are not criticisms of architecture? No, of course not; they merely show how close in touch with our needs the Treasury Department is. To any but a layman its whole method is plainly discernible in this elevation. Its faculties are imitative, not creative. This design with its affectation of the Spinach Reminiscence, is a weak solution of Madison Square Garden, a few apartment houses and any old thing. It belongs to the Ironical Order of Architecture.

Does it express anything?

Does it suggest a postoffice?

Who can say whether our citizens will view with alarm or point with pride to our new postoffice? That will depend upon their point of view. It matters not that the American Institute of Architects as a body declare that architecture is deserving of more respect than the officials of the Treasury Department accord it. It matters not that architecture as a study is receiving greater attention each year at the important schools of the world, or that young men occupying advantageous positions in the world and possessing more than ordinary wealth, are turning to it as a career. It remains that the public, tutored and untutored, reserve their right to pass judgment upon works of art. Architecture, you know, is merely a matter of taste. It is either good taste or bad taste. However, that is another story.

If it will not be considered beyond the rights of a citizen to express an opinion of the postoffice privately, any one curious to know mine may have it with pleasure.

WILLIS POLK.

MISS PERKINS
A pretty ingenue in the Modjeska Company

CHARLES H. HOPPER
As "Chimmie Fadden"

MARIE BATES
As Mrs. Murphy in "Chimmie Fadden"

MR LOUIS JAMES
Who appears as "Spartacus" at the Baldwin next week

MLLE. ANTOINETTE TREBELLI
Who appears at the California on the evening of February 9th

CHIMMIE AND THE KIDS

ALMA KRUGER
Leading Lady of the Louis James Company

THEATRICAL STARS IN TRANSIT

BRIC-A-BRAC IN THE HALLWAY

PETERS' HILL-TOP HOUSE AND STUDIO, MONTEREY

A CALIFORNIA ARTIST

Charles Rollo Peters and His Pictures of Monterey Moonlights.

Peters met us at the gate, standing on the steps that were the vertebrae of a whale. He was booted to the knee, and wore a sweater and a sombrero, and looked just as picturesque as I had hoped and expected an artist should look. I suppose one is always on the lookout for pictures and scenes about an artist's habitat, and would persist in seeing them whether they existed or not. But at any rate I was rather impressed with all this, because it was unique and characteristic of a California artist. In Brittany he would have worn sabots and a beret, and perhaps a "blouse." In England it would have been a velvet jacket, but in Monterey, mark you, the artist wears a sombrero and high boots, and stands on steps that are the joints of a whale's spine. Where else would you see an artist with such attributes? We went into the studio.

Redwood, unfinished, and a huge north light, a couch or two, a black dog, lots of sunshine, and an odor of good tobacco. On every one of the four walls, pictures, pictures, and pictures. Mostly moonlights, painted very broad and flat, as though with Brobdignag brushes. And in one corner a huge panel-like painting very striking, a sheer cliff, tremendously high, overlooking a moonlit ocean. On the edge—but the very uttermost edge, you understand—a man standing, wearing a cocked hat and a great coat. There was nothing more, not a single detail, and the man was standing with his back turned, yet it was Bonaparte and St. Helena, beyond all shadow of doubt. Clever, you say? Enormously so, I say. A single huge broad "note," as it were, simple, strong, conveying but a single impression, direct as a blow.

Peters told me he was "going in" for moonlights. That's a good hearing for his style, as the art critic would say; is "admirably adapted" for those effects where all detail is lost in enormous flat masses of shadow. Just the effect to be seen on a moonlight night.

"You would be surprised," says Peters, "to see how many different kinds of moons there are." He illustrated what he said by indicating one and another of the sketches. "There is the red moon, when she's very low, and the yellow moon of the afternoon, and the pure white moon of midnight, and the blurred, pink moon of a misty evening, and the vary-tinted moon of the drawing. She's never the same. Here are two "ebauches," made on succeeding days, at the same time, and from the same place. Yet observe the difference." There was, indeed, a tremendous difference. I became interested. "It's the specialists," Peters continued, "that 'arrive' now-a-days, whether they specialize on diseases of the ear, or on the intricacies of the law of patients, or on Persian coins of the 14th century."

"Or on pictures of moonlight," said I.

"Precisely; that's my specialty."

Peters lives in Monterey on a hill-top, and paints from dawn to dark. After dark he goes out and looks at the moon, and the land and the shore in her light, and at the great cypresses. He don't paint there. Just looks and looks, and takes mental photographs, as it were—impressions he remembers and paints the next day. Singularly enough Peters, though going in for moonlights, does not paint them en plein air—how could he, for the matter of that, without any light to see by—but he does take a sort of combination note and sketch book along with him. He showed this to me. Here and there were mazes of pencil scratching, and the pages are almost unintelligible to any one but Peters himself, and written over them and in them were such words as "blue," "carmine and cobalt," "warm gray," "sienna," "bitumen" and "red," etc.—notes merely to help along in the more finished picture.

Peters thinks Monterey should be a great place for artists. He has sketched nearly everywhere, and maintains that there is more artistic "stuff" right down there in the old town than there is in Barbizon, even, or in the artist towns of Brittany. A few artists, in fact, have already "discovered" the place—artists that who since have been "Medailles" and have acquired greatness. Harrison himself, that Alexander the Great of marine painters, was here for a time, and Julian Rix, and Tavermeir and others, but none of whom have studied, really studied—in a careful, almost scientific fashion—the moonlight effects of the place as has Peters. There are two ways of painting a moonlight sky—one as I have seen it done by scores of artists hitherto, who paint in the sky a sort of indeterminate dark gray or very "warm" black. The other way is as Peters does it. Night skies are blue—deep, deep blue. Look into the sky the next time you are out at night. May be you thought the sky was black at night. Look at it. Blue! of course it's blue—bluer than the bluest thing you ever saw. But I never noticed the fact until Peters' pictures called my attention to it.

The interior of Peters' house, by the way—not his studio, but his house—is a picture in itself. He has a wonderful collection of arms, furniture, carpets, china, stuffs and the like—something really extraordinary. There in old Delft mugs, and a chair of brocade silk that Josephine once used as Mal Maison, and a ship-model of ivory presented to Bonaparte by the city of Toulon, original editions of Buffon, worth more than their weight in silver, and an old bed—one of the boxed-in kind, with sliding doors—from Brittany, that the guest still sleeps in—a marvel of carving, with the genuine Breton bird and worm design upon it, that stamps it at once as the rarest of curios.

I was wondering how large must have been the sum that Peters was obliged to pay for the wonder, when by one of those extraordinary coincidences that are all the time happening, he said: "I gave the fellow twenty-five dollars for that bed."

FRANK NORRIS.

A CORNER OF THE EMPIRE ROOM: EMPRESS JOSEPHINE'S CHAIR

PETERS IN HIS STUDIO

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Of course there is considerable gossip over the $50 assessment announced by the directors of the Burlingame Club. Considering the circumstances and the load of debt which the institution has carried all these years, the wonder is that this action was deferred so long. Since its inception, the club has been in debt. Nor is this extraordinary. It came into the world full grown, so to speak, with beautiful grounds, a clubhouse handsomely furnished, stables and innumerable other facilities, of which the expense, though partially borne by the Sharon estate, had to be met in considerable measure by the institution. So it began its career with a floating debt of $16,000, of which some $6,000 was for permanent improvements. In the course of time this indebtedness was reduced to its present figures—a little over $10,000, which the assessment will partially wipe out.

Otherwise the club is in good shape. It is owed nearly $4,000 from current dues, every cent of which will be collected sooner or later. This is after making due allowance for bad debts. So when all these various claims are paid in, when the 125 members have paid their assessment—which they will all do sooner or later—the institution will be on a cash basis and its maintenance will be possible at a much more economical figure than is now the rule. The development of interest in the specialties of the club renders this new appeal to its members safe. Of course there will be objections, but the dissatisfied element has been well weeded out, and those who remain are satisfied with what they obtain for their dues.

MRS. WALTER HART CASTLE
NEE MISS MARY CRITTENDEN SCOTT
Elite, photo

A new organization has recently been called into existence at Burlingame—the San Mateo Hunt Club. Walter Hobart is M. F. H., of course, and there are already fifty-five members, from whom dues of $2.50 per month are exacted to pay the expenses of broken fences and damaged garden plots.

The inclement weather and the epidemic of colds has proved a discouragement to society. There is movement, but only the movement which indicates existence rather than life. This season it is the unimportant alone that happens. No one has given a big ball, and there are no indications of big receptions or dances in prospect. The attendance at the Friday night cotillions is so slender as to warrant Mr. Greenway in expressing an intention of abandoning this organization. The fact seems to be that depression in business has extended into society proper, and that is why everything is as dim and dull as a funeral. We have complained of the paucity of events in other years, but last winter it was wildly and hilariously gay in comparison with January, 1897. Only dancing clubs give evidence of vitality. The last week of the Friday Fortnightly was quite brilliant, and the attendance was greater than ever before. The young people were, as usual, to the fore, and the occasion was signalized by the appearance of Miss Helen Thomas, a '98 debutante, who was in white swiss, and Miss Sawyer, a pretty brunette, who wore figured silk. Among the girls who looked particularly well were Miss Caro Crockett in white chiffon, and Miss Idabelle Palmer in pale green chiffon. The german was cleverly led by Lieutenant Bent, assisted by Lieutenants Davis and Kilborn. It seems a pity that the Fortnightly fails to recognize the thirt which the ceremonies of Terpsichore induces. On this occasion not even lemonade was provided for the dancers. Of course, economy is a virtue to be exalted, but the denial of refreshments is liable to make men go far after liquid.

Among the incidents of the week was a tea at Preston's on Saturday last. Invitations are out for a large tea at the home of Mrs. Carr on Washington street on the 13th inst. Mrs. Carr is president of the Sorosis, and she will have Miss Eleanor Wood, Miss Rose Hooper, and Miss Lottie Wsod to assist her.

Lent is close at hand, and it is proper that some organization on the lines of the Fortnightly be instituted to relieve the tedium of that period of fast and abstinence. I am told of a new dramatic club which is in process of creation, evolved out of different material, however, from the old Fortnightly. The Hagers, the Moores, and the Hoffmans are primarily interested, and it is understood that the club is for the delectation only of its own members, and that no outsiders or visitors are to be admitted to its gatherings. It is a positive rule that every one shall participate in its entertainments, which is, of course, the fairest way all around.

There is much interest in the production of "Caste," the rehearsals of which are proceeding apace. The Shiels estate has kindly loaned the Bush-Street Theatre for the preparatory performances, though the play itself will be given at the California.

Though Miss Eloise Davis has been retired from active participation in the gaieties of the season since the sad accident she sustained last year, she has not been deserted by her friends. On Wednesday last she had a luncheon party, at which a number of the girls who had entered society with her were gathered. Unfortunately the young invalid is not yet allowed out of bed, but her couch was made the center of the feast and the tables of the guests were set around it.

Miss Mary Crittenden Scott and Mr. Walter Hart Castle were married at the bride's home, 1036 Vallejo street, on Thursday evening last. It was a very quiet affair, the guests being members of the contracting families. Misses Laura and Katherine Scott were bridesmaids, and Mr. John Casselly was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Castle are to make the Hotel Vendome, San Jose, their domicile for the time being.

At the Saturday night dancing class the young people always gather in numbers, and one sees there innumerable pretty girls and the brightest and most enthusiastic youths. Last Saturday's affair was no exception to the rule. Howard Adams led with Miss Edna Van Wyck for his partner. The figures were of the marching order, and every one had a good time. I noticed some very effective costumes—Miss Gertie Bates in grey silk, Miss Margaret Cole in white mull over blue silk, Miss Jeanette Black in green organdie over green silk, Miss Gertie Van Wyck in blue silk, Miss Ethel Dickson in yellow, and Miss Eda Van Wyck in pink organdie over pink silk.

There has happened so much in Jewish society this season that it would be invidious to pronounce any one affair the event of the winter. Still the Joseph ball on Saturday night last was a very brilliant affair. The Maple Hall at the Palace is an ideal place for a dance, inasmuch as there is ample floor space, together with reception rooms and cozy corners for those for whom Terpsichore has no temptations. The scheme of decoration was clear—New Zealand flax blades intertwined with pink ribbon, together with bamboo intertwined with huckleberry vines. There were pretty souvenirs in the shape of satin ribbon beautifully painted. A fine supper was served at midnight at tete-a-tete tables, in the big dining-room, and after that came dancing until very early in the morn.

The debutante, Miss Nellie Joseph, was gowned in rich white satin, and Mrs. Joseph wore yellow brocade, with a corsage of chiffon of the same shade. They received their guests under a trellis of almond blossoms. The usual set of girls who go the social rounds were all there—some of them in new gowns. Miss May Slessinger wore one the handsomest costumes in the room. The skirt was of green moire bengaline, and the waist of tulle of the same shade. Miss Agnes Brandenstein wore an exquisite pink brocade, trimmed with pink tulle and violets. Miss Alice Greenebaum was in white frosted silk, with a bodice of white tulle set off with a large bunch of American beauty roses on one shoulder. Miss Norma Bachman wore a dainty creation of pink chiffon, trimmed with Valenciennes lace. Mrs. David Nuestadter's gown was a Louis XV. costume, with a white satin skirt and pink brocaded coat. Point lace was used in trimming.

Otherwise, the week has been very gay. The festivities in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Sheifel, who left for New York last Thursday, terminated with a reception given in their honor Sunday evening by Miss Carrie Sachs. Miss Henrietta Rothchild gave a dinner party Tuesday evening, and on the previous Saturday Mrs. Moses Heller gave the second of her series of dinners. The guests were all of the younger married set.

The future is full of promise. Miss Rosa Sachs has sent out forcy invitations for a theater party to the Baldwin Monday night next. The entertainment committee of the Concordia Club is preparing a burlesque of the "Prisoner of Zenda," to be given February 20th. Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Roos propose to celebrate elaborately the anniversary of their silver wedding February 14th. They will entertain a hundred of their most intimate friends at dinner at the Palace Hotel. Later there will be a dance, to which a large number of invitations have been sent out.

The wedding of the week was that of Miss Sadie Hyman and Mr. William Mack, which was celebrated at the San Francisco Verein at noon on Wednesday last. Both are well known in society. Miss Hyman is a daughter of the pioneer merchant, Hyman, who died some years ago at the Occidental Hotel. Since then she has traveled extensively in Europe with her mother and sister, and recently has been domiciled at the Richelieu. Mr. Mack is a young man of excellent business ability, who has a future. The ceremony was performed by Dr. Voorsanger; the bride wore a beautiful gown of white satin tulle. She was attended by her sister, Miss Agnes Hyman. Though by no means a large affair it was a very happy and enjoyable wedding.

MRS FRANCES EDGERTON
Who enacts the role of Queen Elizabeth in "Mary Stuart" at the Baldwin
Photo by Taber

On Wednesday evening next, February 10th, the "Doctor's Daughters" of Dr. McKenzie's church will give a musicale at the residence of Mrs. B. F. Norris, 1822 Sacramento street. Every member of the organization has taken an enthusiastic interest in this affair and no pains are to be spared to make it one of the most attractive concerts of the season. Tickets, seventy-five cents—including refreshments—may be had from any of the "Doctor's Daughters." The proceeds of the entertaioment will be devoted to the furtherance of the many charitable schemes that this organization has in hand. Among other local talent, the Mandolin and Guitar Club of the University of California and the Press Club Quartette have volunteered their services.

Across the Bay.

Alameda is as enthusiastic over card-playing as Oakland, and a perfect passion for picture pasteboards reigns over there. Certain of the ladies are capable players, and on last Wednesday afternoon at Mrs. George Tyson's some very pretty plays were made. The Hazletts, McMahons, Haights, Mrs. Lucy Hays and Mrs. Louis

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

The safest tea to buy or sell is Schilling's Best; for we take all the risk of the sale.

If not satisfactory, grocers return their customers' money in full, and charge the same to us.

A Schilling & Company
San Francisco

457

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

ROYAL

The absolutely pure

BAKING POWDER

ROYAL—the most celebrated of all the baking powders in the world—celebrated for its great leavening strength and purity. It makes your cakes, biscuit, bread, etc., healthful, it assures you against alum and all forms of adulteration that go with the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Monteagle were among the guests. The first prize was carried off by Mrs. Monteagle.

In Oakland luncheons and dinners succeed one another with fine promptness, and the matrons vie with the maidens in the series of entertainment. There is quite a degree of rivalry as to excellence of menu and originality of the decoration, and the Oaklanders bid fair to become epicures en route.

Quite a catalogue of married ladies' luncheons is offered to record for last week, notably Mrs. F. M. Smith's, in honor of her mother, Mrs. Thompson. Covers were laid for sixteen; the table decorations were exotics and pink begonias. On the list is the violet luncheon given by Mrs. E. B. Jerome, also a married ladies' affair. Then Mrs. Captain Watson gave a jolly little luncheon to some half dozen of her friends on Thursday. It was quite an informal affair.

Of the young people's dinners the most important was that given by Mrs. Orestes Pierce, in honor of Miss Belle Mhoon, her niece, on Thursday evening. There were eighteen young people at table. The decorations were really charming—consisting of Marie Louise violets artistically arranged.

There have been any number of receptions of a greater or lesser degree of magnitude. Mrs. Shepherd's affair on last Thursday evening was exceedingly jolly. It was not a large party, owing to the epidemic of colds and inclemency of the weather. The guests of honor were young Mr. and Mrs. Cross. The house was gorgeously decorated with pinks and greens. The girls were all prettily gowned. An informal German was arranged. Mrs. Henry Butters gave a big reception on Saturday last at her Piedmont home to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Butters, who have recently returned from South Africa. The house was decked in yellow acacia blossoms. All Oakland was in attendance.

Mrs. Wellman gave a reception in Fruitvale Thursday in honor of the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, who leave shortly for Europe.

Mrs. Mary Hinckley entertained a house party last week.

Entertainments for the "21" Club continue in order. This week the members were entertained by Miss Sarah Dunn. They played cards, and Miss Grace Holt carried off the prize.

An interesting party was given last Friday to the members of the Friday Fortnightly by Miss Mary Randall, of Piedmont. It was a progressive fib party, and was most amusing. Later in the evening the young people danced. Among those who looked especially well were Miss Luita Booth in grey and pink, Miss Carmen Moore and Miss Marion Randall.

The gaiety at Berkeley is never exaggerated and is rarely varied by the entrance of new people. Society there bears an intellectual aspect, and those who go find it necessary also to read. Much is expected of the University Cotillion Club, whose first party is to occur in the third week in February. The Harmon Gymnasium affords ample floor space for terpsichorean enjoyment, though its pretensions as a background have all the effect of a barn. The patronesses of the new club are Mrs. Martin Kellogg, Mrs. F. N. Watson, Mrs. J. R. Glascock, and Mrs. W. F. McNutt.

Among the anticipated events is the dinner to fifty young people to be given by Mr. Ira Boss at the Chi Phi Fraternity house in Berkeley, on Thursday evening. Mrs. Homer King and Mrs. Pringle are to chaperone the young people.

Mr. B. Reeder—"I'm told you'd like to purchase a stylish riding-horse, Miss Standish Now I have a green hunter I'd like to show you."

Miss Standish—"Oh, that would be lovely! He'd go so well with my new billiard-cloth habit!"

"I wonder what was the matter with the Swellbys. They bought a box at the horse show, and then never went."

"It's plain enough. After they'd paid for the box they didn't have money left for clothes."

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

THE THEATRES

Lady Macbeth With an Accent—A Successful Tramp at the Columbia.

San Francisco cherishes its respect for Modjeska, it turns is head away from her failure. It declines to look at her Lady Macbeth, and the most captious must admit that for once, at least, San Francisco is right. Modjeska cannot marry herself to the role of this frigidly flaming Scottish woman; she gives only the vaguest notion of her conception of Lady Macbeth; she plots murder and assumes remorse, but there is no sense of individuality felt withal; you are not conscious of any personality. The outlines are blurred and dim, as nearly nebulous as the words of the part permit.

Look as I may I cannot find the ability with which Haworth is credited. To me he seems utterly uninspired and mechanical. If I liked his "Major Schubert" little, I like his Macbeth less.

Once and only once did he make the little thrill which is born of the thing well done. This was when he and Macduff came from the murdered King's chamber —"Had I but died an hour before this chance," and "— renown and grace are dead;

The wine of life is drawn and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of!"

This was stirringly rendered. It was touched by the "real thing." Then he fell down, down, down, past even mediocrity in "Who can be wise, amazed, temperate and furious." There was no suggestion of Macbeth's mixed emotions, nothing which would warrant Lady Macbeth in stopping his words with a timely faint. In the famous "Is this a dagger I see before me, the handle toward my hand?" the motions of his out-stretched hands were suggestive of a monkey catching fleas. The whole scene was lacking in the blooming horror with which it can be permeated.

Without doubt Mr. and Mrs. Macbeth are the most dilatory pair of murderers ever imagined. Fancy two genuine desperadoes hanging around the scene of their massacre (in iminent danger of detection) long enough to spout five hundred words or so. Stage murderers always have a great dea. to say about their dark deeds, and, singularly enough, invariably select the bloody time and place to enlarge on their feelings, but, even remembering this and also making due allowance for the exigencies of the drama I still think that the Macbeths are too long-winded and foolhardy for any use —even stage use.

Of course, one can't be quite sure how murderers acted in Shakespeare's time, but a friend of mine, an up-to-date cutthroat, tells me that they says "let's git," and they got.

To cap the deficiencies of this performance comes Modjeska's accent. She gets along tolerably well with what children tied to spelling books call long, hard words, but the simple one's trip her; life is "leaf," and business becomes something strange called "becenes." There is little in this company's rendering of Macbeth, which one cares to remember. You come away filled with irritation for the management which gives us three minutes of Osbourne and an hour of Lonergan—Lonergan who bellowed and slopped through Macduff's lines with the discrimination of a freshman.

The witches, though assisted by stage settings and an alarming amount of black paint, did not produce any very creepy effects. In fact, they reminded me of the mild sheet and pillow-case parties in which boarding school misses are indulged on Halloween.

There is a very funny tramp at the Columbia. He is naturaly funny and naturally dirty—at least that's what his appearance indicates. He is as full of old jokes as an almanac, but springs them with a dexterity which rejuvenates them. He says, among other things, that it is all a mistake to suppose that our old-fashioned petticoated Mary "had a little lamb;" she had a little calf—that's the reason she didn't wear bloomers. He is supplemented by one Halpin, a good dancer, and, so the play bill says, "a lively liar," inserted in a jersey and a red blanket this attenuated youch makes the most revolting caricature of a woman that even the diseased imagination of a decadent could conjure up. He is inexpressibly loathsome. During one of their uncalled for choruses he sidled up to the star of the combination and nestled his head against hers. I expected to see the girl fall down in a spasm of disgust; that she did not testifies as few things could to the hardships and endurance of a woman on the variety stage. I believe now that this girl could eat tacks and handle toads. You could never tell by looking at her that she ever comes in contact with the like. She looks as dainty as a flower in her abbreviated pink skirt and white-neck arrangements. She sings, by the way agreeably and very differently from the usual strident fashion of the average variety show songsters.

Gillette's comedy, "A Legal Wreck," is on at the Alcazar. Hugo Toland is the wreck, and about the best they have in the show, though his voice is still hoarse. The little play is amusing, and the cast adequate, Mr. Polk doing good work as the old Captain. Next week they give another play by Gillette, which should draw well, as he always manges to leaven his work with humor. P. W.

* * *

The six little tailors with their funny long coats, and their funny little caps, sing their little song and dance their little dance in "Aladdin," and the dainty little housemaids with their shining new tins, and the scrub ladies with their buckets and their brooms, and the ancient maidens (for there were such in Tartary), with their caps and their curls, all do likewise, and with music and with song and with jest, all is merry at the Tivoli this week; as merry as a marriage bell, or as one is supposed to be.

"Aladdin" is good; it is quite good, in fact it is better than most pieces they have been having at the Tivoli. It is a success, probably because of the new ditties and the dancing, and, after all, there is more dancing than anything else in "Aladdin," and it is all good, from Hartman's aerial flights to the "toeing" of Zanett, who is down on the program as the "Turkish Wonder." Wonder or not, Zanett looks well, dresses well and dances well; and what more could one want—aye, what more could one have?

"We're very sorry to hear it,
To hear it, to hear it,
We're very sorry to hear it,
And how is she to-day?"

Dear old Jennie O' Jones it seemed like going back centuries to hear the old tune again, and Ferris Hartman sings it and prances up and down as though he never did anything else but visit the ailing Jennie. At any rate he must have done so "full many a time and oft." Of course he has—so have we all. It is to be hoped that the new Supervisors will take no offense at Ferris' rather direct allusion to them, but it is quite certain we all hope "Little Jimmie" Phelan could have Coodove's little club. If he had it, it is to be thought he would use it with rather striking effect.

Miss Seabrooke, you are good as Aladdin, indeed, you are quite good, as much so as you ever been in our memory. You look very nice, indeed, and we cannot blame the pretty little princess for loving you. The pretty little princess! Sweet Anna Schnabel, don't dye your hair; don't stain your face any more than you can help. Keep your natural little ways, and we shall love you for ever and for aye.

DRAMATIC NOTES

Louis James is next on the Baldwin list, following the Polish Countess. He gives us "Spartacus"—in which certain eminent high lights of bygone days made much name and fame. Mr. James's emotions have lost nothing of their physical violence. We are assured that "standing room only" is the rule throughout the country, at every theater he plays. Indeed, the farther from civilization you see Mr. James the greater he appears. He would be a Booth in the heart of Africa. The second week of his stay "Spartacus" retires for his new play, "My Lord and Some Ladies." This sounds like John Oliver Hobbes, but we are assured it as an adaption from Scribe. The invariable "powerful company" surrounds Mr. James. Guy Lindsley and Alma Kruger play second roles.

The second series of the Bacon-Minetti ensemble will commence on Saturday afternoon, February 6th, at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium. Miss Daisy Cohn will be the vocalist. Two choral concerts will be given by the Apollo Society and the Stanford Choral Association, one at the Stanford University and one in San Francico. The Stanford Association numbers about one hundred and fifty voices, while the Apollo Society has about one hundred. The latter organization especially desires to obtain new members, and invites all singers to join its ranks. The regular rehearsals take place on Monday evening at the Kohler & Chase Hall, 26 O'Farrell street.

On next Monday evening at the Columbia "Chimmie Fadden" will regale us with the dialect Ned Townsend has made famous. We shall have "Chimmie" and the "Duchess" and "Mrs. Murphy" and them all, and judging from the success the play has had in the East, we shall have a treat. Mr Charles Hoyt, the "Chimmie" of the original production, heads the company, an excellent one, which includes Marie Bates, whose "Mrs. Murphy" is considered one of the best character bits of late years.

Bessie Clayton still continues to glorify herself into popular favor at the Orpheum, while the equilibrists Zeno and Mann have lost none of their power of attracting large audiences. An echo of grand opera reaches the Orpheum in the person of Guille, the tenor, erstwhile of the Patti troupe, who next week will sing Gounod's "Ave Maria" to the violin accompaniment of Miss Nina de St. Hubert, a most accomplished young violinist. The Kiralfy ballet and the really wonderful Fraatz family are also to be seen for the last time.

The "Legal Wreck" is the play at the Alcazar, this week, and is drawing good houses. The last performance will be given to-day and to-morrow in the afternoon and evening. On Monday Gillette's famous comedy, "The Professor," will be the bill. An extra treat is promised in "The Professor," in the shape of a bevy of pretty girls, to whom the eccentric savant jurist is losing his heart.

Titenia, the celebrated toe dancer, who was for a time a sensation at Koster & Bial's in New York, made a successful appearance on Monday evening at the Columbia with "The Prodigal Father."

"Aladdin" holds the boards at the Tivoli next week, and should have a good run. The new extravaganza seems to give pleasure to this theater's patrons.

NEW VERSE

THE BRADLEY-MARTIN BALL

With apologies to the Shade of Burns

Dr. Rainsford, of St. George's Church, denounced the extravagance of the Bradley-Martin ball in the face of the poverty and desolation prevailing throughout the country. He suggested to his congregation that they abstain from attending.

Is there, for suff'ring poverty
For want, distress and a' that
A fule wha feels some sympathy,
We'll frown him doon for a' that;
For a' that and a' that
We'll lauch and dance for a' that;
The bal masque we're bound to hae
Wi' costumes braw and a' that

What though some ken na where to dine,
Wear tattered duds and a' that,
As lang as we wear dresses fine,
We're people nice for a' that,
For a' that and a' that;
The rest are swine and a' that;
The wealthy rogue wha has the plack
Is king o' men for a' that.

Ye see you birkie, ca'd Rainsford
Wha flytes and storms and a' that,
Though hundreds listen to his word,
It's clavers clean for a' that,
For a' that and a' that,
His feelings fine and a' that;
The man of independent means
Can sneer and lauch a' that.

The Lord may damn the vulgar wight,
The pauper, tramp and a' that,
But weel-bred folk like us are right,
Spite of faux pas and a' that,
For a' that and a' that
The elite's th' elect for a' that;
And he'll think twice, I'm sure, before
He turns us doon and a' that.

Then let us pray, that come it may
And come in time for a' that,
My dress frae Worth, this side the earth
To bear the gree and a' that,
For a' that and a' that
To take the cake and a' that;
That New York swell, society belle
Will all come too, for a' that.

Adieu d'Amour.

Faithful in every fibre of thy heart,
And all as beautiful as thou art true,
Yet must it be thy will that we must part
Grief shall not triumph as we say
"Adieu."
The love that glowed so warmly in thy breast,
Having grown cold, shall we let it die?
Yes, if it be thy will, Dame Love must rest
My heart shall grieve it as I weep "Good-by."
Good-by." Ah, No! then cannot God break
The chain,
Fetters were forged in passion's cruelest
And while my life have life, thou shalt remain.
My captive, though thy soul may sigh
"Let me!"

—LOUIS A. ROBERTSON.

Oh Truth! thou goddess from on high,
Thou trumpet tone of angel's choir,
How oft thy beauties have been sung,
How burns for thee poetic fire.
Upon thine altars incense smokes,
Thy shrines are hung with fragrant bay,
Thy robes are gemmed with precious thoughts,
Unto thy spirit heroes pray!
But yet—the Oracles are dumb,
But yet—Americanus Sum,
Thy soul doth not my muse inspire,
I sing the simple Campaign Liar.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

"URBAN DIALOGUES"

Some Skits on New York in Hope's Style.

The sayings and doings of the polite people of New York's smart set have furnished Louise Shipman with the material for some dozen little sketches. It would seem that Mr. Anthony Hope has introduced a new form of short story, namely the dialogue, and that Louise Shipman has followed the lead set by the "Dolly Dialogues." The idea of "Urban Dialogues" (Stone & Kimball) has evidently been suggested by Mr. Hope's charming stories. One may go so far as to say that the ideas of some of the stories themselves are "reminiscent" of the English writer, but for all that "Urban Dialogues" is very entertaining. It is an example of one of those rare literary achievements that are imitated from another man's work, but that are successful none the less. The wit and humor are all Hope's, but just original enough to be "carry," while now and then the author rises to the dignity of a real situation. It should be borne in mind that this delicate sort of work is very difficult to do. It is not so hard for an author of even ordinary ability to write a story around a well-defined, vigorous subject, once the subject is found, but it requires no little literary skill to spin cobwebs about so slight a motif as that of the dialogue called "Culture," that is herewith appended:

I didn't quite catch her name when old Shaw presented me to her, and I must have shown it by staring rather blankly, for as we passed into the dining room he leaned back and whispered something, but it was lost in the buzz of hungry conversation, and I sat down to dinner without the faintest idea as to who she was, and I doubted if she knew me. But not for long. She began:

"How do you like the Ibsen performances?" With that my heart fell. She didn't know me, and I was in for it.

"Oh," said I, rather nonchalantly, but full of trepidation, for I wasn't sure whether Ibsen was a new acrobat or a pianist, or what. You can never tell where these Boston women are going to break out next, anyhow. "Oh, I didn't care for him. A little too much, don't you think?"

"Yes," she acquiesced, "he is very strong."

I thought it was an acrobat. Ever since Sandow was in Boston they've been crazy over 'em.

"Too much muscle on his neck," said I at a venture.

"What a queer way to put it. Tell me, is that a new expression?" She took a little tablet with a gold pencil attached from somewhere, and prepared to write.

"You see," she said, "I am making a list of unusual idioms, colloquialisms, and bits of slang. I intend, some day, to trace their growth, development, and passage into general use. 'Too much muscle on his neck.' I think that most expressive and full of connotation. It might be applied with equal appropriateness to parts of Browning, and I think it describes Sudermann perfectly."

As she proceeded with this I could feel my appetite slipping from me. I gulped at a glass of wine, and was dimly conscious that there was no escape. She went on: "It has just flashed on my mind; I think I've traced the origin of it already."

"The origin of what?" said I, a little wildly.

"The expression 'Too much muscle on his neck.' It must be derived from a conjunction of the two very common phrases, 'To have a thing on the brain,' and 'To get it in the neck.'"

"'Yes," rejoined I, feebly, "that seems very plausible." I made mental note of the fact that the one was especially applicable to her and the other to me. She evidently had something on the brain, and I was getting it in the neck. When I emerged from the maziness of this thought, she was holding an animated conversation, as she thought, with me, but in reality with herself.

"Do you know," she was saying, "this is quite the most interesting expression I've run across in some time; its perfectly evident connection with the two I've mentioned, added to the elusiveness of that connection, makes it, in many respects, the most important and interesting on my list."

"I am very glad to have been able to give it to you," said I, with a ghastly attempt at looking pleasant.

"But tell me," she went on, having put away her tablet, "which do you really think he is best in, 'The Pillars of Society' or 'The Master Builder'?"

"Who?" said I, absently. I had forgotten all about the acrobat.

"Why, Ibsen."

"Oh, yes, Ibsen," I laughed nervously. "Why, I think he was better in 'The Master Builder.' That is a much better test of pure strength. The 'Pillars of Society' is a mere trick. Salvini did the same thing in 'Samson,' and he was nothing but a big, soft Italian."

"I quite agree with you regarding the strength in 'The Master Builder,' but I don't quite understand your other comparison," she said.

I didn't understand it myself, and I didn't see how she expected to. I supposed, of course, the "Pillars of Society" and "The Master Builder" were the names of acrobatic acts, and I simply bluffed about Salvini in "Samson," as the "Pillars of Society" sounded about like the scene where he pulls the temple down about him. It was time to change the subject. That was plain. So with cool irrelevance I asked:

"Have you read 'Chimmie Fadden'?" It was an immense relief to find that she followed the diversion.

"No," she replied, "I have little or no chance to read ordinary biography. I am engaged this winter almost entirely on the history of slang, and what time I have aside from that, is devoted to the Browning and Walt Whitman clubs and the Christian Science Circle; besides I take two courses at the Harvard Annex—one on Dante, the other on the town tax during the Middle Ages; so you see I have little time for outside reading."

"Yes," gasped I, "I see."

An hour later I was reviving, with the aid of one of old Shaw's cigars and a glass of cognac. "Tell me," said I, "that Miss—a—a—what's-her-name. She's some sort of a new woman, isn't she?"

"I guess not," said old Shaw. "We've had that kind in Boston ever since I can remember."

"Indeed?" I remarked vaguely.

ONE MONTH'S LITERATURE

Fact and Fiction in the February Magazines.

The "Cosmopolitan's" leading article in this month's number is by Frederic Remington, with the author's illustrations, and is called "Vagabonding With the Tenth Horse." Remington is improving rapidly in the art of story-telling, and it will not be long before his pictures will not be called upon to excuse the article that they commonly accompany. "Vagabonding With the Tenth" is a sketch of the marching of a colore- cavalry regiment in the neighborhood of Fort Assiniboine, and is full of good description and character study. Other articles are "The American Ostrich," by W. M. Gray: "Winter Days in Florence," by Edgar Fawcett, and a capital description of the lottery system in Germany, under the title of "A Fool's Paradise," by Wolf Von Shierbrand. Four chapters of Conan Doyle's exciting serial, "Uncle Bernac," appear in this number.

Lippincott's novelette for this month is an extremely interesting story, somewhat on the Jules Verne order is "Under the Pacific," by Clarence Hubert New. Mr. New's hero is a young New Yorker by the name of Harry Stevens, who attempts by means of diving bells to penetrate to the hold of a sunken treasure galleon. The tale is really thrilling, and Stevens' exploits are backed up by that array of data, facts and figures so dear to the readers of the "scientific novel." "Marrying in the Fifteenth Century," by Emma Bailey Stone, is a charming little sketch of the manners and customs of the Middle Ages. The poems of the number are from Clarence Urmy, Julian Hawthorne, and Jean Wright. The contribution of the last named author, "Death an Epicurean," is a particularly strong bit of verse.

Though a little late in appearance, Harding Davis' description of the coronation of the Czar, in the February Harper's, is the last and best work on what may be considered the most brilliant event of the end of the century. It is recounted in Mr. Davis' best style, simple, straightforward, and original in its point of view. Mr. Davis had exceptional advantages for viewing the coronation, as he was one of only six Americans who gained admittance to the cathedral, while such a man as Sir Edwin Arnold and Frederick Villiers were denied. Mr. Davis represented Harper's Monthly and the New York "Journal" on this occasion, and his description of the trials and tribulations of the correspondent is amusing in the extreme.

Poultney Bigelow still continues to write of "White Man's Africa," and treats intelligently of the President of the Orange Free State. The fifth number of Du Maurier's Marlian also appears, and will doubtless attract more attention than any other of the contributions. The short stories by John a'Becket, Octave Thanet and Sara Beaumont Kennedy are the least interesting features of the issue, sadly lacking as they are in originality or force.

The war in its various phases, the characters of the men involved, and the reasons for the collapse of the Confederacy furnish The Century with the material for the leading articles of this month. "Why The Confederacy Failed" is the title under which are grouped a half dozen papers by prominent Southern Generals. The papers are extremely interesting and cast many a new side-light upon the Lost Cause. Stephen Crane has at last made his appearnace in this magazine. He makes his debut upon this new stage with a story—joined with a capital illustration by Remington—called "A Man and Some Others." It is a splendid tale, perhaps one of the best Mr. Crane has written, even though there is a somewhat strong suggestion of Owen Wister throughout. It is merely the incident of the murder of a sheepherder by Mexicans, but is related in a graphic, pungent style that gives it all the dignity of a tragedy. An article on Monotypes by W. A. Coffin is an interesting paper in the revival of an old art. One o fthe best contributions is from the pen of Talbot Kelly, illustrated by himself, in which he describes the desert life of the Bedouins. Mr. Kelly lived with the nomads for a season, and speaks as one having authority.

The Bookman congratulates itself on its existence in this number, and says it is not because of complaisant vanity it does so, but merely out of gratitude for favors received. It announces the possession of a large circulation, the degree and variety of which is not attested. Much the best feature of The Bookman is the department of paragraphs in which is detailed news of authors and general comment on books. Editor Peck's gossip is both biographical and social. We learn of the marrying and giving in marriage of his subjects, and he is also at pains to deny rumors of engagements which appear to him erroneous. In the February number he devotes himself to a critical consideration of William Dean Howells, whose "Lady of the Aroostook" he pronounces the most perfect story that American literature has yet produced. Editor Peck is described as one of those industrious geniuses who sometimes devote themselves to literature and journalism, instead of manufacturing or commerce. It is said he writes everything his magazine contains but the correspondence and the poetry. The names signed to the articles are but noms des plume to conceal his personal identity. Doubtless this is a fiction instigated by some successful rival.

There are thirty portraits of George Washington in the February McClure's, which is a mighty interesting publication. "Captain Courageous" is easily first among the magazine serials, and the current installment is magnificent work. An admirable passage is the discription of the fog on the banks through which the Atlantic liner, running twenty knots an hour, looms out. Only Kipling could render, as it is given here, the life of the fishermen, their jokes and badinage. Indeed, they are splendid and living pictures armed with the atmosphere of the sea. In the number is a short story by William Allen White, who wrote the editorial in the Emporia Gazette, "What's the Matter With Kansas?" It is "The Home Coming of Colonel Hucks," and there is real feeling and a fine flavor in it. Colonel Hucks is not necessarily a Kansas man; he is a Westerner, and the emotion which fills him and his wife is the universal sentiment of the colonist returned home. It is beautifully rendered here.

Professor Max Muller, in the current 'Cosmopolis," prints some recollections of the historian Froude, who was one of his dearest friends. Froude was always a storm center in England, and he had more enemies than anybody. Some account of him from the hand of an intimate, himself a man of the first intellectual rank, will be appreciated. Stories cluster around the publication of Froude's first book, which so wildly fluttered the dovecotes of clerical England. Professor Muller tells one:

His favorite pursuits lay in natural science. He knew every flower, every bird, every fish, and every insect in his neighborhood, and he had imbibed a belief in the laws of nature, which represented to him indirectly the thoughts of God. When, therefore, after a long continuance of drought, the bishop of his diocese ordered him to have a special prayer for rain he simply declined. He would pray for the good gifts of Heaven, offer thanks to God for all that He was pleased to send in His wisdom, but he would not put our small human wisdom against the Divine wisdom; he would not specify what he thought was good for us, for God knew best. He had no difficulty in persuading his farmers and laborers that if they had any trust in God, and any reverence for the Divine wisdom that rules the world, they would place all their troubles and cares before Him in prayer, but they would not beg for anything which, in His wisdom, He withheld from them. "Thy will be done;" that was his prayer for rain. There was a great commotion in ecclesiastical dove-cotes, most of all in Episcopal palaces. All sorts of punishments were threatened, but Kingsley remained throughout most respectful, but most determined. He would not degrade his sacred office to that of a rain-maker or medicine-man, and he carried his point. "In America we manage these things better!" said an American friend of Kingsley's. "A clergyman in a village on the frontier between two of our States would pray for rain. The rain came, and it soaked the ground to such an extent that the young lambs in the neighboring State caught cold and died. An action was brought against the clergyman for the mischief he had done, and he and his parishioners were condemned to pay damages to the sheep farmers. They never prayed for rain again after that."

That was true. He had stirred the fire. A hot discussion followed all over the kingdom. Froude was treated as a rebel. He was driven from his fellowship in Oxford. For a long time his enemies kept him poor, but the reading public came at last to recognize the value of his luminous, splendid prose, despite the hatred envy of the chorus of reviewers, perhaps because of that chorus.

Charles Kingsley, as well as Froude, was one of Max Muller's intimates, and like Froude, Kingsley was poor in his younger days. The professor tells this story of Kingsley's uncompromising attachment to principle:

I knew him through all his phases. I knew him first when he was still a fellow of Exeter College. I was at that time often with him in his rooms in High street, opposite to Saint Mary's Church, when he was busy writing novels, and I well remember passing an evening with him and trying to find a name for the novel which afterwards appeared under the title of "Nemesis of Faith." I saw him almost daily while his persecution at Oxford was going on, gaining strength every day. He had to give up his fellowship, on which he chiefly depended. I will not repeat the old story that his novel was publicly burnt in the quadrangle of Exeter College. The story is interesting as showing how quickly a myth can spring up, even in our own time, if only there is some likelihood in it, and something that pleases the popular taste. What really happened was as I was informed at the time by Froude himself, no more than that one of the tutors (Dr. Sewell) spoke about the book at the end of one of his college lectures. He warned the young men against the book, and asked whether anybody had read it. One of the undergraduates produced a copy which belonged to him. Dr. Sewell continued his sermonette, and, warming with his subject, he finished by throwing the book, which did not belong to him, into the fire, at the same time stirring the coals to make them burn. Of what followed there are two versions. Dr. Sewell, when he had finished, asked his class, "Now, what have I done?" "You have burned my copy," the owner of the book said, in a sad voice, "and I shall have to buy a new one. The other version of the reply was, "You have stirred the fire, sir."

The last is curious, instructive. It is an example of the English practice of accepting as true the effort of some graceless American joker who has been amusing himself by what he would call "stuffing a Britisher." There is no particular objection to such acceptance from this side if there is none from the other.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents. San Francisco.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

Its Purity
A Surety
Of
Its Excellence

Accept
No
Substitute
None
So
Good
None
So
Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.
819 Market St., S. F.

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER
SUCCESSORS TO
H. P. GREGORY & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO
MACHINERY
Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.
19 Spear St., San Francisco
MANUFACTURERS OF
High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease
DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS
Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

A Home
MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A
GAZOGENE
BUT NOT
If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See
Justinian Caire
521-523 Market St., San Fran.

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.
CHAS. LYONS
Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
Branch Stores: 302 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST.

HORSES

Racers and Racing of the Week -- Comment on the "Sport of Kings."

Wet and sormy weather has made race-going of late more a pain than a pleasure. As a consequence form shown by the horses engaged has for the most part been variable, and scratchings from the daily card abundant.

The performances of the new crop of two-year-olds have not displayed any striking excellence, and probably the best of that division have yet to sport silk. Locally bred ones have failed so far to earn their share of glory, though in numbers, it is almost needless to say, they are in the majority. Amongst the lot nothing has pleased the talent better than Outlay, a remarkably nice looking chestnut colt by Owas, out of Viola, dam of The Sinner. The youngster ran a good second to Free Lady (Free Knight—Fauna III), on Monday last, giving the filly eight pounds and, with the worst of the start, showing evidences of speed and courage. This colt made top price ($750) at the late Haggin sale in this city, and bids fair to prove that Eugene Leigh made no mistake in his purchase.

Of the three-year-olds imp. Sain (St. Serf—The Task) has shown that he is running into form, and, if it be right to conclude from his appearance to the eye, that he is still short of being thoroughly fit, we have yet to see how good a colt he really is. Like all of the St. Simon strain he seems to take kindly to the distance of ground, judged by the comfortable manner in which he went out and galloped over his field in the mile and a quarter race on Tuesday last. On that occasion the useful Greyhurst, who was giving him seven pounds, made several attempts to take his measure, but was each time shaken off in a manner that showed the St. Serf colt to be good, honest metal. With a slight let-up now and careful placing, he should be worth following hereafter. It must be borne in mind, however, that the time for this race was not fast, even allowing for the going being a bit heavy. Greyhurst, who has done his full share of late, was running perhaps beyond his distance, and after the race looked a size small. The smooth work of imp. Sain alongside the action of the former was an object lesson in race horse moevment.

It was painful to see poor old Senator Grady, who in his day has been stripped for the fray with such cattle as Henry of Navarre and Domino, and earned honors, pulled out for a $350 purse, and with only one sound leg to his credit, having to sink his flag to such an one as Monita. The old gelding is still good to look at for one who enjoys seeing a good type.

Not often does an uncertificated stranger give us a surprise here on his first appearance at the post, but on Monday King William, the four-year-old son of Spendthrift and imp. Kapanga, turned the trick cleverly. As a youngster he was highly thought of, but had to be laid on the shelf on account of a defective hoof. He will now bear watching.

---

A convention has been formally entered into between the representatives of the two local jockey clubs, providing for the close of this season's racing in May, the California Jockey Club to wind up on the 1st, and the Pacific Coast Jockey Club on the 15th of that month. It has been further agreed that racing shall open at Ingleside next season on the 1st of November for two weeks, when the California Jockey Club shall follow on at Emery Villa, fortnightly meetings alternating at each track for an entire period of six months, and the same arrangement to be maintained for two years from November next. The tracks are not to be used during the recess for running races, but may be enlisted, if desired, for trotting meetings. This announcement has been well received, and it is to be hoped the scheme will be found to work well.

---

The drying-out properties of the Ingleside track during the recent almost continuous rains have been the subject of generally favorable comment, and have shown that a good winter track is simply a question of sense and skill in building, and not merely a matter of meteorological sufferance. Would that the road cobblers would take a lesson therefrom.

The Ingleside authorities, having resolved to decline entries for horses known to be troublesome at the post, owners will more than ever see the necessity of taking steps to avert or remedy this failon the part of their various properties, which will otherwise become practically valueless, so far as racing here is concerned. In nine cases out of ten the mischief is caused in the first instance by neglect to mouth the young things properly when breaking, and aggravated by uneducated jockeyship; and, therefore, can be obviated by the exercise of proper care and sense on the part of those interested.

---

Extended meetings in Montana, Oregon and British Columbia are on the tapis for the coming summer, all of which will no doubt present inducements to stables operating here this winter, whose resources are adapted for or necessities likely to be served by a perennial campaign in the West. At any rate, this development of racing enterprise must tend to reassure owners of blood stock on this side of the continent, where values are apt to be uncertain, more especially when the game lacks scope and spirit in the Eastern and Middle States, as it did so sorely last season. It is only fair to say, however, that in the case of the latter sections of the country prospects for the immediate future show improvement.

---

A movement is on foot to present a petition to the Commissioners for a bridle path or two in Golden Gate Park. In a small way the necessity for such was formerly recognized, but nothing of the kind now exists. It is thought that if the matter be properly brought before the Commissioners they may be induced to provide a bridle road, say from the new bridge out to the beach between the main roadway to the Cliff House and the northern boundary of the Park. An inspection of the ground has shown that it would be a very simple and inexpensive matter to cut out, say a sixteen-foot bridle road, which would be sufficient width for two riders abreast going in opposite directions, and if the road were allowed to wind gracefully at the existing grades of the land, it would make a most enjoyable place for a canter. At present riders on horseback have to run the gauntlet of the rapidly driven vehicles and bicycles which monopolize the roadway, and their horses, moreover, suffer in legs and feet from being confined to the hard roads. Public parks of the kind elsewhere invariably provide such accommodation as is here alluded to, and it is to be hoped the suggestion may be adopted.

---

It is very satisfactory to be able to note that at their recent annual meeting the Pacific Coast Trotting-Horse Breeders' Association adopted a resolution vouchsafing their hearty support to the Horse Show, the Board of Directors being instructed to appoint a committee to render assistance to the Horse Show Association in securing support from breeders and owners of light harness horses in particular. Union is strength, and in such action, spontaneous and broad-minded, there is discernible a spirit becoming to horse-buyers, and which, where they are met together, is seldom found wanting, though there may be individual likes and dislikes of breeds and styles. A man's fancy is pretty much the result of his education and experience, and the person who devotes himself to the thoroughbred, the hackney, or any other type, has no more reason for regarding another, who bestows his favors on the trotting horse, as not worth thinking about, than the man who plays the piano has to scorn one who prefers the violin for the exercise of his skill. Horsemen should be catholic in their instincts, however special may be their tastes, and, in show matters especially, realize that in the present circumstances of this State any horse show, to be successful, needs the support of every one interested in the important industry affected. In these days the modern horse show has usurped the place of the old-time fair, with improved conditions and attractions, and anything that can be done to accentuate this fact here will secure for the local event a sound basis and a series of fixtures that will exercise the best possible influence in horse matters in this part of the world. It is only right to say that the Horse Show management has made every effort hitherto to obtain the support of trotting-horse breeders and owners, and this recognition by their leading society must be most acceptable.

BENEDICT.

It gives us pleasure to call our readers' attention to the value of Brown's Bronchial Troches as a remedy for throat affections. The fact that these troches have been manufactured and sold for over fifty years is an evidence of their real merit. While it is true that Nature does not endow every one with a sweet, well-modulated voice, yet there is no voice so discordant but that by care and training may be rendered pleasant, if not sweet and musical. The greatest artist could not hope to entrance us with his music, if his instrument were out of tune; and so the larnyx must be kept in tune, or it will not send forth pure, sweet tones. Singers, speakers—in fact all persons who make an abnormal demand on the vocal chords will find Brown's Bronchial Troches soothing, strengthening and healing, quickly relieving hoarseness and sore throat.

CRESTA BLANCA WINES
AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT
THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION
OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA
Cresta Blanca Wines
OBTAINED THREE
WETMORE-BOWEN CO.
140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

Perrier-Jouet Champagne
EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand
W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

YOU KNOW OUR BUSINESS
SO DO WE!
Stationery, Printing, Bookbinding
ANYTHING IN THAT LINE
THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

Electrical Supplies
BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.
523 Mission St., San Francisco

Army and Navy Club
Is the only WHISKY on the market, every package of which bears an AFFIDAVIT guaranteeing it to be absolutely PURE and over SIX YEARS OLD
MEYERFELD, MITCHELL & CO.
116 Front Street, San Francisco

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE
PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.
At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

Wedding Invitations
are properly engraved
and in correct form, at
ROBERTSON'S

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 752
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING
HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO
901 Sutter Street

Miss Adie's School 2117 California Street bet. Buchanan and Laguna
Day Boarding School. Kindergarten.
English, French, German. Calisthenics. Dancing

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, Feb. 8 to 20, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.

Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m. and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from Jan. 25 to Feb. 6, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine!

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar. Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

The Tarpey Stakes Saturday, Jan. 30th
The Hobart Stakes, Saturday Feb. 5th

A. B SPRECKELS, President.
W. S. LEAKE, Secretary.

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS.

For Two Weeks, beginning Next Monday, February 8th

THE EMINENT ACTOR

MR. LOUIS JAMES

Supported by Guy Lindsley, Alma Kruger and a Superior Company, in magnificent scenic productions of Mr. James' greatest successes!

Entire First Week: "SPARTACUS"

Second week: "My Lord and Some Ladies," "Hamlet," "Othello," etc.

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

And now comes the greatest of them all

CHAS. HOPPER "CHIMMIE IN FADDEN"

Direction of Frank McKee

The One Distinct Novelty of the Year! Five months in New York. One month in Chicago. One month in Boston. One month in Philadelphia.

The Original Company, Scenery and Effects!

For two weeks only, commencing Monday, February 8th

Attraction to follow: Fanny Rice

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, Feb. 8

First appearance of Ara, Zebra & Vora, Europe's Premier Equilibrists

John & Bertha Gleason, the Novelty Dancing Duo

Last week of The Celebrated Frantz Family

Bessie Clayton and the Big Ballets

GUILLE, the World's Greatest Tenor

Ward & Curran, the Clipper Comedians

Royal Hungarian Court Orchestra

Reserved seats 25c.; balcony 10c.; box seats and opera chairs 50c.

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Every Evening at Eight
Our Up-to-Date Extravaganza

Aladdin or the Wonderful Lamp

See the Latest Sensation:

"La Danse Des Fleurs Electriques!"

Superb Ballet of Cleopatras! The Six Little Tailors! Floating Palace in Midair! New and Novel Specialties!

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA PAILLE : MANAGERS

Last performances to-day and to-morrow matinees and nights, of the comedy-drama

"A LEGAL WRECK"

Monday, February 8th, Another Laugh-Maker
William Gillette's Famous Comedy

THE PROFESSOR

The funniest play of the clever author
The entire company in the cast

Our Regular Prices! 'Phone for seats: Black 991

Musical Event of the Season

MESSRS. FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. take great pleasure in announcing the first appearance here of

MLLE. TREBELLI

The famous Prima Donna Soprano

AT THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE

Tuesday Evg., Feb. 9th, at 8:15

Assisted by GUSTAV HINRICHS' Symphony Orchestra

Seats now on sale

Prices, 50 cents, $1.00 and $1.50

AS THE WORLD WAGS

Gossip of the Bradley-Martin Ball—Gertrude Atherton's New Book.

The Bradley-Martin ball is proving a fertile text for the New York papers. The space given the affair is amusingly out of proportion to its real importance. We are told the function is to be the ball of the century, eclipsing in magnificence the famous event which ushered the Vanderbilt clan into New York society. One hears of champagne to be served in fountains, of an outfit of silk stockings for the servitors to cost $1,400, of continuous suppers and of innumerable other extravagances. A Dr. Rainsford, pastor of St. George's, a fashionable Episcopal Church, joins with Russell Sage, a well known New York miser, in denouncing the entertainment as unpardonably extravagant. The "Journal," which has achieved a pitch of vulgarity the "World" hardly eclipses, goes into daily ecstacies over the costumes and the cost, and presents yards of fake information about the costumes and the arrangements. Another fertile writer points out that though the affair is the Bradley-Martin ball, but little has been heard of the head of that house and much about its mistress. It is understood that the role of Mr. B. M. is the background. The ball is to be opened with four quadrilles—one a Pompadour, another the Du Barry, each under the direction of a society leader. Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Elisha Dyer and the hostess are the quartette of leaders. Mrs. Whitney, we are told, is to be Madame de Sillery, Mrs. Astor Marie Antoinette. The prohibition of all hackneyed costumes, such as peasants, flower girls, shepherdesses, and the like, while it will greatly enhance the beauty and distinction of the ball, will probably produce a uniformity in the appearance of the guests which will make the dance more of a bal poudre than a fancy-dress affair. For there is nothing easier for a woman than to get up a marquise's dress of the Louis Seize period. With a grandmother's trunk, a quantity of old lace, jewels ad libitum, and a small face, graceful head, with an artistic colorist, a woman who has never posed for a beauty will fall in love with the first glimpse she gets of herself in the mirror. Mrs. Martin has limited her guests only to certain periods of time, and left them all the countries of the world to choose from.

Violet does not seem to have decreased in popularity this season, in spite of its having been the rage last winter. It is the most prominent color at all fashionable functions, and its general use is especially noticeable to any one who will stand at the back of a well-filled audience room. Waists and costumes, stocks and garnitures, of violet are seen on at least one-third of the women present, and the flower itself is everywhere in evidence, worn as a corsage bouquet, embowered with black feathers on a "picture hat," or with other flowers upon a dress bonnet, tucked in the belt, pinned on the shoulder, carried in the hand, while the breath of violet perfume makes the air unpleasantly heavy at times—at least this is what Harper's Bazar says.

The admirable and most marvelous New York paper, for which Will Hearst is responsible, tells us that tattooing is the latest fad in the English metropolis. The Earl of Craven's back has been decorated with his coat of arms, the Duke of York has a neat design on his left shoulder blade. The practitioner who is decorating the nobility in London is Dr. Macdonald, who does effects in blue, green, brown and red. His studio is on Jermyn street, and is decorated in most artistic style. The patient reclines on soft couches and is treated with morphine to remove sensibility of pain. Steel and ivory needles are used to produce the proper effect, and we are assured that the achievement of an elaborate design requires several months.

A certain Otton von Boyesi-Loifling—a Viennese nobleman, a journalist by profession, put up at the Waldorf recently, and was advertised as an heiress hunter by the new journalism. He wrote subsequently to the "Journal," detailing his experiences. As soon as his rank was mouthed around, he received invitations right and left, was offered countless introductions to millionaires. He tabulated this, the results of his exhibition:

Capital stock: Title, 200 years old, with enough money to enable me to take this short vacation and then return to my profession of journalism in Vienna. Result, after two weeks at the Waldorf:

Opportunities of marriage: Ladies worth from $100,000 to $250,000, five; ladies worth from $250,000 to $500,000 two; ladies worth from $250,000 to $500,000, three; ladies worth from $500,000 to $750,000, two; ladies worth over $750,000, two.

Mrs. Atherton's new novel, "Patience Sparhawk," has much to say of the New York woman:

The New York girl has the face of the American aftermath, and a skin like tinted jade, but she has no figure to speak of; a long-legged creature with a whole tiger inside of her. * * * Or she is of the snub-nosed marble statue order, which is another type of the swagger New York set. She moves her thin limbs with dexterity, but can hardly be called graceful, and she snorts in a gentle, lady-like way. She's a whole rattlesnake and no mistake, yet she rarely hits hard, and merely spits occasionally. * * * Bright-eyed and splendidly groomed, she divides her time between smoking cigarettes, talking scandal, reading French novels and manicuring her nails.

There are lots of married women privately known as "friskies" that the straight-laced matron would shudder to think of excluding from her visiting list. There are just about as many good women as bad. * * * Half the women in society are good wives and devoted mothers. The other half, girls and married women, old and young, are no better than your Rosita. Sometimes their motives are no higher. Usually, though, it's craving for excitement. I don't blame those much myself. The most fascinating woman I know is larky. The relative sinlessness of these women must be conceded, but their purity is uninteresting because it is that of the people mentally limited and possessed of the fad of the unintellectual. Moreover, they have their erotism, the oddest, most unreal and harmless erotism the world has known in the last two thousand years; and, after all, quite incidental. Every keen eye had long since observed that the old maids are far more religious than the married women, that the girls cool perceptibly to the great abstraction as soon as a concrete candidate is approved.

The costly bathroom which was to adorn the private suite of Mrs. Spreckels-Watson in the brown-stone Spreckels mansion on Van Ness avenue is generously described in the NewYork "Herald." One is accustomed to note that each new bathroom a newspaper describes is the finest in America. The tiles, it seems, were designed by Miss Spreckels herself, and cost $2,000. The room is small, the floor inlaid with mosaic tiles in neutral tints. Over the bathtub is a decorated panel composed of six-inch tiles, representing in rich colors two women bathing, one assisting a little youngster to swim. The tub is decorated in the same spirit as the tiling, the figures modeled on it representing a group of very proper looking nereids on a coral reef. The frieze shows a collection of sportive cupids. The washstand is a combination of gold and onyx with ivory tiling. The table is of onyx, the hot and cold water faucets of gold, and the rods supporting the table and washstand are of the same metal. A stained-glass window furnishes illumination. The door is of solid oak, an electric chandelier hangs from the ceiling, and the general effect is simply magnificent. I am inclined to think, however, that the apartment hardly compares with the splendid bathroom in the Huntington house in New York.

There is a "soft answer" which does not by any means "turn away wrath." On the contrary, it excites an impotent rage that is all the more intense because it cannot be expressed. "How very quiet and dull this winter has been!" said Mrs. Highflyer, from Chicago, who had, in her own estimation, successfully conquered New York society. "Oh, you won't find it dull or quiet when you really know people," answered her friend and rival, sweetly. "You have got a new gown," said the wife of one partner to the helpmeet of another, whose smart friends gave the former enemy a secret pang of envy. "Oh, no," exclaimed the latter, who did not wish to seem extravagant. "I have had it all winter." "But I have never seen you wear it," said the other, incredulously. "I dare say not, dear," replied her friend, goaded at length into the "soft answer," "I have only worn it at the A.'s and the M.'s."

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are unrivaled for relieving coughs, hoarseness and all throat troubles. Sold only in boxes.

Speaking of champagnes, the Moet & Chandon brand appears now to be the favorite among swelldom. Unaided by the influence of caterers or leaders so frequently employed, Moet & Chandon has captured New York cultured society. The brand was much in evidence at the Patriarchs' ball, was served exclusively at the Washington Gridiron Club banquet (of international epicurean repute), and also at the New Year party of O. H. P. Belmont.—Hotel Gazette.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND SEE THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

ONE POUND FINEST JA-CAN YOUNG HYSON L PACKED FOR CAROLINE LIVING CO. SAN FRANCISCO BY WALSH-HALLACY YOKOHAMA

Beware of imitations
This is a fac simile of the package
Genuine Diamond "L" Tea

E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California Street
San Francisco, Cal.

For sale by all grocers.

Have you a friend who a Smoker is,
Tell him there is just out a Smoker's Tip,
Which will prevent a cancer lip.
Mailed on receipt of three 2-cent stamps by

ELASTIC TIP CO.
Boston 735 Market St., S. F. Chicago

DR. G. A. DANZIGER
DENTIST
22 Geary Street : : First Floor
The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON
Johnson & Company
MERCHANT TAILORS
No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at 128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED
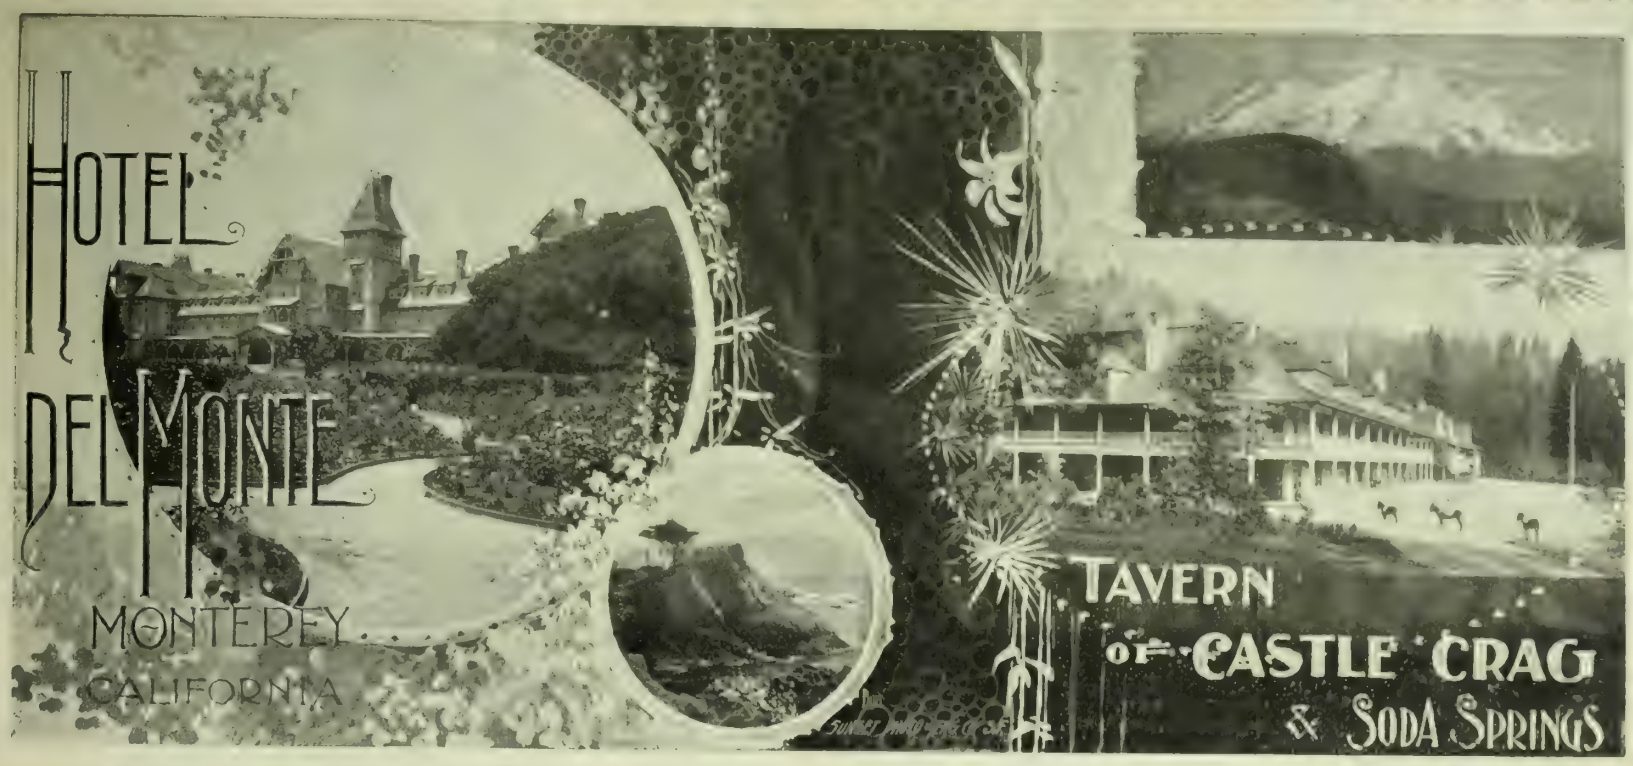
to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye, harmless, pleasant odor, $1.00 a bottle
LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle
LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st., N.Y.
Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

A. K. DAGGETT
Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty
NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305



CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over.

GEORGE SCHONEWALD, MANAGER

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—Department No. 3.

Hannah Anglin, Plaintiff, vs. Maurice Anglin, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Maurice Anglin, defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant upon the ground of defendant's desertion and abandonment of plaintiff for upwards of six years next prior to the commencement of this action, and for a judgment and decree awarding to this plaintiff the sole custody and control of Mary Catherine Anglin, the minor child of plaintiff and defendant; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and the seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six (1896).

[Seal] C. F. CURRY, Clerk.
By JOSEPH RIORDAN, Deputy Clerk.
Lane & Lane, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF F. M. L. PETERS, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Martha E. Peters, administratrix of the estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administratrix at the office of Gavin McNab, Esq., her attorney, 47, seventh floor, Mills Building, the same being her place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

MARTHA E. PETERS,
Administratrix of the Estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, January 14, 1897.
Gavin McNab, Att'y for Administratrix.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT IN AND for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, Department No. 9—Probate.—In the matter of the Estate of SARAH SMITH, deceased.—Notice is hereby given, that Thursday, the 11th day of February, A.D. 1897, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day, and the court room of Department No. 9 of said court, at the New City Hall, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, have been appointed as the time and place for proving the will of said Sarah Smith, deceased, and for hearing the application of W. R. Felter for the issuance to him of Letters of Administration with the said will annexed.

Dated January 20th, A.D. 1897.

CHAS. F. CURRY, Clerk.
[SEAL] By W. F. Northrop, Dep. Clerk.
F. P. KELLY, Attorney for Petitioner.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Julia Consolidated Mining Company

Assessment No. 28
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied January 21, 1897
Delinquent in office January 26, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, March 19, 1397

J. STADTFELD JR., Secretary.
Office, room 56, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

ASSESSMEMT NOTICE—BULLION MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 49) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the offices of the company, room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of February, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday the 11th day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, S. F.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE—BEST AND BELCHER MINING COMPANY—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 26th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 61) of twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on 2d day of March, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Tuesday the 23d day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California

The Wave's Clubbing List

For 1897

By special arrangement with the publishers
THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list
Subscriptions must be paid in advance

| | |
|---|---|
| THE WAVE AND ARENA | $5 00 |
| " " ARGOSY | 3 35 |
| " " ART AMATEUR | 5 75 |
| " " ATLANTIC MONTHLY | 5 75 |
| " " BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE | 5 70 |
| " " CASSELL " | 3 75 |
| " " CENTURY | 6 00 |
| " " CONTEMPORARY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE | 3 35 |
| " " CRITIC | 3 30 |
| " " DELINEATOR | 3 50 |
| " " DEMOREST MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " FORUM | 5 00 |
| " " FRANK LESLIES MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " HARPER'S BAZAAR | 5 70 |
| " " " MAGAZINE | 5 80 |
| " " " ROUND TABLE | 4 00 |
| " " " WEEKLY | 5 70 |
| " " ILLUSTRATED AMERICAN | 7 75 |
| " " JUDGE | 5 80 |
| " " LESLIE'S WEEKLY | 4 50 |
| " " LIFE | 5 75 |
| " " LIFE'S COMEDY | 3 35 |
| " " LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE | 4 50 |
| " " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE | 7 75 |
| " " MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE | 3 35 |
| " " NEW REVIEW | 5 35 |
| " " NINETEENTH CENTURY | 6 00 |
| " " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " N. Y. JOURNAL, DAILY | 6 50 |
| " " " SUNDAY | 6 00 |
| " " OUTING | 3 75 |
| " " OUTLOOK SUNDAY | 3 50 |
| " " N. Y. WORLD SUNDAY | 1 75 |
| " " PUBLIC OPINION | 3 35 |
| " " REVIEW OF REVIEWS | 1 35 |
| " " SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " ST. NICHOLAS | 3 35 |
| " " SUNSET | 3 00 |
| " " TALK | 1 75 |
| " " TOILETTE | 3 75 |
| " " TRUTH | 5 50 |
| " " VOGUE | 5 75 |
| " " YOUTH'S COMPANION | 3 35 |

An Advantageous Offer!

Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan
McClure's Magazine
Ladies' Home Journal
Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital actually paid up in cash - - - | $1,000,000 00 |
| Deposits December 31, 1895 - - | 30,727,586 59 |
| Reserve Fund - - - - - - - | 750,000 00 |
| Guaranteed Capital - - - - - | 1,200,000 00 |

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $21,652,219

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES.; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES.; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

H. D. LAWRIE, A. J. CARMANY, Managers

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts [illegible]

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
01 Montgomery Street

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

"Black Jack" Percival, who was a naval captain before the war, once brought a cargo of Spanish jacks home in a man-of-war. He was in Spanish waters when the jacks were given to the United States by Spain, and was ordered to bring them out in his ship. It made him very angry, but he got the beasts aboard and sailed for New York. When he came through the Narrows, the guns had been rolled back, and out of every port there stuck a jack's head. Thus decked out and without a salute he came to his anchorage. The admiral commanding sent post haste to demand why Captain Percival had not saluted. "I didn't salute," was the doughty captain's answer, "because I couldn't. I had two men twisting every jack's tail, but not a damned one of them would bray."

M. Thiers, the great French statesman, once fought a duel over a girl of Aix, whose father had come to the conclusion that young Thiers, then a student, ought to marry her. "I deemed it wiser," Thiers says, "to spend a few minutes with a weapon about which I knew nothing than to spend a lifetime with a woman about whom I knew a great deal too much." And so the meeting came off, the opponents standing at twenty paces. Thiers' bullet went nobody knows where; that of the irate parent passed through his hat, an inch above his head. Referring to the circumstance, "Cham," in the "Petite Presse," afterwards remarked: "If Thiers had not been so little, he would never have become so great."

One of the Rothschilds, anxious to wipe out the stigma of cautious peacefulness under which his race labors, gave notice in the beginning of the Franco-Prussian war that he would present a handsome sum of money to any Hebrew soldier in the German army who might capture a French flag. Such capture was made, and in due course the Jewish warrior came up for the promised reward. After he had received it the delighted donor invited the recipient into his private room and begged him to recount the glorious episode. "Well, my lord, it was in this way," said the hero: "the French soldier who carried the Eagle was also one of the Race, so we did it on joint account."

Joseph Chamberlain is noted for his facility in silencing opponents. During the "Home Rule" agitation he was charged with treachery for deserting Mr. Gladstone. He spoke before an audience in Bermingham. They appeared unfriendly, and in the middle of one of his sentences he was interrupted by a shrill outcry of "Judas! Judas! Judas!" Chamberlain did not pause to finish his sentence. He smiled, glanced up at the gallery, and replied instantly: "Not Judas, but Joseph betrayed by his brethren." The quick retort delighted the audience and he was allowed to finish his speech.

At the last Drawing Room held by the Queen, Lord Carrington, in announcing the names of the ladies presented, according to his duty as Lord Chamberlain, got mixed, and announced a certain Mrs. M. as "Lady M." Thereupon the Queen bent forward to greet her with the kiss on the cheek that is always given to wives and daughters of Peers. As she bent, Lord Carrington found out his mistake, turned extremely pale, and gasped out: "Don't kiss her, ma'am, don't kiss her; she's not a lady at all!"

At a confirmation service in a Scottish country church, the rector was catechising the children. "What is your name?" he asked a strapping girl of thirteen, the only daughter of the village boniface. He received no reply. "What is your name?" said the minister, in a more peremptory way. "Nin o' yer fun, parson; ye kna ma neame verra weel. Duon't ye say, whon ye're at our house on a neet: 'Bet, bring me a pint o' yell'?" The congregation, in spite of the sacredness of the place, was on a broad grin.

Two Irishmen were quarreling over political and national differences. O'Grady said to Daly: "You are a renegade and a turncoat!" "Indade and I'm not," said Daly. "Shure I know me own mind, and can't I follow me convictions?" "Convictions! Shure phat do you know about convictions? You call yourself Daly, and everyone knows when you struck this country first you had an 'O' on your name big enough for a life-preserver!"

Bonnat, the artist, sitting next to M. Maspero at a great dinner one night, said to him: "Maspero, you who are so near-sighted, tell me how does M. ——, away down there at the foot of the table, appear to you?" "Well," replied M. Maspero, "I see a white spot, which I know is his shirt front, and a flesh-colored spot, which I know is his face." "Ah," cried Bonnat. "how I wish my pupils could see things in that way!"

The Emperor of Austria is not a witty man, but one of the few smart things he ever uttered was about the desirability of making the best of a matrimonial bad bargain. "As you make your bed you must lie on it," he is credited with having said to his son shortly before the tragedy of Meyerling. "True," was the answer; "but you need not lie together on it."

On a recent Sunday the clergyman of a parish church in Kent was reading the notices for the week, and concluded by saying: "There will be christening next Sunday at ten-thirty." He then slowly walked to the pulpit. Suddenly turning toward the congregation, he remarked in severe tones: "Remember, Mrs. Tomlinson, I said ten-thirty. A year ago you were late, I believe."

Roswell Horr was making a strong protection speech in Providence one night, when there was a hoarse cry from a freetrader in the gallery: "Where does the wool come from?" "Out west where I was brought up," replied Mr. Horr. "We got it mostly by shearing the sheep's back!"

Matchless in Every Feature the Concensus of Opinion

. . . REGARDING THE . . .

Ladies' Grill-Room

. . OF . .

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

HIRSCH-KAHN & CO.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIANS
IMPORTERS OF OPTICAL GOODS
PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS & SUPPLIES ETC.
333 KEARNY STREET
SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

SUNSET LIMITED

The Famous Palatial Flyer

BETWEEN

San Francisco and New Orleans

SEMI-WEEKLY

EASTBOUND

| | |
|---|---|
| Lv. San Francisco | 10.00 P.M. Tues. and Sat. |
| Lv. Los Angeles | 3.00 P.M. Wed. and Sun. |
| Ar. El Paso | 4.40 P.M. Thurs. and Mon. |
| Ar. New Orleans | 6.55 A.M. Sat. and Wed. |

WESTBOUND

| | |
|---|---|
| Lv. New Orleans | 10.00 A.M. Mon. and Thurs. |
| Lv. El Paso | 8.05 P.M. Tues. and Fri. |
| Ar. Los Angeles | 7.45 P.M. Wed. and Sat. |
| Ar. San Francisco | 12.45 P.M. Thurs. and Sun. |

Agreeable connections in New Orleans with through limited trains for Eastern cities.

To St. Louis in 24 hours; Chicago, 27 hours; Cincinnati, 24 hours; Atlanta, 15 hours; Washington, 34 hours; Philadelphia, 38 hours; New York, 40 hours; Boston, 50 hours.

Delightfully equable climate en route; train service unapproachably superb throughout; quick time; no additional cost.

TAKE SUNSET LIMITED

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. February 10 and 25.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, February 4, 10, 15, 20, 25, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, and every fourth day thereafter

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. February 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Through Sleeping-Cars to Chicago.

The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad runs through from Oakland to Chicago, daily. Pullman Palace Drawing-room, also Upholstered Tourist Sleeping Cars, leaving every afternoon. Annex Cars on sharp connection for Denver and St. Louis. The only line by which the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River can be reached. The canyon is a mammoth opening in the earth two hundred miles long, eighteen miles wide and seven thousand feet deep. It is reached by stage from Flagstaff, Arizona Territory, in one day's ride. Send for beautifully illustrated book descriptive of the Canyon and the Santa Fe Route to the East. Lowest through rates to all points in the United States, Canada, Mexico or Europe. Special rates to regularly ordained ministers of the gospel. Ticket office, 644 Market street, Chronicle Building. Telephone Main 1531.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Feb. 23, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Monowai," for Australia, Thursday, February 4, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

Pacific Towel Co.

Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. E. MOORE, Proprietor

The Controversy on the Architecture of the New Postoffice Building

THE WAVE

This Paper is not to be taken from the Library.

VOL XVI. No. 7 SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 13, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS

CASTING A STATUE

THE LAST STEP IN THE PROCESS OF CASTING THE MAIN FIGURE OF THE NATIVE SONS' MONUMENT PRESENTED TO THE CITY BY JAMES D. PHELAN

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 13, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| The Controversy on the Architecture of the New Post-office; by J. P. Irish, A. C. Schweinfurth and Willis Polk | 3 |
| The Situation in Chinatown | 4 |
| The Making of a Statue | 4 |
| The Property Woman: a story by Francois Coppee | 5 |
| About Personages | 5 |
| Things and People: by Boswell Jr. | 6 |
| The Monterey Fisheries | 7 |
| Views of a Chinese Fishing Village on Monterey Bay | 8 |
| Strange Gods in Town | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres; by Peg Woffington | 11 |
| Ormonde Himself Again; by Benedict | 12 |
| "The Triumph of Death": a Review | 13 |
| As the World Wags | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

OUR MILITARY POLICY.

Recent dispatches from Washington indicate great activity in the ranks of the military lobby at the Capital. The science of lobbying is not generally understood to be included in a military education, but the art itself seems to be cultivated and, in some degree, successfully practiced by some gentlemen of the profession of arms. If the military proficients in the gentle art of influencing legislation could be trusted to exert their skill in support of measures really designed for the good of the military service, there would be no reason whatever for commenting adversely on their activity; but we find that the lobbyist is still a lobbyist, even when he wears a uniform—or, rather, when he is presumed to have a uniform, which he does not wear. For your military lobbyist has a wholesome fear of your populist legislator, and he goes not a-field in shining blue and glittering gold and brass. But, just as craftily as his civilian brother, he knows how to put on a mighty zeal for the public welfare as a cloak for the private and personal advantage which are the real ends he seeks. For instance, the Military Committee of the Senate has been favored recently with some information relating to a pending bill for the reorganization of the line of the army. This measure contemplates an enlargement of the artillery force by increasing the number of regiments by two, while reducing the number of officers in each regiment, an arrangement supposed to be made necessary by our rapidly developing system of coast defenses. We have had occasion to refer briefly to this programme for the artillery in some comments which we have made recently on the amazing pranks played by the highest military authorities with the artillery garrison of this harbor, and we shall resume the discussion of this interesting subject in a future number. Sufficient to the day are those provisions of this amazing "reorganization" bill which affect the infantry regiments of the army.

Briefly, then, we have now twenty-five regiments of infantry of ten companies each. Each regiment is provided with a Colonel, a Lieutenant-Colonel and a Major; each company is officered by a Captain and two Lieutenants. It is a strong regiment of our infantry which can turn out with 500 men present for duty under arms. And now it is gravely proposed by this preposterous bill to turn this handful of soldiers into a three-battalion regiment of the European model. How? By adding a thousand or more men to the 500 in the ranks? That would make the proportion of officers to enlisted men come nearer to the European ratio, but there is nothing in such a result that commends it to the military lobbyist, whose admiration for the European model has its limits, as well as its uses. No, the feat of turning one slender battalion of 500 men into three "battalions" is to be accomplished by adding to the organization two Majors, two Captains, and four Lieutenants, eight additional officers, and not a single additional soldier. If "battalions" are what we need, and if they can be had in this fashion, surely they are cheap enough. As civilians we look to our military sages for guidance in military matters, and generally we are quite ready to accept their dicta as to the details of their profession; but this proposition is too difficult for the civilian mind, and long consideration of it leads only to deeper darkening of counsel. It is plain that what the people want in the military service is a force of fighting men so organized as to give a maximum of military efficiency in the number enrolled. Now, if by merely adding a few officers to a battalion, that battalion becomes, by act of Congress, three battalions, with a corresponding increase in fighting efficiency, why, in the name of plain civilian common sense, can we not tack on a few more officers and so convert our one lean battalion into a glorious line of six, or ten, or twenty battalions? Officers are moderately expensive, to be sure, but so are enlisted soldiers, and if by the addition of only 200 officers we can multiply by three the military weight of our infantry without adding to it a single man carrying a musket, we may well think that we have found a military bargain-counter.

Some of the reasons vehemently advanced in support of the bill are as remarkable as the bill itself. The General commanding the army assures the Senate that the bill ought to be made into a law immediately; that any delay is fraught with peril to our national safety and our national honor; and that the only nations other than our own that still retain the ten-company regiment are the Chinese and the Persians. We have had occasion to remark recently that there are other Mongolian peculiarities of our military service which might with advantage be dispensed with, and for the elimination of which no appropriation of money is necessary; and at a time no more remote than the date of his last annual report it appears that the commanding General had quite a different and higher opinion of the despised ten-company regiment. Perhaps he was not then informed that the Chinese were his models in that particular as well as in others. Is it possible that our most exalted military leaders can suggest no better reason for a momentous and expensive change in our military administration than that we are behind the military fashions of Europe? Is the ancient art of war reduced in these days to a mere following and copying of such military fashion-plates as may from time to time be issued by the general staff at Berlin, or from the war department in Paris, or the Horse Guards in London? If so, we might, with advantage to good order and military discipline, dispense with some of our costly Generals and substitute for them a few military milliners, who, by the way, could be readily recruited from the military lobby at Washington.

We believe that this so-called reorganization bill is a dishonest measure, and that the reasons publicly pleaded for it are not honest reasons. The real reason for which this absurd proposition is advanced, the reason which is sedulously concealed, and which would doubtless be indignantly denied by the military log-rolling lobby, is found in the consideration that the enactment of the proposed law would result in the immediate promotion of fifty Captains to the rank of Major, fifty Lieutenants to the rank of Captain, fifty sub-lieutenants to the higher grade, leaving 200 vacancies at the bottom of the rosters to be scrambled for by genteel youth who have a uniform but abhor work as a means of subsistence. What a plum for the dispensers of military patronage! All this would add not less than $500,000 to the annual expense of the military establishment, without adding an ounce to the fighting weight of our army. Verily, if it is a Chinese condition that confronts us, the theory by which we are asked to seek relief is so silly that a coolie corporal would scoff at it—unless he found himself in the line of promotion. The skill of the military lobbyist is well exhibited in the statement made by the chairman of the Military Committee of the House in reporting the bill—a statement taken almost bodily from a document furnished by the sages of the War department—in which the flood of promotions which would be caused by the passage of the bill is referred to as "merely incidental," a sort of necessary evil, perhaps, which the virtuous military lobbyist would be glad to avoid if he could. Well, there is a method by which this "merely incidental" evil could be avoided. If the three-battalion regiment is what the military reformers really want, let the chairman of the Military Committees propose a bill to bring about this result, not by splitting up one thin battalion into three squads to be called battalions, but by consolidating three one-battalion regiments into one three-battalion organization, with a provision for the retirement or mustering out of the officers who would thereby be rendered superfluous. Every advantage claimed for the European regimental organization would thereby be attained, and the reduction in the number of commissioned officers would be "merely incidental" to the improvement so much desired. Do the guileless legislators believe that the zeal of the military lobby would be exerted in support of such a bill, or that the "merely incidental" argument would not be fiercely resented by the heroes aspiring for higher rank and more pay and allowances?

We do not seriously offer this proposition as a contribution to our military policy, but solely as a test by which the Spartan quality of the military virtue of honesty may be triumphantly demonstrated. Let it be understood that we are not holding a brief for either side in this controversy, if controversy there is. No sound military argument can be made against the three-battalion organization as such, so far as we are informed. It is probably a better organization than our present one-battalion regiment. It is undeniable that a three-battalion regiment is three battalions—three honest battalions—and to attempt to hoodwink a lot of civilian legislators into the belief that the advantages of such an organization can be obtained, without the necessary battalions, and by merely adding a handful of officers to the present organization is a disreputable maneuver of which any honest officer should be ashamed. The fact is, the reorganization of the European infantry was adopted for the purpose of economizing officers, and each battalion of such a regiment carries more muskets than one of our slender regiments can muster. The European battalion was expanded to the full limit of the ability of one field officer to command in action. Should our present infantry regiments be split up into three battalions each, the command of one of our field officers would not be equal to the strength of a European company. When our military leaders and advisers boldly cite the European regiments in support of their mock scheme for reorganization, without making any reference to the relative strength of our regiments and those of the continental armies, they amply demonstrate either their professional incapacity, or their lack of what has always been reagrded as the fundamental virtue of the soldierly character. When our military lobby shall find time and courage to propose a "three-battalion bill" containing a provision for three battalions, with the necessary complement of officers, and shall support the measure with honest argument on grounds of honest military policy, every effort that we can make shall be put forth to aid in their success.

But the truth is that we, as a people, have no military policy. The reasons for this are many, no doubt, but not the least potent among them is and long has been the pernicious activity of the military lobby at Washington. It is an old and bitter cry at the Capital that it is almost impossible to secure legislation on military subjects, and this cry comes loudest from those commissioned lobbyists who are, perhaps, really unaware that they, by persistently seeking private advantage under the specious plea of a zeal for the "good of the service," have aroused in the minds of legislators an instinctive suspicion of every proposed measure which they favor with their advocacy, and generally damn by the same means. If, by any means these gentlemen can be induced to abandon the disreputable tricks of the lobby and the equally disreputable practice of log-rolling for their personal advancement, and to become what they ought to be, the real and reliable professional advisers of the Legislature in matters relating to the efficiency of their branch of the public service, it will not be long before the infantry regiments will have not a three-battalion organization but three battalions as well; and the efficiency of the entire army may be improved in many points in which improvement is loudly demanded—but not by the military lobby.

TO SUCCEED PROFESSOR SLACK.

Judge Slack having resigned his chair in the Hastings College of the Law, it is incumbent on the trustees of that institution to name his successor, and "The Wave" takes the liberty of nominating Professor John Henry Wigmore, now of the Law Department of the Northwestern University in Chicago. Some man trained to the work of teaching law should be given this important professorate. There are scores of able and erudite lawyers at our bar, who are no more fitted to lecture and instruct in a law school than they are to play polo at Burlingame; no better adapted to captain a law school than they are to captain an ocean liner. Other things than knowledge go to make the teacher. And to no worse use could this institution be put than to make it a place of refuge for owl-eyed gentlemen, who think with their memories and interlard their lectures with reproaches on the world for its hard treatment of their worthy selves. Of this latter kind the Hastings College has seen one or two to its disadvantage.

Judge Slack's successor should be in many respects a man like himself, young, studious and up to date. He should, if possible, have knowledge of other colleges and be able to introduce modern methods of teaching. He should be of reputation for his original work. And above all else, he should be a man of magnetism and enthusiasm, able to inspire the young men under him with a love for the law and a sense of the respectability and dignity of the profession.

All these qualifications Professor Wigmore enjoys. Although he was born in San Francisco and lived here during boyhood, his reputation is less at home than abroad. After graduating from Harvard he returned to this city for a time, and at once made himself felt among the young men of his class as a leader in the work of municipal reform. He returned to Boston, and there began the practice of the law, and wrote one or two brochures which brought to him much attention. He was the foremost advocate of the Australian ballot law, the Massachusetts law being drafted largely by him, and following this he wrote a pamphlet which was the gospel for all advocates of the system. The government of Japan sent a representative to this country several years ago to secure an American to give a two years' series of lectures on American law in the University of Tokio, and on the recommendation of the law faculty at Harvard Mr. Wigmore was offered the post and accepted. On returning to this country he was met with an offer from the Chicago College, with which he now is and for which he has contributed to the law reviews a series of valuable papers on the newer developments in our laws.

This very brief and modest review of Professor Wigmore's career serves but to show the progressive character of the man and the high opinion in which he is held by those who have known him as a law lecturer. We do not know that he could be induced to come to this city and leave the wider field of the East, but if it is possible to secure him it certainly would be the most beneficial thing that has happened to the Hastings College for many years.

In this connection it is with much approval that we notice the movement toward a higher standard of general as well as legal education that is now in evidence in this State. The trustees of Hastings College have decided to make the standard necessary for entrance practically a bachelor's degree. This keeps the institution on a level with the best of the Eastern colleges, and insures the legal profession against being flooded with a horde of law college lawyers of much keenness but of little intellectual culture. Degradation of profession must follow on this being filled with men who regard their profession as a trade and who serve by their conversation and general tone to make their work to be of no more serious or dignified a character in the public mind than that of roasting peanuts or sailing a fishing smack. There is a bill, too, before the present Legislature which would institute, if made law, a new system for the selecting of lawyers outside of law colleges. Roughly, we understand the scheme to be that those intending to study law shall pass an examination as to general education and moral character before a board of local attorneys specially selected by the bar for such purpose, and that those who are permitted to enter on the roll of students shall for the four following years take yearly oral and written examinations, showing their progress in the studies prescribed. This plan is in general conformity with that obtaining in many of the older States, being modeled somewhat after the procedure in New Jersey, a State in which the high character of the bar is proverbial. Some system certainly is needed by which the profession of the law—we may, in fact, include all the professions—will be relieved of the pressure from below of the great mass of unworth and ignorance semi-yearly introduced into the profession by loose and unsystematic instruction and examination.

The measure now pending before the Legislature, providing for an increase of the judiciary of this city and county has, it would seem, excited some opposition. It appears that more litigations are begun than can be properly handled by the departments. This is in a measure corroborated by the fact that during the year ending June 30, 1895, the total number of actions commenced was 7745. Of this number only 2234 could be disposed of. This left some 5,000 cases pending, which surplus must be added to 38,250 cases yet to be tried. It is true that many of these cases are "dead," but for all that they are liable to be resurrected at any moment. Yet, admitting that all of the pending cases are 'dead," it will, nevertheless, overtask the capacity of the departments to handle the vast amount of actions that are continually being commenced. If the yearly influx of 7,745 cases were equally divided among the several judges, it would give 643 cases to each judge to attend to in one year. It must be borne in mind, however, that there are but 208 trial days in the year, so that, even supposing the judges took no vacation—each judge is called upon to finish three cases each trial day. This is utterly impossible to do. As time goes on matters will become worse rather than better for the department, since the statistics show that the number of cases commenced each year is steadily increasing.

AN ARCHITECTURAL CONTROVERSY

Last week THE WAVE published a picture of the new Postoffice, with comments upon the design by Willis Polk. Mr. Polk's opinion of the building has resulted in the following correspondence, which questions his judgment. It is obviously a question of more than local importance, and purely one of architectural taste.

COLONEL IRISH IN DEFENSE.

Editor "Wave": Your reproduction of the side elevation of the new public building in this city, as it will appear from Seventh street, is a revelation to the readers of the daily press, who have seen the caricatures of the same building printed in their columns. The law which authorizes this building provides that it shall be for a postoffice, courtrooms and other federal offices—pension, land, surveyor-general, coast and geodetic survey, hydrographic office, and others not immediately connected with the revenue establishment, to which the present postoffice and appraisers' buildings will be entirely surrendered.

I have read in your columns the criticism by Mr. Willis Polk, and have heard of certain adverse comments on the plan in the columns of "The American Architect." Men who are not architects, but who have to do business or live in structures planned by members of the profession, have long wondered why it is that as soon as a member of the American institute, or chapter, or whatever it is, of architects, is appointed supervising architect of the Treasury, the members of that profession and its organ, "The American Architect," proceed to prove that he is ignorant of architecture and his plans are nondescript. The unprofessional eye sees in the side elevation of the public building for this city a pleasing exterior, the superior line broken by a pediment, the entrances arched and the arches with a garniture that is not permitted to cloy, but is agreeable by contrast with the simple arches that intervene. The building has a double front, on Mission street and on Stevenson. Over each rises a tower. As the structure covers three acres and is built around a court, its proportions require the emphasis of a tower, which could not be central on account of the court, and as a tower at one end would give the impression of a locomotive with a smokestack, each face elevation receives a tower. From a side view the effect is harmonious and each facade is appropriately accented.

Mr. Willis Polk, abstaining from suggestion of his views of what the plan ought to be, sustains California's bad eminence for attacking and destroying, and gluts his architectural rage by denouncing the facade which is not shown in the picture. To him the ensemble is "a melange of an apartment house and Madison Square Garden." He is embittered against the "monotony" of the side elevation, but in the next few lines is enraged by the ornamented arches, by which the monotony is relieved.

What would Mr. Polk have, the arches all plain or all ornamented? Would he have his face all eyebrows, all chin, or what?

Finally he asks: "Does it suggest a postoffice?" It is evident, then, that he demands that the exterior of a three-acre building shall suggest the use to which its interior is put. He wishes a building that shall cry out in the night, "I am a postoffice." He demands architecture of such an order that when people come to town they shall see it and say one to another, "That is a postoffice." But this building is for the courts, the navy pay office, etc.; why mislead the wayfarer by giving it a tongue of stone to tell that it is a postoffice? How will Mr. Polk make it "suggest" a postoffice, subtreasury and courtrooms. Will he give it a frieze representing Justice buying a postage stamp of Mercury, and Neptune taking a steam beer and a schnitzel with Pluto? But how will he "suggest" the land office, the surveyor-general's office, and the coast survey?

A straight postal pedigree may be easily "suggested," but after so many crosses how will Mr. Polk "suggest" the architectural mule that will result?

It is unfortunate that the daily press and some of our local architects have dealt in caricature and hypercriticism of this much-needed building. Their course has led to abuse of the Treasury department in the matter by correspondents of more or less ability as blackguards, and San Francisco is made a sorry show. Would it not be well to practice a little decency in the matter? Tell a little truth, and treat officers charged with these responsibilities with the common politeness and respect due to gentlemen. Then, perhaps, the building would proceed, and the few millions it will cost would go to pay the wages of labor and to purchase material.

JOHN P. IRISH.

MR. SCHWEINFURTH CONTRIBUTES.

San Francisco, February 8, 1897.

To the Editor—Sir: In your issue of Saturday last a contributor attacks Mr. William Martin Aiken's design for the new postoffice in a manner which appears to be prompted more by ignorant motive than by refined critical instinct.

For the benefit of your contributor I would like to let him know that Mr. Aiken is the first supervising architect in many administrations who was not appointed "for political reasons." He is a Southern gentleman of education and refinement, has studied in the best school of achitecture this country affords (the Massachusetts Institute of Technology), has traveled, and had, previous to practicing for himself, served long and with great credit with the leading men of the profession in his day, H. H. Richardson and William R. Emerson, of Brooklyn and Boston, respectively.

While in California Mr. Aiken became impressed with the architectural traditions of the place, and his design is reminiscent of neither Madison Square Garden, or the other things your contributor mentions but probably has not seen save in photographs.

It is often easy to make a thing appear absurd by comparing it to something ridiculous—but in this instance the effect fails, as must appear to every one acquainted with the designs in question.

The new postoffice may fall short of Kansas and Missouri standards, but should we be fortunate enough to have Mr. Aiken's design executed, we will have for once a refined, scholarly and practical building from the hands of the Federal Government. Yours truly,

A. C. SCHWEINFURTH.

WILLIS POLK'S REJOINDER.

Architecture being, for the sake of argument, a mere matter of taste, about which every citizen feels competent to express an opinion, there are doubtless many thoughtless citizens who will rush to the defense of Colonel Irish in his endeavor to talk good architecture into the design for the new postoffice. It is a sad thing to see as brilliant a pen as that wielded by Colonel Irish floundering in the intricacies of architectural criticism. It is also a difficult thing to match facts with his wit, to present logic to his argument, or to meet him on his own ground, chin to chin, and retain a single ounce of valor for the support of the outer works of the contention.

The wondrous visions that appear to the unprofessional eye were never dreamt of in the philosophy of Phidias or Michael Angelo. Our postoffice design may present a pleasing appearance to the unprofessional eye, as interpreted by Colonel Irish, and Colonel Irish may found a new theory of architecture, but until his followers develop the strength of a school, we will be compelled to content ourselves with accepted standards. As an aid to beginners, a few simple rules, according to Irish, might be laid down as follows:

A tower at one end of a three-acre building being suggestive of a locomotive with a smokestack—put on another smokestack.

A pleasing exterior having a superior line—break it with a pediment.

In garnishing an arch, do not permit the garniture to cloy.

If a facade is monotonous, do not despair—relieve the monotony by ornamental arches.

Do not adhere to a single motif—it is difficult.

Do not allow a building to suggest its use. A postoffice may resemble any old thing.

Do not give a building a tongue of stone by which it may proclaim its intent and use to the wayfarer. It would not then be easy to avoid jails.

Seriously, the enthusiasm of Colonel Irish is worthy a better cause. Text books on architecture are too numerous to justify a new one. They are helpful to students, and are sometimes consulted by architects. An architect's library consists of the "sermons in stone" that arise ocassionally in the world. It is not probable that the new postoffice will ever rise to the dignity of a sermon.

William Martin Aiken, the present supervising architect of the Treasury department, accepted that position after its refusal by Mr. John M. Carrere. It might be interesting to know that Mr. Carrere refused the appointment on the grounds that a serious man could not acquit himself creditably of the multitudinous duties imposed by the office. He declined double the salary which Mr. Aiken receives, and urged the adoption of the reform proposed by the American Institute of Architects.

It is unfortunate that a local discussion of the demerits of the design for our proposed postoffice should be clessed with the California predilection for detraction and abuse. The subject of the postoffice is of national importance, and postoffice designs have been under discussion for many years by the thoughtful professional men of the country. The Government building at the World's Fair afforded even those who run an opportunity to observe the effect of the methods in vogue at Washington, in comparison to the achievements of private practitioners.

When a country possesses an architectural tradition of as charming and simple a character as our pastoral missions afford, is it not a pity to note the growing tendency toward its misuse upon our city streets. With sincerest regard for Colonel Irish, and regret for a professional brother arrayed against the higher aims of his profession,

WILLIS POLK.

An important case of interest, alike to lawyers and the public, has just been decided by the Supreme Court of San Francisco. The case was brought by John Sievers, the florist, against the city to recover damages done his gardens, situated on Van Ness avenue, between Chestnut and Lombard streets. Mr. Seivers claimed that on account of the grading of Van Ness avenue above what was the official "line and grade," the accumulated storm water from the adjacent hills—deprived of its accustomed drainage because of the raising of the grade—flooded and destroyed his hothouses, gardens, etc., to the tune of $10,000. The Superintendent of Streets, though a mistake as to what was the official grade, permitted the contractor to raise the level eight feet too high. The point to be decided was whether the Superintendent of Streets or the city should be held responsible for the consequences of the mistake. The court held that the Superintendent alone was responsible. By this decision it has become law that the Superintendent of Streets, when supervising the grade of a street (under the provisions of the street law), is not a servant of the city, but a servant of the public, and the city is not responsible for his negligence, but when engaged in the construction or maintenance of a sewer he is the servant of the city and the city is responsible for his negligence. Much credit in the solution of this difficult legal problem is due to Rhodes Borden, the Assistant City Attorney, who urged the distinction upon the attention of the court with great insight and legal acumen.

They are discussing in England the idea of inviting, in the name of the Queen, the Premiers of the different self-governing colonies, to London, as imperial guests during the coming jubilee celebrations. The project has been received with much enthusiasm by the British people, and if it is carried the colonial ministers and their wives, for the wives come too, are likely to be highly edified, feasted, and honored. It is thought that Joseph Chamberlain, in whose brain the idea originated, will not go unwreathed—a dukedom probably will be none too good for him.

THE SITUATION IN CHINATOWN

How the Celestials Carry On a Civil War in an American City.

Wnat is practically a small civil war, full of battle and murder and sudden death, is being waged to-day in San Francisco. The war has grown out of a boycott which has grown out of a family feud which grew out of heaven knows what, for probably not one-fifth of the fighters themselves know whereof they are fighting.

The war in the Chinatown of San Francisco is a war between rival houses. It is a family feud, like that carried on by the F. F. V.'s, the Carters, the Shepardsons, and the Grangerfords, of the ante-bellum days.

On one side are the rich and the powerful Sam Yups, many of them belonging to the Mandarin class and happy possessors of small-feet women, and on the other the See Yups, somewhat poorer, working men largely, but more numerous than the Sam Yups and consequently nearly as powerful. Just what may be the meaning of the terms "Sam Yup" and "See Yup" it would be difficult to say. "Sam" in Cantonese means "three," and "See" "Four." Yup is, no doubt, a family appellation.

Both the Sam Yups and the See Yups are well organized. Each has its president, secretary, treasurer, and the like, together with an advisory board which may counsel the president, but may not in any way govern or influence his actions.

The head of the Sam Yups is especially powerful. His rule is practically despotic, and disobedient and recalcitrant members are "suppressed" with a swiftness and certainty that would do credit to an organization of Nihilists.

One curious feature of the feud is that a Sam Yup or See Yup Chinaman can go among a crowd of his countymen and at an instant's glance pick out the Sam Yups and See Yups. How they can be distinguished is a mystery that the police have not yet solved. As far as can be known, the rivals do not wear any outward symbol of their organization, nor can any system of signals or passwords be observed. The distinguishing feature is perhaps some vague family resemblance only visible to a Chinaman.

In a very rough way the Chinese quarter is divided between these two organizations. The Sam Yup quarter is along Dupont street for some four blocks below Clay. The See Yups have chosen for their stamping-ground the neighborhood centering about Clay and Waverly Place, and are also to be found on Jackson street above Dupont; and on Stockton street, between Washington and Jackson.

It is from these centers that the feud is carried on, the murders planned, the prescription lists made out, and the boycotts organized. It is also these localities that are most closely watched by the police, and it is no unusual thing, during the period of an outbreak, to see patrol wagons standing at the street corners ready for any emergency. The last "unpleasantness" between the rival families which terminated in Little Pete's killing was the outcome of a boycott put upon the Sam Yup stores by the members of the See Yups, and carried on so vigorously that many of the smaller Sam Yup traders were on the point of closing their business. Whenever a See Yup was found entering a Sam Yup store, or seen in the audience of the Sam Yup theater on Jackson street, he was, when it was feasible to do so, seized and taken to the rooms over the saloon on the northwest corner of Clay street and Waverly Place, and there mulcted $1, by peaceable means if possible, and, these failing, by applied chair backs and table legs.

So, taking the situation by and large the Chinese New Year season—now in full swing—has acquired an added interest, and visitors to Chinatown can never tell when the explosions of firecrackers may be superseded by the reports of revolvers, or the sizzling of fireworks be interrupted by the cracking of burning houses.

A BANQUET HALL DESERTED

A CORNER IN THE RESTAURANT WHERE THE SEE YUPS MEET

Were you to meet Costaki Anthopoulo Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador to the Court of St. James', strolling down Bond street, you might easily take him for a Yorkshire squire up in London for a holiday. A man approaching 60 years, he has spent the busiest of lives in the service of Turkey; but though born in Constantinople, he is not a Turk, but a Greek and a Christian. In him the diplomatist is hidden behind a most genial bonhomie. He is a man of enormous industry. The very first night he arrived in London he sat down to his desk and wrote dispatches till 4 o'clock in the morning. He can work all night without even feeling weary. He will have guests at his house till far beyond midnight, and then, ringing for coffee and cigarettes, he will work till daylight.

---

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, the Boston society woman, who recently led a lion about the Hub at the end of a ribbon, is the daughter of a New York candy maker named Stewart, from whom she inherited a fortune, the income of which amounts to about $40,000 a year, all of which she manages to get rid of quite easily. Mrs. Gardner is well along in the 40's; she is not pretty, but possessess a splendid figure and great individual charm of manner. One of her oddities is her refusal to be photographed, but there is a wonderful impressionist picture of her, made by Zorn, the Swedish etcher, and also a painting by Sargent, for which he received $5000. This portrait now hangs in the library of Mrs. "Jack's" husband, who, by the way, is a millionaire several times over.

---

According to a British jury a man may consume in one day two and a half bottles of wine in addition to some glasses of spirits, and at the end of it be in possession of a "sound, disposing mind;" sound and disposing enough to make a will equally "sound and disposing." This decision was made in England a short time ago, when a young woman—an itinerant florist, made a successful fight for a legacy left her by the man she had been engaged to marry.

THE MAKING OF A STATUE

How the Native Sons' Group is Moulded and Cast.

When Mr. Douglass Tilden had finished the clay model for the Native Sons' monument, and it became a question as to where the bronze should be cast, the donor, Mr. Phelan, said:

"Have it done in San Francisco, no matter what the cost."

So it is being done in San Francisco now, and it is costing about one dollar for every pound of metal cast, and the modeling sand has to be brought from France, and one of the workmen as well.

The casting of a bronze statue is not without a certain amount of interest, especially when one takes into consideration the amount of labor and pains and scrupulous care that is involved. At present the monument is in a rather confused condition. One part of it is still in Mr. Tilden's hands, hardly more than a rough lump of clay; another part—a pair of legs and a belted waist—is being covered with molding sand by the imported Frenchman spoken of, and a third portion is bronze already, complete and ready for mounting as soon as it has been retouched by the "chaser."

The casting of a bronze statue is after this fashion: The moulders receive from the hands of the artist the clay model of a certain portion of the statue or group. This is carefully covered with a kind of moist sand that is found at its best in France. More time is spent, perhaps, over this part of the process than over any other. It is this work that the Frenchman was brought over to do. The clay—or, rather, the plaster of paris model that is taken from the clay—is covered with three layers of sand packed and patted down by hand and tamped solidly afterward with little rammers. However, the sand that is to cover the faces of the figures is sifted very finely to obviate all the little irregularities and pits that would be made by pebbles and hard lumps of foreign earths. This sand is next baked for over two days, until it is as hard, nearly, as a brick, and is broken off the clay model and put together in sections.

A cast could be made from the mould as it is now, but it would be solid, and the resultant statue would be as unwieldly as a brownstone house and almost as expensive; so what is called a "core" is made, a third rougher moulding of sand inside of it some fraction of an inch smaller than the outer mould. This is the French method as used by Whyte and De Rome, and seems to be a great improvement on the American method, which involves no "core" and is enormously expensive.

The next step in the process is the melting and pouring of the metal. This is qiute an affair, a ceremony at which the sculptor and the head of the firm and the subject himself assist, and to which they invite their friends. It is picturesque enough, for the molten bronze is of a lambent whiteness, spitting little green flames. Four huge crucibles, holding, let us say, three or four gallons apiece (if one can speak of metal by the gallon), contain the casting metal, white hot, and as liquid as milk. Six men staggering under the weight of it bring the crucible up and affix it to an enormous hook depending from a crane. The crane picks it up, swings it leisurely to the lip of the mould and cants it over, pouring out the dazzling white-hot bronze in a dense cloud of steam and a grand spattering and spluttering of red-hot drops as big as marbles. And straightway down in the depths of the mould, that looks most like a discarded packing box, the figure of a man is born—in this case the supplementary figure of a plainsman—the figure of a man in enduring bronze that shall look out over the city and its streets for countless years to come, shall speak an intelligible word to the men of the next century and to the century after that, and for a thousand years to come, for all you and I can tell, when you and all the rest of us shall have disintegrated into dust and clay—moulding clay, perhaps. FRANK NORRIS.

THE PROPERTY WOMAN

BY FRANCOIS COPPEE

At the Odeon that evening they played the "Depit Amoureux" as a curtain-raiser, and pretty little Sophie Cherubin, who took the role of Marinette, was still on the stage when Fabrec—you remember Fabrec, the deputy with the great golden beard, who looks so young in spite of his forty years, and whom one always sees at "first nights"—half-opened the door of her dressing-room, crying:

"Coucou!"

The rascal had hoped to surprise the comedienne at the moment of a change of costume, in the most delicious disorder, as he sometimes had the chance to do. The scene of feigned indignation that Sophie played on these occasions always amused Fabrec enormously. "Shame on you—don't you dare to look—ah, did one ever see the like—these horrible men!" and it generally ended with a little kiss of reconciliation.

But this particular evening Fabrec was disappointed to find the dressing-room empty.

However, Constance, the old property woman, came from behind a screen in the corner of the room, saying: "If you will give yourself the trouble to be seated, monsieur, madame will come off in about five minutes."

Fabrec dropped into an armchair, crossed his legs, and while idly tapping his boot with his cane slipped into a train of reflections, while the old woman shuffled about the room, putting the toilet table to rights.

After all, why did he come to see Sophie Cherubin? Not for love of her surely; he hardly experienced so much as a desire. One day, a long time before, apropos de rien, she had said to him: "Fabrec, you are a nice man, but I have forty thousand francs of debts. It's all very fine to have you come here and talk to me, and I like to have you come as often as you like, but we're jolly good friends, you know—and nothing more." Frankly the little woman was right, and Fabrec acknowledged as much to himself. However, a certain attraction brought him back to her dressing-room every now and then, an attraction almost disinterested, for, content to obtain what our ancestors used to call the "menus suffrages," he found a certain pleasure in the company of this comedienne, who was so pretty and so gay and laughed so often at his foolish witticisms, and then, after all, one has to kill time.

Unconsciously Fabrec found himself looking at the property woman, and brusquely he was aroused from his reverie by her face reflected in the mirror. What a ruin! What hideous, almost pathetic, ugliness! Dry as a stick, wrinkled as a shriveled apple, with hair the color of ashes and one tooth, long and yellow, overlaying her lower lip—she actually inspired a sentiment of fear. And to think, to think that this wreck had once been a woman, had once, perhaps, known what it meant to be loved. She was perhaps seventy-five years old. And Fabrec, who was by no means bad-hearted, felt compassion for this lamentable old woman working out the end of her life here behind the scenes of a theater.

Suddenly the door opened and Sophie Cherubin appeared, a rose over her ear, in her stunning costume of Marinette. She was fresh as a bouquet, and she was radiant with beauty, with cosmetics and adorable effronterie.

"Ah! Fabrec," she cried gayly, "it is you. Eh, bien, you arrive very apropos, mon cher. We'll have a little talk, eh? and a glass of wine? There's a party coming after me in a little while, and we are all going in our costumes to play at a benefit at the Gayety."

The property woman had already passed behind the screen. They talked for a time together, and Sophie, according to her custom, began to chaff Fabrec on the subject of his numerous little affaires de coeur. Come, now, was such and such a rumor true, that had linked his name with that of a little divette at the Nouveautes? But Fabrec was discreet. He answered only by pleasantries, without committing himself. Little by little she became more animated, more irritated at his obstinacy. Would she never succeed in dragging from him the story of a single one of his bonnes fortunes de coulisses, not a single one?

"Eh, bien, ma chere," said Fabrec at length, "since you are so set on knowing I'll tell you of my first, my very first passion."

"An actress?"

"Yes, only I forewarn you that the action does not happen at the Comedie-Francaise. I was nineteen years old, naif and timid beyond belief. One evening I was at the Gobelins, where the Berline de l'Emmigre was playing, and there I fell in love with the young lady who was acting in the leading role and who was called Blanche Lilas. Ah! That moment of her first entry! How young she was, how divinely pretty! To-day I know that the beauty of an actress disappears after long use of grease paints and that usually soubrettes of eighteen have grown up sons of twenty-five and thirty, but at that time, Mademoiselle Blanche Lilas seemed to me the most adorable of women. I only lived to dream of her. I followed her about from place to place (for the troupe traveled), and one by one I sold my books and bibelots on the Quays in order to be present at every performance in which she appeared. She was the only woman to whom I ever wrote verses. Execrable verse, no doubt, but sincere, and never, of course, did I find courage to send them to her. Well vacation came, and I was obliged to return home to my people. I passed the summer in counting the hours, and on the very evening I arrived in Paris again I rushed to the Gobelins, then to the Montparnasse, then to the Grenelle. But the name of my idol did not appear on any of the posters. The frightful anxiety that seized upon me gave me the courage to question the concierge of the theater, and I learned that the management had not renewed its contract with Blanche Lilas, and no one knew what had become of her. Well, my dear, you may believe me or not, just as you choose, but at that moment I received the keenest, the bitterest disappointment of my life, and it was many a long month before I recovered from it." Fabrec paused.

"And that's all?" asked the comedienne.

"That's all."

"Fabrec, you delight in mystifying me, and I haven't the least faith in your souvenirs de Jeunesse."

But all at once the call boy outside the door exclaimed:

"Madame, madame, the carriage is here for you, you are waited for."

Sophie snatched up a fur-lined cloak, and with a hurried "Au revoir, Fabrec," disappeared.

Fabrec himself was about to go, when old Constance approached, and raising her miserable face to his murmured a timid—

"Monsieur—"

"Hein! quoi ma bonne?"

"I've a great favor to ask of you, sir; it's this: I'm quite worn out; my health is gone; I can scarcely do my work. So I have made application to one of our hospitals."

"Very well, very well," answered Fabrec absently, "the next time I'm here write me out a little note."

But the property woman had not finished.

"And there's another thing, sir, that will perhaps interest you in me a little. I heard you just now talking with madame. Eh, bien! I am Blanche Lilas."

Farbec started and uttered a sharp exclamation. Blanche Lilas! Blanche Lilas—this pauper in tatters! "But," he cried, "how old are you?"

The old woman smiled pitifully.

"Not as old as I look, it is true, but I have had so much trouble," she whimpered. "I am sixty-two, and at the time you saw me play I was already forty-one. You said just now that an actress' age is not always apparent to the audience. For all that I lost my position the very same year in which you first saw me. The management concluded I was too old, and dimissed me. Poverty came upon the instant. Three months after leaving the theater, monsieur, I was doing housework. And it was only after a long time that an old friend of mine, who is now a scene shifter here, got me this place as property woman. But I am at the end of my strength. There's nothing but the hospital for me now. Perhaps you can help me. I've made my application already, but with some one to recommend me—" She hesitated a moment. "I make bold to ask," she continued shamefacedly, "since at one time you were interested in me—"

She pased, interrupting herself as if she feared to displease him by insisting on this souvenir of his student days. But Fabrec cried:

"I will go. I will see about it to-morrow, believe me, I will. I shall attend to the matter personally, and if for the moment you are in need of something—" his hands went to his pockets.

But she refused with a little pathetic attempt at dignity.

"Merci, monsieur. No, all I want is to go to the hospital. There, with my little pension from the Society of Artists, I will be perfectly happy."

With an impulse of cordiality, before leaving her, Fabrec seized her hand.

But when he felt it within his own, dry, skinny and withered, he could not conquer a little shudder, as he thought that twenty years sooner he would have wept with joy if he could have imprinted on that same hand his first timid kiss of adolescence.

And as he went away down the corridors of the theater he marveled in spite of his experience at this strange life of Paris, wherein he, almost a young man as yet, could have the chance to procure a bed in an Old People's Home for the woman who had inspired him with his first boyish love.

ABOUT PERSONAGES

Herbert Spencer is not so ill as the newspapers would have us believe. He has recently undertaken the task of recasting his principal work on Sociology and is interesting himself in the biological theories of recent years, such as the division of the nucleus in the vital cells of living organisms.

Edison says it is impossible to telephone across the Atlantic ocean. The difficulty of telephoning, he says, increases according to the square root of the distance. The difficulty is the leakage, the overcoming of resistance, and the impossibility of getting rid of the current at the moment the voice ceases.

Rosa Bonheur says that her only guide in her work is the desire to reach truth and simplicity as closely as possible. The great artist never tires of work nor of study; they are, in fact, her greatest happiness. Assiduous work, she claims, is the only thing that will bring one near the solution of the problem of ever-changing nature.

The ill health of Czar Nicholas has been ascribed by the imperial physicians to the scrupulous ideas the young Emperor has had regarding his duties as a sovereign. He has taken upon himself the cares of state very seriously, too much so, and as a result he is now almost on the verge of mental collapse, and rest rather than medicine is needed as a restorative.

Frau Cosimar Wagner, though blind, attempted to direct the opera at Baireuth, and found fault with the rendering of "Brunhilde," which Frau Lehman gave at the last cycle. The great prima donna says the performances are no longer up to their old standard. The interest in them is not very great. Although they draw large sums of money, the expenses are tremenduous, and the profits small.

Feresa Carreno, the Venezuelan pianiste, made her reappearance in New York last month after an absence of some time, and was given an enthusiastic welcome. Madame Carreno visited San Francisco some years ago, and will be remembered by those who heard her, not only for her brilliant playing, but also for her gracious manners and vivacious beauty. She is the most married of pianistes, and but recently divorced D'Albert.

The hereditary crown prince of Japan is a fortunate young man. He is educated in company with a bevy of pretty Japanese maidens whose duty it is to assist him. He is now learning to write and some of the damsels dissolve the tablets of ink in frail porcelain saucers while others smooth out the camel's hair brushes. The teacher is condemned to absolute silence during the whole lesson, and on entering his mouth is covered with a silken scarf so that his breath may not sully the imperial countenance.

For the first time in history the Prince of Wales dined at the American Embassy. Ambassador Bayard's recent dinner was attended by some of the most distinguished men in the Kingdom, including Lord Salisbury, the Lord High Chancellor and Cardinal Vaughan. Ambassador Bayard has been censured now and then by the American press, but at any rate he is a great man in London, greater, perhaps, than most of his predecessors, and his successor will have to fight carefully for prestige, if he wishes to have any.

DOUGLAS TILDEN SUPERVISING THE CONSTRUCTION OF A MOULD

SCENE FROM "MY LORD AND SOME LADIES" AT THE BALDWIN

MR. LOUIS JAMES AS LORD BOLINGBROOKE IN "MY LORD AND SOME LADIES"

Photos by Marceau

THE MONTEREY FISHERIES

Salmon by the Ton and Mackerel by the Thousand.

It would not be surprising if another summer should witness the establishment of a salmon cannery at Monterey — a cannery that would calculate on handling as high as twenty thousand pounds of fish per day. There is no doubt that this is an astonishing figure. Few people are there who spend a summer vacation at the Hotel Del Monte — few even of those who are enthusiastic fisher-folk — who realize that every day of June, July, August, and September, there are a thousand and more twenty-pound salmon in Monterey bay waiting to be caught—caught, you understand, not with the seine, but with the hook, in true sportsmanlike style. The Portuguese, Italian, and Chinese inhabitants of the old town have suddenly become alive to the fact. For that matter, the Chinamen have long been aware of it. Last summer fully two hundred fishermen toiled daily from dawn to dark just off the shore, and never a boat returned that was not laden with salmon — big, solid, sturdy twenty, twenty-five and even forty-pound fish; none of them under twelve pounds, some of them as high as fifty, all caught with hand lines. Moreover, these sea salmon are a superior fish to those caught in the rivers—fatter, cleaner and gamier, for the salmon as a rule feeds in the sea, only going up the rivers out of season to spawn.

The salmon come into Monterey bay with the sardines (they are called sardines, but they are herring), running in schools, a school of salmon following a school of sardines. Sailing or rowing over the bay, or standing on the tail of the wharf, and looking out over the waters, you will sometimes see it, in a certain spot, roughen and become troubled, then suddenly a thousand tiny flashes glint into the air, and the sound of a thousand tiny splashes makes a noise like wind in a pine tree, then you may know, if you are experienced, that the sardines are in the bay, and that the salmon are hunting them, driving them out of the very water in their eagerness to escape. The boats go out then and the killing begins, and is carried on until the run is over. There is nothing backward about the salmon. You must coax a trout for hours and perhaps days, you must take the bass off his guard, and the pickerel when he is hungry, but when the salmon bites he bites early and often, without stopping to ask questions, or to entertain suspicions. He will bite sometimes at the bare hook, if it happens to be shiny, and sometimes he will bite and be caught with two or more sardines still in his mouth.

He is fished for by trolling through the schools of sardines or over his feeding-grounds with some eight fathoms of line trailing astern—the bait, a good sized sardine. There is only one feature of the business that is undesirable, and that is the drag-line. The Monterey fishermen do not use poles, but pull in the fish hand over hand by main strength. There seems to be no good and sufficient argument against the use of the rod in the bay. A fairly clever fisherman could kill a twenty-pound fish on a split bamboo without running much danger of snapping it, while a duplicating reel could take in the line much faster and steadier than could be done by the hand-over-hand style, which is after all a series of jerks that is very liable to tear the barb out of the mouth of a slightly-hooked fish.

The mackerel run with the salmon as a rule in the bay, though singularly enough they are running now and are being caught in quantities. Their running is somewhat irregular. Sometimes they will be caught day after day for weeks and then disappear entirely for perhaps a whole month. Nor do they come in such large numbers as the salmon. Three or four thousand is a good day's catch for the whole force of the Monterey fishermen, but the price received for the fish is good, going up as high as twelve and fifteen cents a pound.

But the possibilities of killing game fish in the bay of Monterey is not limited to salmon and mackerel. In the summer the giant sea bass and jew fish are in these waters, and can be brought to hand by any one plucky enough to try to handle four hundred pounds of fighting fish. Then there is the strange fish called the tuny, caught nowhere else but in the Mediterranean, another monster weighing as high as six hundred pounds, and most excellent eating to boot. Besides these are the yellow tail and baracuda of San Diego and Santa Barbara—little fellows these—mere small fry of twelve and fourteen pounds.

Altogether there are (at least so the local fishermen would have you believe) forty different kinds of fish that run in Monterey bay that are good for the table. Besides the fish already named are the smelt, herring and anchovy, and (if these can be included) huge crabs and lobsters. It would seem that there is a future in store for the sleepy old town—an industry something better than the painting of abalones, the gathering of pretty shells, and the exploiting of summer tourists.

The Chinese are ahead of the whites in matters piscatorial. They comprise the largest portion of the fishing community, and fish for anything from the healthy, wholesome daylight fishing for salmon, flounders and sardines, to the strange, uncanny night-work, for squid and shrimps, that is carried on during moonless nights by aid of weird torchlights and eerie pine flares. They have a fishing village all to themselves, have the celestials, that is quite a sight. It puts one in mind of one's idea of native fishing villages on the coasts of Labrador and Greenland. It is a crazy jumble of unpainted weather-beaten houses on the edge of a down, lined up on either side of a tortuous, filthy street. The rear abutments of the houses on one side overhang the water, boosted up by a dizzying system of braces and piles. It is bleak and foul and somewhat picturesque, with its pile of queer boats at one end of the street and its fenced-in cemetery at the other. There is a smell of fish in the air that grapples you by the throat the moment you set foot in the precincts — a smell that sticks with a more than brotherly closeness; that gets into your mouth and windpipe, and that seems to persist for days after in everything you eat. But the cats! It is the paradise of the feline—cats by the score and hundred and thousand live down in here and fatten and batten on fish in the daytime, and for all I know, on each other at night.

Alonzo De Quesada, who is in charge of the Cuban legation at Washington, is a brilliant and wealthy young man who graduated in law from the University of New York in 1891. Last summer, he traveled through the South, making eighty-two speeches in two weeks, and raising $50,000 for the cause of the rebellion.

Florence Marryatt, the well known novelist, has started a school of literary art in which she proposes to train young gentlemen and young ladies in the gentle art of novel writing. It is to be hoped Miss Marryatt will not select her own books as models of the art.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

A very pretty and charming story is to be read between the lines of the will of Mr. Madden, wherein he has left to Miss Davis a fortune valued at $100,000. It is a sudden revelation of Mr. Madden's character, and is as picturesque as it is unexpected. Madden, it seems, was a cynical old fellow, whose conversation was laregly made up of sarcasms and biting inuendos. He had lost faith—or professed that he had—in a great many things and people, and chose to believe that disinterested friendship was a fiction. Madden, however, did not include in his sweeping generalization his relations with Miss Davis. He has been her friend for years, and just before his death spoke of their friendship as the most delicate and disinterested intimacy he had ever known. The story has been circulated that Miss Davis was Madden's daughter, but it is known to be absolutely untrue. Madden and Miss Davis' father were great chums during all the latter's life, and when the little daughter was born Madden acted as her godfather. Subsequently Mr. Davis died, leaving his family in rather straightened circumstances, which the daughter endeavored to cope with by teaching. Matters continued thus for many years, during which time Madden acted as the little household's good angel. Never, however, did they suspect that he intended to leave Miss Davis any money, nor did he ever offer to aid her pecuniarily during the years of her struggles. The explanation of this came at last, however, when on the day before his death the old man wrote to his god-daughter, informing her that he had often wished to tell her that he had provided for her in his testament, but that he could not bear to bring the question of pecuniary gain into the most unselfish and charming relationship he had ever known. The story is a very pretty one, and ends happily for all concerned, even for the old man who died—perhaps even happier for him than for the rest—since he knew that the affection his god-daughter bore him was one absolutely untouched and uninfluenced by thought or hope of ultimate benefit.

***

Thus far nothing has been done with the new Pacific-Union scheme. The opposing directors are satisfied to obstruct proceedings by remaining passive, and are doing nothing toward executing the will of the institution. There is some talk about organizing a new down-town club, and the project is mooted by such men as Colonel Fred Crocker, Henry Scott, Ed. Hopkins, Joe Crockett and their contingent, who undoubtedly represent the leading clique in society here. I am inclined to think we have rather more clubs than the town can support now. It is certain, however, that the Pacific-Union must make a move in some direction or it is doomed.

***

What beat the funding bill? It is rather an interesting question, but in Washington they will tell you it was Congressman Grove Johnson. From the California representation the House looked for a temperate statement of the Pacific Railway situation—a lucid and business-like explanation of the debt and the various advantages which the funding proposition offered, including the new securities which strengthened the government's position. Instead, they were treated to an intemperate harangue. Had Mr. Johnson utilized his powers of ex-

Miss May Roberson
Green, photo

Frank Norris
Callegaris, photo

C. J. Dickman
Imperial, photo

Frank Mathieu
Bushnell, photo

Sheldon Hooper
Taber, photo

Miss Rose Hooper
Taber, photo

MEMBERS OF THE CHARITY COMPANY WHO WILL PERFORM IN "CASTE" AT THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE NEXT MONTH

planation the bill might have had a chance, for a large number of members had promised it their support. These men, ignorant of the conditions prevailing here, could not appreciate Johnson's rancor, and found his harangue inexcusable. He disappointed his friends and delighted his enemies. But he was only restored to grace by Congressman Maguire, who transgressed all the written and unwritten laws of Congressional etiquette and procedure by utilizing the privilege of his position to transfer to the records an unspoken and undelivered personal attack on a fellow member. This was generally accepted as undiluted treachery, and it has seriously injured Maguire's standing in Washington.

***

Senator George F. Turner, who has been elected to the United States Senate by the Washington Legislature, is a lawyer of great capacity and intellectual force. His powerful personality will surely make him a figure at Washington, and there is litle doubt that he will be heard for sound reason and common sense in Congress. He began the practice of his profession in Spokane some fifteen years ago, and developed a profitable mining clientele. When the Cour d'Alene district was opened he gathered in stocks and bonds in return for professional services, and soon had money enough to invest largely in the Trail Creek region, when that district was discovered. The recent sale of the War Eagle, one of his properties, to a Canadian syndicate, gave him a million in cash, and he still holds the Le Roi gold mines, wherein is one of the largest bodies of high-grade ore yet discovered. Turner is a fine speaker, an able lawyer and his honesty has never been disputed.

***

It is a sad and incontrovertible fact that San Francisco is, as a rule, represented in the State Legislature by men whom no respectable merchant would trust with a minor clerkship. No one knows who they are, their names never are heard of, except in connection with some ridiculous faux pas or unsavory scandal. Yet these men, of whom the best that can be said is that they are commonplace and ignorant, are permitted to make the laws for the people of the State. They are more fortunate in their selections in Alameda. Senator Stratton, for instance, affords a notable contrast to the San Francisco delegation. He has made himself felt as a leader on more than one occasion, obtains an attentive hearing from the Senate and generally obtains the passage of the bills he advocates. A few more such men as Stratton of Alameda, Bulla of Los Angeles, Smith of Kern and Withington of San Diego—rari nantes in gurgite vasto—would lend a prestige to the Sacramento Legislature that has of late been sadly lacking.

***

Now that the Republicans have secured a majority in both houses and have gathered the reins of power into their hands it behooves their leaders to have an eye for pitfalls and crossings—to keep a sharp lookout for "the cars when the bell rings and the whistle sounds." Thus far progress has been sure if slow, only five bills, three of which were for appropriations, having been passed. Major McLaughlin, chairman of the State Central Committee, takes himself and his position with the seriousness that both deserve. I understand he is installed permanently in Sacramento, and is up till the small hours of every night in conference with the legislators on matters of business. This is excellent policy, which should afford the party a clear record with which to go before the people.

***

Los Angeles is metropolitan, and has the civilization and sins of a metropolis. But the country south of Tehachipi is different. It is not California. It is a little bit of Iowa and Kansas transplanted. When you cross the range it is like finding a new country, the populations are so different. The rural Southerner is narrow-minded and intolerant. He dines at noon and eats large quantities of pie with a knife. You can buy veal sweetbreads for ten cents apiece and sometimes fat little pompano for about the same price. There is an absence of that broad spirit of liberality and tolerance which one calls Bohemian for the want of a better term such as prevail in California proper, our inheritance from the days when gold was found in every gulch. It is true that the country people of Southern California are more virtuous than we are, but they are likewise more tiresome. In faith they are a weariful generation and stiff-necked.

***

Assemblyman Tracy has been of late contributing to "the gayety of nations." Mr. Tracy has had an experience. He has been banqueted by a Chamber of Commerce. Hitherto Mr. Tracy has looked upon eating merely as a device for satisfying hunger, and the Tracy appetite has been consequently appeased at the rate of "three hot dishes for twenty-five cents." Tracy is a small street contractor, and his ideas of culinary delicacy have been limited by the bill of fare of the cheap restaurants, hectographically printed; celery of the limp and yellow variety was a luxury, mince pie a revel, fried oysters a bacchanalian orgie, fit only for a decadant and exhausted palate. Fancy, then, the feelings of Mr. Tracy—street contractor—when he sat down to that banquet tendered him and his associates by the Chamber of Comerce of the city of Los Angeles. He is never tired of telling it, is the impressionable Mr. Tracy.

"We ate and ate and ate," he says, "till we were full up to the neck; oysters first, then soup and fish and then kickshaws and veal cutlets with white paper pantalets on 'em, and then—what do you think?—toads' hind legs, or maybe they were frogs', never had such a feed. Must have cost a dollar a plate, at the very least."

***

This time next year the subject of Governor will have rather more than an anticipatory interest. What prospects the Democracy may have twenty months hence is hard to foretell at this juncture, but there are in training to succeed the incumbent a number of eminent personages, whose friends are busily engaged working up their aspirations. J. H. Budd, whose health is wretched, declares he will not again be a candidate, but he is unhappy under the prospect of a successor. Maguire looms up strong. He has let slip no opportunity of demagogic display, and will have both tne "Populists" and the "Examiner" behind him. Another statesman with desires is Mr. Larue, who is developing honesty at the expense of the railroad. Frank Gould's opportunities are minimized by location. It is almost impossible that the office should go twice to the same town, however capable the individual aspirants, and there is no question as to Mr. Gould's abilty. I am inclined to think James D. Phelan will be in the race, though it may require some years longer to make him known to the country. He promises to be an excellent official, however, and cannot fail to acquire the reputation as time goes by to give him the chance he desires. I am sorry to see certain of his friends show a tendency toward coquetting with the Rainey party. Alliance in that direction is impossible. Rainey has made such hay of his opportunities to succeed himself at the end of his regime that we may be certain of having him back for good at Warm Springs two years hence.

***

The connection between politics and the stable has been terminated by Sam Rainey establishing himself in an office beside that of Dr. Ragen in the Donohoe block. This is a concession to the dignity of the role of Boss which the community will doubtless appreciate. The work of converting the school department into a feeding ground for Rainey heelers proceeds apace. Female janitors are giving way to politicians throughout the department, a condition which will doubtless add to the efficiency of this service while benefiting the Rainey machine. So good a cause has its drawbacks, for Sam is a chivalrous person, who would never dispossess a woman under ordinary circumstances. Apropos of appointments it is astonishing the new boss is so regardless of the amenities. His effort to establish the disreputable vagrant, who is known as "The Banjo-Eyed Kid," as janitor of the Street Department was an outrage. It was too much for Supervisor Sheehan, who had been inadvertently led into proposing his name. Certainly it speaks badly for the dignity of such men as Delaney, Haskins, Britt, Rottanzi and Rivers, who, after the identity of this disgusting person had been revealed, still insisted on voting for his appointment.

***

There comes to hand a diverting little yarn in connection with the transfer of a certain fine mining property known as the Crystalline group, 1,800 feet, located on the mother lode near Jamestown. A promoter by the name of Webber Parker was out here some time ago, and negotiated a bond for the purchase of the mines with a certain Mr. Rapp, who claimed to represent the owner, C. E. Schaffer. The price agreed upon was $150,000. Schaffer, however, when he heard that a bargain had been made at that figure, declared that Rapp did not represent him to the extent of closing the transaction ,repudiated the whole business and offered the mine to a Glasgow syndicate, through the Jumper corporation, with the result of catching a good deal more money for his claim.

***

Curiously enough Parker had offered the Crystalline group to the same syndicate, and as his offer was lower it was promptly accepted. Parker now comes back upon Rapp, suing him for a specific performance of his contract. The matter has resulted in a legal tangle, and no one can say just how it will end. Yet the affair is not without its humorous side. Parker is naturally eager to complete the transaction, and the other day loaded a wagon with ten thousand gold twenties, and, in company with a lawyer, pursued Rapp all about town striving to make him take the coin. Rapp, who enjoys the unique distinction of being chased by a cartload of money and of fleeing from the same, was at some pains to dodge the precious metal, but was at length caught and cornered by the energetic and resourceful Mr. Parker. Mr. Rapp was, however, in no position to accept the sum—even admitting that his pockets were rather deep—and Mr. Webber Parker sorrowfully drove back to the Anglo-California Bank and returned the money.

***

The Boston and Montana Mining Company has recently sold out its properties at Coulterville, near the lower end of the Mother Lode, to a combine of Montana and Eastern capitalists. The new corporation has already extracted considerable ore. Not much mining has been done at this end of the Mother Lode, but experts have pronounced the region as a fertile place for exploitation, the mines being capable of development to almost any depth. The Kennedy, which is on the Mother Lode, is now down to the twenty-three hundred foot level, and next to a certain Brazilian mine, is the deepest gold mine in the world.

***

The owner of the largest prune ranch in the country, the wealthy son of wealthy parents, the capable electrician and inventor, Frank G. Hume, of Los Gatos, died Monday afternoon last, after a six months' illness. Though only 25 at the time of his death, Mr. Hume had already proven himself a man of extraordinary buisness capacity, managing his 700 acres of prune land with the skill of a veteran grower. Just before his sickness Mr. Hume had perfected the details of an electric plant, which is now supplying Los Gatos and vicinity with light. He leaves a wife—formerly Miss Una Hendy—and a child of 2.

BOSWELL JR.

Joris Karl Husymans, the distinguished French writer, has given up his career as a man of letters for that of a monk of La Trappe, and in doing so has thrown the literary world of Paris into a state of amazement. It is difficult to realize the difference between the two conditions: As a man of the world Husymans was termed "King of the Decadents," and the ruling nature of his intellectual life was the search for sensation. He became disgusted with it all, however, and in his last book, "En Route," tells in an autobiographical way of how he became converted to the Roman Catholic faith. He has given up his former life, and has now assumed that of a Trappist monk at the most rigorous and the most secluded of any in the religious orders of the Catholic Church.

Photography in natural colors is again declared to be a fact, this time by no less distinguished a person than Sir Henry Wood, Secretary of the London Society of Arts, who has tested the new process, and has proclaimed it genuine. The inventor is M. Villedieu Chassagne, of Paris. A photograph taken of a wood shows the trees, the flowers, the grass and the sky in all their natural shades to a remarkable degree, and in a portrait the flesh tints and every color in the costume came out vividly.

C. H. Lehmann, the famous English oarsman, who has been engaged in coaching the Harvard crew, is very popular with the college men. He looks every inch a sportsman, and is quite boyish in appearance, except that there are a few touches of gray on his temples. The most striking thing about his stroke is the amount of power he manages to put into it.

By his contract with the Frohmans John Drew is paid a thousand dollars a week throughout the season. He appears about forty weeks a year and in addition to this snug sum here totaled, he has a small percentage of the receipts.

A Vista of the Village

A Day's Catch: Drying Squid

A Village Shrine

A Cemetery on the Outskirts

A Bit of the Village Toward the Sea

The Boat-Landing

A CHINESE FISHING VILLAGE ON MONTEREY BAY

The God of the Pacific: Chinese

Vishnu, one of the Indian Trinity

A God from Guatemala

The God Gita, of the Hindus

STRANGE GODS IN TOWN

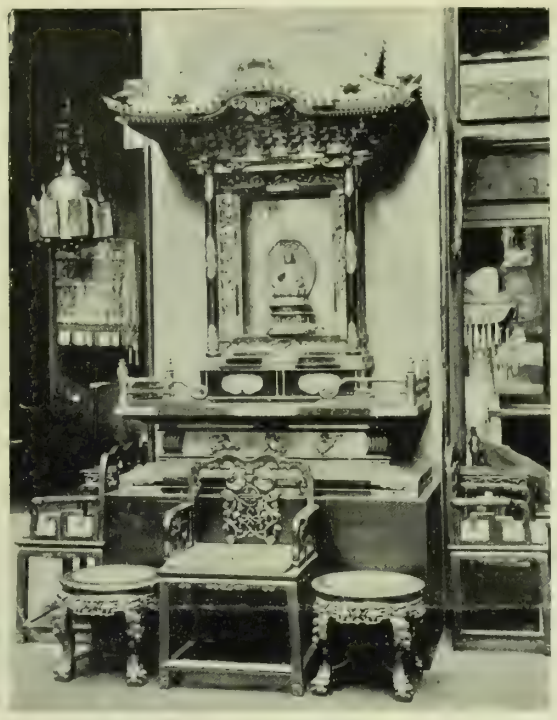
What They Are, Where They Come From, and Who Worship Them.

Although San Francisco has been called, and very probably is, the wickedest city this side of Port Said, it can, no doubt, boast a representation in a greater number of religions than any city in the United States. An army of strange gods have little by little accumulated in the various quarters, coming from Alaska and Canton, from India and the Marquesas, from Arizona and Nagasaki, from the land of the Skaptar Jokul and the country of Chimborazo. Gods of ice and gods of rain, gods of heat and gods of thunder, war gods and peace gods, hideous, mal-formed horrors, squat and grisly, from the man-eating tribes of the South Pacific atols, and gorgeous jeweled figures, beautifully carven from Delhi and Burmah.

These gods are not all museum freaks, labeled and ticketed and stowed under glass cases. Many of them are still worshipped devoutly and believed in utterly, and are the Penates of households, to be feared and propitiated and sacrificed to.

Of course the Chinese gods are in the majority. Every good Chinaman, it would appear, has two sets of gods; one set that he worships in common with his whole nation and another which are his own especial gods that he sets up to suit himself. The god worshipped most in Chinatown, as well as elsewhere, is the god of wealth. His name is Tu-Ti-Kung, and his appearance is that of a kindly, pot-bellied old party, seated cross-legged and holding a bar of gold in his hand. When next you go into the purlieus of Chinatown and see posted on the walls of certain interiors a slip of red paper some thirteen inches long, you may know that it stands for the outward and visible sign of Tu-Ti-Kung, the master of the house being too poor to buy an image of this god of wealth.

Tsau Kuin is the Chinaman's household god, he who keeps a reckoning throughout the year, and makes annual reports at headquarters to the great god, Yuh-Kwang. During the month of February Tsau Kuin is the recipient of much honor and of many roasted pigs and bowls of rice, for it is New Year's time, and he is about to turn over his books to be experted; hence the popping of firecrackers and the smouldering of punks and sandal-wood, the flags and tissue paper and baked meats, which are for the most part designed to conciliate the household deity and bribe him into good humor.



A Shrine of Buddha

Vishnu, one of the Hindoo Trinity, is also to be found in San Francisco. He is the four-armed deity, who wears the crown not unlike the papal tiara. Originally he comes from the caves of Elephanta, where he is represented in company with Brahma and Siva. According to the Vedas, there arose at one time a dispute among the wise men as to which was the greatest, Siva, Brahma or Vishnu. The matter was tested by a holy fakir, who intentionally omitted making reverence to Brahma and to Siva. The two gods, offended at his insolence, menaced him with death, and were with difficulty appeased. Vishnu the fakir found asleep, and boldly kicked him into sudden consciousness. Vishnu arose and craved pardon of the holy man for sleeping at the time of his arrival, declared himself honored by the fakir's blow and made tender enquiries as to his welfare. "This," said the fakir, "is the mightiest god, since he overpowers by the most potent of all weapons, kindness."

The statues of Vishnu that one can see in this city are of marble and of brass. The marble figures are from the temples, those of brass are little household idols that their worshipers treat with much reverence, washing them every morning, making offerings to them thrice during the day and putting them to bed over night on soft cushions.

The abiding-places of San Francisco's strange gods are as varied and curious as the gods themselves. The Joss Houses of Chinatown claim, no doubt, the greater number of them, sombre, dark-faced, and bearded, sitting in the deep shadow of their shrines, almost lost in a world of lacquer and gilding and ebony, with incense smouldering before them in brass burners that are worth small fortunes. Others grace the walls of the Academy of Science building and the Park museum, ranked in silent files in company with cases of arrowheads and troglodite things and war drums. A few, more fortunate, are in the hands of collectors, and, idols of a different cult, are reverenced as objects d'art, as much as once they were venerated as cloud-compelling deities. Still others, perhaps the greater number, have sunk to the level of the curiosity shop, the hotel des invalides for strange gods, and are bartered for and haggled over, or traded for bicycles of last-years model. Or, worse than all, they are shelved and forgotten, become corrupted by moth and rust, accumulate dust, where once they were washed and tended and feared and loved presences in the household to be propitiated and worshipped as weavers of destinies and arbiters of fate.

Alaskan Indians Have Faith in Him

A Popular Divinity: The Chinese God of Wealth
Photo by Taber

A Wrathful Deity of Japan

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Lent is close at hand, but there is still an interval to be bridged—an interval with possibilities of gaiety in it. The opportunity of festivity is offered, but it is decidedly a question whether it will be taken advantage of. Somehow the season has been a failure. The prospects for entertainments in millionaire homes are but slim. The mansions on California street and on Pacific avenue have remained dark the season through. Mrs. Henry Scott alone has given a dance. In prospect we have the Mardi Gras ball at Hopkins house, and there is also the French opera company from New Orleans. The contracts have not yet been signed, but it is safe to believe we will have the troupe at the California during Lent. Even if its members are not the greatest singers in the world—at least they are competent and clever artists who will amuse and interest us as Judic and Theo used in by-gone days.

There are to record quite a number of teas, rather informal for the most part. Chiefest among them were those of Miss Edith McBean and Miss Caro Crockett on Saturday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. P. N. Lilienthal gave a large dinner Sunday evening in honor of Baron Marx, who is touring the world, and is on his way to Australia. Misses Helen and Mary Stubbs had a big euchre party on Tuesday

MISS LULA BURTON
Who will play the leading role of "Caste"
Taber, photo

last, at which some fifty young people were entertained. The guests were of the Friday Fortnightly crowd, and they enjoyed a jolly time.

The last cotillion of the Friday Night Club was rather better attended than its immediate predecessors, but the gathering was hardly large enough to persuade Mr. Greenway of the advisability of reorganizing the club next year. There is no doubt that the Fortnightlies and the Saturday Nights, and all the other dancing clubs, have seriously interfered with the parent institution. They have the advantage of being cheaper, which is, in these days, a distinct superiority, so they accommodate the terpsichorean longings of the younger sets at a low rate of expense. Still it was a thoroughly enjoyable cotillion, and those who were there admit they never enjoyed themselves more. Mr. Greenway led with Miss Della Davidson, a pretty and popular debutante.

The ball at Mrs. Henry Scott's on Thursday night was a unique affair, it being the only important dance given in a private house this winter. It was in honor of Miss Caro Crockett, Miss Helen Hopkins and Miss Cunningham, a niece of Mrs. Scott. The other guests for the most part were of the married set who comprise the Scott coterie.

Apropos of cotillions, there is great jubilation among the members of the Fortnightly over the condition of their treasury. Actually it contains a surplus, and it is proposed to expend it all at a final ball, to be given in one of the larger halls, possibly the Maple Hall, which is easily the best for dancing purposes in town. There will be a good supper, decorations and all the other accessories. The cotillion last night went off very well though there is a good deal of complaint by the leader of the habit of certain men and girls of sneaking out of the figures, thereby marring the success of the movements.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Goads have gone East, to be away some months, but Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Schmiedell and Dr. and Mrs. Breyfogle are on their way home, and will be here next week. The De Youngs are expected back very soon, also.

Consul and Mrs. John Simpson opened their new home at 2520 Vallejo street on Saturday last. It is a beautiful house, the interior most tastefully decorated, and is equipped with a spacious ballroom, with an admirable floor. Indeed, the whole house is thoroughly fitted for entertaining in. Besides being a housewarming, the affair was also to celebrate the debut of Miss Simpson, who is an exceedingly pretty and very charming young lady. Quite a large gathering of friends called during the afternoon. In the evening there was a dinner and later a dance. Miss Simpson will doubtless entertain frequently during the season.

Miss Della Mills had a luncheon and musicale in honor of Miss Lever of New Orleans.

Quite the jolliest party of the week was that given by Miss Katherine Dillon in honor of Miss Alice Jordan, of Santa Clara, on Monday night last. There were card games for valuable prizes, followed by an amusing "turn" by a ventriloquist, and a clever exhibition of magic by a local prestidigitator. An excellent supper terminated the entertainment. Miss Dillon wore a very pretty gown of pale green silk, covered with chiffon and trimmed with orchids and rhinestones. Miss Jordan was in white organdie trimmed with lace. Miss Marie Voorhies in brocaded satin, Miss Ethel Moore was in pale blue and cream chiffon.

The subject of weddings is naturally an engrossing one. Of coming events quite the most interesting are the prospective nupitals of Miss Jessie Coleman and Mr. Harry Knowles, which is set for the first week in June. Miss Coleman is preparing an elaborate trousseau. Miss Myra Prather is also engaged upon her trousseau, but thus far she has not named the wedding day—some time in June it is presumed by the knowing.

Among coming events is a tea at Miss Gerstle's Friday afternoon, February 20th, to be followed by a dinner. Mrs. David Bixler will give an entertainment on Sunday in honor of Mr. Beel, who is to leave on Monday next for Europe. Mr. Beel will be much missed

The Doctor's Daughters of Rev. Dr. Mackenzie's church gave a musicale at the residence of Mrs. B. F. Norris on Wednesday night of this week. The "Daughters" are among the most popular and entertaining charitable organizations of this city, and their "functions" given from time to time for sweet charity's sake are invariably well attended. This, their latest musicale, was made the occasion of a most delightful gathering. The mandolin and guitar clubs of the University of California, as well as the Press Club quartette, and other talent, were called upon to furnish the entertainment, and did much toward making the affair one of the most successful of its kind this season.

At the last meet of the Saturday Night dancing class, the cotillion was led by Mr. Donald Smith. The affair was as successful as its predecessors, and went off in excellent shape. The figures were of the invariable marching order, and were given with plenty of eclat. Among the maidens who appeared specially attractive, I noticed Miss Gertie Van Wyck in white muslin de soie; Miss Bessie Ames in pale pink. This was her first appearance since returning from Europe. Miss Mattie Wellington wore white organdie and looked very sweet and pretty. Miss Bertie Bruce, who is one of the best dancers in the younger set, wore white swiss. Miss May, a little cousin of the Landers family, wore pink. The Saturday Nights are to have, on the 23d of April, a big cotillion in Native Sons' Hall. Some 250 invitations will be issued, and there will be a big supper to adorn the occasion.

The Nathaniel Gray Free Kindergarten will be benefited on Tuesday, February 23, by a Lady Washington tea, to be held at the residence of Mrs. Will E. Fisher, 1210 Sutter street. The affair promises to be as delightful as it will be timely, and the kindergarten will be benefited accordingly. Tickets for the tea can be obtained from Mrs. M. R. Higgins, president, Mrs. H. E. Huntington, Mrs. George Easton, and from the other ladies on the Board of Managers.

***

The Wednesday Night Club gave its closing party on February 10th. It was quite the jolliest meet the organization

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste has yet had. The cotillion was led by Mr. Alf. Williams, assisted by Miss Florence Dunham and Miss Jessie Glascock, who got up original figures for the occasion. They were chiefly on the marching order, but were more complicated and interesting that those usually presented. In honor of the occasion, it being the last evening, the girls wore new and pretty gowns. Miss Florence Dunham wore pure white satin, which was rather severely cut and brightened with American beauty roses and violets. Miss Carrie Havens looked exceedingly picturesque in a sheer white organdie frock, made over white satin. It had big ruffled sleeves, and around the shoulders was draped a chiffon kerchief. Miss Myra Prather looked very sweet in cerise satin trimmed with roses and white lace. Miss Jessie Glascock wore pink satin veiled with white chiffon. The hall was very prettily decorated with palms, greens, etc., and the music was excellent, the orchestra having been increased by two extra pieces for the occasion. The supper, too, was excellent, and altogether the cotillion was easily the most successful the Wednesday Nights have had. It is safe to believe that the organization will be continued next year. Now that the event has gone so well quite a number of men and girls are claiming to have originated it. However, this is a dark question, and will doubtless remain so. Nor does any one know who the girls were whose participation have made the dances go so well. Just before the affair

NINA CH DE ST HUBERT
The clever young violinist who is playing with M. Guille at the Orpheum
Thors, photo

Mrs. Folger gave a big dinner to a number of the debutantes.

It is proper nowadays to vary the characteristics of one's dinners. Last Tuesday evening Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Smith gave a smart dinner and dance, and to provide variety for their guests they instituted a novel interchange of partners between courses. It was a series of grand right and left, the ladies moving to the right and the gentlemen to the left. It was thus possible for one man to talk the same subject with every girl. Originally the choosing of partners was arranged by matching flowers. The affair was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Phillips, formerly Mrs. Henry Martin. The decorations were really very beautiful. In the center of the table from end to end was a pond filled with water lilies and ferns. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. White, Captain and Mrs. Edwin Goodall, and Mr. and Mrs. John L. Howard. Another jolly little dinner was given by Mr. and Mrs. Will McGee to a party of young married people Friday evening. The decorations were American beauty roses, and it was noticed that the gowning of the ladies was quite distinctly elaborate.

Quite the event of the season among University people in Berkeley was the dinner given last Thursday evening at the Chi Phi house by Mr. Ira Boss, the eldest scion of the Boss family. Being quite a young man he had a very young crowd. Mr. Perry Hayne and Mr. Laurie Adams being the oldest men present. However, about fifty guests were invited, but only about forty-two were present. Three tables decorated with pink carnations and roses accomodated them, and at each place was a big bunch of pink roses tied with pink satin ribbon. The girls present were of the Berkeley set, and most of them wore pink, among them Miss Idabelle Palmer, Miss Martha Hutchinson, Miss Jessie Glasscock, Miss Fannie Baldwin, Miss Florence Dunham. Mrs. Homer King and Mrs. Pringle chaperoned the party. Huber's orchestra played during the dinner. The affair created a good deal of comment among University people, on account of the generosity of the menu, and the age and variety of the wines served. There were brands for each course, as well as Moet and Chandon with the roast. Indeed it was decidedly a costly meal, and in Oakland they call it the Bartin-Bradley effort. It is almost an unheard of thing in Berkeley for any wine to be served at dinner, as temperance rules at all social gatherings. The people who have entertained the University boys have never given them any, but the Chi Phi's have frequently departed from this rule and are consequently the subject of much gossip.

On Tuesday Mrs. Horatio Livermore gave a luncheon to Mrs. Harry Cross who has recently come here from Rhode Island. Mrs. Cross is a bride, is fascinating, tall, dark and very graceful. She has charming manners. Her husband is coaching the baseball team at the University, and is studying law in the Hastings Law College. They have taken the Eell's cottage on the Shepard's place in Oakland, and Mrs. Cross has made quite a hit. The table decorations were simple and beautiful, being quince blossoms and foliage. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

ALUM is properly a dye stuff. Lime is properly used in tanning. Neither should be used in bread. Yet it is positively true that most all the cheaply made baking powders contain these harmful ingredients used simply because they are cheap, and utterly regardless of their dangerous character. The cheap powders thereby become the infamous means whereby the unsuspecting are deluded and injured.

In all English countries and in some of our States it is unlawful to put alum in bread. The Royal Baking Powder is free from alum and lime—it is absolutely pure.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO. NEW-YORK.

Orestes Pierce, Mrs. Will Taylor, Miss Evelyn Shephard, Miss Rowena Beans of San Jose, Miss Eells and the Misses Livermore.

Over in Berkeley last week the Davenports gave a euchre party, which was decidedly unique and original. The interior of the house was made to represent the "Sunset Limited," college boys acting as porters and conductors, the guests being the passengers, all of whom whiled away the journey with cards. At a given time twenty minutes for lunch was announced and a scramble for sandwiches and the like ensued, which was truly drummer-like. Lunch over, the guests resumed their journey and their cards, and by the time the affair was over all had concluded that there was something new under the sun, and they had had it.

DRAMATIC NOTES

For many years New Orleans has supported an annual season of French opera sung by artists of established reputation, and it is said that the season just ended has been the most brilliant the Crescent City has enjoyed for twenty years. This is welcome news for San Franciscans, for the very company that has been delighting the opera goers of New Orleans will open a season at the California theater early in March. There are in all over 125 people in the company, thoroughly capable of presenting in the most satisfactory manner operas ranging all the way from the light and airy conceit, "Miss Helyett," to the tragic and heavy opera, "La Juive."

The wonderful Frantz family is more popular than anything else at the Orpheum this week; the way these people turn and tumble and jump about is almost marvelous. Ara, Zebra and Vora are unfortunate in coming after the Frantzs. If they were before them on the bill they would be received with more favor. There is a "pretty" man in the performance. His name is Gleason. He sings a little, and dances a little, and poses almost entirely through it all; in fact, if his singing and dancing were as good as his studied grace, his act would be much more acceptable. Guille sings Verdi's "Grand Air de Jerusalem," and for a recall Gounod's "Ave Maria," with a violin obligato by Mlle. Nina de St. Hubert. Gounod's "Ave Maria" at the Orpheum—what a place for such a song! Mlle. de St. Hubert would have pleased the audience had she done nothing else but stand before it, but as she played with grace and feeling the effect was doubly agreeable.

With "My Lord and Some Ladies," Louis James will open the second week of his engagement at the Baldwin on next Monday evening. The piece is an adaptation from the French of Scribe, and "my lord" is the famous wit Bolingbroke. "The ladies" include Queen Anne and no less a personage than the celebrated Sarah, first Duchess of Marlborough, ancestress of our own Consuelo's ducal husband. The name of the adaptor of the piece is not on the bills, probably a good thing for the dramatist. However, we shall soon have the opportunity of judging for ourselves—at any rate, the play has met with success from the very beginning, and since it has, there must be merit in it.

The very name "Shore Acres" makes one think of stretches of shining sands and of sounding seas, of deep green woods and of whispering winds, and the play itself is said to conjure up a thousand thoughts equally delightful. "Shore Acres" is sweet and peaceful from beginning to end; it is an idyl of New England life, a story of homely, happy, everyday existence, as it really is among the simple folk who live along the rocky shores of Maine and Massachusetts, where the swelling sea and the sighing pine sing out in harmony. James A. Herne, the author of the play, accompanies the production and assumes the principal part. "Hearts of Oak" has been one of Mr. Herne's greatest successes, but its popularity is certain to be wonderfully outdistanced by that of "Shore Acres."

The grocers are finding out their advantage in selling Schilling's Best tea.

It gives satisfaction; if not, they return the customer's money, and charge it to us.

A Schilling & Company
San Francisco

458

THE THEATRES

In "Chimmie Fadden," Besides Mrs. Bates, There Are Others.

Hear ye, hear ye, all you unfortunates who have not yet seen "Chimmie Fadden" There is something else in Mr. Townsend's play beside Mrs. Marie Bates-Murphy! You are incredulous of course; who would not be in the face of the advance notices which our various dailies have published? Some of them have contented themselves by merely intimating that "Chimmie" is a tallow candle beside the electric light of Mrs. Bates-Murphy. Others have gone so far as to say he is totally obscured by Mrs. B., and the rest of the company—nowhere. I have read that Mrs. Murphy did not figure in the book and again that she did; it has been whispered that Mr. Townsend is chagrined at this minor note's prominence; that he is delighted; that he feels ten contradictory emotions—in fine, Mrs. Bates-Murphy assumed mammoth proportions in my eyes. I expected to come away from "Chimmie" with but one thought, and that one of Mrs. Marie Bates-Murphy.

Imagine my surprise at finding Her Highness artistically unobtrusive and nailed securely to her proper subordinate place! Once or twice, it is true, she broke away for an instant, and took up more than her share of the middle of the stage, but on the whole it must be said—greatly to her credit—that she could not have obtruded herself less if she had been the worst or even the best actress in the world. Marie Bates' creation is delightfully comical, exceedingly clever, made out of nothing and well finished. There are no loose ends, but it is folly to say she is the piece de resistance, for though we enjoy her immensely when she is on the stage, we do not miss her when she is off.

As a matter of lines the interest is very evenly distributed between "Chimmie," "The Duchess," "Small Bottles" and "Miss Fanny." Mr. Townsend has given them all a fair show, and they all, except Berenice Wheeler ("Miss Fanny") make the most of their opportunities. Beth Franklin ("The Duchess") and George Nash ("Small Bottles") are particularly satisfactory. Miss Franklyn's voice is too shrill, especially in the first act, but she makes an enchanting little French maid. Her accent and acting are capital, her figure and personality captivating. Mr. Nash fills the trying, actionless role of "Small Bottles" with considerable discrimination and deftness. He plays it, my dear young ladies, quite as cleverly as your darling Drew could, has much handsomer eyes, quite as irreproachable collars and more magnetism. His little scenes with Miss Wheeler are as good as she permits.

It is a pity that such a bright-eyed, pretty, plump little woman should be so immobile; Miss Wheeler refuses Paul with as little gentleness and delicacy as the average maid turns an "agent" from the door, and even her manner to Chimmie is far from what her lines suggest. Mrs. Fadden is satisfactorily done by Mrs. Denham-Rouse. Her look of maternal pride and affection as she sat watching Chimmie play could not have been done better, though other bits in the same act need attention. For instance, the way in which she recived the news of Chimmie's getting "hurted." However, anything would seem poor when contrasted with Marie Bates' inimitable "it is a pr-roud day." Even Charles Hopper himself can't come up to some of Mrs. Bates' touches, good though he is.

By the way, why does he always come on the stage at full trot? And why that preposterous speech at the end of the last act, in which he states that he likes his "mutter" and "The Duchess," but they are nothing compared to "Miss Fanny"? My statement that the sentiment is one which he would never have expressed before "The Duchess" may, of course, be disputed, but it is impossible to deny that the diction is unnatural in the extreme. Mr. Hopper manages to give it a suggestion of realness by his unaffected intonations, but he cannot hide the fact that this "speech" is a blunder, the chief one in Chimmie Fadden's lines.

***

"Spartacus!" Guy Lindsley! Alma Kruger! Any of them, all of them! To think that a man who once had the experience and honor of acting with Jefferson and Mrs. Drew should come to this wild-eyed nonsense and these frenzied mummers, should come to it and them with glee, apparently, and avail himself of every inch of absurdity in Spartacus himself and his company. May the shade of his jester in "Francesca de Rimini" arise and whisper wisdom to him. Forget all of James' good points, multiply his defects fifty fold and you will have some idea of what he is as Spartacus. In the first act he roars, beats his breast, struts and strikes heroic attitudes; in the second he does all this and snorts in addition, while Crassus and the "Great Roman amphitheater" wait amiably for him and his brother to plot the upsetting of Rome. The rest of the time we see him gloated with gore and thirsting for more. Throughout, he is a magnificent heroic figure wallowing in absurdity. Not once does he walk—he strides, struts and cavorts, but walk! Never. Not once is he human and natural, but always monstrous, magniloquent and meaningless.

Though it is rather like discussing ancient history, I cannot forbear speaking of George Osbourne's capital work as Michonnet, and the agreeable surprise Mr. Lonergan gave me as the young officer in "Adrienne Lecouvrier." Though unsatisfactory in the last act, Lonergan was very charming in the first and second, so charming that I forgave him his Macduff on the spot.

He looked at "Adrienne" just as a man ought, and so seldom does look, at the woman he loves. His eyes were tender, joyous, admiring—beaming with the happiness and excitement of a successful lover. Oh, he was a very pleasant picture, that young man, with his clear, undaunted, kindly eyes.

Modjeska was not so attractive as usual in "Adrienne Lecouvrier." She cannot assume the expressions and voice of young love. The result of her efforts was artificiality. Her reading of these lines was entirely lacking in the simplicity and directness of real feeling; the pseudo sweetness and tenderness was plainly stamped—counterfeit. Still she was, as always, intelligent and tactful. She did not, however, use her best judgment in choosing her gowns. Though magnificent and admirably worn and made, they were not becoming. The white satin creation made her look ten years older than she did in Magda's flowing garments. Mr. Osbourne as Michonnet was the star of the performance. By some unusual and doubtless heaven-sent inspiration the audience—gallery and all—recognized the fact that they were looking at a good thing, and gave him almost as much applause as he deserved. Much to my surprise, pretty little Polly Perkins was not pretty at all in her fine lady clothes. Get you back to your blonde hair and Germen peasant dress, Polly, or, that failing, try muslin and ribbons—puffs and patches don't suit your style any better than white satin suits Modjeska.

PEG WOFFINGTON.

MISS MAY BUCKLEY

Who makes her re appearance at the Alcazar in "A Scrap of Paper," after her recent illness
Marceau, photo

The bill at the Orpheum next week will contain many new features. There will be "turns" of all sorts and descriptions, from tank swimmers and aerial artists to demon twisters and grand opera. The new people will be Professor J. Finney, champion all-round swimmer of the world, and Miss Marie Finney, who is down on the bills as "The Heroine of London Bridge." The Renfos, aerial artists; the Pantzeo trio, funny demons, introducing a wonderful exhibition of twisting and bending; Hayes, Lytton and Hayes in a new comedy, "A French Marriage," and the Grand Opera Quartette, consisting of A. L. Guille, tenor; Miss Julia Cotte, soprano; Miss Dora Busch, contralto, and Signor Abramoff, basso.

Moet & Chandon Chosen.

At the Bradley-Martin dress ball, surpassing anything of the kind before attempted in this country, the cost of which was not less than $300,000, competition among the champagne importers was so strong that it was decided to submit to the most noted epicures of the four hundred unmarked samples of all the leading champagnes, and thus it came about that those who, by their taste and experience are the qualified judges of that which is best, selected the brand of Moet & Chandon, which was the only champagne served at this event.

San Francisco Chronicle.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

REASONS FOR USING

Walter Baker & Co.'s

Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

Imp. Ormonde. From a photograph taken in the spring of 1894

Imp. Ormonde. From a photograph taken in January, 1897

ORMONDE HIMSELF AGAIN

The Horse of the Century as He Is and Was.

Two photographs reproduced in these pages to-day represent the great horse Imp. Ormonde, taken at different periods of his sojourn at his present home, Menlo Stock Farm, Menlo Park, California. It will be observed that the later picture, dated quite recently, shows him minus much of the superfluous flesh which he put on after being established at Mr. W. O'B. Macdonough's farm. So much has been said and written in disparagement of Ormonde's foal-getting ability that it may be well to give the public an authentic statement of what he has accomplished since coming into his present owner's hands. The following list shows the progeny born in California in each year:

1894—Orestes, bay colt, out of Imp. Kissing Crust by Brown Bread. This colt is still the property of Mr. Macdonough, and at present in the East, where he will be trained for his engagements during the coming summer.

1895—Rosormonde, bay filly, out of Imp. Fairy Rose by Kisber. This filly is the property of the Stanford estate, and for racing has been leased to Mr. J. Nagle Burke, of San Jose.

1896—Bay colt out of Imp. Countess Langden by Kingcraft. Brown colt out of Jongleuse by Alarm. Brown filly out of Dizzy Blonde by Chilicothe. Bay filly out of Marilee by Glengarry.

1897—Chestnut filly out of Muta by Wildidle. Chestnut filly out of Bud by Glenmore. In addition to which seven more mares are expected to foal to him within the next two or three months.

During the present year the horse will be put to about fifteen mares, the property of his owner, and, if a few good outside matrons were offered, his services would probably be available for them also.

A perusal of the foregoing statement will be sufficient to satisfy the reader that the reports of Ormonde's impotence, which were so freely and ungenerously set agoing a couple of years ago, were not in keeping with the exact truth, and that, while no doubt his reputation as a stud horse was necessarily prejudiced by his failure to produce during periods when he was subjected to ocean voyages, climatic changes and other disabilities, there is now good reason to hope that a settled life and proper management have restored him to his rightful position as a potent sire. That a horse of his unequaled caliber should cease at an early age to be a factor in the current work of breeding would be a severe loss to the whole world, more especially after his proved ability to get such scions as Orme and Imp. Goldfinch, the latter the sire of Chelandry, the best two-year-old filly in England last season, and now a lord of the harem at Rancho del Paso in this State.

When Mr. Macdonough engaged James McDonnell, formerly in charge of the stallions at Rancho del Paso, to superintend his stud-farm and the handling of Ormonde in particular, he made an excellent selection, and there cannot be a doubt that to McDonnell's experienced care the change already brought about is mainly due. The horse is no longer coddled and stuffed like a prize ox, but is given feed and exercise, each in rational and suitable quantities, with the result that he is as fit and well as he can be, not gross, but clean and lusty, as a stallion needs to be to do himself full justice. Ormonde is now fourteen years of age, and therefore, if all goes well with him, he still has a moiety of his natural life before him. His own brother, Orelio, is expected to face the starter for the three-year-old classic races in England this year, and, if he should distinguish himself, it will reflect favorably on his great relative in California. It has been my good fortune never to have lost sight of Ormonde since I saw him win the Derby at Epsom, save for the short time which he spent in South America; and, if the enthusiasm which his own individuality compels in me, sustained by personal acquaintance with his sire, Bend Or, his peerless dam Agnes, and his famous sons Orme and Goldfinch, should in the near future be enhanced by one or more of his get, born and raced within my view in this beautiful State, there will for me have been more than reward for my studies and experience of the thoroughbred horse as existing in our times.

Nothing comes easier in speaking and writing than the use of clap-trap, but when the subject of these remarks was by universal consent styled "the horse of the century" my firm conviction is that the public were right, as they usually are in these matters, and I pray that their judgment may be upheld to the end. In racing and breeding separately or combined, we have so few certainties to depend upon that it would be hard, indeed, if evil luck should rob us of one of the best chances ever seen of pulling off the double event and so having constituted for us a champion, both of the turf and the stud, whose ultimate merit shall have been beyond our means of measurement.

BENEDICT.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A ... its original color. Immediate effect. Free ... Langley & Michaels Company, Agents.

HORSES

Racers and Racing of the Week — Comment on the "Sport of Kings."

The Ingleside meeting was brought to a close on Saturday, 8th instant, with a nice break of sunshine after many days of weather about which nothing favorable can be said, except that it is "good for the country." With the change of the moon things open more auspiciously for the two weeks' campaign at Emeryville.

The two-year-old division still appear, but moderate. Sir William (Fitzjames-Ysabel) has earned brackets in the last two of his three races. This youngster was bought for $375 at the Rancho del Paso sale after the Horse Show, and has already landed first money in purses aggregating $750. In shape and make better ones can be found, but no doubt the drop of good blood he gets from his sire's dam, old Electra, is of service to him. He was perhaps a bit lucky on Saturday in the pretty short cut which brought out fourteen runners, all that were on the card, and but three not bred in the State, as Outlay, to whom he was giving three pounds, was taken very wide, and, to make up lost ground, driven at a terrible lick, which evidently told at the last pinch. The latter colt caused quite a buzz of admiration in the paddock, and during the preliminary by his elegant appearance, and it is to be hoped he will do justice to the good care Mr. P. Dunne is sure to give him. He has speed of a high order, and apparently lots of grit.

Geyser keeps his place in the three-year-old company, though his near fore leg can be no joy to his trainer. However, he had considerable advantage of Imp. Sain in conditon, when they met at even weights in the mile race on Saturday, and were but noses apart for decision. The latter is not by any means in racing trim, and that in a punishing finish he should have shown the superb courage he did confirms the good opinion expressed about him in these columns after his last success. But no horse will stand the jamming he has had just lately when only partially fit, and run up to the best form of which he is capable.

The Hobart Stakes, a handicap at one and a sixteenth miles, with a field of eight out of seventy-seven original entries, was the event of the Ingleside meeting, and showed us P. Dunne's Damien, 100 pounds, in renewed form, and a handy winner, with Salvation, 106 pounds, second a couple of lengths behind and Schiller, 110 pounds, third at about the same interval, the last two ridden out. The trio looked strong and fit as they filed out of the paddock. With Lucky Dog, 110 pounds, the tactics which are best suited to his complaint were put in force by Doggett, but when about half the distance had been negotiated he dropped back into the ruck, and eventually joined the tail end of the procession, along with Sweet Favordale, Argentina and Marcel. His stable companion, St. Lee, could not go the pace. The Baldwin mare introduced the crack jockey, W. Simms, to the California public, and, judging by her behavior at the post, didn't seem to relish the job. It was observed that the Eastern celebrity had taken a hint from his English experience and dropped his knees and thighs to the position in the saddle where their power can be utilized. He was formerly a striking example of the opposite style, which is so mistaken and unsightly.

While referring to this race it may be noted that the handicapper allotted about half the horses entered less than 100 pounds, but only one of the lot, Marcel, 90 pounds, came to the post, finishing absolutely last, thirty lengths behind the winner. Readers can draw their own conclusions, but certainly one must be that it is poor business, on the one hand, to own, and on the other to have to plan races for inferior animals.

The opening card at Emeryville was above the average, though somewhat spoiled by scratchings, the San Leandro Stakes, value $1,000, dwindling down to four runners, and resulting in an easy victory for the 3-year-old Estaca, who held the lead throughout. Caspar found little trouble in picking up one more purse at eleven-sixteenths of a mile, giving George Rose's pretty filly Tea Rose, who has lately been resting, five pounds, and leaving the rest of his field well strung out. Tuesday's racing was chiefly remarkable for the successful riding of Thorpe, who secured the judges' verdict in four out of the six races in which he rode, and seeming in more than one instance to get every possible ounce out of his mount. Morte Fonso, who lately passed from Harry Griffin into the hands of P. Dunne, showed that he can be consistent in any color, and assisted by Thorpe's judicious perseverance, took the green jacket to the front after a rattling set-to with Cabrillo, who had two pounds the worst of the weights in the mile race. With the Fonso horse, Damien and Benamela in his stable Mr. Dunne should not have much difficulty in getting a line on most of our local performers and ascertaining the exact ability of anything in his own string, which for its numbers holds the premier position in point of winning form this winter. The horses are not only well placed and trained, but usually have the advantage of the best jockeyship available, and are therefore good to follow.

The conditions have been published for two stakes, value $1,500 each, and eight of $1,000 each, to be run at the Montana summer meetings, entries closing April 1st, by which time most of the stables here at present should be able to determine whether their resources are suited to a campaign in the northern country. With racing at our two big tracks closing on May 15, there will be a nice interval to recruit before the first saddling bell rings at Anaconda on June 26. After four weeks' work at the Copper City the scene will be changed to Butte for a similar period.

BENEDICT.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

Sufferers from Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, etc., should be constantly supplied with "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Avoid imitations.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER

SUCCESSORS TO

H. P. GREGORY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO

MACHINERY

Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

521-523 Market St., San Fran.

Why not

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Branch Stores: Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market 302 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

"It gives me great pleasure to accept the dedication of your beautiful songs. "S. JADASSOLEN, Leipsic."

Song Album by H. B. PASMORE

Nineteen Beautiful Songs Sent for One Dollar

OLIVER DITSON CO., Boston

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH

Gabriele D'Annunzio's Revolting Tale of a Diseased Love.

The love of a degenerate and an epileptic—that, in brief, is the motive of Gabrielle D'Annunzio's "Triumph of Death" (G. H. Richmond & Co.). A profoundly revolting book, but, also, a work of real genius. Inevitably it raises the old question—the question which Mlle. de Maupin and Mme. Bovary and Anna Karanina and Esther Waters raised—how circumstantial may a novelist be in rendering the details of life as it is lived by men and women. It may as well be said that D'Annunzio has gone further than his predecessors. He seems to have gone to the very limit, but it is pathology rather than romance. Yes, the book is but the report of a diseased passion. The details are prurient, it is true, but the impression is not of an appeal to licentiousness, but rather of the statement of the facts of the case. You might call it a medical treatise by a genius—the doctor who writes is a great literary artist, whose descriptions are as powerful as Zola's or Hugo's, whose eyes are soul-piercing, who is both savant and poet. Yet the power of the novel must not blind one to the distinction between works of science and of art. The first have for their readers specialists, and "The Triumph of Death" is for general reading. One thinks with a shudder of this terrible story falling into the hands of a young girl, and yet its first appearance was made as a serial in the columns of the "Mattino" of Naples.

As I have said, this is not a story. There is no complication, but only the development of the theme. We start with George Aurispa, the eldest son of a noble Italian family, and Hippolyte Sanzio, a beautiful and fascinating young Roman woman, whom he loves and by whom he is loved. Hippolyte is separated from her husband, and is an epileptic. George's passion has the violence of a mania, and he suffers from an intense jealousy, a jealousy which includes the thoughts and feelings of his mistress. He suffers the most poignant distress because he cannot see her soul, because the laws of life decree they shall remain separate entities. The impression given of him is that of a slender, delicate, morbid sensualist, whose mind preys upon itself, who inherits vice from his father modified by the refinement of an aenemic mother. It is at once a powerful and repelling picture, that of the Aurispa family at home in Guardiagrele. One is made to realize the fatal taint in its blood by the strenuous pictures of the father and mother, against whom George is contrasted. But passing from this portion of the book to the life of the lovers in their Hermitage at San Vito, one finds passages of such consummate power and penetration that the horror excited by their subject is drowned in the admiration excited by the marvelous demonstration of skill, intuition and literary force. Intermingled with the brutal transcription of pure physical sensation are descriptions of scenery drawn with the pen of a poet. The scene of the final episodes of this strange passion is Italy—the shores of the Adriatic—an ancient villa built on a plateau half way up the cliffs, in a grove of orange and olive trees. Here are gracious intervals—renderings of moonlight and dawn full of color and loveliness, but the most idyllic passages are but settings for the pervading sensualism of the narrative. The end of these most unhappy lovers is indeed destruction, for George, under the stress of his malady, throws himself and Hippolyte over the cliffs into the Adriatic.

Quite the most powerful and impressive chapters in "The Triumph of Death" are those devoted to describing the pilgrimage to the Church of the Madonna of Casalbordino. One is reminded of Zola's "Lourdes," but the power here is more intense, the horrors even more vividly transcribed. Almost four centuries before, an old septuagenarian, in a plain devastated by the hail, thought he perceived the Virgin of Mercy in the tops of a tree, and since then each year on the anniversary of the apparition all the peoples of the mountains and the coast had gone on a pilgrimage to the holy place to beseech mercy for their sufferings. George and Hippolyte follow with the procession of invalids to the church. Here follow some of the most striking passages:

It was a marvelous and terrible spectacle, unheard of, without resemblance to any conglomeration ever seen before, whether of men or things; a pell-mell so strange, so violent and incongruous, that it exceeded the most troubled dreams of nightmare. All the ugliness of the eternal islet, all the shameful vices, all the stupors; all the spasms and all the deformities of the baptised flesh, all the tears of repentance, all the mockery of the debauchee, insanity, cupidity, cunning, lewdness, stupidity, fear, mortal fatigue, stony indifference, silent despair; sacred choirs, demoniacal shrieks, acrobatic performances, the chiming of bells, the blasts of trumpets, discordant cries, roars, sighs; the crackling of fires beneath cauldrons, heaps of fruits and sugared delicacies, shop windows full of utensils, draperies, arms, jewels, rosaries; the obscene contortions of dancing girls, the convulsions of epileptics, the blows exchanged in angry brawls, the flight of the hunted thief through the surging mob; the scene of the worst corruptions vomited from out the filthy alleys of distant towns and cast upon an ignorant and amazed multitude; clouds of parasites, like gadflies about cattle, falling upon the compact crowd, incapable of self-defense; every base temptation for the brutal appetite, every fraud, every immodesty was exhibited in broad daylight—a pell-mell of everything was there, seething and fermenting around the House of the Virgin.

George and Hippolyte succeed in eluding the crowd and make their way into the church.

They entered by a side door into a sort of sacristy, from which could be seen, through a bluish smoke, the walls entirely covered by votive offerings of wax suspended there in proof of the miracles accomplished by the Virgin. Limbs, arms, hands, feet, breasts, shapeless pieces representing tumors, gangrenes, and ulcers, horrid representations of monstrous maladies, pictures of violet and crimson sores which cried out from the pallor of the wax—all these objects, motionless on the four high walls, had a mortuary appearance, horrifying and frightful, evoking the image of a charnel-house where are piled up all the limbs amputated in a hospital. Heaps of human bodies encumbered the pavement, inert; and in the heap appeared livid faces, bleeding mouths, dusty faces, bald heads, white hair.

"Madonna! Madonna! Madonna!"

A thousand arms were stretched towards the altar with savage frenzy. The women dragged themselves along on their knees, sobbing, tearing out their hair, striking their hips, bruising their foreheads on the stones, twisting as if in convulsions or possessed. Many, on all fours, sustaining the entire weight of their horizontal bodies on their elbows and naked toes, advanced gradually towards the altar. They crawled along like reptiles, they gathered themselves together, springing on their toes, with progressive propulsions, and beneath their petticoats could be seen their callous yellow soles, the projecting and pointed ankle-bones of their feet. At times the hands seconded the efforts of the elbows, trembling around the mouth which kissed the dust, near the tongue which traced in this dust the sign of the cross, with a saliva mixed with blood. And the crawling bodies passed over these bloody tracings without effacing them, whilst, before each head, a man erect struck the pavement with the tip of a stick in order to indicate the right way to the altar.

"Madonna! Madonna! Madonna!"

Another wave of fanatics arrived, took their places, spread out along the entire length of the railing. Tumultuous cries and violent gestures alternated with their offerings. Inside the railing which intercepted the access to the large altar, priests received in their fat and white hands the moneys and trinkets. In the act of tendering the right or left hand, on either side, they balanced themselves like caged beasts in a menagerie. Behind them, the clerks held large metal plates on which the offerings jinglingly accumulated. On one side, near the door of the sacristy, other priests were stooping over a table: they were counting the money and examining the jewels, while one of them, bony and brownish, made entries with a quill pen in a large ledger. They each performed this task in turn, and then left it to officiate. From time to time the bell sounded, and the censer was elevated amidst a cloud of smoke. Long, bluish waves rolled around the tonsured heads and dispersed on the other side of the railing. The sacred perfume mingled with the human stench.

Passing from this monstrous scene we have a chapter devoted to describing the mysterious habits of the Italian peasantry, faint reminiscences of the festivals of Dionysius, which Pater painted so admirably in one of his Greek studies.

On the things exhausted by the heat hovered the limpid and sweet hour that was about to gather in its crystalline sphere the impalpable ashes of the consumed day.

The field was laid out in a parallelogram, on a tableland girt with gigantic olive-trees, through the branches of which were glimpses of the blue band of the Adriatic, mysterious as the velum perceived in the temple behind the silver palms. The haystacks were erected at intervals in the form of cones, massive, and opulent with the richness heaped up by the arms of men, celebrated by the songs of women. When the toil was ended, the band of haymakers made a circle around its chief in the center of the field. They were robust, sunburnt men, dressed in linen. On their arms, on their legs, on their bare feet, they had deformities which the long and slow endurance of manual labor imprints on limbs that toil. In the fist of each man shone a scythe, curved and thin as the moon in its first quarter. From time to time, with a simple gesture of their disengaged hand, they wiped the sweat from their brows, and with it sprinkled the ground where the straw was shining under the oblique rays of the setting sun.

(For sale at A. M. Robertson's.)

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

Perrier-Jouet Champagne

EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand

W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

. . ALSO . .

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co. . . Pacific Coast Sole Agents

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

Army and Navy Club

Is the only WHISKY on the market every package of which bears on it a GUARANTEE guaranteeing it to be absolutely PURE and over SIX YEARS OLD

MEYERFELD, MITCHELL & CO.

116 Front Street, San Francisco

Insist upon having

Insist on finding this package

Contains Imported "L" Tea

E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California Street
San Francisco, Cal.

For sale by all grocers

Have you a friend who Smokes
Tell him there is just out a Smoker's Tip,
Which will prevent a cancer lip
Mailed on receipt of three 2 cent stamps by

ELASTIC TIP CO.

Boston 735 Market St., S. F. Chicago

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, Feb. 8 to 20, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S. P. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.

Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

BALDWIN THEATRE AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS

To-night, Sunday night, and all next week

MR. LOUIS JAMES

Supported by Guy Lindsley, Alma Kruger and a Superior Company

Monday, Tuesday and Friday and Saturday Matinee first time here, My Lord and Some Ladies
Wednesday and Sunday, Othello. Thursday, Hamlet
Saturday, Spartacus
February 22d: Lucky A Holcombe in "Shore Acres"

CALIFORNIA THEATRE AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS

One week, beginning Monday, Feb. 15th

OUR LITTLE CINDERELLA COMPANY!

A Galaxy of Child Actors and Actresses
A Series of Startling and Amusing Specialties
New and Gorgeous Scenery, Costumes and Effects!
Coming: Sousa's Band

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

Last Week! "Fadden's the Fad!"
The One Great Novelty of the Season

CHARLES HOPPER
IN
CHIMMIE FADDEN!

As big a hit in Frisco as they were in New York!
Last times! Don't Miss It! Feb. 22d: Fanny Rice

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, Feb. 13
The Finneys, Champion Swimmers of the World
The Renfos, Novelty Aerial Artists
Pantzer Trio, the Demon Twisters
Hayes, Lytton & Hayes, in "A French Marriage"
The Grand Opera Quartette: A. L. Guille, Tenor; Miss Julia Cotte, Soprano; Miss Dora Busch, Contralto; Signor Abramoff, Basso
In conjunction with Many Novelties!
Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
Every Evening
Second Edition of Our Up-to-Date Extravaganza
ALADDIN
Or, the Wonderful Lamp
New Songs! New Dances! New Specialties!
The Latest Sensation
"La Danse Des Fleurs Electriques"
A Feast of Delights for Young and Old!
In preparation, great double bill: Patience! Galatea!
Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : MANAGERS
Last performances to day and to-morrow, matinees and nights, of Gillette's comedy
"THE PROFESSOR"
Monday, February 15th, the Success of Two Continents
"A SCRAP OF PAPER"
By J. Palgrave Simpson
Hugo Toland, J. B. Polk, and the Entire Company
15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991
Feb 22d: Reappearance of George Osbourne

COLUMBIA THEATRE—Extra

Second Symphony Concert!

Next Thursday at 3:30 sharp

Fifty-Five Musicians! GUSTAV HINRICHS, Conductor

Magnificent Programme!

Reserved Seats 50c. and $1. Now on sale

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 26
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied February 10, 1897
Delinquent in office, March 16, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 6, 1897
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary,
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

AS THE WORLD WAGS

An Englishwoman's Frankness in Discussing Financial Affairs.

The frankness of the English woman as opposed to her American sister is amusingly instanced by a writer in the New York Tribune. "An English woman has no diffidence in expressing her poverty, whereas the Amrican tries to conceal her makeshifts. "I know we are paupers, Ella," said a British attache, who had married for love on nothing, "but I do think we might have clean antimacassars." This was before a number of smart people, who had been asked informally to partake of a "leg of mutton." "Why, my dear boy," she answered, composedly, "how can I keep them clean, when cook and nurse are obliged to do all the washing, and you will use hair oil?" With an American couple in like position such a complaint and rejoinder would be impossible.

The way the members of an English family discuss each other's failings and failures with strangers is incomprehensible to our country people, who, whatever might be their private opinion, would be prevented by pride, if not by loyalty, from exposing their relatives to adverse criticism. "I have four sisters," said a newly-arrived Englishman at a dinner, "and although the mater has tried her level best, she has not succeeded in getting one of them off." "Have you any brothers?" asked his neighbor. "One," he answered promptly, "but he's gone to the bad; he's a regular sponge, too, and I'd advise you to look out for him if he comes to this country, for he never pays up." "How can you speak that way of your own brother?" exclaimed the young lady, quite horrified. "Why shouldn't I," he answered, quite mystified, "it is true?"

---

Tipping has been looked upon by most people as the very bane of traveling, but in reality it is not. The porter of a Pullman and the steward of a steamer are paid to do just so much, and no more. Of course, they are supposed to be courteous and attentive and all that, but there are many little courtesies that are not part of their duties, and these are exactly the little attentions that the traveler wants most, and if he does not pay for them he will not get them. This is the virtue of tipping from a purely selfish view; there is another phase of it, a more kindly and considerate one. There are many people employed upon trains and in hotels whose wages consist almost entirely of the tips given them by travelers. This is the case particularly in Europe, where the overcrowded condition of the cities makes such gratuitous labor a necessity.

---

And now fashionable London, too, is stepping to the "Washington Post March." This is guaranteed to be the very latest and absolutely true, and since it is, New York will, of course, follow suit, and San Francisco will do likewise in all due time. We had hoped to have heard the last of this whilom favorite, as it has been organed and whistled and played to death many times over, but now, it seems, it is to be revived again, but since London approves, why so must we.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

Unique and tasty invitations are out for a sketch review at the offices of Wilder & Co., Easterbrook building, 20 to 24 Geary street, on next Friday and Saturday, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 5 p. m. and 7:30 and 10 p. m. This exhibition will include original drawings and reproductions of advertising sketches, representing a small portion of the work of Wilder & Co. for the past year, and is for the purpose of making the business world generally better acquainted with what can be done in illustrated advertising.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

THEATRE NOTES

Trebelli is here. The young soprano, upon whose slender shoulders has fallen the mantle of Trebelli mere, called the "greatest contralto." Madame Trebelli is dead, but her voice still lives in her daughter.

Singularly enough Trebelli eschews the operatic stage, that brilliant Mecca of singers and classes now known as the greatest among concert singers. This bizarre resolution of hers is not because she has been refused opportunity, for the late Augustus Harris again and again attempts to induce her to star in operatic roles. Trebelli is, at this moment, on a singing tour of the world, and her voice has been heard in places so remote as Zanzibar and Natal, and in Tasmania and New Zealand.

From the time of her earliest childhood Trebelli has lived in an atmosphere of song, her father, Allesandro Bellini having won a national reputation as tenor of a very high order. She has not, however, been obliged to go to out of the way corners of the world, where talent is rare, to win a reputation. Some of her greatest triumphs have been achieved in Russia and in Paris, while Scotland, England and Ireland have alike appreciated and applauded. Rubenstein really discovered Trebelli, and it was through his advice and efforts that the young cantatrice was educated for the profession. When quite a little girl she made her debut at St. James' Hall in London, after a careful period of preparation under Stanly and Martel the great maestros. Her success was immediate in an instant. The world was aware that a new star had arisen over the musical horizon.

Fanny Rice, the big little comedienne, is to make mirth at the Columbia after the departure of "Chimmie." Fanny Rice is one of the jolliest soubrettes along the line, and is bound to make a hit, especially as she arrives surrounded by kindred actors and actresses hardly less magnetic and fetching than herself. During the engagement two operas will be sung, "A Flower Girl of Paris" and the singing comedy, "At the French Ball."

Sigmund Beel, who leaves this week for Europe, is to be replaced by John Marquardt as concertmaster of the San Francisco Symphony Society. The second concert of the society is to take place at the Columbia Theater next Thursday afternoon at 3:30 sharp. Mr. Gustav Hinrichs has displayed excellent judgment in the matter of arrangement of programme, and the pieces to be heard next Thursday are bound to appeal to a very large class of music lovers.

"A Scrap of Paper," the play that made the Kendals famous, is to be the next bill at the Alcazar, and will no doubt draw the same large audience that as usual fills this popular theater. It is understood that Miss Joliffe, who made her debut with Modjeska and who is now with her company in the southern part of the State, will be seen at the Alcazar in a couple of weeks. This is quite a card for the theater, as Miss Joliffe has a host of friends who are ever ready to turn out to do her honor.

At the Tivoli "Aladdin's Lamp" still continues to shine with undiminished lustre, in company with such other lights as Ferris Hartman, Annie Suits and Miss Seabrooke. The Danse des Fleurs Electriques, with its 500 miniature bulbs, is quite a dazzling affair by itself, and alone is said to have cost the Tivoli close to $2,000. "Patience," Gilbert and Sullivan's masterpiece, is to go on shortly, to be followed later on by Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor.

Chimmie Fadden, buttons, small bots, plunkers and all, is at the Columbia, and is raisin' de laugh all right—all right. Mr. Hopper's dramatization of the title role is all that author or audience could desire, and his support is exceptionally good, being well selected and evenly balanced. Chimmie was a new type in literature, and came to stay. He deserves equal success "upon the boards," and has got it, thus far. Marie Bates as Mrs. Murphy is as good a character make-up as we have seen here in some time, while George Mash, Irene Viancourt and Beth Franklyn are quite above the average standard.

There will be plenty of music and song and any amount of spectacular effect in "Cinderella," which will be put on at the California next week by a company of clever little people, including Nina Cook, Daisy Gergan and Rosina D'Ennery. The famous aerial artists, The Zanfrellos, who created a sensation at the Orpheum some time ago, have been engaged for the production, and there are many other interesting features that will assist in making the performance thoroughly enjoyable.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75cents.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED
THREE HIGHEST AWARDS
AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS
AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street
Under Occidental Hotel

Fine Furs and Sealskin Garments

To order. Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast. All work guaranteed first-class

AD KOCOUR, Fashionable Furrier

5½ Kearny Street

Upstairs opposite Chronicle. Formerly cutter with Revillion Freres, Paris, London, New York

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA ELECTRICAL WORKS

409 MARKET STREET

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

Pacific Towel Co.

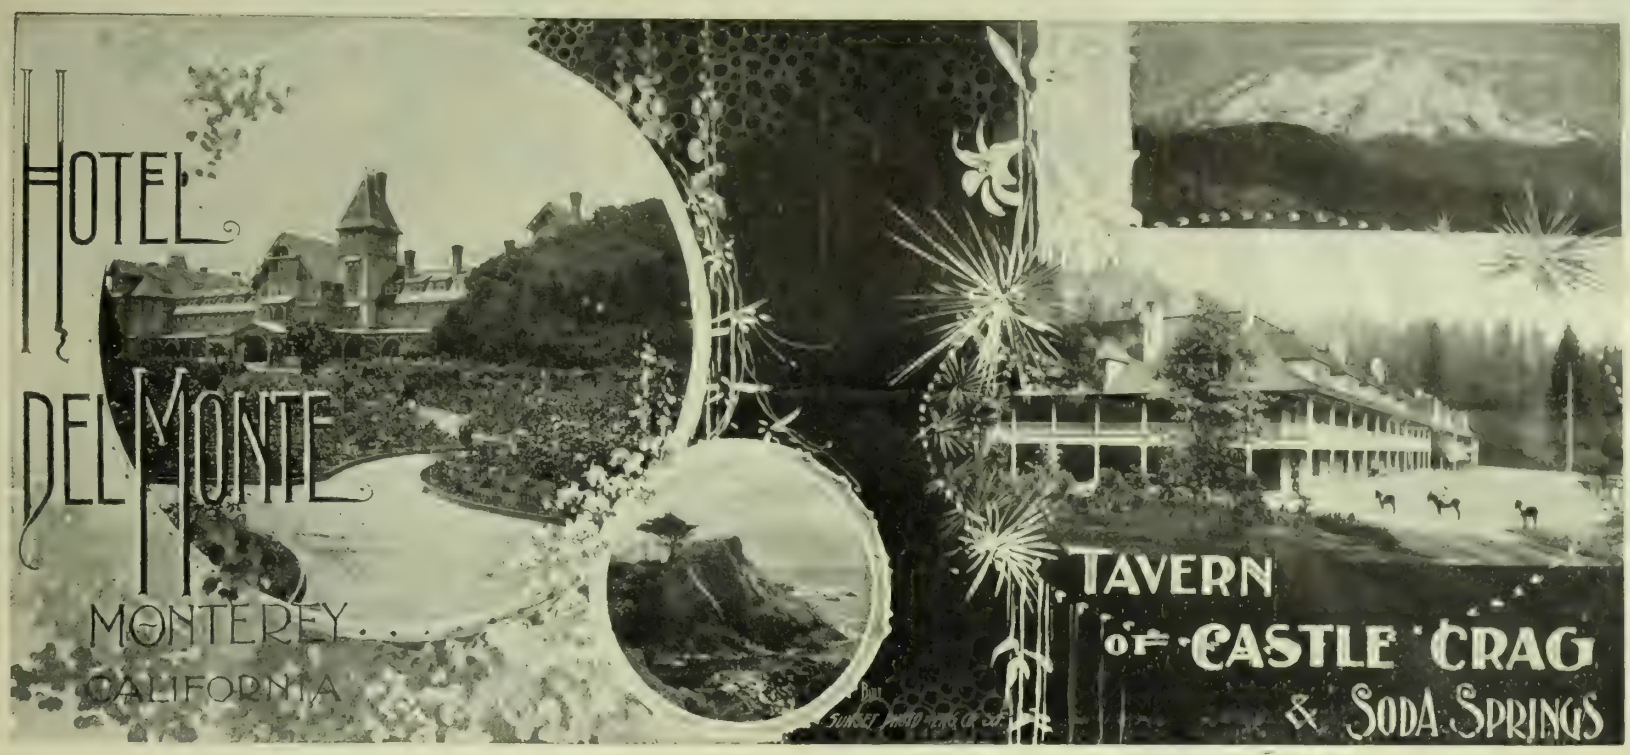
Telephone 1780 No. 9 Lick Place, San Francisco

GEO. H. MOORE, Proprietor

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

ASSESSMEMT NOTICE — BULLION MINING COMPANY — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 49) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the offices of the company, room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of February, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday the 11th day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, S. F.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE — BEST AND BELCHER MINING COMPANY — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 26th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 61) of twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on 2d day of March, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Tuesday the 23d day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF F. M. L. PETERS, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Martha E. Peters, administratrix of the estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administratrix at the office of Gavin McNab, Esq., her attorney, 47, seventh floor, Mills Building, the same being her place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

MARTHA E. PETERS,
Administratrix of the Estate of F. M. L. Peters, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, January 14, 1897.
Gavin McNab, Att'y for Administratrix.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Julia Consolidated Mining Company

Assessment No. 28
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied January 21, 1897
Delinquent in office January 26, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, March 19, 1397

J. STADTFELD JR., Secretary.
Office, room 56, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

P. D. BERNHARD
Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon
4 Post St., near Montgomery
MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO

Sent Free!
To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address
THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at 128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON
Johnson & Company
MERCHANT TAILORS
No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

The Wave's Clubbing List
For 1897
By special arrangement with the publishers THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following list
Subscriptions must be paid in advance

| | |
|---|---|
| THE WAVE AND ARENA | $5 00 |
| " " ARGOSY | 3 35 |
| " " ART AMATEUR | 5 75 |
| " " ATLANTIC MONTHLY | 5 75 |
| " " BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE | 5 70 |
| " " CASSELL " | 3 75 |
| " " CENTURY | 6 00 |
| " " CONTEMPORARY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE | 3 35 |
| " " CRITIC | 5 10 |
| " " DELINEATOR | 3 50 |
| " " DEMOREST MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW | 6 25 |
| " " FORUM | 5 00 |
| " " FRANK LESLIES MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " HARPER'S BAZAAR | 5 20 |
| " " " MAGAZINE | 5 50 |
| " " " ROUND TABLE | 4 00 |
| " " " WEEKLY | 5 20 |
| " " ILLUSTRATED AMERICAN | 6 75 |
| " " JUDGE | 6 80 |
| " " LESLIE'S WEEKLY | 4 50 |
| " " LIFE | 6 25 |
| " " LIFE'S COMEDY | 3 45 |
| " " LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE | 4 80 |
| " " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE | 7 75 |
| " " MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE | 3 35 |
| " " MINSEY'S | 3 35 |
| " " NEW ENGLAND | 5 00 |
| " " NINETEENTH CENTURY | 6 25 |
| " " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW | 6 50 |
| " " N Y JOURNAL, DAILY | 5 00 |
| " " " SUNDAY | 1 00 |
| " " " TRIBUNE, DAILY | 5 00 |
| " " " " SUNDAY | 1 50 |
| " " " WEEKLY | 1 00 |
| " " " WORLD, DAILY | 5 00 |
| " " " " SUNDAY | 1 50 |
| " " " " WEEKLY | 1 00 |
| " " OVERLAND MONTHLY | 4 75 |
| " " PEARSONS | 3 50 |
| " " PHRENOLOGICAL | 4 00 |
| " " PUCK | 6 00 |
| " " REVIEW OF REVIEWS | 3 50 |
| " " SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE | 3 50 |
| " " " SUPPLEMENT | 6 80 |
| " " ST NICHOLAS AND | 6 10 |
| " " SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE | 6 00 |
| " " SUNSET | 3 35 |
| " " TOPICS | 3 35 |
| " " VOGUE | 3 50 |
| " " YOUTH'S COMPANION | 3 75 |

An Advantageous Offer!

Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan — McClure's Magazine
Ladies' Home Journal — Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital actually paid up in cash - - | $1,000,000 00 |
| Deposits December 31, 1895 - - | 30,727,586 59 |
| Reserve Fund - - - - - - | 750,000 00 |
| Guaranteed Capital - - - - - | 1,200,000 00 |

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, EDWARD KRUSE
Second Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Edward Kruse, Daniel Meyer, H. B. Russ, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, D. N. Walter, Nic. Van Bergen, Emil Rohte

Attorney: W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER, ROBERT WATT, THOMAS MAGEE, GEO. C. BOARDMAN, W. C. B. DE FREMERY, DANIEL E. MARTIN, ALBERT MILLER, PHILIP BARTH, E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. TOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

H. D. LAWRIE, A. J. CARMANY, Managers

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts furnished and examined.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $11,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Captain B. was a strict disciplinarian, and his crew respected him beyond measure. Not one of them would have dreamed of interpreting a command otherwise than according to the strict letter of the law; things must be done "shipshape" under his rule. One day, while the ship was in a certain port, the captain gave a dinner to some town friends, and, the resources of the ship not being extensive, some of the sailors were deputed to reinforce the insufficient number of stewards by waiting at table. As these men were not used to such work, each one was told exactly what service would fall to his share. The hour came, and the dinner went on merrily. Presently, however, one of the ladies wanted a piece of bread. There was none very near her, and the finely-disciplined stewards seemed to be oblivious of her need. She turned her head and spoke very softly to the man at her elbow. "Bread please," she said. The man looked regretfully at the bread and then at her. It was evident that he would fain have helped her if it had been in his power. Saluting in fine naval style, he said, "Can't do it, ma'am; I'm told off for taters."

In one of the plays dealing with Napoleon which were all the rage in Paris a year ago, there was in one scene an episode in which the birth of the Prince of Rome is announced to the public by the means of the firing of a cannon. In the event of the expected child being a girl a single shot was to be fired, but if a boy, his arrival was to be heralded by a volley of twenty-one guns. The dialogue is, as may be readily imagined, interrupted at a critical moment by the firing of a shot. A long pause ensues, a moment of anxiety for all the characters in the play, and the Empress Josephine, thinking the exceeding silence means that only one shot is to be fired, exclaims, "It is a girl!" Immediately a second shot is heard, and one of the ladies of the court exclaims, "It is a boy!" A second later a third shot is heard, and on the first night of the play, a small boy up in the gallery shouted, "Great Scot! it's triplets."

In the leading hotel at Houston, Texas, there is a clerk noted for his readiness at answering his most abstruse queries. A party of drummers were seated one night round the stove discussing the official's quickness. "I'll bet you the drinks," said one of them, "that if you open that newspaper you have in your hand, select the first phrase that meets your eye, and then walk over to the clerk and say it over to him, he will respond in some way without a moment's hesitation. The drummer opened the paper by chance at a political article, and the first words he saw were "the greatest good to the greatest number." He walked over to the clerk's desk, leaned his elbow upon it, and said seriously, "The greatest good to the greatest number." The clerk smiled pleasantly, touched a bell, and said to the bell boy, "Take a bottle of whiskey up to room 200.

The ability of some people to convince themselves that whatever they wish to do is right is illustrated by Mr. Francis H. Hardy in the "Fortnightly Review," as follows: "I had a friend who once chanced to take by mistake a counterfeit twenty-dollar bill. We, his friends, all commiserated with him over his loss, and when, to soothe his wounded pride, he pointed out what a splendid counterfeit it was, and how well calculated to deceive, we all agreed with him. One day I asked him to show his celebrated counterfeit to another friend. To my surprise he answered that he had passed it. 'What!' I exclaimed, 'Passed as good money a counterfeit bill!' 'Well,' he answered, 'it was like this. That note was so well got up that, while on some days I knew it was bad, on other days I thought it must be good; and one of the days I thought it was good, why, I passed it!"

On one of his campaign tours, Garfield, who was noted for the extreme quickness and adaptability of his intelligence, was accompanied by a certain Senator, who relates this reminiscence of the tour: "What's this next place noted for?" Mr. Garfield asked, just before we reached a small town. "Butter," answered some one in the car. "On that oily foundation he delivered one of the most eloquent speeches I ever listened to. It was at the time oleomargarine first came into use, which he likened to the Democratic party, masquerading for what it was not. Butter—pure butter—made from cream, and wearing no disguises, was, of course, the Republican party, and between his subject and what he said about it there was more enthusiasm created in that small town than it had witnessed for many a day."

A pretty story is told in the French press about the Kaiser. Recently His Majesty went to the Berlin barracks alone. The corporal on guard recognized the Kaiser immediately, and saluted him. The Kaiser was pleased, and, approaching the soldier, said: "Why do you look so sad, corporal?" The corporal did not reply. The Emperor then asked if he was disappointed in love. At this the corporal found his tongue, and replied that he wished to marry Marguerite, the daughter of his sergeant-major, but that her father would not give his consent until he became a sergeant. "And do you love her very much?" asked the Kaiser. "Oh, yes," was the reply. "Then," said the Emperor, "go and tell your future father-in-law that William II makes you a sergeant."

A costermonger, while trundling his apple-laden cart down a London street, was run into by a coaching-party. The coster's cart got the worst of it, losing a wheel, and its ruddy freight being scattered all over the street. The driver of the coach came back to settle for the damage, and expected to come in for a volley of strong language. But the coster looked at his cart, looked at his apples, looked at the coach, and finally gasped out, "Guv'ner, dere eyen't no word fer it!"

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—
—scrupulously clean;
—accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
—conveniently situated for business men;
—a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
—moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

HIRSCH & KAISER

Successors to HIRSCH, KAHN & CO.

Opticians

Will remove March 1st to

NO. 7 KEARNY STREET

Opposite the Chronicle Building

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

HENRY ST. GOAR, EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Double Stars!

PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURATION AND MARDI GRAS

These are the two great functions of our country for the current year.

Their dates are fixed—the one by venerable precedent and fundamental law—the other by the world's civil and ecclesiastical calendar.

They cannot wait because they are limited; but that feature in

Sunset Limited

will not prevent its waiting for you until 10.00 P. M. Tuesday, February 23, 1897, from San Francisco, and 2.30 P. M. Wednesday the 24th from Los Angeles.

This train secures a matchless trip to New Orleans for the Mardi Gras to be celebrated on Monday and Tuesday, March 1st and 2d, and thence—onward to Washington City in ample time to hear the first clarion note that precedes the inauguration of President McKinley.

Such a programme of pleasure is a most unusual one—a double pageant of noblest character—to be enjoyed on a single trip.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. February 10 and 25.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, February 4, 10, 15, 20, 25, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, and every fourth day thereafter

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. February 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Feb. 23, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, March 4, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Evolution of a Sky-Scraper

A South-Sea Colonization Expedition

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 8 SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 20, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

AN UP-TO-DATE SOUTH SEA BUBBLE

Scene on the main deck of the brig "Percy Edwards," bound to Bouganville with one hundred colonists.

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 20, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| Evolution of a Sky-Scraper | 4 |
| Two Amateur Tramps | 5 |
| Misadventures En Route: by L. Leroy | 5 |
| Things and People: by Boswell Jr. | 6 |
| Actors in the Cretan Drama | 7 |
| A Noble Gift | 7 |
| A South-Sea Expedition: by Frank Norris | 8 |
| The Latest Fad in Logging | 9 |
| The Successor of Lobanoff | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres | 11 |
| Rothschilds at Home: a Review | 12 |
| The Sport of Kings: by Benedict | 13 |
| As the World Wags | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

THE ANTAGONISTIC SOUTH.

The Los Angeles "Times," with a rare sagacity and excessive shrewdness that long and, perhaps, costly experience alone can cultivate, attempted to reply to our recent editorial on "The Antagonistic South." In that article we mildly asserted that the people in this "sunland" of ours had been industriously nourishing a stock of phylloxera proof falsehoods concerning the quality of weather that prevails north of Tehachapi. We also stated that these misguided people deliberately, persistently, and systematically lied to visiting Eastern tourists, and ascribed to this warm northern citrus belt snowstorms, icepacks, glaciers and a multitude of other uninviting and altogether frigid attributes. The "Times" admits the truth of our statement, because it does not deny it. Neither does it seem to find anything reprehensible in this practice.

A letter received from Los Angeles, which is published in this issue, entirely misapprehends the attitude of "The Wave" in this matter. We have no quarrel with the south because it has grown, nor have we any quarrel with it in that its people are inclined to be boastful or to exaggerate the manifold resources and possibilities of their environment. They have much to boast of in the south and more to hope for. What we quarrel with is the mean, spiteful, inexcusable misrepresentation concerning other portions of the State, which seems to be a part of the religion of the south.

Another and a later communication upon this subject has reached this office from Mr. Albert E. Gray of Oroville, in which that gentleman thanks this journal for directing public attention to the abusive custom prevailing in the south. Mr. Gray has suffered direct pecuniary loss through the systematic misrepresentation of our "sunland romancers," and he exhibits some warmth of feeling in commenting upon their practices. He says:

"Of course, I do not allude in such harsh terms to the methods of Southern California in regard to any isolated statement, however injurious or preposterous, but scarcely a day or a week goes by without evidence of a similar character, and the whole State suffers in consequence."

He then suggests that some organization be formed to counteract the influences of what he is pleased to term "an organized bureau of lying," which lives down south. There is necessity for such a bureau, and a San Franciscan needs but assume the role of an Eastern tourist for a day in Los Anegles to learn how very badly such a thing is required. Since the publication of our first article upon this subject Mr. Harry Sherwood, a member of one of our leading firms, has directed the attention of the Chamber of Commerce to this intolerable condition of affairs, and to the imperative necessity of establishing a bureau of information in Los Angeles to correctly inform Eastern visitors as to the climate and possibilities of other portions of the State. The practice of which Mr. Sherwood and Mr. Gray complain is not a trivial thing; it is a shameful and damnable outrage. If misrepresentation in the south grows out of a genuine lack of information, then all the more necessity for supplying the people with the truth; if it proceeds from a plain and deliberate intent to deceive and so work injury to other portions of the State, then we should choke the lie down the throat of the slanderer, and see to it that the man in quest of information does not go hungry for the truth, or have his appetite for information glutted by our very adroit and very unscrupulous brothers of the south.

Our strictures upon the people of the south do not proceed from any hearsay evidence; the writer personally tested the thing for himself, and was astonished to hear the most astounding falsehoods fall from the lips of apparently honest citizens with all the glibness of familiarity and truth. We do not pretend that the practice of which we complain is universal, but we do assert that among the creatures with whom the tourist is most likely to come in contact the lie stands tiptoe on the tongue ready to slip off at the slightest provocation.

That the "Times" does not find this practice reprehensible, and does not inveigh against it with that vigor for which it is well known, is somewhat surprising. Perhaps our southern contemporary doubts that fruiterers, druggists, hackmen and the like do indulge in these weird tales of San Francisco snowstorms. If it does and demands proof, it may have proof, if it promises to reprimand its neighbors for their lack of veracity.

GREECE TO THE RESCUE.

The spirit of Marathon seems to be still alive in the people of Greece. They have dared that which the great powers have feared to do. The Mohammedan Sultan has gone on massacring the Christians of Armenia while Christian nations have looked on with indifference, but when it was known that with the Sultan's tacit approval the Christian Greeks of Crete were to be offered as a sacrifice to the religious prejudice of Mohammedan Turkey little Greece was courageous enough to declare to all the powers that this iniquity must be ended. A bolder and more heroic position has not been taken by any petty power of Europe since Denmark defied the allied German states in the maintenance of her Schleswig-Holstein rights. It appeals to the sentiment of mankind, and if war should result we may feel sure that the people of Europe will not allow this small nation of heroes to be worsted by the one semi-barbarous power yet remaining upon the European continent.

No doubt there is truth in the telegraphed report that Greece has not undertaken this step without the knowledge and approval of Russia. It is not so long since the ruling Czar and the Crown Prince of Greece were comrades in a tour around the world, in the course of which the latter by his bravery saved the life of the ruler of Russia. Beside this relationship and the intimacy which springs from common interests and experiences, the tie of blood binds these two young men, and as cousins they take naturally a lively interest in the welfare and progress of their nations. If we assume that Russia stands behind Greece with drawn sword ready to compel the Turk's submission, it nevertheless should be humiliating to the Christian powers of Europe that the governments which have dared to raise their hands against the brutal atrocities, the barbaric cruelties, the middle-age inhumanities of the Turks, are not those which we speak of as the civilized powers. England has warships in the Mediterranean to see that English stockholders in the Suez canal and English holders of Egyptian securities are protected in their property rights; France and Italy send armies into the deserts of Africa to compel the wild men of these sandy wastes to do honor and pay tribute to the French and Italian flags; Spain despoils herself in men and in money that she may put down justifiable rebellion in two distant colonies; Germany sends expedition after expedition through the swamps and forests of Central Africa to bring that territory under her tricolor. But Russia, Tartar Russia, Russia that but a century ago was a land unknown even to the geographers of Western Europe, the Russia whose ruler stands before the world as a symbol of barbaric absolutism, the Russia in which there is neither freedom of speech nor a press, in which independent thought and humanitarian sympathy are rewarded with a stone hut in the wilds of Siberia—this is the government that has had the temerity and the conscience to protect the world against the scimiter of the Turk. In this there is basis for another of those sonnets of William Watson, the true poet laureate of England, poems which have spoken to the conscience of Christian mankind.

The world will watch with interest the progress of affairs in this little island in the Mediterranean, not because of the value of the island itself, nor out of any sympathy with anything this island has ever contributed to civilization, but because the fate of Crete will be a forecast of the history of Europe for years to come. If Greece is allowed to establish a protectorate over the island, it would indicate that the powers of Western Europe are afraid to grapple with Russia. If these powers insist that the Hellenes withdraw from Crete without imposing terms upon the Turk, and Russia submits, we may fairly infer that Russia is not yet prepared to bring about that continental war which has for years seemed inevitable. No matter from what standpoint we regard this situation in the most remote corner of Europe, it is apparent that the position as there taken is indicative of readiness for war. The excuse is sufficient to justify any appeal to arms which the powers may choose to make. By landing troops on Crete and capturing a fortress, the Greeks have virtually declared war against Turkey. Turkey is practically under the protectorate of the Western powers. Here then is a defiance by Eastern Europe of Western Europe.

The last great war that Europe saw was that between France and Germany. It was not so long ago but that those who read but little history will remember the minor occasion which served as the excuse for precipitating it. The Emperor of the French, realizing that he had been made a catspaw of by Bismarck in his negotiations preliminary to the war with Austria, was anxious to regain his prestige as the first diplomat of Europe. He learned that a proposition had been made to the Spanish Cortes that the prince of the house of Hohenzollern should be placed upon the Spanish throne. At once he sent a protest to Berlin. Berlin answered with a denial. An interview between the French ambassador and the German Emperor followed, and Bismarck, through an inspired press and agents in Paris, made it appear in Germany that the Prussian King had been insulted by the French ambassador, and in France that the French ambassador had been insulted by the Prussian King. Paris clamored for war to revenge the insult. The King of Prussia was fooled with a forged telegram, and so war resulted. This incident serves as an illustration of the ease with which nations go to war when they are ready. If no war follows from the Cretan incident the world will conclude that the nations of Europe stand shaking their fists at each other like a crowd of bullies threatening, but afraid to execute.

THE REAL NECESSITIES OF THE ARMY.

All prospect of the passage at this session of Congress of what is called the Lamont bill, a measure providing for the reorganization of the line of the army, seems to have vanished. Some of the provisions of the bill were discussed here last week, and it may seem now to be useless to make any further reference to the moribund measure. But if there is a real need of reorganization in the line of the army the necessity will continue to exist after the final disappearance of the Lamont bill with the dissolution of the present Congress. That reorganization is necessary, or, at least, is highly desirable in the interest of the efficiency of the service, there seems to be no reasonable doubt. The session of Congress now about to expire afforded, at best, but a poor prospect of the successful carrying through of such a sweeping and important measure as the Lamont bill. When the Speaker of the House took pains to impress on his colleagues the fact that the national revenue was running behind the national expenditure at the rate of more than $60,000,000 a year, it was obvious that the time was not suitable for any measure which, in the absence of an immediate and pressing necessity for such additional burden, proposed to increase by about $2,000,000 the annual cost of the military peace establishment. We hope to see the effort to effect some desirable reforms in the organization of our army resumed before the next Congress, and to see the effort made with greater energy, more discretion and with better reasons urged in support of the measures proposed.

So far as the proposed legislation was designed to affect the artillery force of the army it is not open to the serious objections that were urged against the scheme for the remodeling of the infantry regiments. There was, in fact, this radical difference, that while it was proposed to increase the number of officers in the infantry regiment without any corresponding increase of its enlisted strength, it was proposed to diminish the number of artillery officers in each regiment and to increase by two the number of regiments, thereby absorbing all the officers displaced from the old regiments and leaving only a score of vacancies in the lowest grade to be filled by new appointments. Of course, the promotions resulting from the contemplated changes were "merely incidental," in the language of the supporters of the measure, but it is quite safe to say that if there had been no resulting promotions, incidental or accidental, a good deal of the zeal with which the bill was supported by the military representation at Washington would have been conspicuously lacking. It is when the actions of the military authorities who support the proposed legislation are contrasted with the reasons which are advanced by the same authorities that the element of weakness which the military sages contribute to the cause of the military reform becomes conspicuous. The commander of our army has assured the legislators that an adequate increase of the artillery force is needed to keep pace with the advance in the preparation of our system of seaboard defenses. As a matter of fact our coast defenses are not at present so far advanced as to furnish occupation, or even means of instruction, to a third of our batteries of heavy artillery, and at the rate at which those defenses are progressing it will be a long time before there will be guns and mortars in position in sufficient numbers to give occupation to the artillery troops who are now vegetating at posts where they have nothing to do but the routine duties of an infantry garrison, and where they have no facilities for learning even the rudiments of their duties as defenders of the coast. The Commanding General, at the very time when he was, doubtless, preparing to make the statement to Congress that our artillery force was inadequate to the demands of our growing defenses, was taking the artillerymen from the guns at the Presidio—the only guns on this coast—and sending them to Angel Island, where, with all due deference to his opinions about Gibraltars and "important artillery stations," there is not a single gun, and where no artillery station will ever be established by a sane and competent soldier. How can it be reasonably expected that the Congress will listen with respect to the demand for more artillery soldiers for the guns that are to be, when that demand is voiced by one who has just displaced from their guns the only artillery garrison on this coast, and replaced them by an infantry command under an infantry commander? The committees of Congress are generally too busy to be willing to investigate matters which are not brought forcibly to their attention, but it would be well worth the time of any member of either of the military committees, when this question of an increase in the artillery comes up again for consideration, to ask the commanding General of the army to explain why, with the pressing necessity existing for such increase, he has felt impelled to banish the artillery headquarters of this harbor to the gunless slopes of Angel Island. A straightforward answer to such a question might be a revelation of military wisdom—or of something quite different.

We need more artillery, just as we need more infantry and more cavalry. We need them, not because of any promotions that may be incident to an expansion of the army, but because, in spite of all the arbitration treaties that we may make, we may find use for them at any time, and when the time comes it will be impossible to improvise a sufficient force. When it was demonstrated that there was need of a new navy the Congress met the demand, and the people supported the legislature in the new policy. When it shall have been demonstrated, by honest military reasons advanced by honest military men, that there is need of a new army, or of a remodeling of the existing force, the Congress will act as promptly and as effectively as it did in the case of the navy. Grabs for "incidental" promotion, under the plea of zeal for the improvement of the service have never succeeded, and it is not probable that they can ever succeed.

Let our military advisers show a military necessity for infantry regiments of three battalions—three bona fide battalions—and the battalions will come. Let the danger be demonstrated that will result from any impairment of our present admirable force of cavalry and no military committee will ever lay destroying hands on that arm of the service. Let the artillery officers show that seven regiments or more of artillery are needed to ensure the safety of our coasts, and the necessary legislation will not be long delayed. But let them also ask for a competent officer to be placed at their head; one who will give honest advice when asked for it by Congress, and who will be responsible to his superiors and to the public that his force will be employed for the purposes for which it is maintained and for which it is now asked, and not tucked away in some fake Gibraltar.

THE WAR ON CHARTERED CAPITAL.

The wing of Democracy that substitutes noise for wisdom, clamor for argument, hyprocrisy for honesty, will scarcely take profit from the note of warning sounded by Senator David B. Hill in the February "Forum." He denounces the agrarian and socialistic tendencies that developed in the recent campaign, and solemnly warns his party that the growth of this spirit in that organization must be promptly checked and forcibly disavowed, or successive defeats will inevitably follow. With peculiar emphasis a sermon might be preached to-day from the text which follows. He says:

"It is neither good politics nor is it honest to teach the people to expect the Government to provide a living for them; nor to lead them to believe that all the ills to which the body-politic is naturally subject can be cured by legislation; nor to attack vested rights, to discriminately assail the possessors of property, to denounce wealth and exalt poverty, to inspire disrespect for courts, to rail at those in authority, to openly or covertly resist established laws, to oppose or regard as 'wrongs' and 'oppressions' the necessary regulations ordained for the control of public affairs; nor to encourage a warfare upon chartered capital and fixed incomes, nor to array classes against classes, and endeavor to sow the seeds of discontent everywhere."

Municipal reform does not lie in the direction of attacks on vested rights or warfare on chartered capital. What Senator Hill declares to be bad in a national party in national politics is equally bad in a municipal party in municipal politics. There is abroad in America a mischievous spirit of discontent and distrust that is being wet-nursed by a sensational press for the subscribers there are in it, and encouraged and cuddled by the demagogue for the votes there are in it. Probably so long as boards of supervisors are by law directed to regulate water, gas and other rates, there will come an annual demand from one source or another for a reduction in these rates. Existing charges need not be high or even unsatisfactory to bring about the agitation. The temptation to advocate that which will reduce the expenses of one hundred thousand consumers and visit harm only upon the shareholders of a few corporations is too great for the press or the politician to resist. The way is plainly indicated for the adventurer who is playing for subscribers or for votes.

The evils of these annually recurring agitations do not end with the assailed corporations, but extend clear and away beyond them. So far as we are concerned, rates may be cut into halves and quarters and then into eighths and sixteenths, so long as the reduction is fair and reasonable and within the law. If there was only some place where this thing might end, one might feel encouraged to advocate it, but in the nature of things it seems impossible under present arrangements to find the end and keep within the law. Municipal ownership is offered as the cureall. "Th Wave" is opposed to municipal ownership so long as the boss continues in power, and bossism will no doubt continue until an adequate civil service law adorns our statute books. Municipal ownership would put an end to all of these mischievous agitations as we know them, but we fear it would give place to something infinitely worse. The power of the political boss proceeds from the patronage at his command. If we increase the possibilities of patronage by public ownership, we simply work to increase his power. If we could be sure of civil serivce and honest public administration and sane management—things now woefully lacking—our inclination, and the inclination of all sensible men, would be to remove temptation from the press and from the demagogue, but until the dawn of that better governmental era, municipal ownership would be foolhardy. Meanwhile we must keep within the law.

A bill has just passed the Senate, and is now before the Assembly, authorizing the employment of a "Specialist in Sociological Education," at a salary of $4,000 a year, in cities where the daily attendance of pupils at the public schools exceeds 25,000, or where the inmates of jails, prisons, etc., exceed 1,000. The "Specialist" is to be appointed to his office by the Superintendent of Schools, the Sheriff and the Recorder.

The "Wave" has no particular objection to the creation of the new office, but we do strenuously object to appointing such a Specialist for life. The bill creating the office provides that the appointee's term "shall continue for the same period of time as that of the regular class teachers of the primary and grammar schools now employed in the city or city and county." If this means anything it means a perpetual tenure. The language smacks of a cunning desire to conceal the real intent from view. Class teachers are appointed for life, so far as appears. Neither State law nor municipal ordinance limits the term of teachers' employment, and therefore our very clever "Specialist," if appointed for the same term, holds office for life. It is curious that the Senate did not uncover this little joker that lies in hiding in the seventh clause of the bill, and we respectfully direct the attention of the Assembly to the vice of it, so that it may be remedied.

If we are to have a "Specialist," let his term of office be clearly defined. Otherwise, the city and county may look ahead to unnecessary litigation, should it ever become dissatisfied with its first selection. The fathers of the bill, if honest, cannot object to the change, and if dishonest, their objections should not prevail. We favor civil service, but not in spots, and isolated cases.

COMMUNICATION.

The following communication was received during the week from Los Angeles. According to our custom we publish the same for what it is worth. Reference to it will be found in another column:

Los Angeles, February 8, 1897.

"Editor "The Wave": In the Los Angeles "Times" of yesterday appeared an editorial in reply to an article on the southern counties that recently appeared in "The Wave." The article in "The Wave" did not hit it hard enough. Los Angeles and Southern California, but Los Angeles in particular, afford a curious study. There is here a strip of country, say 200 miles long, and as to the part that is good for anything seventy-five miles wide. If you go more than seventy-five miles from the ocean you strike desert. It has been built up by climate, oranges and tenderfeet. The climate won't give you a living, the oranges do not yield the profit they once did, and the tenderfeet are like the eels that made the London fishwife swear—they won't lie still and be skinned. But I question if there are people anywhere who are so egotistical and so absolutely wild and harebrained as to the supposed future of the country they live in as the people here. As a Chicago porkpacker put it, "Their heads are full of sunshine," and that is all. For instance, an editor of some little sheet published between here and the desert gravely argued in his paper a while ago that Southern California would have from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 people in ten years, which estimate is so far from any possibility that comment is unnecessary.

Of course, the rich are all right anywhere, but never in my life have I been anywhere, and I have been all over the United States, or nearly so, where the average people were so hard up. Business of all kinds is overrun to an extent that beggars description. Day by day there fall by the business wayside those who cannot stand the pressure. The papers say nothing, even the mercantile agencies keep it as quiet as possible, but down they go. You see a store to-day well stocked and apparently prosperous. To-morrow it is closed, room vacant, people gone, nobody knows where. There are, I don't know how many, fly-by-nights here now, provided they can't sell to a sucker and so save themselves.

There is nothing in the agricultural or horticultural part of the country—except for the commission man. Yet they keep on flooding the East with the same old rot about ten acres giving a man a living and twenty being enough to furnish a competence. Take Riverside, their crack district. There are too many groves there which are mortgaged at the rate of $800 an acre which the mortgagees would sell quick for $200 per acre. There is not a paper south of Tehachapi dare tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, about the country. They will make a partial statement, and leave out the gist, or lie outright. Every once in a while they come out with a glowing report of what John Doe got for his orange crop. They never tell what it cost him, and so give a chance to know the net amount. Not much; they are not here for that purpose. So it goes all the way through, about everything. It is an outrage to fool people into coming out here as they do. It is, however, the best illustration in the United States of what Barnum said: "The people like to be humbugged." People and papers alike are filled with the most bitter hatred, and in many cases with the most dense ignorance of anything east of the desert or north of the mountains. For them the sun rises and sets in Southern California. To hear them talk one would imagine the rest of the world was not fit to live in. Their physical condition is miserable. When a rain or a fog comes on they put on hip rubber boots, and if the sun goes behind a cloud they want an overcoat and the steam turned on. I should like to see what would become of these weak imitation men and women in a storm worth the name. They would dissolve and blow away.

C. P. MORTON.

The Cuban question is to be settled. Jubilate! In the next few days we shall know whether Cuba is to be "libre" or not, for San Francisco has—think of it—San Francisco has appointed a committee on the matter. No more shall Butcher Weyler shock the world with new "atrocities," no more shall Spain's treasury be depleted and her citizens sacrificed on alien shores, no more shall the bold insurgents, machete in hand, raid posts and forts and trochas defended by bayonets and barbed wire and enlist the sympathies of Jingo Americans. Chain up the dogs of war, beat into pruning hooks the swords and into ploughshares the spears, recall the hostile cruiser and quench the incendiary torch—for the San Francisco committee is in convention assembled. Let all stout-hearted patriots give it the support it demands. Above all, let there not be a single demand upon the members of that committee for monetary contributions to further "the cause," unless we wish to see said committee promptly adjourn sine die, disappear with the rapidity of a conjurer's rabbit, make itself air and become one of those things that are not

Among the artists, and, indeed, among that section of the general public given to reading the newspapers, there is a natural interest in the "Chronicle's" Art Exhibition. It opens at Partington's school, 424 Pine street, on Wednesday next, and will be the most extensive collection of journalistic drawings ever gathered in the country. The big New York and Chicago papers all contribute specimens of their work, and we will all have a capital chance to judge where the cleverest work is done and to what degree a drawing suffers in reproduction.

Sims Reeves, the celebrated English tenor, who has made more money by singing than any other artist of the day, with the exception of Patti, and has earned as much as $3,000 per night, has recently been declared a bankrupt. The singer has been brought to this by his easygoing notions and extravagance in entertaining his friends. Mr. Reeves has been before the public for over half a century, having celebrated his jubilee in 1895, when he made his first farewell to the musical world. It was only a "first," for since then he has been making them at the rate of two a year, and just now has returned from a tour of Australia.

Word comes from Buda-Pesth that Munkacsy, the celebrated artist, who some time ago was stricken with paralysis, has lost his mind, and it has become necessary to place him in an asylum.

EVOLUTION OF A SKY-SCRAPER

How the Claus Spreckels' Building is Being Put Together—Aerial Photography.

The new Spreckels building on the corner of Third and Market streets, is perhaps not the greatest and most ornate office or newspaper building between the two oceans, but it is the first building erected in the city of San Francisco that can be compared with some of the vast and beautiful sky-scrapers of New York and Chicago and lose nothing by the process. It has all the tremendous size demanded of the modern business block, but adds to it the certain delicate grace and airiness of a Florentine clock tower or campanile. It is a really beautiful piece of architecture, a fair type of the office building of the end of the century.

Considering that the extreme height of three hundred and ten feet has already been reached, and that some two thousand six hundred tons of steel have been put into place and riveted, the building has gone up with surprising alacrity. The architects (Reid Bros.) contemplate having the offices ready for occupation by the first of July. This means less than a year's work in the actual construction of a building which a quarter of a century ago would have demanded nearly four or five. This speed of construction is of course due to the use of steel girders and pillars, etc., forming the skeleton over which the masonry is laid. These steel girders are made at the foundry of the Pacific Rolling Mills, and are there numbered and lettered so that on their arrival at the building the contractor in charge may tell at a glance for just what part of the construction they are destined. So cleverly are the hoisting appliances arranged that the girder or pillar or whatever it may be, can be set directly into its appointed place in one handling. A huge swinging boom operated by a donkey engine, projects from each front, and by means of this the section of steel is not only raised from the street, but swung up or down, in or out, to just whatever point is desired. Once in its place the section is rivetted in amongst the rest of the framework by bolts heated red-hot, in order that the shrinkage of the metal in cooling may help in the firmness and solidity of the joining. The building is absolutely fire and earthquake proof. The fact is generally overlooked that steel is by no means fire-proof. No extraordinary heat, however, is necessary to twist cast steel out of all shape, and there is woodwork enough in the appointments of any steel building to produce this effect in case of a conflagration. To guard against this contingency the steel of the Spreckels building has been covered with terra cotta tiling, impervtous to almost any degree of heat.

In order to make the tall structure earthquake-proof and to prevent even that slight oscillation caused by a high wind—which would be quite perceptible on the upper floors—the structure has "anchored" to a foundation that was laid with unusual precaution. The foundation of the Spreckels building is of solid concrete, twelve and one-half feet broader in area than the extent occupied by the building itself. Deeply imbedded in this concrete are the enormous steel pillars called the "anchors," to which the pillars of the building proper are rivetted.

These pillars themselves are of what is called the Z-bar type, a style which combines an economy of material with the greatest strength and solidity. A peculiarity worthy of note in connection with these pillars is that at the point where one pillar is superposed upon another the joining is made in a vertical and not as usual, in a horizontal sense. Hitherto it has been the custom to rivet the base of one column upon top of the one immediately below it, but instead of this the contractors and architects have been persuaded that a greater stability was to be obtained by clamping the two pillars together by means of a plate of steel laid along their faces and covering the point of joining exactly as a fish plate holds two rails together. Imagine two rails of a railroad clamped thus together and set up on end and you will have a fairly good idea of this peculiarity of construction devised by the "Call" building architects.

The Claus Spreckels Building from the Chronicle Tower

One can experience quite a thrill by climbing to the summit of the "Call" building as it now is, a thrill induced by the fact that the hard stone pavement of the city is some three hundred feet below, and that, though the iron and steel girders of the building are as firm and solid as hot rivetting can make them, the floors have nevertheless not been put in.

It is a slimb of nineteen stories to the base of the huge dome that looks so small from the street. Nineteen stories averaging eighteen feet in height. Stairways as well as floors are lacking, and the ascent must be made by means of temporary wooden ladders.

Of course, one can be swung up into the air by the boom that is now hoisting up the blocks of stone, but, of course, one feels that he would not care to enjoy the experience. However, the view from the top is well worth the climb. The city assumes at once the appearance of a relief map. Alcatraz Island is a little green dot on a blue platter, people below in the streets are so far distant that they seem to glide rather than to walk. The wind is the high, pure air straight from the ocean, while on a clear day one can make out—over Valencia street—the ocean itself, a faint white shimmer on the horizon.

The Golden Rose, the celebrated jewel annually bestowed by the Pope upon some Catholic princess, is this year to go to Maria Theresa, wife of Duke Philip of Wurtemburg. This royal lady was an Austrian Archduchess, daughter of the Archduke Charles, brother of Emperor Francis Joseph's grandfather. The Golden Rose is a most coveted possession among Catholic princeses, as it is a distinctive mark of the Pope's favor, a recognition of merit that is not awarded after any order of procedure, nor from any motives of policy whatever.

Ex-Premier Crispi of Italy has the reputation of being a good hater, and whenever he is in power does all that is possible to settle scores with his enemies, real or imaginary. Now, it seems the latter are having an inning. By their energies they have ruined the statesman's political influence, and also his private fortune. They have driven the son of the ex-premier into dishonorable exile, and have dragged his daughter's honor in the mire, and now they intend to cite Mme. Lina Crispi before the examining justices to make clear certain transactions she has had with the Bank of Como.

It will be interesting to ordinary mortals to know that the "crowned heads of Europe" and their related imperial and royal highnesses eat pretty much the same things that may be found upon the tables of less favored folk, the only difference probably being in the serving of it. Queen Victoria is simple in her tastes, but in them is very precise. Every morning the menu of the day is submitted to her, and the dish that does not suit the royal palate is stricken out and one that does substituted. She is very fond of a certain oatmeal soup, with which she takes some old white sherry in a golden cup once belonging to Queen Anne, and with roast beef, in which she takes particular delight, pickled cucumbers are frequently served. Emperor William is partial to dishes of German preparation, although it is said he deigns to praise, out of courtesy, of course, the English plates served to him at Osborne. The Kaiser invariably begins his day with a cup of coffee made by the Empress herself, who rises at six to prepare it. The Empress of Austria and the Empress Frederick of Germany have retained through all their years of trouble and trial the "sweet tooth" of childhood, for both these imperial ladies are much given to the discussion of cream and pastries. Raw salmon which has been preserved in earth is the somewhat barbaric delicacy that King Oscar of Sweden affects, good brain food, by the way, for the Arbitrator of Nations. The most simple eater of all the great ones of Europe is the Pope, his most pretentious meal, taken at midday, consisting of soup, plain meat, pastry and fried vegetables and one glass of Burgundy.

The Great Crane Raising a Five-ton Girder from the Street and Swinging it Into Position

The Apex of the Dome

THE SUMMIT OF THE CLAUS SPRECKELS BUILDING

Photos by E. W. Jensen

MISADVENTURES EN ROUTE

"Oh! Then I Beg Your Pardon!"

By L. LEROY

"Ah! Then I beg your pardon."

During nearly every day of seven or eight months while we filled the role of globe-trotters, sharing our sous together, we had the ineffable joy of hearing that phrase pronounced. Let us rummage in our notes and briefly recall some of the characters and circumstances in which these words were addressed to us. Let us commence, at the time we left Marseilles, some days after our strange departure from Paris. We had dined in a very fashionable restaurant in company with the famous Canneviere. At the end of the repast came the quart d'heure de Rabelais, and the waiter presented us with a formidable bill. We cried out:

"This is an overcharge for only two plates! Look here, waiter! You have certainly committed a mistake. You have taken us for traveling nabobs, while on the contrary we are modest tourists. We are the two journalists who left Paris without a sou in order to make a tour of the world, and of whom the papers speak so much at this very moment."

"Indeed!" cried the astonished waiter (we hardly know yet why); "Indeed! Then you must be Messieurs Papillaud and Leroy."

"Exactly."

"Ah! Then I ask your pardon," and the waiter disappeared at once, coming back in a few minutes with an amended bill, surprisingly moderate.

***

At Genoa certain acquaintances, met the day before, friends of the hour, offered us "bocks" at the Cafe de Rome. While we were drinking our beer one of the jolly fellows expressed a desire to have his silhouette drawn by Leroy, whom the Parisian papers had jokingly called the artist of the expedition, simply because Leroy had earned the first two francs of our double budget by sketching a very poor portrait of Papillaud for the famous concert-hall singer, Paulus.

It was not necessary to ask Leroy twice. He drew back from the table, and, assuming the attitude of one of those strolling artists of the village fairs, set to work, and in a few moments had satisfied the desires of all those who wished to secure a sample of his artistic talent. Another comrade joined the group, and seeing Leroy thus employed was likewise seized with an ambition to possess a sketch of himself done by the eccentric journalist.

Encouraged by his growing popularity, Leroy dashed off a silhouette of the new-comer, execrably drawn, but which satisfied him none the less. A gentleman who was standing up, but whom we did not know, began to smile. He fumbled in his vest pocket and drew out a franc, which he was about to present to Leroy, when, fortunately for our self-respect, one of his friends whispered in his ear: "They are the two French journalists who have left Paris without a sou, etc., etc."

"Ah! Then I ask your pardon," and the gentleman suddenly a prey to an unwonted generosity replaced the coin in his pocket and drew out several bank notes, which Leroy was at no little pains to refuse.

***

In the ancient capital of Italy an old Florentine, as witty as he is worldly, takes us one sunny afternoon to the Promenade Cascine. There we perceive deliciously installed in an elegant victoria a charming little actress —a sight that at once disturbs our Parisian hearts. "I will present you to 'Trianon' this afternoon," says our guide. And that we may pass the interval in patience he takes us to dinner at a restaurant, which, curiously enough, was called the "Trianon," entertaining us the while with praises of the exquisite lady of the Promenade Cascine, an adorable young woman, he informed us, but hopelessly practical. But while he was talking the pretty actress herself comes in. At once our guide addressed himself to her.

"Ma chere," said he, "permit me to present to you the two French gentlemen of whom I spoke to you in my note asking you to join us here, Monsieur Leroy and Monsieur Papillaud, the two," etc., etc.

"Delighted to know you, Messieurs," cried the little woman amiably, "you are the two journalists, n'est ce pas, who are going around the world and who left Paris without a sou. Without a sou, you say? Without a single sou? Is that true?" We bowed.

"Ah! Then I ask your pardon," says she immediately, "for I have a pressing engagement at——" etc., and the rest of the phrase was lost in the rustle of tne lady's skirts, for she disappeared with indescribable rapidity.

***

Still another "Ah!-I-beg-your-pardon" from a public fnnctionary, but something more severe in style than the preceding. At Rome Vio de Tritone at four o'clock of another superb afternoon. Numerous carriages pass going toward the Barberini Square. Leroy, the bicyclist of our expedition, is steering his machine amongst the file of equipages, climbing the grade of the street and lahoring furiously over his pedals. All at once he is caught by his coat collar. He is hauled from his seat, while his captor, a Sergeant de Ville, gasps breathlessly, "Contra contravenzione!" "Why contravenzione?" asks Leroy. "Because," answers the officer, still gasping, "bicyclists are forbidden to ride on the Via de Tritone. You know that very well." "No, indeed," Leroy confesses frankly, "no, indeed; I am one of the two journalists who—"

At this the brave functionary exclaims, "Who are going around the world? Ah! Then I beg your pardon."

***

At Messina, after having been arrested as spies and hustled about from pillar to post by impolite carabinieres, we wind up by being submitted to an examination by an officer of engineers, who begins at once a study of the documents of which we are known to be the bearers. He scrutinizes them carefully, goes through them from beginning to end, turns them about and about in his hands, and then returns them to us with the command that we read aloud certain passages which he is unable to decipher for himself. Luckily the papers that he sees give evidence of the sympathy and good will that we have hitherto met with in every part of Italy, and a certain note which puzzles him more than anything else, speaks particularly of the welcome accorded to us by a certain well-meaning mayor of a little Sicilian town.

"You are free!" he cries, all at once, holding out his hands. Pursing up his lips, he adds, "Ah! I beg your pardon."

---

A new occupation for the insane has been discovered in Paris. It is the pursuit of art. This is a strange idea, but nevertheless it has proven to be very successful. In the asylum of Ville-Evrard over sixty-three per cent. of the entire number of lunatics have been for some time actively engaged in artistic work, makers of pictures of all kinds, painters of glass and of porcelain, and there is one man, an engraver on brass, who executes chandeliers, cups and vases of more than ordinary beauty without the aid of any model whatever. This is all very strange, nevertheless it is true, but the oddest part of it all is that many of the insane artists who have developed considerable talent, never in their lives handled a brush before their confinement in the asylum. Dr. Montyele, head of the men's department, is delighted with the results of the new departure. He claims that the patients have improved chances of recovery, as they completely lose sight of their mania in the pursuit of their work.

---

The cause of the long existing quarrel between Bjoernson and Ibsen, the "Norwegian Meredith" and the "Norwegian Shakespeare," has just come to the surface. It seems that Bjoernson claims that in Ibsen's recent play, "John Gabriel Borkman," he is made the mark of disagreeable personalities, and in consequence thereof the "Norwegian Meredith" has risen in mighty wrath and threatens vengeance in some literary manner. Bjoernson and Ibsen are two of the most promiment litterateurs of Norway, and the differences between them have been the cause of much discussion all over Europe. The two men, by the way, are fathers-in-law, the daughter of one having married the son of the other.

---

In answer to the question, "Suppose the earth were to be cooled to the temperature of space, what would be the depth of the ocean of liquid air to which the present atmosphere would be reduced," Professor Dewar, after experimenting, made the following reply: "When the earth freezes and all forms of life disappear, there will float above the present ocean of water, long since changed to ice, an ocean of liquid air thirty-three feet deep on the average."

---

Certain of the big office buildings in New York are being reconstructed. Bath rooms have been constructed in several structures hitherto devoted strictly to business, and now they are adding bed rooms. It is a question as to what will come next. In the Bowling Green building, in Lower Broadway, all this has been done, and on the roof they are going to have a restaurant, so a man may eat, work and sleep within the four walls, and never stir from them unless he so desires.

---

When Secretary of War Lamont steps out of office he will do so with much pleasure and relief. He proposes returning to New York, where he will actively re-enter into business life. Politically he will be entirely at the service of the Democratic party. Secretary of State Olney intends to resume his law practice in Boston immediately after the inauguration and to leave politics, at least for four years, severely alone.

LEROY AND PAPILLAUD TAKE TO 'RIKSHAS

TWO AMATEUR TRAMPS

French Journalists Circling the Globe on a Wager and Publishing a Paper En Route.

It is not often that one sees the true bred-in-the-bone Parisian—the Boulvardier—away from Paris. The Parisian, as a rule, does not travel; living in a city which the world goes to see, he has no need to leave it in order to go and see the world. He sits at one of the little zinc tables of the Café American, and sips a consomation and watches le monde qui passe.

Two notable exceptions to this rule are now in this city. They are what their compatriots would call des originales. Their names are Leroy and Papilland, and this is their story:

The two were (are now, in fact) well known journalists in Paris. Leroy has even written songs for Judic and Paulus and Yvette Guilbert. He is a man of resources and ideas, is Leroy, and in course of time it seemed good to him to see a bit of the outside world, without waiting for it to come to Paris. He would leave Paris and go—well, say to Marseilles first of all, and he would meet as much as he could of his expenses by writing for the journals en route. Then this led him to believe that perhaps if he was content to live and travel cheaply he could defray all of his expenses that way. With that he tapped his forehead suddenly. An Idea! He would leave Paris without a sou and travel around the whole world, paying his expenses by means of his pen. It was an inspiration. He communicated the Idea to Papillaud, a brother journalist, who was likewise inspired. Enthusiasm! Bravo! En avant! A Berlin! Vive la Republique!

M. LEROY
Marceau, photo

Thus the great Idea was conceived.

It is properly advertised—le tout Paris speaks of the pair. Meanwhile the "drôles" are at work earning the first money that will carry them out of Paris. One evening Leroy and Papillaud are behind the scenes of Paulus' theatre, and Paulus asks for a sketch of himself by Leroy before the latter leaves. In five minutes the sketch (it is execrable) is finished and sold for two fracs. Another gentleman standing by is sketched (encore deux francs), then a third for one franc. Five francs already! Ca marche! Allons! En route! And with the five francs thus earned the pair buy a third class ticket to Melun.

Thus they are launched. They work [illegible] by similar means down to Marseilles, then at length to Nice, where they arive in the height of the racing season. Here Leroy, "fertile in resources," has the "coup de genie" that raises the Idea from a mere drollery to a veritable enterprise. Not content with an article or two about the races (Leroy has been a sporting editor in his time) he now publishes a little paper on the subject. It catches on—sells and sells—three thousand francs is the sum of the net earnings. Three thousand fracs! Who ever made sketches at two francs for concert-hall singers? Pooh! From now on Leroy and Papillaud cease to be contributors—they become editors—"redacteurs en chef"—they will publish the "En Route"! They will have subscribers in every important town they reach and send back to them copies of the paper as it is published in the various cities of their round-the-world trip. There are plenty of people only too glad to have the complete edition (some twenty copies) of a paper published under these conditions.

M. PAPILLAUD
Marceau, photo

The trip has proved an immense success. Leroy and Papillaud no longer travel second class. The "Sunset Limited" is none too expensive for them now. They have finally reached San Francisco, traveling via Constantinople and Yokohama, so that one can affirm that their venture will be a financial success.

The little paper "En Route" has a character quite its own. It is not a news journal—one would not expect that. It is something on the order of a weekly (illustrated by the way)—just notes and comments and descriptive articles, but written with the true Parisian dash and verve and chic—a capital paper, original amongst all others of the world, published, as one might say, "on the run."

---

The married life of the Emperor and Empress of Russia is said to be idyllic. This is not surprising, as the imperial marriage, as is well known, was the result of genuine affection, and not from motives of policy.

Both these distinguished people possess an abundance of amiability, the Czarina inheriting much of her kindly dispositon from her mother, who was Princess Alice of England. The Empress is the life of St. Petersburg society, and by her cheerful, whole-souled nature has changed Russian court life from all that was stately and dreary into the very opposite. One of her accomplishments is caricaturing, and not a little amusement has she given the Czar and a few intimate friends by her cleverly drawn sketches.

King George of Greece, who bids defiance to the unspeakable Turk

"The Sick Man of Europe," Abdul Hamed, Sultan of Turkey

The White Czar

ACTORS IN THE CRETAN DRAMA

Personalites of the Sultan of Turkey and the King of Greece.

Though politically one of the feeblest of European sovereigns, Abdul Hamed, Sultan of Turkey, is perhaps the most prominent figure of continental diplomacy, since he is the center around which are gathering those complications that at any moment may break out into disastrous war.

It is he who has brought about the Cretan crisis, which may be regarded as one of the signs of the times as indicative of graver situations yet to be dealt with in the solution of the "Turkish question."

Abdul Hamed, called the "Sultan of Sultans and the Shadow of God," is a short, bent man of fifty-three, of exhausted vitality and a languid temperament sometimes broken in upon by spells of furious nervous activity. His ears, nose and hands are large and prominent, while those who have obtained a near view of his face describe it as having the appearance of creased parchment.

By birth he is, curiously enough, an Armenian, and among his subjects is openly spoken of as no legitimate descendant of his royal family, but the offspring of an Armenian slave and a gardener of the previous Sultan. He lives, it is said, in constant fear of assassination, never sleeps two consecutive nights in the same room, and prefers, to all others, one particular bed chamber of his palace of Yildiz, to which access can only be had by means of a ladder.

Contrary to popular belief, Adbul Hamed is no great admirer of women, and has never evinced any desire to increase the number of his wives beyond four—the customary allotment of the Ottoman. He is temperate in matters of eating and drinking, according to Turkish custom, partakes of no wine, but causes his drinking water to be brought from a great distance—for fear of poisoning, and delivered at the palace in sealed casks.

The Sultan is very fond of playing upon the piano, and is, it seems, no mean performer. It is no unusual occurrence for him to spend an entire evening at the instrument. Belated pedestrians passing by in the vicinity of the Yildiz Palace are often afforded the opportunity of hearing potpourries of the latest French operas played upon the piano by the "Sick Man of Europe."

Opposed to "The Shadow of God" in the Cretan crisis is George, King of Greece. King George as well is an invalid, though not in the same sense as the Sultan. He is a sufferer from Bright's disease, and, according to popular report, seems to have aged ten years within as many months.

King George is not over-popular with his subjects. In the first place he is a foreigner (being second son of Christian IX. of Denmark), and in the second, it is intimated, and broadly, too, that George's love for his adopted subjects is more than counterbalanced by his greed for money. His ambition is to make money, and he is, in fact, a daring and confirmed speculator. He is seldom at fault in his judgment, and during the summer of 1877, by a shrewd deal in American wheat, he cleared what was really an immense fortune.

However, King George is better known as the father of his son, Prince George of Greece, and this in spite of the fact that he has for sister no less a person than the Czarina and for brother the Prince of Wales. Prince George, now in command of the Grecian flotilla just sent to Crete, would shine in the rush line of an American college football team, since he is six feet three inches in height, broad in proportion and tips the scales at 200 pounds. On the occasion of the present Czar's visit to Japan Prince George, as is now well known, had occasion to test his strength and agility in defending the Russian Emperor's life against the attack of a fanatical student. Prince George threw the would-be assassin to the ground and clubbed him into insensibility with a walking stick.

Olga, Queen of Greece, Prince George's mother, is a daughter of the Russian Duke Constantin, and enjoys that popularity among her subjects that is not always accorded to her husband. It has been largely through her influence and energy that many of the old Grecian ruins have been preserved, and the ancient Attic style of architecture employed in the construction of some of the modern public buildings. She was an enthusiastic supporter of the Olympic games, and never failed to preside at every one of the famous "days."

THE CRETAN TRIUMVIRATE

A NOBLE GIFT

The Stanford Residence on California Street Given to the University.

How many of the world's wealthy could there be found who would give away, cheerfully and irrevocably, two million three hundred thousand dollars? or how many people are there in the world who would count it a pleasure to part with their home? — the homestead, the rooftree, where their lives had been lived out, where their children have been born, and where those nearest them have died. It is like giving away something of one's self — something very sacred and revered.

MRS. JANE LATHROP STANFORD
Taber, photo

It would be perhaps different and much easier if these gifts were made to some one particular person, very dear to the giver, but to make the gift, to enact the sacrifice, for a cause, for an idea — a mere abstraction—that is the difficult thing, the test of veritable nobility. It is just this however that Mrs. Stanford did when without reserve or condition she made over her home and all its articles of bric-a-brac and furniture, all its paintings and statuary, its endless array of curios and trifles of inestimable intrinsic worth, results of a lifetime of collecting, and surrounded by a world of association and reminiscence, to the Leland Stanford University. The house is one of the landmarks of the city, and one of a group of buildings famous the world round as a "Mansion of a Forty-niner"— something to be shown the European tourist, in just such spirit as he would show you the Tower and Lambeth Palace—a thing associated with the city's early history.

Many palaces of Continental princes are smaller than the Stanford house, many "royal gardens" are more circumscribed in extent than the lot with which it is surrounded—two hundred and six feet is the frontage on Pine street, an equal extent measures the frontage on California street, while that on Powell is two hundred and seventy-five. It is Mrs. Stanford's wish that the house shall ultimately fill the place of an affiliated college-building in connection with the Stanford University or be used as a library which shall be accessible not only to the students of the Leland Stanford University, but also to the public at large. By the terms of the gift it is to be devoted to any purpose that may subserve the interests of the University, so only that it is not converted into a boarding house, a club house, or a place of undignified amusement.

The people of this city and State may well be proud of their two great colleges (Stanford and the University of California—the Harvard and Yale of the Pacific), and it is a fortunate coincidence that the Hopkins house and the Stanford mansion, both given over to the interests of public education, stand side by side on the summit of the city's highest hill.

Success in San Francisco means advertising. The community demands the heralding flourish of trumpets, the bass drum of the advance agent and the unpaid-for column of the daily press. No matter how brilliant may be the genius or how great the fame of the star, he, or she, can never be assured that they will not perform to a "beggarly array of empty boxes" unless they have been previously "boomed" up and down the city streets. Consider Madame Trebelli, for instance. There are few sopranos in the world who have a sweeter, purer voice, whose rendering has such drama, such grace and such magnetism, yet Trebelli—advertised but fairly well—sings to vacant orchestra stalls. Her advent in a San Francisco theater is "the voice of one crying in the wilderness," whereas Nordica, admittedly an inferior artist and appearing with a wretched support, who nevertheless pretends to come here as a compliment, trills to "ears polite" at the rate of four dollars per seat and crowds the house at that. Madame Trebelli is a charming woman and an exquisite artist, and it is to be hoped that her next concert will attract the large audience that it deserves.

THE STANFORD RESIDENCE Taber photo

JAMES A. HERNE
As Nathaniel Berry in "Shore Acress" at the Baldwin
Photo by Stevens, Chicago

GEORGE OSBOURNE
Who will appear at the Alcazar next week in "Saints and Sinners
Elite, photo

THINGS AND PEOPLE

It is not extraordinary that internal dissensions have broken out in the Emporium. Indeed, the curious feature of the situation is that peace has so long been preserved. The various components of this big institution are discovering the weak points of the plan of organization. A scheme which looks well on paper is not always practicable, any more than the reading of a play is the test of its adaptability for successful production on the stage. Manager Feist's conception is undoubtedly ingenious, and it has proved fairly successful, but no enterprise of this character can be managed save under a supreme authority. The Emporium is a great department store, with the head of every department owning his own stock and having a voice in the management of the institution. There is a governing Board of Directors, but it has proved ineffective to reconcile the bickerings of the various tenants. Innumerable complications have arisen between the central office and the subsidiary firms. One man is opposed to advertising, and he objects to being taxed a percentage of his receipts for the benefit of, say, the clothing or the drug departments, which sell all their goods through the newspapers. There is no sense of mutual dependence, nor any realization of the fact that the success of one dealer naturally involves the prosperity of the others. Throughout the institution there rules the good old California spirit of every man for himself. The consequences are inevitable.

***

There has recently been formed within the Emporium a tenants' association, which proposes to do away with the original leesees, the Emporium Company, of which Mr. Feist is the head. This organization is possessed of the idea that the expenses of management are excessive. It has concluded, for instance, that the amount exacted by the Morton Express for the delivery—$2,000 per month—is more than the service is worth. There are many other conditions to which objection is taken, and the intention is to dispossess the company and deal direct with Mrs. Parrott. There might then be profits, after rents and expenses had been collected. That, at least, is the assumption. It seems the company's agreement with the Parrotts involved mutual obligations in the direction of percentages, which compelled the transaction of a business of at least two and a half million dollars per annum. Though the receipts have been very large—larger than the prophets prognosticated—they have fallen below the required sum, and the report goes that the company is in arrears to the estate, and can be made to abrogate its contract. It is entirely improbable, however, that the Parrotts will attempt to cope with the administration of an institution which requires for success the genius and the practical experience of a Wanamaker or an A. T. Stewart. Though it has not realized the too bountiful expectations of its creators, the Emporium has done excellently, and under better auspices can be made a splendid investment. This will be achieved by some one with capital enough to purchase the interests of the innumerable tenants, and reduce them to their proper roles as mere heads of departments. Thus far the best men on the original Board have resigned rather than cope with the difficulties of their position—Mr. Dohrman retired long ago; so did Charles Cole, both of whom were satisfied of the inadequacy of the plan.

***

Mrs. Atherton in her San Francisco stories elects to use the local color in a manner peculiarly her own. She lays it on not with brushes but with shovels, and that not in the sense of implying strength or broadness of effect. It is clumsy slobbering of the crudest novice—a boarding school "Miss" handling a hod of mortar. Her latest indiscretion appears in "Vanity Fair," and relates the misadventures of a young Englishman, a visitor in this city, who pretends to be a lord and falls foul of Chinatown. He is the hero of the story, and is quite a type of Mrs. Atherton's "men." Mrs. Atherton's ideals are rather low in this respect; she evidently can conceive of nothing better in the way of a hero than a dirty little cad, a sort of cross between a costermonger and a blackleg, whom a self-respecting Turkish bath would refuse to employ as a rubber; a "tout" not quite up to the standard of the sneak thief and "porch-climber." This gentleman, Reggie by name, descends upon American society, and is introduced by Mr. Greenway (thinly disguised as Christopher Candy), to a golden-haired girl of supposedly good sense, who consents to marry him in the end. The whole story is too ridiculous for words, is told in a shallow, unskilled manner and ends in a climax as theatrical as it is commonplace. Mrs. Atherton has evidently gone into pot-boiling on a large scale, even descending to "booming" in her story the Magazine in which it appears. She has been known to do good work on occasion, but whatever real reputation she has acquired will be sadly compromised by her latest contribution to "Vanity Fair."

***

Not only does the "American public love to be fooled," but they love to fool themselves. The latest instance of the kind occurs in connection with the Cooney trial. Every one knows of the really wonderful reformation wrought upon Carroll Cook by Professor Kennedy of hypnotic fame. It is generally assumed, however, by a very large class of good people, who regard mesmerism with a sacred and religious awe as some mysterious "God from the machine," that once the "subject" has been brought under the complete control of the "professor" he must necessarily forever remain in that bondage. It is no doubt this sort who have started a wonderful tale that has been going the rounds of the town the last week. During the progress of the Coney trial Professor Kennedy was often to be seen in Judge Cook's court room, and the report was at once circulated among the busybodies that the rapacious Fair Trust had hired the potent professor to re-exert his magic power over Mr. Cook and to cause him to render a decision favorable to the trust. Surprising as it may seem, the story gained a certain credence among the loungers about the City Hall. It is, of course, the wildest romancing, but the matter is instructive as demonstrating the rapacity for sensation and the witless credulity on the part of the great G. P.

***

An amusing incident occurred at the Trebelli concert last Sunday night, which might serve as the climax of a little story entitled, "The Misadventures of a Bouquet." M. Crepeaux, the ponderous vocalist who assists the young soprano, conceived the theory that an equal division of honors—in the shape of floral offerings—between himself and the star would be more in harmony with the democratic ideals of a republican country. As an object lesson to the audience M. Crepeaux designed that he likewise should be presented with a bouquet, and planned that it should be handed over the footlights to him by an usher after the second part of the first encore. The usher was awaiting at the appointed time and place for the momentous opportunity, but alas and alas, for the well laid plans of mice and—opera singers, the encore failed to materialize. The usher waited, and the orchestra; so did M. Crepeaux (muttering to himself in the wings), but the encore was attending to other business at that moment. The consequence was that the bouquet was presented only after a considerable interval had elapsed. The great man accepted the token with smiles and an elaborate profusion of bows, then retired to his dressing chamber and kicked the inoffensive "set piece" the length of the room. M. Crepeaux knows what he thinks of San Francisco audiences.

***

Horse racing was horse racing in the days of '49, at least so a certain Montana cattle king now in this city would have us believe. He tells the following story, and says that it was suggested to him by the manner in which Starter Ferguson got the horses away at the race track. The intricacies of the Australian gate do not appeal to the gentleman from Montana. However, this is his story: In the early day of Montana history two towns, Bozeman and Hamilton, were bitter rivals. The inhabitants of one town were continually jumping the claims of the other, with the result that there occurred more than one sociable gun fight over the debatable ground that separated the two communities. One day a race was arranged between a horse from Bozeman and one from Hamilton. Excitement ran high, and much dust was wagered over the issue. The Hamilton people realized that their horse had no chance against the Bozeman animal, who was known to be a wonder, but a combination was formed to cause the Bozeman horse to be pulled, and the money won on the defeat of the favorite was to be used to influence the jock. At the appointed day all Bozeman and Hamilton were at the track. Great was the joy in the hearts of the Hamilton delegation. The Bozeman horse was to be—apparently—defeated, and with that defeat would come the humiliation of the detested rival. However, just before the race, two men from Bozeman were seen to go around the track and stop at a certain point about two hundred yards from the wire. There they waited. The horses started, ran at first neck and neck, and then the Hamilton horse was seen to be gaining. Great was the joy of the Hamiltonians; they rent the air with their applause. At length the race reached the two men, with the Hamilton horse still in the lead, both of whom leveled shotguns at the head of the Bozeman jock, exclaiming:

"Win the race, ye dum fool, or we'll blow the top of your head off."

That evening Bozeman was jubilantly drunk on Hamilton's money. The Bozeman horse had won in the last jump.

BOSWELL JR.

A SOUTH-SEA EXPEDITION

One Hundred Colonists from California Who Will Attempt the "Farthest West."

One hundred men went sailing out of this port yesterday "as the sun went down," bound for a little surf-ringed island, far down there in the South Pacific, down below the Paumoto group, below the Marquesas — below even the Gilberts. One hundred of them—workingmen for the most part—carpenters, joiners, machinists, a photographer, I believe, and (of course) one journalist.

I think they call themselves the South Pacific Colonization Company, and they are going down there to found and form a nation—practically, that is what it is. There are different ways of looking upon this business. You may consider it as a joke, if you will—a lark indulged in by certain wild fellows to go down there and seize the natives' land and the natives' women and live a luxurious life, made up largely of love, bread-fruit, and surf-bathing—or you may take it more seriously, especially after you have had a good look at some of the young men who are concerned—none of them of the vicious, irresponsible type—you may take it seriously, I say, and see in this ship's company of Americans, Germans and Englishmen the types of that sturdy, shouldering Anglo-Saxon race that, from the time of its first exodous from the salt marshes of Holland, have been steadily, stubbornly pushing west, pushing west, pushing west—sometimes in the dragon-beaked snekrs of maruading vikings, sometimes in the blunt-nosed, high-sterned packets of the Puritan fathers, sometimes in the trundling, creaking prairie-schooners of the Pioneers, and last, in a two-stick trading brig called the "Percy Edwards"—transport vessel of the South Pacific Colonization Company.

I do not think that this is taking the affair too seriously. You may call these men adventurers if you choose, and they are adventurers, just as Drake was and the Northmen. The scheme may fail (colonization companies are notoriously unstable), but the point is not that, so much as it is the fact that the great majority of these men are the big-boned, blonde, long-haired type—the true Anglo-Saxon type—and are responding to that same mysterious impulse that ever drives their race toward the setting sun—the same impulse that stirred in the shaggy, hide-clad breasts of their forefathers so many hundreds of years ago in the depths of the Frisian forests and swamps. Here it is again, working itself out under your very eyes. Consider it: we are here in the Far West, we other Anglo-Saxons; we have practically just arrived, and the place is hardly built up and made habitable when some hundred of us are already chafing at the barrier of the Pacific—are fitting out a ship and are going further west, further west.

Of course the newspapers have made capital out of the affair, and have exploited the idea of the Adamless Eden to which the colonists are steering. The island of Bouganville (the colony's home) is rather thickly populated with a race of cannibals, and the aggregate number of fighting men in the various tribes is close upon a thousand. So very important an item is this that every colonist is compelled to equip himself with a repeating rifle and a revolver — instruments that would be rarely out of place in an "Adamless Eden." It is, literally, the beginning of a history. You have gone right back three thousand years, right into the legends, to the time of the migrations (that's what this venture is—a tribal migration). You are back to first principles—to a primal condition of things, where all the old maxims are applicable as soon as the colony begins to work out. "The weakest of the wall," "the survival of the fittest," "the race to the swift," and "the battle to the strong." Every tub will stand on its own bottom on Bouganville Island, and a man is a man only in so far as he can shoot straight, work with his hands, and acquire food.

But for all that, complications are ahead for the South Pacific Colonization Company. No women are voyaging with them to their island home, so that perforce the existence of the colony depends upon the intermarriages—let us call them marriages—of the colonists with the native women.

I do not think the colony will fail. The fellows look serious, sober, and steady. They are well armed, the conditions of life are absurdly easy, and the men are enthusiastic and determined. The trouble will come with their relations with the native women. That they will quarrel over them, fight over them, and perhaps slay each other over them, it is only natural to expect. It is almost inevitable. But if all comes well in the end, and the colony works out its own salvation, imagine the race that will be found there—say in about two hundred years (remember, you are dealing with history, now, and must reckon with big figures) a race having in its veins the strain of Anglo-Saxon combined with that of the rich strong blood of a south sea savage—vigorous enough, surely.

FRANK NORRIS.

A MIDSHIP VIEW OF THE "PERCY EDWARDS"

---

The convict system of Russia is being completely reorganized, a step made necessary by the building of the Trans-Siberian railroad. It seems that Russia has been sending her convicts to Siberia, not because of the country nor of the terrible climate, but on account of the physical inability of the convict to get back to Europe, should he happen to escape. In future the island of Saghalien will be the destination of the exiles, at any rate, the place the very furthest from civilization, and modes of getting there are exactly what Russia wants, and it is likely she will get it.

OFFICERS AND LEADERS OF THE COLONIZATION EXPEDITION

THE LATEST FAD IN LOGGING

A New Way of Hauling Logs in the Oregon Lumber Districts.

The latest wrinkle in logging—there are wrinkles in logging, it seems, as in anything else—is to do away with flat-cars in the matter of hauling. It is singular that the method now employed was not thought of long ago, as it is simple, very simple. In fact, it is as simple as rolling off a log.

Formerly the logs were shot down to the main tap of the railroad, and at a tremendous expense of energy heaved upon the flat-cars that transported them to the mill. Now, however, the Oregon Lumber Company has conceived the idea of chaining the logs together, end to end, and hauling them between the rails. As many as twelve or fifteen twenty-four-foot logs are sometimes hauled in this fashion. They are first cut high up on the sides of the tributary canons that run down to the river on which the railroad, the "main tap, is laid. Two men saw the tree down, but sometimes the pitch of the canon is so steep that the outside man is obliged to saw standing upon a sort of springboard.

The drop of the ground is often so sudden that he may find himself fifteen, sixteen and sometimes twenty feet in the air, while his companion directly opposite is standing on terra firma.

Once down, the trees are stripped and barked and shot down the canon into a pond constructed to receive them. Here the "chain tender" takes them in charge. It is his duty to make up the trains of logs just as a switchman makes up a train of freight cars. The most difficult part of his work, and that requiring the most experience, is to so roll the logs that they will rest upon their "sliding side." There is always one surface of the log upon which it will slide the easiest. If it rests upon the wrong surface it will, as soon as the hauling begins, twist and turn, seeking its level, as it were, with the result that chains are broken, tracks damaged and the train generally disorganized. At the same time the chain tender must bevel off ("snubbing," it is called) the sharp edge of the log, so that it does not catch upon rocks or other obstructions in its path.

The process of log hauling, as seen in the accompanying picture, is unique, and is practiced nowhere else but in Oregon. The sight of one of these log trains—especially when the engine is hidden by brush and stumps—gives the impression of an enormous jointed serpent moving slowly along between the rails of the track.

In earlier days the tapping of a lumber country was a much simpler matter than it is now. The company had but to choose a tract situated close to the banks of a river. The logs were felled, allowed to collect in the river or dam, and then floated down with the winter freshets. Now, however, all is changed. As the companies extended their limits of operation, the good lumber along the river was gradually exhausted, and it became more and more difficult to reach the back country remote from the stream. It was for this reason that the railroad was introduced, and the process of hauling logs by steam became a feature of the camps.

The Oregon lumber companies, however, have to contend with a difficulty unknown to the lumber districts of this State, i. e., that of the undergrowth. In Oregon the brush is very thick—so thick, in fact, that it is sometimes quite impossible to penetrate it. This must be entirely cleared away—"brushing out" is the technical term—before the trees can be cut.

Whether the new method of hauling logs between the the rails is to be a practical success remains to be seen. The locomotives are necessarily small and light, and often do not get sufficient purchase upon the rails to haul a very long train. To obviate this difficulty greased skids are laid between the rails in place of ties, but this makeshift as often as not covers the rails with grease and nullifies the very effect it was intended to produce.

A LOG TRAIN EN ROUTE
Photo by Browning, Portland

It is generally conceded that the President and the Secretary of War could not have selected any one more fitted for the office of Chief of Engineers than Brigadier General John M. Wilson, who has recently been appointed to the position. General Wilson has been Colonel and Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds in Washington, and also Commandant of the West Point military academy, and in both positions has proven himself an efficient officer.

It seems that the attendance of the Prince of Wales at the recent dinner of Ambassador Bayard was more of a compliment to the United States than to its representative. This was plainly evidenced by the fact that not only the Prince, but also all the other Englishmen present wore the medals and ribbons of their different decorations. It was made an official occasion, and was a strong proof of the good will and friendliness the heir apparent entertains for America.

The Princess Letitia, Dowager Duchess of Aosta, is one of the most talked about women in all Europe. She is the daughter of Princess Clotilde of Savoy and Prince Jerome Napoleon, and widow of King Humbert's brother, the Duke of Aosta. Princess Letitia possesses a splendid figure, raven hair, and eyes that are large and dark; she is a clever amateur photographer, and a confirmed cyclist, being the first princess of the house of Savoy to bestride a wheel.

METHOD OF HAULING LOGS BY WHICH FLAT CARS ARE DISPENSED WITH
Photo by Browning, Portland

THE SUCESSOR OF LOBANOFF

Characteristics of Count Muravieff, Russia's Foreign Minister.

The appointment of Count Michel Muravieff as Minister of Foreign Affairs of Russia is not likely to meet with the approval of Emperor William nor of his diplomatic circle, as the dislike of the new minister for the German sovereign and his policy is pronounced and well known. When Alexander III. determined to break off his connection with Germany and Austria, and form an alliance with France, Count Muravieff was intrusted with the mission of announcing the unwelcome news to the court of Berlin. This was before the formation of the triple alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy, and naturally Germany was loath to lose an ally, and still more loath to assist an alliance between her former friend and her old-time enemy. Considerable ill will ensued on the part of Germany to Russia, and Count Muravieff was made the beneficiary of most of it. When he finally took his diplomatic leave he did so without the decoration customary upon such occasions.

Before his assignment to the Prussian court, Muravieff had served under Prince Orloff in Paris; he was a member there of the Union and Jockey Clubs, and never made any secret of his great liking for France and for the French. At the same time, it is said, he gave free expression of his decided anti-German tendencies. All this and a great deal more in connection with the Czar's dislike for Emperor William gives every probability to the assumption that Germany and Russia not only are at outs, but are likely to continue to remain so for an indefinite period, and as Russia is generally conceded to be the coming power in European diplomacy, and as Germany is striving for the position, there is nothing left for the remaining countries of Europe but to look on with more or less interest and considerable caution.

Count Muravieff is a little over the middle height, with fair hair and gray eyes, in one of which a monocle is continuously fastened. He posseses a remarkable command of speech, a gift of which he is extremely careful, one of the qualities that recommended him to his imperial master; he is affable and gracious in manner and possesses a reputation both in Paris and in St. Petersburg as an excellent host and a giver of good dinners. The family of the Count is one of the oldest and most influential in Russia, the most celebrated member of it being General Nicholas Muravieff, grandfather of the present Count, to whom is due more than to any one else the acquisition by Russia of the greater portion of its Siberian empire. In fact, the entire Amur province was conquered by General Muravieff, and in 1859 a treaty from the Tycoon was obtained by him on the very same lines as the one previously secured to the United States by Commodore Perry. The new foreign minister is qualified in every way to succeed Prince Lobanoff. The only thing that may be brought to bear against his popularity is the execration with which all Poles at home and abroad hold the name of Muravieff, due to the exccessive cruelty exercised by General Muravieff in suppressing the Polish insurrection, when he instituted in Warsaw what might be termed a veritable reign of terror. This odium, however, has been lessened somewhat by the moderate role of the Count's father in governing the Baltic provinces of Russia, and also by the great liberality of his cousin, M. Muravieff, present Minister of Justice at St. Petersburg.

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

My suggestion that the Friday Night Club's cotillions would cease if more generous patronage were not accorded them, has caused considerable comment. There is no escaping the logic of this conclusion. If society will not support the institution, how can it be maintained, seeing that music, decorations, and champagne are not to be had for the asking? Undoubtedly dull times have had much to do with the decline of this club—the dues, though not excessive for the returns and the outlay, are high enough to be an object in an era of depression.

MRS J. H. COVADE
NEE LOUISE MOULDER

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney kept themselves secluded during their stay here, and have now gone on to Del Monte. Had they shown a desire to go around several people would have had affairs for them. Mr. Thomas McClieb, who is residing here this winter, being installed at the Savoy, would undoubtedly have given a dinner in their honor, as he did for Mr. and Mrs. Burden. Being in mouring for the loss of Mrs. Vanderbilt, they saw the sights alone. Mrs. Burden, during her stay here, met quite a number of people, and was especially impressed with Miss Genevieve Goad and Miss Hoffman, whom she invited to visit her at Newport this winter.

The Monday night dance at Golden Gate Hall went off brilliantly. There were decorations, some good music, and other accessories to match. Indeed, it was one of the most successful affairs this organization has had this season.

Socially the week has offered little to record. On Saturday there was Mrs. Carr's tea, quite a brilliant affair. Of course, the Sorosis Club, of which Mrs. Carr is president, was well represented. There was excellent music, a profusion of people, and refreshments in plenty. Mrs. Younger, Mrs. Sanbourne, Mrs. Woods, Miss Lottie Woods, Miss Rose Hooper, and Miss Churchill Jones helped to receive. On the same afternoon there was Miss Guinette Henley's tea, which was rather a military function. The Presidio and Angel Island were so well represented that the affair had the aspect of a review. The girls looked very pretty, and Miss Henley was a charming hostess.

Preparations for the Mardi Gras ball proceed apace. Stanton is at work on decorative panels, great, huge designs which are to hang in the hall, representing Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter. Through the rooms will be palms of the Santa Barbara variety ten to twelve feet in height, some 400 of which are to be sent up from the south. An effort is being made by the managers of the institution to prevail on the prospective male guests to wear fancy costumes. It is essential, however, that the ladies shall do so, inasmuch as no one unequipped with mask or domino will be admitted to the main floor before midnight. The invitation cards by Arthur Matthews are admirable and make capital souvenirs.

The entertainments of the week have been fugitive. Mrs. Luke Robinson had a luncheon party at her residence on Fillmore street in honor of Mrs. E. K. Moore, of Washington. Mrs. W. B. Morgan, on Thursday night, gave an elaborate dinner at her home on Clay street, in honor of Captain and Mrs. Oscar Long. Mrs. J. A. Donahoe entertained a small party at luncheon on Thursday last, and Mrs. F. A. Pope entertained a small party on Friday last.

Judge and Mrs. J. C. B. Hebbard had a progressive euchre party at their home, 912 Devisadero street, last Saturday evening. There was an informal musicale on Monday night at Mrs. E. B. Pond's, on California street. During the evening Herr Weiss, the Hungarian violinist, rendered selections. Frank Lincoln participated, and Horace Miller performed one of Herrmann's tricks.

Formal announcement has been made of the engagement of Thomas Magee and Miss Helen Curtis. Of course, Mr. Magee, as a leading citizen, is well known is really a public character—but the identity of Miss Curtis is rather less familiar. She is an interesting, estimable, and beautiful girl, of fine character and many accomplishments. Of a quiet and reserved manner, she has preferred to cultivate herself in music and in literature, rather than devote her leisure to society. Mr. Magee is to be congratulated on his selection. Another engagement which has excited much talk is that of Miss Ethel Cohen and Lieutenant Bent. The former is decidedly a belle—a slender, distinguished looking girl, with much vivacity and self-possession. Lieutenant Bent is of the Third Artillery, and is therefore one of our recent military acquisitions. The courtship has been brief, as the twain met just two months ago.

An interesting engagement just announced is that of Miss Grace Sabin, the daughter of John I. Sabin, of the telephone company, and Dr. R. W. M. Payne. Miss Sabin is a handsome, interesting and accomplished young lady, who has had the benefit of an excellent education and a European tour. Dr. Payne is a rising young physician. The day of the wedding is not yet set, but doubtless they will be married in the early future.

MRS. H. A. ISENBERG
NEE VIRGINIA DUISENBERG
Taber, photo

The Saturday Night dancing class met on the evening of the 13th inst. Mr. William Smith led the cotillion, and introduced some new figures. New figures are more welcome than ripe cherries nowadays. The usual array of girls looked even more charming than usual. Miss Mai Moody was in orange satin; Miss Florence Stone wore gray silk; Miss Emma Butler was in flowered Dresden silk. I noticed also Miss Marie Messer in white organdie, Miss Jeanette Black in white silk, Miss Forman in cream colored silk, Miss Gertrude Bates in white Swiss, Miss Anna Lawlor in green silk and mull.

For Hymen, the week has been a busy one. He has been kept actively engaged joining in holy wedlock nice young men and pretty young girls, much, I presume, to the delectation of all concerned. There was the Duisenberg-Isenberg marriage on Monday, but otherwise Hymen has differentiated in favor of Wednesday—a trio of important celebrations occurring on that day.

On the evening of Wednesday Miss Mattie Gibbs and Mr. Cecil J. Holcombe were united by Rev. Dr. Walk at the C. V. S. Gibbs home, 722 Post street. The bride—a particularly bright and popular girl—was gowned in the inevitable white satin, trimmed at the corsage with some lengths of valuable and beautiful Duchesse lace. Miss Harriet Gibbs was maid of honor in white Brussels net over pink taffeta. Then followed an excellent supper, congratulations, and the opportunity for inspecting presents, which made really a fine spectacle.

Quite as interesting was the ceremony by the agency of which Miss Louise Moulder became Mrs. J. H. Covade. This, however, was strictly a family affair. The groom is a New York engineer, and is interested in the Alcatraz Asphalt Company. He is of an excellent Pennsylvania family—being the son of the late Congressman Covade, who represented his district at Washington for over twenty years. The bride is a daughter of the late Superintendent of Schools, and is a very charming girl. She wore the ivory white satin in which her mother had been married to Mr. Moulder years ago in Philadelphia. The gown was covered with flowers of white applique lace; the corsage was high, the sleeves long. The veil was attached to the chiffon by a wreath of orange blossoms, and a magnificent diamond sunburst. Archbishop Riordan performed the ceremony, and the happy pair are now to journey through California before going to their home in New York.

The third wedding was that of Miss Minnie Dannebaum and Mr. Hypolite Bier, of Rinaldo Bros.—a very quiet affair. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents, 1457 Franklin street, and Dr. Voorsanger officiated. Only immediate relatives were in attendance. The happy pair left for Del Monte, and, returning, are to live at 1510 Octavia street.

The romance of life is not alone confined to novels or to plays, or to the medieval ages. We have some of it in real life in our own day, and right here in San Francisco. About nineteen months ago young Mr. H. A. Isenberg, the son of a Hawaiian millionaire planter, fell in love at what is called first sight. The young lady was Miss Virginia Duisenberg, and it all occurred at the Pacific Mail dock, where Miss Duisenberg happened to be seeing a friend off for China. The young man became enthusiastic at once, obtained an introduction, and after a short time demanded of Mrs. Dusenberg her daughter's hand. He was accepted as a future son-in-law, but on account of the young lady's age the celebration of the marriage was put off for two years. For once the course of true love continued smooth between the two young people, and on Tuesday evening they were married at St. Matthew's Lutheran church. Miss Duisenberg's father was for many years German consul in this city, but at his death left his wife and daughter in somewhat narrow circumstances, and all this makes the story more interesting. Mrs. Duisenberg's present to her daughter was unique. It consisted of a collection of photographs of scenes in the early life of the bride, and also of the series of events during the time of Mr. Isenberg's courtship, the whole affair being bound with a piece of the maternal wedding gown. Mr. and Mrs. Isenberg will travel for a while in California, and on March 6th will sail for Honolulu, where the Isenberg home is said to be one of the most beautiful in the islands.

MISS GRACE SABIN
WHOSE ENGAGEMEN TO DR. PAYNE HAS BEEN ANNOUNCED
Thors, photo

On last Sunday evening Mr. and Mrs. Achille Roos celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage with an elaborate dinner at the Palace Hotel. The affair came off in the handsome parlors on the first floor, where the guests, ninety in number, seated themselves at five round tables, each one of which was decorated with an artistic effect distinctly its own. At the table of Mr. and Mrs. Roos, Bermuda lilies and snowdrops made a beautiful effect; the second table was given over to the American beauty rose, another to daffodils; the fourth to carnations of all shades, and the fifth looked lovely, almost covered with beautiful bridesmaid's roses. The menu cards were dainty affairs from Tiffany's, and the favors, tiny silver bells, inscribed with the date of the occasion. The general effect was really superb. Indeed, the celebration ranks as one of the most elaborate festivities given at the Palace in several seasons.

A coming event is the tea at the Crocker mansion for the California Woman's Hospital, on the afternoon of Saturday, the 27th inst. Not often in these days is the palatial home open to society, but the cause is a very excellent one, and Colonel Crocker has been prevailed on to asisst it. Undoubtedly a great deal of curiosity prevails in regard to the interior of this house—with its magnificently furnished parlors and its superb picture gallery. It is safe to believe that a good many dollars will be collected at the door—for the entrance fee includes refreshments and the opportunity to look at the canvases.

The San Francisco Riding Club gives an exhibition of fencing in the club's gymnasium on February 23d, under the direction of Professor Tronchet, fencing master of the club. Some of Professor Tronchet's very best pupils will take part in the exhibition, some of whom are ladies.

Among coming events is a dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Hellman, at which sixty guests will be entertained. There is to be a Lady Washington tea on the afternoon and evening of the 23d inst., at the residence of Mrs. Will E. Fisher, 1210 Sutter street.

On February 27th, the Concordia Club will give an entertainment and ball, the former to consist of a burlesque on the "Prisoner of Zenda," written especially for the club. Both libretto and music are original.

The performance of "Caste" by a company of young society people of this city promises to be quite an affair, and is already exciting considerable interest. The play will be given at the California Theatre a week from Monday, and the company is now hard at work putting on the finishing touches, under the coaching of Leo Cooper. I understand the boxes will be sold at auction by the comedienne, Fanny Rice, at the California Theatre on February 27th.

***

The final Deux Temps—the last cotillion of the winter—occurred on Tuesday night at Reid's Hall, and proved a great success. Indeed, it is said to have been the jolliest party of the season. Any number of pretty girls were on the floor—there must have been 250 men and maids—besides the proper allowance of matrons present. I noticed several San Francisco girls there—among them Miss Bernice Drown, in white organdie over pale blue, and Miss Ogg, and certainly they must have enjoyed themselves. After all, Oakland can boast one superiority over the marine side of the bay—her men have certain advantages in years over the youth one finds at the Monday, Thursday and Saturday night entertainments at Polk-street halls. A year or two makes much difference in a man, it must be admitted, though it is also true that our boys are doing the best they can to remedy their defficiencies.

Miss Alice Moffitt and Mr. Will Wheaton led the german, the figures of which were especially pretty; and one formed in quadrangles, on the military order, with calcium light effects was particularly attractive. Among the prettiest girls in the hall were Miss Smith, of Claremont, in green, covered in gauze; Miss Dunn; Miss Lillian Strong, in white organdie; Miss Marguerite Joliffe, in cream satin, and Miss Carmen Moore, in white mirror silk and tulle. I noticed also Miss Palmer, who looked well in white satin trimmed with pink roses. Miss Idabelle Pal-

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

mer wore white with cerise roses. Miss Sarah Dunn and Miss Alice Moffitt were haidsomely gowned. Miss Dunn in cream pompadour silk, and Miss Moffitt in pale pink, covered with gauze and trimmed with point lace. Miss Emma Mahoney looked decidedly handsome in a very pretty costume of pink.

The Valentine cotillion of the Fortnightly Club, which came off last Friday, was led by Mr. Dixwell Davenport. It was a great success, every one having a thoroughly good time. The favors were especially pretty and appropriate, consisting of dainty heart-shaped boxes of violets.

Mrs. H. M. A. Miller gave a dinner party this week. The affair was the second of a series to be given fortnightly by a dinner club formed a short time ago by Mrs. Miller. The first was given by Mr. and Mrs. Magee. The membership of the club includes Mrs. Edson Adams, Mrs. Orestes Pierce, Mrs. W. Magee, Mrs. Oscar Long, Mrs. George McNear, Jr., Mrs. Greenwood, and Mrs. P. E. Bowles.

At the luncheon of the Ebell Society last Tuesday, the hostesses were Mrs. Coogan, Mrs. Gray, and Miss Mabel Gray. Mrs. Eliza Tupper Wilkes gave an interesting talk on Helen Hunt Jackson, and a musical programme followed.

On Thursday Miss Ethel Kittridge gave a chafing dish party, quite informal.

The Thirteen Club was entertained at luncheon on Tuesday by Miss Mona Crellin. The decorations were in red. Cards followed; the prize, a pretty picture, was won by Miss Emma Mahoney. Mrs. Arthur Crellin gave a whist party to a few friends Thursday. The decorations, which were very prettty, were violets and accacia, and the prizes a picture and a cut-glass viniagrette.

On last Saturday Miss Florence Starr had a reception. The decorations were of bamboo, accacia, and red carnations; the music was furnished by a band of guitars and mandolins, producing a very pleasing effect. Those that assisted Miss Starr in receiving, and also a few of the men, were asked to remain to dinner.

THE THEATRES

A Blatant Bolingbroke and a Comfortable Queen Anne.

Alma Kruger and her company of players opened the week at the Baldwin with a very clever but not altogether highly finished comedy entitled "My Lord and Some Ladies." This was scarcely the way the show bills put it, for the company was that of Louis James and the play a comedy adapted from the work of Eugene Scribe, but play bills do not always speak the truth.

James ought to do something with this company of his. It lacks all that repose and finish in make-up and its methods that so distinguished the Marlowe-Taber troupe. With them every production was like unto a delicate finished piece of Dresden china; with James finish is lacking.

A criticism of "My Lord and Some Ladies" must take its tone from the point of view from which you regard it. It would scarcely answer as an accurate historical representation, while as an amusing comedy dealing loosely with historical names it is a pleasant story rather pleasantly told. It would be ridiculous to expect or demand historical faithfulness in such a frame. If Miss Kruger neglected to present us with the Queen Anne of history, she certainly did not fail to give us a queen pleasing both in voice and manner, and we may thank our stars she did not mar our enjoyment with historical accuracy. She ran the gamut of the necessary moods with cleverness and undoubtedly carried off the honors.

James in comedy! Well, he it not bad. In spots he is good, but, withal, so lacking, oh, so lacking, in the finer polish that by all the rules of the game characterizes the diplomatist. But perhaps diplomatists are sleek and catty, smooth and foxy, only on the stage, and perhaps he was a most natural and incomparable Bolingbroke. I am uncertain here, for with me acquaintance with Ambassadors is confined to the narrow boundaries of the proscenium arch.

But there is one thing of which I am so certain, so certainly certain, that no man shall deny me my belief—that Guy Lindsley is not a beauty I most strenuously assert. No three women of Queen Anne's or any other style of time could fall so desperately in love with such a fall so desperately n love with such a chap. In "Spartacus," when he returned defeated to his brother's tent, I felt sorry for him that he should so strain his delivery as to be oppressive, felt sorry, inasmuch as I knew he was throwing all his soul and energy into the work, and was yet making a dismal failure of it, where, if he would but modify his elocutionary efforts, he might at least approximate the endurable. I can well imagine that this young man is earnest, zealous, painstaking, and altogether compionable in private life, but whatever else he may do he cannot enjoy my approbation as Arthur Farror. There was a young athlete in "Spartacus" (Steppling his name, I think), who should be permitted to try his hand at the part of the much beloved Farror, for he at least has face and figure to commend him, and is fair to look upon.

The finer work of "My Lord and Some Ladies" was easily monopolized by the ladies of the company. The costumes were fresh and the play handsomely staged, and altogether it formed a pleasing contrast to "Spartacus." It might well have enjoyed the privilege of the first week's run rather than an intermittent appearance during this the last week of the James engagement, for "Spartacus" approached the impossible.

The "Little Cinderella" company did not fare well at the California this week. A dozen or so half-frightened and inexperienced youngsters of both sexes, with a clever child or two sandwiched in between, are not calculated to act as a magnet to draw the dollar from the pocket of the average theater-goer. On Tuesday night there was scarcely a handful of people in the house, but the "child stars" were daunted none, and paced through their parts with the most elaborate and mechanical precision. There were some bright youngsters among them, it is true, but not enough to sustain interest. There was Baby Ruth Rolland, who sang "What Could the Poor Girl Do?" and danced prettily. Jennie and Flossie Sawyer were not at all bad as the disagreeable sisters of Cinderella. But the star of the evening, and the one who gives the greatest promise for the future, is the little chap who played the part of Pedro, and whose name, shameful to say, has slipped my memory. The little fellow has real talent, and if he chooses to follow the stage for a profession is destined to make his mark.

"A Scrap of Paper" is a play that will always give pleasure, even when it is put on by only average players. It is the bill at the Alcazar this week and is interesting more on its own account than on that of the people who perform in it, although it is put on quite well. J. B. Polk's Brisemouchil is the best-drawn character in the cast. It is a clever conception of the easy-going old naturalist. Hugo Toland is strongly reminiscent of Peter Dailey; he has the same placid good nature, and as Prosper Couramont gives evidence of it all through the play. May Buckley has recovered from her recent illness, and as Mathilde is pretty and pleasing. B.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

DRAMATIC NOTES

Fanny Rice comes to the Columbia next Monday evening, presenting a new edition of her last season's success, "At the French Ball." The piece has been retouched, and considerable new business added, and with the new music and new songs ought to make an unusually attractive bill. The company supporting Miss Rice includes George Broderick, who was here with Emma Abbott; Charles Drew, who will be remembered as comedian in the opera company at the Orpheum some years ago when Emily Soldene was the bright particular star, and also Alice and Francis Gaillard, for a long time favorites at the Tivoli.

"Fidelity to life as it is," says Joseph A. Herne, author of "Shore Acres," "and not as it is so generally depicted upon the stage, should be the standard for the dramatist." Mr. Herne has followed this principle in writing "Shore Acres," and since he has, it has proven to be one of the dramatic successes of the century. Mr. Herne opens at the Baldwin next Monday evening in his new play for a season of three weeks.

The Tivoli will take "Aladdin" off the boards next Monday night and replace it with a double bill, consisting of Gilbert and Sullivan's aesthetic opera, "Patience," and Von Suppe's one-act piece, "The Lovely Galatea." "Patience" has always been popular, and it will prove a drawing card, and since it is some years since Von Suppe's pretty little opera has been sung in San Francisco, the bill will be additionally agreeable.

A novelty of the French grand opera company's repertoire will be the new opera "Le Voyage de Suzette," which was given its first production in this country a short time since. It is highly spectacular.

Fanny Davenport follows James A. Herne at the Baldwin theater and will present, besides "Fedora" and "La Tosca," her new production, "Gismonda," by Sardou.

Rosenthal, the great pianist, comes here to give six recitals the first week in May.

A NOMADIC PRIMA DONNA

Trebelli Talks of Wanderings by Flood and Field.

"The American people are so clever," said Mlle. Trebelli; "so clever and quick, and they do so many wonderful things. And the American women, they are fascinating and so intelligent, so much more so than Englishwomen. I would rather be American than anything else—that is, of course, after being French." Which was very kind of Madame Trebelli—who really has a charming way of saying such generous things. She has just finished a tour that has almost included the ends of the earth, accompanied by her secretary and her companion, a charming woman about her own age. She has been in Africa, and in Australia, in Zululand, and in the home of the Maori; has been on the move for two years in all, and is glad now to get back to the world again. Also, she thinks Australia slow, which the Australians, I fear, would not like.

"They are so slow in Australia," she exclaimed; "so very slow and poky, but here it is altogether different," and she looked out of the window upon Sutter street—where the cable cars charged up and down, and the horses and wagons rattled noisily over the cobbles. "There is so much life here," she continued. "It makes me think of Europe."

"My home?"

"It is in Paris," she replied, "but I have one on the Lake of Como. I should say it is my father's, but, of course, I have a share in it; then I have another in the south of France, in the country, near Bordeaux.

"Not a chateau, nor anything grand; a villa, quite simple, but my own, and I think very well of it."

I asked Madame Trebelli what she thought of the unreasonable demands so often made upon singers for encores.

"Of course," she replied, "it is tiresome for a singer to be compelled to respond again and again to continued applause, but then, what would you have? If the people want you to sing, why you must do so; that is all there is to it. In Moscow they are terrible for demanding encores. Oh, they are worse in Moscow than they are anywhere else; if you do not sing often enough to please them they will interrupt the concert; they will not let it go on until they have had enough."

"Where have you found the audience most difficult to please?" I asked.

"In Holland, by all means," answered the diva. "They will have nothing there but what is classical, and, what is more, they understand classical music thoroughly. And they do not care what reputation you may have acquired elsewhere; they will settle all that, at least, for themselves, and for Holland. I remember quite well my first appearance in Amsterdam. When I came on there was not a sound from the audience, not a movement anywhere; they were all so cold—ugh!" and Trebelli drew in her shoulders and her brows contracted. "But when I had finished they were so kind, and they gave me so much applause; but I could not forget that frigid reception. They were difficult to please, and they are the very same way in Belgium."

Mme. Trebelli is very much like most people, or, rather, on second thought, she is not; she is unlike most people, because she is gracious and charming, simple and unaffected. She keeps her eyes open for all that happens, and talks so delightfully of her voyagings that the time flits in her company. Indeed, in the pleasure of listening to the story of her wanderings, I forgot the identity of the vocalist and remembered only the narrator—surely an important thing if you view it right. H. S. K.

John Philip Sousa, with his band and his marches, will be with us again for four nights at the California theater, commencing on Thursday evening, February 25th. Mr. Sousa will play everything from "Rosie O'Grady" to "Elsa's Dream," and for encores will give his famous marches. The band numbers fifty people, and along with it comes Miss Elizabeth Northrup, a young lady who is said to have a soprano voice of much sweetness and power, and also Miss Martini Johnstone, who is reported as an exceptionally gifted violiniste.

Barney Fagan, author of "My Gal's a High-Born Lady," and many other similar songs, will appear at the Orpheum next Monday in connection with Miss Henrietta Byron, in an entertaining one-act farce. The bill will be an extra good one all round; Hayes and Lytton will put on a sketch entitled "Camille Up to Date"; Guille will sing the aria from "Aida," and Abramhoff "Infelice," from "Ernani," and in addition to this the tenor and the basso will give, assisted by Miss Cotte, the trio from "I Lombardi." There will be an extra matinee on Monday, Washington's birthday.

ARS POSTERA

From "The Battle of the Bards," by Owen Seam[illegible]

Mr. Aubrey Beer de Beers,
You're getting quite a high renown;
Your Comedy of Leers, you know,
Is posted all about the town;
This sort of stuff I cannot puff,
As Boston says, it makes me "tired";
Your Japanese Rossetti girl
Is not a thing to be desired.

Mr. Aubrey Beer de Beers,
New English Art [illegible] the chaff)
Is like the Newest Humour style,
It's not a thing at which to laugh;
But all the same, you need not maim
A beauty reared on Nature's rules;
A simple maid au naturel
Is worth a dozen spotted ghouls.

Mr. Aubrey Beer de Beers,
You put strange phantoms on our walls,
If not so daring as To-day's,
Nor quite so Hardy as St. Paul's;
Her sidelong eyes, her giddy guise,
Grande Dame Sans Merci she [illegible],
But there is that about her throat
Which I myself don't care to see.

Mr. Aubrey Beer de Beers,
The Philistines across the way,
They say her lips—well, never mind
Precisely what it is they say;
But I have heard a drastic word
That scarce is fit for dainty ears;
But then their taste is not the kind
Of taste to flatter Beer de Beers.

Bless me, Aubrey Beer de Beers,
On fair Elysian lawns apart
Burd Helen of the Trojan time
Smiles at the latest mode of Art;
Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
It's not important to be New;
New Art would better Nature's best,
But Nature knows a thing or two.

Aubrey, Aubrey Beer de Beers,
Are there no models at your gate,
Live, shapely, possible and clean?
Or won't they do to "decorate?"
Then by all means bestrew your scenes
With half the lotuses that blow,
Pothooks and fishing-lines and things,
But let the human woman go!

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper [illegible] the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

Ladies interested in Japanese curios and bric-a-brac should [illegible] clearance sale of Ito, [illegible] & Co., 120 Sutter street.

Mr. Hermann [illegible] man, at Strozynski [illegible] dressing Parlors [illegible] phone Main 5820.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Half-Sick People

Just sick enough to feel heavy-headed, lazy and listless, to have no appetite, to sleep badly, to have what you eat feel like lead in your stomach. Not sick enough to take to bed or call a doctor, but just sick enough to not know what to do.

Take a Tonic

That's what you ought to do—a good sensible tonic that will sharpen your appetite and put new "go" in your nerves and muscles. Come to-day and begin taking it right away. You'll find just what your system needs right here.

VINTINE

Is the tonic you want. Pleasant to take, permanent in results. Not a patent medicine, but a regular medicine that gives the contents on the bottle. It is the greatest nerve food, nutrient tonic, and blood cleanser known. Try it. Price, One Dollar.

Manufactured by the Vintine Company

SOLD BY

BROOKS'

Homeopathic Pharmacy

119 Powell Street

AND AT DRUG-STORES

ROTHSCHILDS AT HOME

Baron Lionel in His Den — Good Dinners and Simple Manners.

According to M. Charles Gavard, in "A Diplomat in London" (H. Holt & Co.), the life of an Ambassador is not a period of unrestricted happiness. Yet he offers testimony to prove that a minister, or secretary of legation, who happens also to be a pleasant fellow, can enjoy a form of life from which the ordinary American visitor to the English metropolis is shut out.

M. Gavard was evidently a charming man, who united with the intelligence and ability his profession demanded a sincerity and culture that made him a welcome guest in the palaces of the aristocracy. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war he was dispatched with the Duc de Broglie to London to aid in negotiating a new commercial treaty with Mr. Gladstone's cabinet. His chief being called back to France by President Thiers, he was left for a time in charge of the French Embassy, and remained in London, under the Duc de Bisaccia and Count Jarnac, as secretary of legation, or minister plenipotentiary, from 1871 to 1877. During these eventful years he was a personage of great consequence, and in addition to negotiating the treaty of commerce, engineered most skillfully several diplomatic complications which brought him honor and consequence at home and abroad. The book affords an insight into the haut monde of London, as it was in the early seventies. Within its pages are crowds of celebrities. Here is Lord Salisbury, "who has a fine voice; his delivery is easy and distinguished; he adjusts his efforts to the importance of the debate in hand. You feel that he could easily do better than he does—he is an orator." Disraeli we meet often, moving about from mansion to mansion, meeting Delane, the editor of the "Times," at the Rothschilds, where they talk, exchanging ironic pleasantries with Gladstone. A dinner at the Dilkes introduces Sir Charles and his home circle. We meet Count Schouvaloff, the Russian embassador, quite often, and are amused by his stories and peculiar manners. There is an excellent description of a hunt at the Duke of Beaufort's. One gets also a capital idea of the Athenaeum Club, where Abraham Hayward makes his headquarters. Burton, the explorer, is met at Count Beust's. "At present he is on his way to Zanzibar. China remains for him to see; but for that he would be a prey to ennui; it is his resource against the spleen. He has learned one after another all the languages there are. He began with the three Arabic dialects of Afghanistan, and afterwards with these made his way to Mecca. He has received in his travels, from arrows and lances, as many wounds as he knows languages. His face is tattooed with scars. He acquires the use of a new tongue in ten days. He leases out his memory to a language for so long—takes as many months' worth of any given idiom as he wants, and with it all speaks better French than I do English."

Not the least interesting passages of this very entertaining memoir are those devoted to the Rothschilds, whom it seems were very good friends of M. Gavard. His first dinner is at the home of Baron Lionel.

I joined the Duc de Broglie at the Lionel Rothschilds'. Magnificent place: here is gold well laid out, a luxury of high good taste. First, the stairway, with three rows of columns, a spacious structure, with the light falling from above, all that could be desired by a Guardi, and flowers such as I had never dreamed of. A fine square brings you to a salon, which is somehow horribly sterling and exquisite, with old French hangings, eighteenth century embroidered silk, and some "old masters," Del Sarto, Murillo, Greuze, just enough to decorate the place without converting it into a gallery, all very comfortable. There were some ladies present: Mme. Alphonse (Baroness Rothschild), a beauty of an odd sort, something of the race of Jacob in it; the Duchess of Manchester (now Duchess of Devonshire), a beauty of the sort that is conventional in courts that go in for amusement; the beautiful Lady Granville; the Countess de Flandre, quite royal—if you knew Latin I should say incessu patuit dea; she is no bigger than she should be, but she does not make herself small. Those were the beauties of the salon.

Here is a dinner at Gunnersbury, of a rather more intimate character:

Yesterday I dined at the Rothschild's villa—I don't know its name—out in the direction of Kew. The dinner was a surprise: only the family was present; but such a chicken!—nothing but a chicken but with the whole animal and vegetable kingdoms represented in the sauce! The Lord Mayor would have sucked his fingers. Stomachs that can face such dishes twice a day fill me with admiration. And such feeds! And yet, really, in the midst of all this luxurious upholstering and pampering of the flesh, a great simplicity obtains. It is Alfred, the son, who fetches the wine from the cellar. (The cellar, to be sure, is like that of Frederick the Great, where he kept his treasure). He brought up a Lafitte and a sherry, that you find only at the villa of Lionel de Rothschild. The incontestable superiority of the wines is in part due, it seems, to their being laid away in a cellar as isolated as an observatory, and to their never being moved or jarred. Of course, you know some one was good enough to forewarn me that their superiority is incontestable.

This passage gives an excellent idea of the old Baron in his Counting House in St. Swithin's Lane.

I went to pay a call on the old Baron (Lionel de Rothschild) in his den in St. Swithen's Lane. Don't look for the Baron's office in one of the great thoroughfares that are easy to find. A long passage, a carriage would so completely block up that a man could scarcely squeeze by brings you to an obscure, solid old mansion. The lane reminds one of Venice; the solidity of the house and the inhospitable look of the neighborhood are Florentine, and the Baron, also, who spends his days there, belongs to the aristocracy of wealth that founded the grandeur of these two mediaeval governments. Every day he sits at his table from 11 o'clock in the morning to 7 in the afternoon. No chairs are provided for visitors; standing discourages long interviews, unless one sits on the table, as I did. Two or three offices to right and left are occupied by his sons. The paralysis in his legs which keeps him fast in his rolling-chair is in sharp contrast with the activity of his mind which interrupts his conversation from minute to minute to reflect upon the state of the courts of Europe, and to give orders accordingly. The face is a fine one, but the impression of it that abides with one is that of something inexorable as a mathematical calculation. When I thanked him for the damages the railway company had awarded me for my lost traveling-bag, "Yes," he said, "they gave you three hundred francs." The amount came to him at once out of the billions he has dealt with since.

One of his sons, after offering me a glass of sherry, took me over the establishment. What discipline! A great hall with fifty or sixty employees in it, abstracting letters, all of them busy and silent. Nobody communicates with his neighbor. There is no chief, or at least no other chief than the Baron and the son who opens the letters and directly oversees the work. Although there is a French department, there is not a Frenchman in the house. There are a good many Germans. This preference is not an affair of sentiment; it must be that the French are a less safe investment. The employees are appointed for life when they have once passed the door. They begin at two thousand francs, and there is no upper limit. Their salary rises with their ability. From the correspondence department I was taken to that of "coupons," which they there detach, verify, and put up in packages. Thence to the counting house; you cannot see it except from the inside; an iron structure three stories high, protected by walls nine feet thick. I do not know whether it is surrounded by a moat as some of the other monetary fortresses in the city are, but a portcullis, an iron door, cut us off from possible robbers. There was nothing lacking but a drawbridge. It is by gaslight that you visit this pawnshop for crowned heads. In passing my eye caught a little leather valise with the name of M. Thiers on it; like the great strategist he is, he takes pains to secure his retreat. I do not blame him for it. I took my leave much edified and rather envious. If the public business had been administrated in that spirit we should not be where we are.

It is seldom one obtains a veracious report of a diplomatic house party at the castle of Lord Salisbury. Evidently M. Gavard and the Marquis were intimate, as the Frenchman is often at Hatfield House, and here are his impressions:

I reached "King's Cross Station" at half past five. There I found Lord Carnarvon and helped him expedite the sending of a belated dispatch to China, which reached its destination about the same time we reached ours. A carriage was waiting for us at the station at Hatfield, and took us up by the same steep, uncomfortable road. As we approached the "house," the windows all caught the moonlight and flashed back at us a weird, colorless flame. You enter by a guard room with forty suits of armor standing sentinel, then through a grand hall surrounded by books, where there was a fireplace with great logs burning. I found myself among acquaintances, in an Elizabethan castle; there was Lord Lyons with Sheffield, Lady Stafford Northcote and her second daughter, and the Marchioness and her sister. We passed down a gallery fully as long as the Gallery des Glaces at Versailles.

The Marquis came from London with Sir Stafford Northcote. We went up to our rooms; the staircase was winding and of wood. I half expected to meet James the First. This relic of the sixteenth century landed us among chambers with little diamond-paned windows, but for the rest supplied with all the comforts of the nineteenth century. Big open fireplaces cabinets of all kinds, comprising, yes, the one we have so much trouble in finding at night in our hovels in France. It almost makes one willing to be ill. All my things were ready, and I dressed. Fortunately, I found Sheffield on the staircase; without him I should have been lost in the numerous "halls." To reach the dining room we passed by the gallery of a private chapel. Finally, we found ourselves in the small dining room, the one with the old wainscoting. The dinner was excellent. The musicians played softly during the whole time. When dinner was served the children appeared; the two daughters stood by the Marquis and the two sons by the side of Lady Salisbury. One of them was Lord Cranborne. When I think that this young scamp of 12 is heir of this castle and of so many others, I am overcome with respect for him! After dinner, we went into other salons; everywhere open fires, lights, and air of vastness, and all this for about ten people. A man must indeed be out of sorts with the world who could not grow fond of life under these conditions.

In a corner of my room a programme for the day was posted. "Chapel at 9 o'clock." What shall I do? Breakfast at 10; then hunt; then dinner at 1 o'clock, tea at 5; and then dine again at 8. How can people live by candlelight in these great rooms? No wonder they see ghosts.

After dinner we were in a room too large for conversation, so we promenaded in groups and lost each other. The women and children at last surrounded Stafford Northcote. He does not preach to them as in Parliament, but tells them stories, or, rather, funny dialogues. I lost all, or nearly all, of what he said. I could not follow it.

The temptation to quote from the volume is hard to resist. I cannot omit this description of Gladstone on the eve of a general election dining at the French Embassy:

Yesterday we had Mr. Gladstone to dinner. He was awaiting the result of the election at Greenwich. He was magnificently tranquil, either as being certain of success, or as affecting the resignation of a sage who is not unwilling to return to his favorite studies. This is the eighteenth time he has been before the elections, and he told me it was the last. He was charming, or at least he possesses always the art of charming me, with his openness of mind and his inexhaustible store of recollections. We passed in review about all the reforms that "the crotchet mongers" are peddling now from "meeting" to "meeting." Gladstone seems to feel a sincere attraction toward everything that appeals to him as being generous. I repeat, he is a charmer, though not, perhaps, a very reassuring one. During the evening he received the notice of the re-election of his son by a small majority. He had requested not to be wakened when the notice of his own fate arrived. His awakening could not have been very agreeable; he had passed with a small majority, second on the list, and all the morning's news was bad for the government.

With all his esprit M. Gavard is but little of a wit. We find few stories, few retorts or witticisms. There is one, however—that of the Duc de Broglie on encountering M. de Bernstorff, the Prussian ambassador at the Foreign Office. It was before peace had been declared between France and Germany, and the presumption was of a difficulty when the two representatives met. Lady Stanley was with the Duc de Broglie, and was a bit preoccupied as to the encounter. "Don't be afraid. I'll find a way out," assured the Duke. Presently he turned to Bernstorff: "I have been distressed so long at seeing the Prussians established in my home without having invited them that it is a pleasure at the house of a friend to meet one of them that I can exchange courtesies with." Quite neat, was it not? There is another amusing recontre, which I leave M. Gavard to tell his own way:

Here is what happens when a successor of the dukes and peers who formerly represented France abroad, goes to pay his respects to a king passing through the country. Just as he puts up his umbrella to get a cab, an elegant coupe stops at his door—it is his tailor. It was impossible to refuse Mr. Cook the honor of saving me from the rain and to conduct me to Buckingham Palace. I shan't tell the Queen, nor——! On the way the tailor gave me five pounds for the bazar, and announced that his wife is going to make some purchases there.

Queen Victoria, while at Balmoral recently, visited an aged cottager living near. On leaving Her Majesty said to the old lady who had been entertaining her, "Well, Mrs. ——, you will now no longer be afraid of me, and I shall expect you to pay me a visit." "Ah, ma'am," replied the old dame, "it's not yerself I'm afeard on—it's them grand servants."

Two Turks were at a French banquet. Towards the conclusion of the feast a Frenchman selected a toothpick from the tray near him, and politely passed the tray on to his neighbor, who however peremptorily declined the offer, exclaiming, "No, thank you! I have already eaten two of the accursed things, and I want no more!"

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

For Two Weeks Only

SECOND
Great and Genuine Clearance
Sale of

Art Goods

AT

S. & G. GUMP

113 Geary Street.

Pictures, Mirrors, Vases, Ornaments, Bric-a-Brac, Clocks, Brass Tables, Lamps, Crockery and Glassware, Paintings, Bronze and Marble Statuary, Pedestals, French and Dresden Furniture — in fact every article in our establishment

AT A DISCOUNT OF

TWENTY PER CENT

FROM OUR REGULAR PRICES

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER

SUCCESSORS TO

H. P. GREGORY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO

MACHINERY

Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

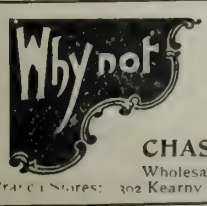
521-523 Market St., San Fran.



Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
Branch Stores: 302 Kearny St. and 1212-14 Market St.

"It gives me great pleasure to accept the dedication of your beautiful songs.
"S. JADASSOLEN, Leipsic."

Song Album by H. B. PASMORE

Nineteen Beautiful Songs Sent for One Dollar

OLIVER DITSON CO., Boston

THE SPORT OF KINGS

Horseracing Day by Day — Action of the Horse-Show Association.

The character of the sport across the bay since last writing has been to some extent marred by unfortunate weather. During the actual racing the moisture has usually remained in the clouds, to the comfort of visitors to the course, but at other intervals a considerable amount of rain has fallen, rendering the going bad for horses. Scratchings at the last moment have in consequence been somewhat numerous, depriving some of the principal events of their full interest.

Bearing out the good opinion expressed in these columns a week ago, the Dunne stable has been well to the fore, landing three events on Saturday last, besides its successful essays on other days. Of this useful string the 4-year-old Damien (Strathmore—Beatrice) has been the most conspicuous, his wins including a mile handicap, with 104 pounds, in 1:41½, and the McLaughlin stakes, $1,250, at the same distance, in which latter the Strathmore horse and Schiller were a head apart at the finish. Seeing the hollow beating Damien gave Barney Schreiber's horse in the Hobart stakes, one and one-sixteenth miles, at Ingleside, when receiving ten pounds, a week previously, Schiller made a better show than could have been expected, probably due to his liking for mud, while Slaughter certainly rode the horse with good judgment. Wheel of Fortune, with nine pounds the worst of the weight, proved her ability on Monday to travel in the dirt ahead of Stentor all the way for one and one-sixteenth miles, the remainder of the field, five in number and of poor class, being beaten off. In a mile and a quarter handicap, won by Ostler Joe, 109 pounds, imp. Sain failed to stay the distance, his bolt being shot at the end of a mile. This is not in keeping with his form at the same distance earlier in the month, and the colt is probably feeling the effect of being overdone when only partially fit.

In the mile race on Tuesday, David, in receipt of eight pounds from Ferrier, set a cracking pace, and landed at the wire some ten lengths in front of the latter, who seems to have gone off considerably since the beginning of the year, when, with the crusher of 140 pounds on his back, he divided the two good performers, Scarf Pin, 114 pounds, and Caspar, 116 pounds, heads only each way, and ran into third place in the three-fourths mile Berkeley handicap. Time, 1:14¾.

The 2-year-old events have brought good fields to the post, but none of the youngsters have given evidence of particular merit. It is still too early in the season to expect any 2-year-old to perform really well, though at the ensuing Ingleside meeting, when some good stake events for that division are to be brought off, something good may be uncorked.

To-day the third anniversary of the valuable Thornton stakes, four miles, will be celebrated, and is certain to attract a large share of public interest especially after the memorable performance of the good son of Hampton, imp. Star Ruby, in this event at the whilom Bay District track last year. The field will, of course, be small, but fairly select, the 4-year-olds, likely to start, Damien, Schiller and Rey del Bandidos, with 109 pounds each, being possessed of the most prestige, judged on this season's racing; though Thornhill, 6 years, 118 pounds, can negotiate the distance satisfactorily if he chooses, while Lobengula, 5 years, 117 pounds, with G. B. Morris' training experience, is deemed by many worthy of respect, especially should he be ridden by a vigorous jockey like Thorpe. So long a journey calls for a rider that can hold his mount together at every point, and be ready to squeeze the last ounce out at the finish, if need be. It is to be hoped that track conditions will be favorable, and that the field may not dwindle down to less than five or six starters.

The Horse Show Association has, this week, issued a circular to breeders, owners and the general public interested in its operations, which plainly and distinctly sets out its intentions with respect to a continuance, without interruption, of the shows which have been held under its auspices in this city during each of the last three years. Whether the event is to be repeated this year or not remains to be decided by the amount of encouragement which owners of horses are prepared to extend to it. The association makes it perfectly clear that in the face of dwindling support it will not proceed with the work of organizing another show, until it has sufficient assurance that horse-owners intend to second its efforts and show their appreciation of the benefits which are afforded by a well-conducted and regularly recurring feature of the kind. It is open to any one to express an opinion on the subject, in response to the circular, the management being actuated solely by a desire to make the annual show a success, which they realize is possible only by the adhesion of every section of the horse interests in the State. It will be a thousand pities if it should be found that the show idea has not outlasted its period of probation in this State. The material need may never be wanting in a country so pre-eminently suited to the horse in his highest perfection, liberal financial support from entirely disinterested quarters is to be had for the asking, in fact, without it, and as a means of social enjoyment, leading up to the beneficial distribution of money and the advancement of an important industry, a show of the kind cannot be surpassed. A retrograde step in such matters is hardly ever advisable, and it is hard to believe that it would be so in this instance. If such should have to be taken, it will simply mean that California cannot, or will not, support an institution that, in other places, where horses are extensively bred and kept for all kinds of service, is found to be of the utmost advantage.

Entitling a little story or two "Isinglassiana," in the Badmonton magazine for January, "Rapier" tells of the welfare of the great horse Isinglass. His notes are especially interesting to us here, as Islington, the full brother of the triple-crowned king, is one of the leading stud-horses in California, and making the season, as previously, at Rancho del Paso, his services being available to the public at the nominal fee of $100. The word nominal is used advisedly, inasmuch as the subscription to Isinglass in England is 300 guineas ($1,575), and that he is booked full for the next four years! Breeders on this coast have therefore a grand opportunity to secure this invaluable blood. Islington is the property of Mr. James Shaw Robinson, of Hanford, brother-in-law of Captain McCalmont, M. P., the owner of Isinglass, and breeders of both horses, which are the only ones in the world of identical lineage, and are never likely to go out of their present owners' hands. Islington has already made three seasons here, Mr. Haggin using his services extensively. The first of his get are now 2-year-olds, having sold well in the market, as compared with other produce, and promising to make race horses. On the ranch they have always had the highest opinion of his youngsters, and latest reports are that the horse is as fit as can be for his coming season.

The most important sale that has ever taken place in the United States in connection with the hackney breeding interest was held in New York on the 3rd instant, and, though at the time of writing full particulars have yet to come to hand, it has been learned that the celebrated stallion, Imp. Matchless of Londesboro', was purchased by the Glendower Stock Farm, Staten Island, N. Y., for the sum of $12,000, a figure that shows the estimate in which first-class hackney blood and individuality is held. Matchless was imported into this country as a four-year-old, having been foaled in 1884, and has produced without doubt more stock than any other hackney stallion at present here, his progeny, whether full or half-bred hackney, being generally held in great esteem. In fact, so bountiful has been the harvest reaped from his loins by his late owner, Dr. Seward Webb, that he concluded to pass him on, while yet in his prime, and depend upon the abundant infusion of his blood still retained in the Shelburne Farms Stud. This good business judgment has certainly been well rewarded, and at the same time the great horse's sphere of usefulness has been extended in a new direction, which should be beneficial to the breeding interests of the country.

BENEDICT.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an equilistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Leuch, proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75cents.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

DR. H. G. YOUNG — Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Fine Furs and Sealskin Garments

To order. Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast. All work guaranteed first-class

AD KOCOUR, Fashionable Furrier

[illegible] Kearny Street

Upstairs opposite Chronicle. Formerly cutter with Revillon Freres, Paris, London.

Perrier-Jouet Champagne

EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand

W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY

E. L. G. STEELE & CO.

208 California St., San Francisco

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.

Mount Vernon Company, Baltimore — Pacific Coast Sale Agents

Army and Navy Club

Is the only WHISKY on the market, every package of which bears an AFFIDAVIT guaranteeing it to be absolutely PURE and over SIX YEARS OLD

MEYERFELD, MITCHELL & CO.

116 Front Street, San Francisco

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

Have your friend who a Smoker is, Tell him there is just out a Smoker's Tip, Which will prevent a cancer lip. Mailed on receipt of three 2-cent stamps by

ELASTIC TIP CO.

Boston 738 Market St., S. F. Chicago

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Youngest Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

E. & J. Burke's Viceregal Blend

This superb Scotch Whisky is [illegible] from the choicest brands of Selected Old Whiskies from the most famous distilleries

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD

PORTLAND SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES

BALDWIN THEATRE — AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Next Week Monday, Feb 22d
The Eminent Character Actor
JAMES A. HERNE
In His Own Beautiful Comedy-Drama
"SHORE ACRES"
Entire New Scenery Employed
An Acting Company of Twenty-five Members
Direction of Henry C Miner
314 Nights in New York, 175 in Chicago, 110 in Boston
You cannot afford to miss it!

Columbia Theatre.
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & Co. LESSEES AND MANAGERS
Commencing Monday, Feb. 22d. Matinee Saturday Only
America's Greatest Comedienne, DAINTY
FANNY RICE
In the New Version of Her Latest and Greatest Laughing Success
"At the French Ball"
Assisted by a Perfect Comedy Company!
TWENTY : NEW SPECIALTIES : TWENTY

Orpheum
O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL
Week Commencing Monday, Feb. 22
The Eminent Comedian, Author and Dancer, Barney Fagan and Henrietta Byron, Comedienne
In Conjunction with the Grand Opera Quartette:
Guille, Abramoff, Miss Cotte, Miss Buche
The Pantzer Trio, Funny Demons; Hayes, Lytton & Hayes in "Camille Up to Date"
The Finneys, Champion Swimmers; Ward & Curran
Special Matinee Washington's Birthday
Reserved seats 50 and 25c: balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House
MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager
Commencing Monday, Feb. 22d
For One Week Only! Grand Double Bill!
Gilbert & Sullivan's Esthetic Two-act Opera
PATIENCE, or Bunthone's Bride
Preceded by Von Suppe's Operetta, the Lovely
GALATEA
Great Casts, Correct Costumes, Appropriate Accessories
In preparation: "The Merry Wives of Windsor"
Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre
BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : : MANAGERS
Last performances to day and to-morrow, matinees and nights, of Sardou's
A SCRAP OF PAPER
Monday, February 22d, Grand Production of the Celebrated Play
Saints and Sinners
Reappearance of George Osbourne
15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991

CALIFORNIA THEATRE
Evenings of Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Feb. 25-26-27
Matinees Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Feb. 26-27-28

SOUSA
And His Famous Band!
21,000 Miles
January to July
Ocean to Ocean
Gulf to Gulf
ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Prima Donna Soprano
MARTINA JOHNSTONE, Violiniste. ARTHUR PRYOR, Trombonist. FRANZ HELL, Fluegelhorn
Prices: 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 $1.50. Sale opens Feb. 22d

AS THE WORLD WAGS

Fancies and Foibles of the Smart Set the World Round.

In these days the artificial is so often made to appear like the real that even the most highly educated cannot penetrate a sham. An interesting question recently noticed is as to the etiquette of wearing imitation jewelry. A fashionable woman in town, whose position is unquestionable, wears several strings of pearls, one of which is real and the rest shams, and hardly knows herself which is the genuine. Another woman, who owns a couple of diamond stars, has presented herself with several others—the best "Palais Royal brilliants," whose glittering radiance is quite undimmed by their juxtaposition with the real stones. At a birthday dinner recently the heroine of the occasion wore a ruby surrounded by pearls as a brooch. This was greatly admired. Taking it from the lace which it fastened, she passed it to one of her friends. The jewel was handed from one to another until it had made the circuit of the table. All the guests were people of culture, familiar with gems, and some of them connoisseurs. After the stone had been unanimously praised, the owner fastened it in its place again, saying quietly: "I think it is pretty. I bought it yesterday at B——'s for $2."

It has long been conceded that a string of Roman pearls may be worn by a young girl without laying her taste open to question. It is a new thing, however, for rich women to bring real gems and bogus ones together in such a way as to deceive the very elect; and it seems a pity that the old standards of noblesse oblige, affecting the wearing of jewels and lace, should be lowered.

"For new people, charity is one of the best ways of getting into society," said Mrs. Knickerbocker, "besides being much more respectable than most methods. A couple of hundreds sent to the board of directors of a fashionable nursery or hospital has an excellent effect, and taking a large number of tickets for a philanthropic entertainment is also appreciated. I should say, on the whole, that almsgiving pays better than entertainments at the beginning of an ambitious woman's social career. No one would refuse a donation, and it must be thankfully acknowledged. I have seen the most exclusive women, who would not have deigned to call on a new society aspirant, visit a liberal subscriber to their pet charity, and become intimate with women whom, under other conditions, they would not have looked at. I have watched many failures and successes in my life," concluded the good lady, "and I recommend philanthropy as the best of all entering wedges."

The high-bred manner that marked the caste of Vere de Vere is certainly not characteristic of aristocratic society in France, England or America now. The cynical Frenchman who said he could always tell the difference between an actress and a countess by the sueprior refinement and good breeding of the actress was not so far wrong. Not long ago an English dame of the old school, who had brought up her daughters in the traditional, admirable, insular, and essentially British manner, got into a first-class carriage on the Dover mail with two of those daughters, and they arranged their various impedimenta in the neat, orthodox British fashion. Hardly were the three seated when a party rushed down to the platform, talking and laughing, calling each other "Billy," and "Nell," and "Tommy," and "Polly," and saying good-bye in noisy fashion to one of the lot, who was evidently not to accompany the rest.

"My dears," said the British matron, bristling with disapproval, "those dreadful creatures are coming in here. They are evidently Americans. Do not on any account permit them to scrape an acquaintance. I am told that they are most objectionable in that way." As the strangers scrambled in, and the guard slammed the door, materfamilias and her girls glared haughtily at the intruders, one of whom said pleasantly: "I fear we are crowding you, but there was no other carriage to be had." To this there was no response. Another well-meant remark about moving some papers was also received with chilling hauteur.

At Dover the two parties stopped at the same hotel and crossed the next morning to Calais. But what a transformation scene on the steamer! The British matron met the noisy young folks with a beaming smile and a bow, to which a supercilious stare was the only response. The prim daughters proffered rugs and other comforts, which were curtly refused. What was the cause of this sudden turning of the tables? Merely that the English matron, with the curiosity characteristic of her class, had examined the hotel regster, and, to her dismay, had read "Lord and Lady Fitznoodle, "The Duke of Mayfair," and "The Honorable Maud Highflyer." The smartest of the smartest set in London! The intimate friends of H. R. H.! The people of all others that they were most dying to know!

Now that house parties are rife and country visiting the chief dissipation of the moment, one hears curious things about the smart hostesses who are trying to outdo one another in hospitalities of the most up-to-date description. One lady, who is as wealthy as she is ambitious, carries out the harmonious perfections of her guests' accommodations to the minutest details. If she gives the Countess of Killmequick the blue rooms, that lady will find that not only is the upholstery of her temporary apartments of the most exquisite and cerulean tint, but so also are the delicate linen sheets and pillow cases that furnish the elegant bedstead on which she is to repose her aristocratic frame. Each bed in fact, is supplied with sets of linen dyed in accord with the coloring of the suite in which it is situated. A room furnished in rose pink will have its brazen couch covered with linen of the rosiest hue, and the air will be filled with an indefinable odor of rose leaves that harmonizes with its exquisite tint. Another fad of the winter is the scenting of each bed with some special perfume just before the hour of retiring. This is accomplished after a good, old-fashioned manner that is quite as delightful as it is rococo, and for its special advantage has the brazen warming-pan of the early Victorean period been revived. The warming-pan, polished to a dazzling degree, is filled with glowing coals. Inside the cover is inserted a sort of tiny secondary brazier, filled with a rose-scented incense, that emits a perfumed smoke that clings to the sheets. Thus it is when you slip into your downy nest at a fashionable country house nowadays, your whole body seems laved in a delicious warm perfume that is almost a certain foe to insomnia, of which so many people complain in these times. It is said that the Countess of Warwick, herself a bad sleeper, was the first English woman to institute a fashion that has since become a craze.

"I should like to tell you exactly how, at least in my humble opinion," writes "Mrs. Papillon" in "Vanity Fair, "a woman should be dressed in this year of grace. There are shops here and shops in Paris, but there is no real head to the fashions since the death of that very great man, Worth; so that now and then one grows rather bewildered, as first one thing and then another is set before one as 'the only wear.' But about a few items there is no possibility of making a mistake. In Paris, Royal blue is the color; it has almost superseded red, which, after all, can only be worn in the country—or in town under a very long coat. Then the hats, instead of being a foot high on one side, as they were in the beginning of the autumn season, are now turned up right in front, while the chignons disappear entirely inside the crown. Capes are very gradually going out, but they are sometimes made as if they were tight-fitting, with big sleeves. Camellias have ousted gardenias as flowers; and black handkerchiefs are all the rage in Paris, while those who prefer to be a little bit behind rather than before the fashions are using very dark batistes.

"There is one thing almost de rigueur; certainly no woman who respects herself is now seen without a rope of pearls or a diamond chain. The handsomest pearl ropes I have seen are those worn by the Duchess of Devonshire and Lady Theo Stuart; Lady Hartopp and Lady Sophie Scott have such very pretty diamond chains; and one of the prettiest chains (which belongs to Mrs. Ronalds) is made of alternate diamonds and pearls. It is not, perhaps, such an expensive fashion as it seems, for pearls can always be restrung, and every year they are rising in price. But the diamond chain is rather a luxury, as the diamonds could scarcely be reset to any very pretty purpose. Of course, all the jewels that one sees are not real, but it is almost impossible to detect real from imitation pearls. I stopped one afternoon in Bond street to look into the Parisian Diamond Shop window, and there were ropes and ropes of pearls, all so beautifully formed and tinted, and shining softly, as do real pearls. Some were graduated sizes, which gave an effective appearance of economy, and some (no doubt for the same reason) had golden links between. Also hanging in the window was an imitation diamond chain, which sparkled bravely, and was beautifully made; and another lovely chain was brightened with alternate diamonds and sapphires. This is the best place, so I am told, to buy the new fashionable diamond buckles and be-pearled or be-diamonded side combs; but it is the pearls and turquoises which quite defy detection. Who would doubt a gold bangle or gold ring set with whole pearls? And who would question a turquoise brooch or links both rimmed severely with gold and meant to wear together?

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

FOR RELIEVING THROAT DISEASES, COUGHS AND HOARSENESS, use "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes. Avoid imitations.

Champagne in Europe.

For some time past the large demand for vintage wines has created a scarcity and increased the value of good brands of celebrated years to such an extent that now only the connoisseur indulges in a selection of the superior vintage years of 1874, 1880, 1884 and 1889, paying fancy prices for the same. Pre-eminent amongst these are the wines shipped by the famous house of Moet & Chandon, the largest shippers of champagne in the world. Their brand is highly appreciated in all the prominent cities of Europe, especially in London, where it is the leader and in great favor at court. Their White Seal (Grande Cuvee) of late years has largely increased in sales and popularity.—New York Times.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB
(INGLESIDE TRACK)
The Only Perfect Winter Track in America
Racing from Feb. 22 to March 6, inclusive
Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine
First Race at 2 p.m.
Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar. Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.
Moet & Chandon White Seal Stakes Monday, Feb. 22d
The Schreiber Stakes Saturday, Feb. 27th
The Crocker Stakes Saturday, March 6th
A. B. SPRECKELS, President.
W. S. LEAKE, Secretary.

RACING! RACING!
California Jockey Club
Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, Feb. 8 to 20, at OAKLAND RACETRACK
Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine
Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp
Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.
Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.
THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF JOHN PHELAN, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOHN PHELAN,
Adm. of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, February 7, 1897.
J. D. SULLIVAN,
Attorney for Administrator.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971 S.W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

ASSESSMEMT NOTICE — BULLION MINING COMPANY — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 49) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the offices of the company, room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of February, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday the 11th day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.
Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, S. F.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE — BEST AND BELCHER MINING COMPANY — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 26th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 61) of twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on 2d day of March, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Tuesday the 23d day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Julia Consolidated Mining Company

Assessment No. 28
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied January 21, 1897
Delinquent in office January 26, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, March 19, 1397

J. STADTFELD JR., Secretary.
Office, room 56, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 26
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied February 10, 1897
Delinquent in office, March 16, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 6, 1897

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary,
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO

TELEPHONE GREEN 143

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202

Crocker Building, San Francisco

SCOTT & McCORD

HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS

OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

The Wave's Clubbing List

For 1897

By special arrangement with the publishers THE WAVE is prepared to [illegible] Subscriptions must be paid in advance

| | |
|---|---|
| THE WAVE AND ARENA | $ 5 00 |
| " " " ARGOSY | 4 |
| " " ART AMATEUR | 5 25 |
| " " ATLANTIC MONTHLY | 5 50 |
| " " BRICK-A-BRAC | 4 75 |
| " " CASSIER'S | 5 25 |
| " " CENTURY | 5 50 |
| " " CHAUTAUQUAN | 4 50 |
| " " COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE | 4 50 |
| " " CRITIC | 4 50 |
| " " DELINEATOR | 3 50 |
| " " ECLECTIC | 5 00 |
| " " ENGINEERING MAGAZINE | 4 25 |
| " " FORUM | 5 00 |
| " " HARPER'S BAZAR | 4 50 |
| " " " MAGAZINE | 5 50 |
| " " " WEEKLY | 4 50 |
| " " " YOUNG PEOPLE | 3 00 |
| " " ILLUSTRATED AMERICAN | 5 70 |
| " " INDEPENDENT | 4 75 |
| " " JUDGE | 4 50 |
| " " LIFE | 6 25 |
| " " LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE | 4 50 |
| " " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE | 7 75 |
| " " MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE | 4 75 |
| " " MUNSEY'S " | 4 75 |
| " " NEW ENGLAND " | 5 00 |
| " " NINETEENTH CENTURY | 6 25 |
| " " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW | 6 50 |
| " " N. Y. JOURNAL, DAILY | 5 00 |
| " " " SUNDAY | 1 50 |
| " " N. Y. WEEKLY | 1 50 |
| " " N. Y. SUNDAY | 4 50 |
| " " N. Y. TRIBUNE, SUNDAY | 4 75 |
| " " OUTING | 3 75 |
| " " PUCK | 4 50 |
| " " REVIEW OF REVIEWS | 4 00 |
| " " SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN | 5 00 |
| " " " SUPPLEMENT | 6 50 |
| " " SUNSET | 3 00 |
| " " TOILET | 3 00 |
| " " TOWN TOPICS | 5 50 |
| " " TRUTH | 4 00 |
| " " VOGUE | 3 00 |
| " " YOUTH'S COMPANION | 3 75 |

An Advantageous Offer!

Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan — McClure's Magazine
Ladies' Home Journal — Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

| | |
|---|---|
| Guarantee Capital and Surplus - | $2,040,201 66 |
| Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - | 1,000,000 00 |
| Deposits December 31, 1896 - - | 27,730,247 45 |

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.

Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

| | |
|---|---|
| Deposits June 30, 1896 - | $23,657,219 |
| Paid up Capital and Surplus - | 1,594,085 |

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER — ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE — GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY — DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER — PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. TOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

A contemporary tells a good story of a practical joke once played upon Mr. Labouchere by Bret Harte. Dressing himself in threadbare, frayed, and faded garments, such as might be worn by either a Bohemian journalist or a tramp, Harte visited the office of "Truth," and asked to see Mr. Labouchere. He was shown into the inner office of the Member for Northampton, to whom he said that he had a poem which he would be pleased to sell, and asked Mr. Labouchere to look it over. Mr. Labouchere refused to glance at the production; but, upon Harte earnestly pleading his immediate need of money, Mr. Labouchere hastily examined the manuscript. Then he returned it, with the remark, "I cannot use this trash!" "But," exclaimed Harte, "I'm starving!" "What do you want for it?" inquired Mr. Labouchere. "Is it worth a pound?" said Harte, looking as if very near bursting into tears. "Worth a pound? It is not worth the paper it is written on!" declared Mr. Labouchere. "If you want charity, I can give you a few shillings; but it would be accompanied by advice to the effect that a strong, able-bodied man like you might make more money and give less cause of offense by seeking employment at hop-picking or before the mast. Instead of attempting to worm your way into journalism, why did you not join the expedition for the relief of General Gordon? Who are you?" "Bret Harte," was the answer, as a portion of the disguise was removed, and Mr. Labouchere beheld a club companion whom he had known for many years.

Some time ago a young curate, seeking to be licensed by Dr. Temple, was, as is usual, bidden to read a few verses of the Bible, in order that the Bishop might judge of his fitness for conducting public worship. "Not loud enough!" growled the prelate when the young man had finished. "Oh, I am sorry to hear that, my lord! A lady in church yesterday told me I could be heard at the very bottom of the church." "Ah! are you engaged?" queried the Bishop, with a keen glance from beneath his bushy eyebrows. "Yes, my lord," was the reply of the candidate. "Now listen to me, young man," roughly but kindly replied Dr. Temple. "While you are engaged to her, don't believe a word she tells you; but," he added, with a grim chuckle, "after you are married, believe every word she says."

It is told of a certain humorous canon of the Protestant Church of Ireland that he was one day driving in a car close to the Lakes of Killarney, where echoes are repeated in some places as many as eight times. Addressing the driver, he said, "Do you know, Pat, that there are none but Protestant echoes here?" "No, sir, I niver h'ard it; and I don't believe it, either." "Well, you shall hear it presently," said the canon. Arriving at a favorable spot, the canon called out, beginning softly, and raising his voice as he came to the last words, "Do you believe in Pio Nono?" Echo answered, "No, no—no, no—no, no—no, no." Pat, though a zealous Catholic, was delighted at the joke, and said, "Bedad, when I drive one of the raal clergy here, won't I have sport out of him!"

Dean Stanley, the well known English divine, has great presence of mind. He was dining at the home of a statesman, and arrived very late. When he came his collar was unfastened, and the ends vibrated like little white wings about the head of a cherub. People could not but look at him with curiosity during dinner, and at length, with due precautions, his hostess ventured to ask him if he knew that his collar had broken adrift. "Oh, yes," said the Dean. "Do you mind?" "Not at all," the lady answered. "Then I don't mind, either," answered the Dean; "the button dropped off while I was dressing." And he went on with his conversation.

Two boys of Yale College in the old days used to bribe the printers' "devils" to get proofs of the examination papers for them. When the college authorities put a stop to this practice a bright idea seized one youth, and he saved the whole suffering party. He hired one of the printers (it was summer) to wear a pair of white trousers when going to the office, and at noon to sit down on the "form"—that is, the type set up ready for printing—of the precious examination questions. The inky seat of that pair of trousers sold for a great deal more money than the clothes were worth in their original spotlessness.

Augustus Hare tells a story in his "Reminiscences" of Archbishop Harcourt, who was very fond of hunting—so fond that he was very near refusing the archbishopric because he thought if he accepted he would have to give it up. He consulted a friend, who said that he must take counsel with others. "Of course I should never join the meet," said the Archbishop, "but, you know, I might fall in with the hounds by accident." After some time the friend came back, and said that, on the whole, the party considered that the Archbishop might hunt, provided that he did not shout.

Once a clergyman went to pay a visit to an old Yorkshire yeoman, of the old type, who was lying on his deathbed, and after a few preliminary words the worthy minister said that, if the veteran had anything on his mind, he hoped he would ease his conscience and confide it to his pastoral ear, so that he might die in peace. "Well, sir," answered the old sportsman, "if I only had to live my life over again, I'd fish more with bait and less with flies."

Longfellow's journal has some curious stories in it. The poet tells of a lady in black who came up to him one morning as he stood at the front door of his house. "Is this the house," she asked, "where Longfellow was born?" "No; he was not born here." "Did he die here?" "Not yet." "Are you Longfellow?" "I am." "I thought you died two years ago."

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——

——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME — CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

HIRSCH & KAISER

Successors to HIRSCH, KAHN & CO.

Opticians

Will remove March 1st to

NO. 7 KEARNY STREET

Opposite the Chronicle Building

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE——

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

HENRY ST. GOAR — EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign 403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Double Stars!

PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURATION AND MARDI GRAS

These are the two great functions of our country for the current year.

Their dates are fixed—the one by venerable precedent and fundamental law—the other by the world's civil and ecclesiastical calendar.

They cannot wait because they are limited; but that feature in

Sunset Limited

will not prevent its waiting for you until 10.00 P. M. Tuesday, February 23, 1897, from San Francisco, and 2.30 P. M. Wednesday the 24th from Los Angeles.

This train secures a matchless trip to New Orleans for the Mardi Gras to be celebrated on Monday and Tuesday, March 1st and 2d, and thence—onward to Washington City in ample time to hear the first clarion note that precedes the inauguration of President McKinley.

Such a programme of pleasure is a most unusual one—a double pageant of noblest character—to be enjoyed on a single trip.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. February 10 and 25.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, February 4, 10, 15, 20, 25, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25 and every fourth day thereafter

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. February 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Feb. 23, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.
S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, March 4, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Field Sports at the Presidio

Feeding the Unemployed

A Chinese Banquet

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 9 SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 27, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS.

"A LONG PULL AND A STRONG PULL"

MOUNTED TUG OF WAR BETWEEN TEAMS OF RIVAL BATTERIES: ONE OF THE CONTESTS OF THE PRESIDIO'S FIELD-DAY

Photo by Charles Weidne

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 27, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2-3 |
| An Army Without Arms | 4 |
| Jerome Gautrelle, Anarchist; by Victor La Harpe | 5 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 6 |
| Views of the Field-Day Sports at the Presidio | 7 |
| Illustrated Journalism | 8 |
| Cloverdale's Citrus Fair | 8 |
| A Dual Existence | 8 |
| Herne, the Unconventional | 9 |
| The Orient Entertaining the Occident: a flashlight by Taber | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres | 11 |
| The Mutiny in Fiction: a Review | 12 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 13 |
| As the World Wags | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

NEW YORK AND PENNSYLVANIA IGNORED.

If one was to credit the early press dispatches coming from Canton it was evident that for the first time in years, if not in our history, the two most wealthy and populous of the States were to have no representative in the official family of the President. While the far West is to be given a portfolio and the middle West three, New York and Pennsylvania, which gave the largest popular and the largest electoral votes for the Republican ticket, were scarcely considered.

Why was this? There is but one answer, and that answer contains a warning and a lesson to party politicians.

New York and Pennsylvania were, at the late Republican national convention, manipulated as principalities and rotten boroughs of Thomas C. Platt and Mathew S. Quay. In past national conventions the influence of these States made and unmade presidential aspirants, and to control the vote of delegations from them meant almost to name the party candidate. Within their respective States, the power of these men was so strong that they thought it possible to defeat the uprising sentiment of the Republican party in favor of Major McKinley and hold the whip of power over the national convention. Their machines were so perfect and their State control so complete as to enable them to enter the St. Louis convention with delegations that were virtually marionettes. Their scheme was most comprehensive and well planned, but they failed to take account of public opinion. It was soon discovered, however, that all their combinations would be ineffective against the overwhelming public sentiment which spoke for the candidate from Ohio. Had Mr. McKinley been less popular and the issues less critical, there is little doubt that these two politicians would have connived at the defeat of their party's candidate. As it was, they surely did no more than they were compelled to do. They dared not directly bolt, for they needed the popularity of Mr. McKinley to carry their States' local candidates.

The new President has apparently decided to recognize New York, but he will be justified in ignoring Platt and Quay. Their performances approached disloyalty to their party, and it is a matter of congratulation that the incoming President owes so little to them. The States which they master must suffer meanwhile, not so much because they have been lacking in conscience or in sturdiness as that their ostensible leaders and spokesmen were indiscreet and overconfident.

If it is once realized that when a State once gives itself up to do the bidding of a politician in national affairs that State is hazarding its political fortunes, partisans will not be so ready to subject their personal beliefs and convictions to the prejudices or ambitions of machine workers. But the lesson to be learned from this occurrence will go home to the leader, not to the people. It should be an established rule within all parties that when the voice of the people is made subsidiary to the will of the political boss, the State must suffer. If adopted, it would be effective in subjecting the dominating spirits to the political sentiments and opinions of the people, and this we presume is all that can be hoped for until the evils which have developed the boss system are themselves destroyed.

THE INTEREST OF LABOR IN CAPITAL

The agitator who has been wasting a very bad quality of breath and an infinitely worse character of logic in assaulting invested capital has encountered an obstruction that he hardly could have anticipated, and one, too, which he can scarcely overcome. Organized labor, in the East as well as in San Francisco, has with unmistakable emphasis declared that besides being interested in obtaining fair wages, it is likewise interested in preventing unfair treatment of its employers. Labor has come to recognize that fair pay for a fair day's work is only possible where invested capital is insured a fair return as well. The unions have been a little slow to comprehend the situation, but the principle involved is so elementary as scarcely to need illustration or argument to sustain it. The noise-maker was misled in believing it possible to delude the mechanic into supporting his raid upon invested capital, and so induce the man of toil to perform the very silly and foolish feat of cutting from under himself the support which alone insures continued employment at a fair scale of wages.

The New York "Sun," which is doubtless the greatest of all American dailies, in a recent editorial directed attention to the significant manifestations of a rational and wholesome sentiment existing among unions with respect to the agitation which seeks to array labor against capital. The "Sun" emphasizes its argument by pointing out that in Chicago the employes of the street railway companies arose in a body, and, with complete success, protested against the proposed resolution of the aldermen to reduce street railway fares to three cents. It also directed attention to the action of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen in Missouri, who laid before the Legislature a protest against various plans of attack leveled against their employers, in which the unions declared that "these obnoxious measures were not less a direct attack upon the welfare of the employes of the railway companies than upon the companies themselves." The asemblage of five great railway unions at Little Rock was still more emphatic. They declared that legislation directed against the revenues of their employers would inevitably result in a reduction of wages, and they appealed to the friends of labor to work and vote against such measures. The "Sun" says:

"It happens that the railroad men have reached a stage of organization superior to that of any other calling which embraces an equal number of employes, but the truth which they have perceived at last concerning the actual relation between capital and labor, applies to every known industry.

"There are more eyes to be opened than those in the heads of wage-earners who hold throttles, punch tickets, couple cars, click keys, and make fires."

As to labor, the truth of the situation has for a long while lain in concealment, but when the truth does come home to it, it will effectually strangle and bury beyond resurrection the unjust and unwarranted spirit of mischief that has threatened American capital for several years last past. This movement will not put an end to State control, neither will it abbreviate to the slightest extent the just and legal powers of the sovereign, but it will snuff out the firebrand of anarchy that has been menacing capital, threatening its destruction and complete retirement from lines of commercial and industrial activity. The rational and equitable exercise of State control has never been a thing for capital to fear.

Our great corporations are far from being perfect. No human institution can lay claim to the attribute of perfection. The man would be blind, indeed, who failed to discover faults in the great railroad and industrial organizations of the country, but there is a character of "regulation" that has been prompted by malice and had its birth in the mind either of the foe to property or the mercenary wretch who sought advantage from his political position, against the exercise of which every honest man should raise his voice in protest. Its success meant destruction, not regulation. There is a clearly defined line drawn between these two classes of interference with invested capital. One is just, equitable and fair, the other unjust, inequitable and monstrous. Once labor enters this field of endeavor, it will readily distinguish between the two. When this time comes the cowardly demagogue and the subscriber-loving press will soon take wisdom from the current of events and learn that the vote and the subscription of labor is not to be controlled by assaults upon its employer. Like the unstable weathercock, they will veer about to the shifting wind, and will most likely become quite as offensive and quite as annoying to decent men as the defender of capital as they are now as its assailants.

The unscrupulous man may in concealment violate the most sacred and the most rigid laws that legislative hand has spread upon our statute books, and, if he be cunning enough, may escape detection and punishment therefor; but there are natural and unwritten laws, the violation of which brings its certain punishment despite all the ingenuity of cunning. Agitation in the teeth of these natural laws cannot be sustained or outlive a temporary success, any more than one may lift himself up by his boot-straps.

There is an underlying obligation, not always recognized, but nevertheless a living, moral obligation, resting upon the employer of men to pay fair and adequate compensation for services performed. Where such a practice obtains and where such obligation is honored, there rests upon the man of labor with equal strictness a moral obligation to defend and protect to the bitter end the rights of the employer when unjustly assailed or threatened.

In these days of strong socialistic and agrarian tendencies, the income, the revenues, and, indeed, the very existence of the greatest employers of the age are in danger of destruction. It would be strange, indeed, if labor failed to recognize the reciprocity of interests existing between itself and the man who hires. Certainly, it requires no very skillful or very logical mind to discover that the total destruction of the employer means the total destruction of the employed. To diminish the rewards of capital is to cripple its ability to pay, and must inevitably end in whittling down the wages of the worker. To harass and annoy the one is to harass and annoy the other. The clenched fist of the demagogue raised to strike at the great employers of men casts its forbidding shadow on the laborer who bends to his toil. The blow when it strikes falls upon the highest officer and owner and travels ultimately to the lowliest employe within the service. Whatever harmfully affects the interests or prosperity of the one must also harmfully affect the interests and prosperity of the other. It has ever been a source of wonder to the writer whether the men in the employ of our local corporations realized that the vicious element of the press and the political marplots who make capital out of their enmity to the employer were as much the enemies of the men of labor as they were of the men of wealth. It is a cheering sign to see that the situation is appreciated, and it brings hope that the rascally wretch who is a reformer for greed of power or pelf has seen his day with us. Reasonable regulations we will always have, but to secure permanent and beneficial results the demagogue must be buried in oblivion and the polluted air cleansed of his ill-odorous breath.

THE QUESTION OF CONVICT LABOR.

Experience has shown that there are two ways of remedying a given existing evil. One is to remedy the evil itself, the other is to try to change the whole of the particular system and order of things that makes such evil possible. There is now, among others, a certain crying evil before the eyes of the public. It takes the form of a problem to be solved, a question to be answered. It relates to convict labor. The two conflicting elements of this problem are, first, the manifest unfairness of allowing prison labor to compete with that of free and honest men. The second is the absolute necessity of keeping the convicts employed.

If you allow prison-made shoes, let us say, to be sold—as they can be—at a price far lower than that for which they could be made by any industrious cobbler, you drive the cobbler out of business—you may say you drive him to starvation. On the other hand, take from the convict his occupation of making shoes, shut him in his cell or in the "yard" idle, day in and day out, with nothing but his thoughts to occupy him, and—the fact has been proved—you drive him to insanity.

So wholesome an effect does steady labor produce upon the mind that it is one of the very means used by directors of insane asylums to help restore their charges to reason.

There is nothing new about this question; it has been under discussion for years. The whole matter has been revived by the enactment of a law in some of the Eastern States forbidding the convicts to labor, and locally, by the Manufacturers' and Producers' Association of this city, who have protested against the further employment of jute mills at San Quentin.

It has been suggested as an expedient that the convicts be put to work repairing and building roads or that they be occupied in the manufacture of articles for the State, or that their spare time be taken up in athletic exercises, drills, games, competitions and the like. But to each of these substitutes for labor there are sound and valid objections. To employ convicts in road work would mean that gangs of twenty, thirty and thirty-five men be taken to great distances from the prison, a procedure which would but put a premium upon attempted breaks, unless each gang were patroled by an almost equally large gang of guards, while if the men were chained together they would be unable to work with any degree of efficiency.

It is true the convicts could perform a certain amount of State work, but it has been found by actual test that this affords employment to but comparatively few; a vast percentage would still be left to eat out their hearts in enforced idleness.

The third plan is to occupy the convict's leisure time by compelling him to indulge in open-air "sports." Leapfrog has been suggested, and football, baseball and military drill. But consider for a moment. The very idea of incarceration implies a certain amount of rigor and deprivation from the ordinary enjoyments of free men. The convicts are not supposed to enjoy themselves. The prison is a place for punishment, not for recreation and amusement. And imagine the spectacle, if you please, of an armed guard taking out a band of convicts, and, in spirit if not in fact, saying to them, "Play leapfrog now, ye terriers, or you will be deprived of your credits. Amuse yourselves now, ye bloomin' cons or ye'll suffer for it." Football in a prison yard! The idea suggests possibilities. An eleven of murderers lining up against an eleven of Grand Larcenies, or the Assault-to-Kill nine crossing bats with the Petty-Thieves. The Embezzlers might form a golf club, and the Defaulting-Bank-Cashiers a team of long distance runners. The whole idea is ridiculous.

There is one make-shift left—the treadmill, than which no more inhuman instrument of torture was ever invented. It is all very well for a thirty-day man, but it is a curious fact that this energy expended on the mill, year in and year out, with no visible excuse, no palpable, tangible return, is just one degree worse than solitary confinement. Imagine a life-timer at work treading the mill. Do you remember in your Dore's "Dante" the picture of those naked wretches who were compelled, through all eternity to roll enormous bags of gold—weighing just a feather less than the very utmost they could handle—up an endless hill? Very well, that is the treadmill.

What, then is to be done with the convict? You have run him down, caught him, brought him to justice, jailed him. Now, what are you to do with him? You may deprive him of his liberty; you have no right to deprive him of his reason. In so doing you are worthy of a place in his cell, a "con" yourself. What are you to do with him? You say he may not work, you say he ought not to play. The alternative is solitude, idleness, then moroseness, sullenness, "prison madness," suicidal mania, final mental collapse. This is the evil. It would seem you cannot remedy it.

The fact of the matter is that our whole convict system is wrong. The authorities on criminology and penology the world over are gradually coming to this conclusion. The theory of the jail has been tested and found wanting. A revolution in the conception of the penitentiary is the thing demanded. The evil of convict labor is not the only evil that exists in connection with the prison. If you cannot remedy the evil, what then? The only course left is to change the whole of the particular system and order of things that makes such evil possible.

THE NEW CIRCUIT JUDGE.

The possible successors of Judge McKenna have been gradually dwindling down in numbers until they may now be enumerated upon the digits of one hand. Four District Judges are candidates for promotion: Judges Hawley of Nevada, Hanford of Washington, Bellinger of Oregon, and Morrow of California. The friends of these gentlemen claim that it is a custom and practice to promote District Judges to the Circuit Bench in case of a vacancy on the latter, and it is seriously urged that unless a California District Judge be promoted a District Judge from Oregon or Washington will inevitably receive the appointment.

It is neither a practice nor a custom to promote from the District Bench to the Circuit Court. An examination of the records demonstrates that no such custom ever existed. In the very nature of things, with an ever-changing administration and appointive power, such a practice is not possible. In the entire history of the Ninth circuit, which embraces the Pacific Coast States, there has been but one promotion. Judge Ross was appointed by President Cleveland a District Judge in 1886, and by him was promoted to the Circuit Bench in 1895. This is the only instance of promotion in the West.

Absence of the rule is emphasized in the case of Judge Morrow. That gentleman was appointed to the District Bench by President Harrison to succeed the late Judge Hoffman. That President Harrison must have had the kindliest feelings for the former gentleman is evidenced by his appointment of him to the District Bench, yet when a vacancy occurred in the higher court by the death of Judge Sawyer, though strongly solicited so to do, the President refused to promote the District Judge, but selected Congressman McKenna, then scarcely known among lawyers, for the honor.

Again, when the Circuit Court of Appeals was established and a new Circuit Court created, President Harrison again refused to promote a District Judge, but appointed Judge Gilbert of Oregon to fill the place.

During Judge Hoffman's lifetime there was a vacancy on the Circuit Bench, and although that gentleman was an eminent and able lawyer, he was refused the promotion, and Judge Sawyer was selected for the place. These instances ought to pretty well dispose of the claim that it is a practice to promote, or that District Judges have any right or title superior to the rest of the world.

The Circuit Bench of the United States comprises nine circuits, upon which sit twenty-two Judges. Eleven of these jurists were taken from private life, or from the several State Benches, and appointed to judgeships in the Circuit Court over the heads of dozens of eminent men upon the District Bench, many of whom had seen service in the Federal judiciary for almost a lifetime. There is no national custom with respect to promotion in this connection, and the gentlemen who urge their respective friends upon this ground are standing upon very thin ice.

The members of our Supreme Court, who have been by their friends indiscreetly urged for the place, are not, we are advised, being seriously considered in the East. The fact that a Democratic Governor would have the filling of any vacancy occuring upon our Supreme Bench has not been a small factor in determining these ambitions.

To claim that in case this appointment does not come to the California District Judge, it will go to Oregon or Washington is puerile and without foundation, and rests solely upon the supposition that some one must be "promoted." California is the most populous State of the circuit, and certainly is entitled to two Circuit Judges in preference to Oregon, which is the next State in importance. Oregon already has one Circuit Judge, and an eminent and able one at that. Bellinger of Oregon is therefore not to be considered. Judges Hanford of Washington and Hawley of Nevada are distinctly able men, but it is not possible that our bar is so meagre and lacking in judicial learning as not to offer a broader field for a choice, particularly as the selection, as we have shown, is not narrowed down to the members of the District Bench. The present Judges have no claims superior to those of members of the bar.

OUR NEXT MINISTER TO ENGLAND.

Who will he be, the new minister to England? This is the question that is now agitating the soul and spirit of New York clubdom. Our relations with Cuba, involving the courage and dignity of the United States Government; the attitude of the powers toward the Cretan rebels, involving the serious problem of a European war; the middle-age position of the Senate towards the Olney-Pauncefote arbitration treaty, which had been hailed by the press of the civilized world as a grand step forward—these things bother not the gray matter of the self-satisfied New Yorker as he sits in his club window on Fifth avenue and leers languidly upon women who parade below. What are national honor or international war to him compared with the greater question—who is to be the next minister to England? Is he to be friend or foe, a New Yorker or a foreigner, John Hay of Washington, Whitelaw Reid of Arizona, Robert T. Lincoln of Chicago, or Chauncey M. Depew of the world, likewise of the other two members of the New York trinity?

For Mr. John Hay it may be said that he was President Lincoln's private secretary, and together with Mr. John G. Nicolay, also a Lincolnian secretary, has written a most exhausting work on slavery and the Civil War, entitled "Abraham Lincoln: A History." Mr. Hay is also the author of "Little Breeches," who "wanted a chaw o' tobacco, and that's what's the matter with me." But greater than his talent as a writer of good jingle and of official documents is his reputation as a giver of good dinners to the right people at Washington, where he enjoys life in one of the palaces of the capital, thanks to a richly endowed wife. Mr. John Hay is, of course, a gentleman, even if he did hail from the West. So much New York cannot deny. That he knows the difference between Lafitte and Ordinaire is also granted by those who have stretched their legs beneath his table. That he could make a rather creditable appearance at a Lord Mayor's banquet is confessed by members of the Gridiron and Clover Clubs. But Mr. John Hay does not live in New York. There's his misfortune and shortcoming. If sent to the court of St. James he would look with favor upon visiting Washingtonians, and tell the members of the Calumet, Metropolitan and Union League to call again. In a word, Mr. Hay does not know intimately the right people in New York. And not knowing these he, of course, would make a most dismal failure out of the job. For he might take up with some awful person of little wealth, and cut the very queen of the Newport set.

Mr. Whitelaw Reid will be remembered as a gentleman who ran for the office of Vice President some years ago and found it neither the highroad to honor nor to health. His address is given as Arizona because it is there, we believe, that he finds a climate which holds death at arm's length. Mr. Reid's service to his party, for which his friends say he deserves the honor of an appointment to England, is his able handling of the New York "Tribune," which was loyal to Mr. Morton until Mr. Reid found that Mr. McKinley was a probable winner, and then judiciously flopped. This was good politics, say the "bhoys," but Mr. Platt, excuse us Senator Thomas C. Platt, is not of that opinion, and he will be a factor in the matter of confirmation. So it, perhaps, is as well that Mr. Reid's health is not good enough really to allow him to spend four years in a London fog.

Those who know Mr. Robert T. Lincoln intimately aver that he is a right good fellow, but no one has ever known him that way, unless it be some one in England, where Mr. Lincoln spent four years representing Mr. Harrison's administration. It may not be forgotten by the public, though we believe it is by Mr. Lincoln himself, that Robert is the son of one Abraham Lincoln, a plain man, who never saw London, nor creased his trousers legs, nor kissed the hand of a Duchess. What Lincoln Pere would say to-day of Lincoln Fils we cannot record, but the probabilities are that the words would have a flavor that could be conveyed only in the spoken tongue. There is but one thing more objectionable than a New York snob—a Chicago snoblet—and Mr. Robert T. Lincoln lives in Chicago.

"Our own Chauncey" is last upon the list of the probables. Mr. Chauncey M. Depew, who, had he lived in some other land, had been either king's fool or Lord Chamberlain at the court. He is of no common sort, this Mr. Depew. But his words are, "Life" and "Puck" and "Harper's Weekly" and "The Nation" dare not, but we dare and we do hereby challenge the Honorable Chauncey M. Depew to produce a column of all he has written that is thoughtful and eloquent. He can tell a story, we admit. He has humor, mostly borrowed, but a good thing to have of any kind. And his taffy is taffy of the very most taffiest kind and dearer than all things else to the Manhattan heart. But elevated thought and good English do not flow together from Mr. Chauncey Depew's mouth. It is not forgotten, let us say it modestly, that Dr. Depew, as Dr. Dana calls him, was once upon this coast and here met a certain man named Barnes, from whom he took an hour's lesson in the art of after-dinner speaking. Mr. Depew also is known as one who has regarded himself as a candidate for the presedintial nomination at intervals of four years for the past twelve years or more. He has patched up various troubles in the Vanderbilt household, and is altogether one of the handiest men a New York club ever held. It he went to England he would be very popular, but the circulation of "Punch" would diminish.

Charles Francis Adams, James Russell Lowell, Edward J. Phelps and Thomas F. Bayard—these are the four ministers to England in late days who have been of chiefest honor to the United States. And aginst all three the American press has howled because they acted like gentlemen and neither like boors nor jackasses. Before going abroad the present minister was respected even by our imported citizenry as a statesman, but since he has accepted the hospitality of English people of his own intellectual and social caste he is cried out upon as a poor imitator of the aristocracy. But in all the roll of candidates for the post to-day there is not a man who in quality or ability equals Bayard of Delaware, who is gentleman, scholar and statesman.

Gelette Burgess, whom the "Literary Review" elects to call "The Milkmaid," perhaps from hazy association with the Purple Cow, has written a pointed letter for that periodical deploring the unappreciativeness of a city that in exteriors abounds in romance and "local color," the ideal home of the writer. Mr. Burgess has something to say about "virgin forests of pine and redwood"—dear old familiar phrase of the agricultural-fair oration—and even goes wandering off into the "mighty slumberous Pacific," and the "Isles of Idleness"—this last really quite a fine pooling of alliteration and assonance—but in the main he makes a very terse and timely point, which we commend to the reader's earnest attention.

For with all our hope, the outlook is still gloomy in California, where society is not yet fused by any single-minded enthusiasm. In San Francisco we have neither the local pride that shall be the hope of Chicago, nor the Public Opinion that has guided Boston to her supremacy in culture. 'Tis a small and petty town here, her opinions and tastes as narrow as her streets, and there hangs over her the taint of provincialism, that is as depressing as her sea-fogs. It is her pessimistic creed that Fame travels only westward, and like her native wines, California talent must be covertly shipped abroad and come back with foreign labels before it is accredited by the pseudo-connoisseur. What the State has lost by the migration of her unappreciated artists, who are driven forth every day, the East has gained, so that the place has come to be a literary kindergarten where is nourished the fresh blood that revives the East.

Yet here is the ideal home of the writer; inspiration and suggestion roam its hills and valleys. Here is the most cosmopolitan of American cities, where history is made while you wait; a town of extremes and contrasts, where you may know the history of the prominent citizens from your bootblack, and have the local celebrities pointed out by your motorman; an overgrown village, in fine, where no man's ecentricities may escape the public eye. And within an hour's ride by rail—virgin forests of pine and redwood, secret canyons, and the ocean beach, the mighty slumberous Pacific, warmed by breezes floating up from the Isles of Idleness. From my chamber window I have a semi-circle of harbor, island and mountains wild as Caledonia, and inside its circle, boxes and boxes of people of all races under the sun. I know two Jewesses married to Chinamen in the Quarter, with children that are the beginnings of a new race! I know an artist's model that discusses the Immaculate Conception as a pathetic dream of one who could not understand, and has, while sewing in the sweat-shops, reasoned herself back to the old Pantheism through a Greek Anthology. Yet here Romance and Realism slumber and writers ransack the continent for their Types and Color. California's time is not yet come.

Here a literary man must be a journalist if he would live; and he would more than that, and marry, he must pack and travel, to fail or succeed where there is more rivalry and appreciation. Yet we print books here, at Christmas time—and count ourselves in luck if they get faint praise from the Buffalo papers.

AN ARMY WITHOUT ARMS

How San Francisco Houses the Helplessly Unemployed.

GUESTS OF THE CITY

By basing your calculations upon what the reporter calls a "conservative estimate," one may say there are two thousand strong and able bodied men now in this city who are out of employment. Two institutions are now at work endeavoring to alleviate the privations that such a state of things entail. There is the "Salvation Army Bureau for the Unemployed," and there is the "Headquarters of the Unemployed." The buildings of these two organizations face one another on New Montgomery street at the intersection of Howard, the headquarters of the Unemployed being located in the old Howard-street Armory.

The Salvation Army dedicated its new quarters on Monday of this week. They occupy the three upper floors of a huge building, and a hotel, provided with a large assembly-room. At present the crying need of the Unemployed is not so much for food as it is for a place to sleep. So many of the restaurants along the Barbary Coast and the Water front have been obliged by competition to reduce the price of a meal to twenty, fifteen, and even ten cents, that a man must indeed be in desperate circumstances before he "cannot afford to eat." There are, however, few—in fact, one can say there are no hotels or lodging houses—where a bed can be had for five cents. But if an "Unemployed" is reduced to a nickel, he can, by applying at the Salvation Army's Bureau, take his choice of either a bed or a meal. He usually chooses the former. The Bureau has been organized to accomodate two hundred and fifty men. On the second floor are five rooms called the "five-cent rooms," one of which is the famous "tin room." The five-cent rooms are occupied by a system of canvas beds—mere strips of canvas swung on wooden frames, in two tiers. A grey army blanket, which is folded twice, answers for bedding. There are no pillows, no springs—nothing but the canvas and the blanket. The "tin room" is for the "drunks," and is so called because, in the old barracks, it was entirely sheathed with tin as a precaution against fire that might readily be caused by the dropping of cigar stumps from unsteady fingers. The ten-cent rooms differ from the five-cent rooms only in that the beds are provided with woven-wire springs and a canvas pillow. Last of all are the lodgings to be obtained for a quarter. These, however, are separate rooms with a real bed instead of racks, enjoying a ventilation that is not always possible in the other rooms. The accomodation of two hundred and fifty lodgers per night means an amount of labor not readily appreciated by the reading public. It means a thorough scrubbing of the floors every day, a ventilation and fumigation of bedding and of clothes as well—clothes worn for months upon the unwashed bodies of the drunken inmates of the tin room and removed while their wearer is asleep, drugged and stupefied with alcohol. And it means, besides, the cooking of meals, the washing of dishes, and a host of other details to be looked after by the soldiers of the Army. The principle upon which this Bureau is founded is that, no matter how small is the price paid for meals or beds, the "Unemployed" is better on account of such payment on his part than if the thing was a mere matter of charity. As one of the officers remarked, "It is better charity in the end to get a man to pay five cents for his bed than to give it to him for nothing. It is a bid for his self-respect—all the better if he can be made to work for the nickel in the first place."

MERELY A CONTRIVANCE FOR DESTROYING HUNGER

Right across the street from the Bureau are the "Headquarters of the Unemployed." The Headquarters consist mainly of a vast room filled with rough plank benches, which serve alike for tables, chairs, desks, speaking platforms or beds. In a gallery upstairs is a kitchen and a dining-room, where, until last Saturday, eleven hundred meals were served daily. The object of the Headquarters is to "provide temporary shelter for idle men until such time as work can be found for them, or until they can find it for themselves." The men may eat and sleep here free of charge, but no beds are provided, and the sleeping is done upon the floor or upon the above-mentioned benches. In the matter of aiding families the Headquarters have been successful, and households in actual danger of extinction have been rescued and fed, while more than once a destitute mother and children have been housed in the "office" of the president, Mr. Leffingwell, himself an unemployed engineer.

The most menacing evil of the Headquarters lies in the fact that it can be so easily imposed upon by men who have no desire to work. The institution has been organized, as stated, to provide temporary shelter and food for those unemployed. In one way, consequently, it puts a premium upon idleness. There are plenty of loafers who will remain unemployed indefinitely so long as they can be assured of a bed and two meals a day, even though the bed be a board and the meal a thing that cannot be called meat and drink, but merely an ingenious contrivance for destroying hunger.

A certain state of rivalry exists between the Salvationists' Bureau and the Headquarters. The Bureau does not believe in the efficacy of the Headquarters any more than the Headquarters believes in the sincerity and disinterestedness of the Bureau. The Bureau will intimate that the money contributed to the Headquarters has been spent neither judiciously nor with the scrupulous care that should be required. The Headquarters openly state that the Bureau is a mere machine for the exploitation of the workingman; that the Salvationists are well paid for what they do (which at the very least is sadly exaggerated). A plan has been devised for relieving the situation: the building of boulevards—a strange expedient—the poor granted as a privilege the opportunity of making smooth roads on which the rich may ride. What the outcome will be it is hard to say. Meanwhile there is but one proposition upon which all the parties concerned agree—one common standing-ground upon which they all can meet: Man (unfortunately) is born with a belly, and in order to live it is necessary that he should eat.

---

In Mr. Maurice Donnay's new comedy, "La Doloreuse," recently produced in Paris, Madame Rejane made an immediate impression. Rejane will be remembered as the original "Madame Sans Gene"—the first one to produce the Napoleonic play in this country. M. Donnay's comedy is a piece of the modern emotional school. It is written with considerable literary skill, and it shows on the part of the author an exceptional insight into human nature, and also an abundant supply of cynicism, and the idea of it all is the inexorable law that every sin entails punishment.

AN IMPROVISED KITCHEN AT THE HEADQUARTERS OF THE UNEMPLOYED

JEROME GAUTRELLE, ANARCHIST

By VICTOR LA HARPE

In the year 1894 Jerome Gautrelle, deputy comptroller, fell ill, let us say, from overwork (office work is not the only kind of work that fatigues a man), and during the vacation his doctor gave him—in exchange for twenty-five francs—the advice to go and breathe a little ozone at Boulogne-sur-Mer. where his brothers, Gautrelle Bros. & Co., do business. The patient obeyed, and the next evening took the train that leaves Paris at ten o'clock.

At the moment the train was pulling out a stout, pot-bellied old fellow, something on the build of Jerome himself, and wearing an olive green overcoat with a fur collar, resembling the one that Jerome had on at the moment, opened the door, threw upon Jerome's feet a valise marked with the initials J. G. (those of Jerome), and reeled into a corner with a gasp of relief.

Next he introduced his little finger into his left orbit, delicately thrust out the eye, breathed on it, polished it briskly with his handkerchief, and clapped it in again. Jerome has often told me that he did the same with his other eye, but I am constrained to believe that on this point his souvenirs are inexact.

Interested, extremely interested, Jerome attempted to engage this extraordinary party in conversation. The result was a failure. The stranger permitted himself confused allusions to people who meddle in affairs that do not concern them, spoke vaguely of broken heads, blackened eyes and slit throats, consequences of morbid curiosity. He unscrewed his left arm, drew it out of the sleeve, and with a nickel-plated monkey wrench readjusted a loosened nut. Then, when the member was put back in its place and having assured himself that it was in working order he declared himself satisfied. In evidence of which he stretched himself out in the upper berth, absorbed various kinds of alcohols, and, peculiar distraction, made a point of spitting through the window upon every third telegraph pole.

The train acted in an unheard of fashion. Systematically it rushed through all the important towns along the line, and only made up its mind to stop in the open country on bleak plains empty of all life.

At such moments the guard strode up and down by the side of the cars, pronouncing in low tones the names of improbable localities, ending by blowing vigorously upon a fireman's trumpet. At these halts the strange traveler hastened to leave his berth and disappear beneath the seat, where he imitated the cry of a little child suffering with its teeth.

As the night wore on Jerome was seized with terror at the thought of remaining longer in company with this maniac, and hearing at length the guard inviting the passengers to change cars for "Mmm-Mmm," rushed from his compartment and leaped into another train that was just moving out.

He had got into a cattle train. During the rest of the trip nothing abnormal, except that he found among the cows a pale young man, who confided to him the fact that he was consumptive, and being without sufficient money to procure for himself the benefits of a farming life had hit upon the idea of nocturnal voyages in cattle cars—so bracing to the system—in company with the horned cattle, and found that it did him marvelous good.

At two o'clock in the morning the train came to a dead stop. Jerome Gautrelle got out, and found himself in a storage depot. At once a figure appeared from nowhere in particular, circled about him thrice, then approached, and in a confidential tone solemnly asked:

"It is you, the head of the Third-three."

The deputy comptroller had arrived at that state of mind wherein he had ceased to be astonished at anything; he was vexed, he did not know what the fellow was talking of. Turning upon him he said firmly:

"You're another."

"Parbleu!" said the other, as if reassured. "Then we are two heads. They sent you from Paris, hein? You will find devoted brothers here."

Ah, his brothers, Gautrelle & Co., to be sure, Jerome had almost forgotten.

"And how are they?" he inquired.

"First rate, all goes well. The moment has arrived; we only waited for you. But why this valise? Have you—have you brought the affair? Be assured we have got everything necessary through our Paris agent."

After wandering in and out through the town they arrived in front of a small house. The servants, mute with fear, waited upon them. Several times Jerome asked for his brothers, but was told that they would call on him on the evening of the next day.

He was still unable to understand. What stupid people were these provincials. He gave up trying to solve the puzzle, and went to bed.

The next morning his guide reappeared, and said that he had come to show him the public buildings. First he took him to the cathedral. (It was very fine, pure Roman style.) His companion pointed out a certain pillar.

"Look here," said he, "I think you could obtain the best effect from this point."

He was right. The effect was really marvelous. The mystic that slumbered in the heart of Jerome was roused in an instant.

The town hall displeased him. It was in the style of Carnot, commonplace, pretentious, with pictures by Maignan and Lefevre on the walls.

Rot!

His companion pointed out the staircase to him. "Do you think this corner would suit you?"

"No, no. It is not imposing enough. It seems to me trifling."

"You know best. I would have believed that the small space here would be more suitable."

He was a strange guide. At the Palais de Justice (flamboyant style) he particularly called Jerome's attention to a niche in the wall. Jerome told him not to bother about details.

"His sangfroid is beyond belief," murmured the other.

After they had gone home again the guide sat himself down in front of Jerome and rested his elbows upon the table.

"Now," said he, "make your choice. There is no time to be lost. Which building do you prefer?"

"Decidedly, the Gothic with its graceful frailness, is to be preferred to the Roman, which is solid and heavy. The Palais de Justice pleases me best."

"Exactly. The idea of the law is more dangerous than the idea of God. I approve of your choice."

"Thank you. I will not conceal from you that I am possessed of a certain critical taste in these matters, but I would like to see my brothers before I go aboard ship."

"Ah! You are going to sail as soon as you have done your work. That's according to custom. The Third-three of Paris chose their man well."

There was a knock at the door. "It is the head of the local section, who will give you your final instructions."

Three masked men entered. Jerome thought these provincial practical jokers were carrying the thing rather too far. Anyhow, it suited him. Here he was, boarded and lodged free of charge, waited upon with the greatest deference, and guided about the town by an affable gentleman. If it was a joke it was more amusing than otherwise. He determined to keep it up. He would receive the three farceurs in good fashion.

He asked them to have a drink.

"You are aware of what is contemplated?"

"Yes," interrupted the guide. "He knows and has chosen the Palais de Justice."

"Excellent choice. But you must be quick. Everything must be finished by to-morrow at four o'clock. Once the thing has been done, don't stay here an instant; cross the frontier into Belgium. We will send you subsidies."

"But—"

"Ah! Let us not forget the essential thing. To-morrow, some one will bring you the little joker. You will only have to light it. Silence, and remember, Gueulemer, that if you fail us it will be all up with you."

They stalked out with the guide. It was such an exit as one would see at a melodrama.

Jerome did not laugh any more. Here was a pretty fix. He was called by the name of Gueulemer. Masked men spoke to him in mysterious whispers of little jokers. He felt himself on the edge of a catastrophe. The landlord, all atremble, brought him his dinner and hazarded a few questions.

"Your name is Gueulemer, is it not?"

"Get out! What are you talking about? My name is not Gueulemer."

"Don't be afraid, you can have confidence in me. I would not dare to betray you."

"But what the devil are you talking about?"

"It is to-morrow that you—"

"That what?"

"En fin! The Brothers told me—that you would—would blow up the Palais de Justice."

"Look here!" shouted Jerome Gautrelle. "This thing has been kept up for two days. I like a joke, but don't go too far."

"You are a droll fellow—but you know I am in the society myself. I am an Anarchist and the child of Anarchists—not actively, but in spirit."

The landlord retired.

"Ah! Mille tonerres!" Jerome saw it all in an instant. These idiots evidently took him for the too famous Gueulemer, the terror of the bourgeois. The Third-three was a club of Anarchists, and what he had taken for a joke was a conspiracy in which he, Jerome, the peaceable Deputy Comptroller, found himself implicated. Of course, they had carefully shown him the public buildings. He knew now for what reason. The Brothers of which they had spoken were the Anarchists.

"Ah! Mille tonerres!" What now was to be done? Warn the police? Impossible. His every move was watched. Disclose to them his real identity? Equally impossible. The Third-three would "suppress" the traitor. Flight? This also was impossible. He could not go twenty steps without having the Third-three at his throat.

Until morning Jerome turned over and over in his mind a thousand impractical plans of escape. About daylight he fell asleep. When he awoke the next day an ill-looking man, muffled in a cloak, was waiting for him at his bedside. A small package wrapped in a napkin was lying on the table.

"I have brought you the little joker."

At first, but half awake, Jerome did not realize the situation. Then suddenly he remembered. He was forced to a deception in order to gain time.

"Very well," said he. Is it loaded?"

The man seemed to hesitate. Jerome saw a gleam of hope. Swearing like a trooper, he shouted:

"Nom de Bakounine! I say. Is it loaded, you stupid beast?"

Jerome was astonished to see the other fall to his knees and burst into tears.

"No; it is not loaded. And there is no way to load it now. It is I who take charge of the dynamite, and as I have five children and an ailing wife, and as the winter has been hard and work scarce, I sold it."

"You have done that!" shouted Jerome enthusiastically. "Ah, my friend! My very dear friend! What a miserable wretch you are, to be sure!"

"Have pity on me; do not betray me. I filled the bomb with plaster, and never thought that you would perceive the difference."

"Experience has given me very sharp eyes."

"You are a veritable genius. But put yourself in my place. It is terrible to keep dynamite at one's house. I never knew when it would explode. The other members of the society would not relieve me of so much as a pinch of it. They were even more frightened than I. So one day I sold the whole lot to a carrier."

Jerome thought to himself, "If I warn the Third-three, the rascals will keep me here until they have bought some more dynamite, or until the real Gueulemer arrives, and in either case I am lost. Let's put on a bold front."

"Well," said he, at length, "I pardon you, coward that you are. I will not betray you, but only under the conditon that you obey me." The other shed tears of gratitude. "Swear to me that this bomb is not loaded."

"I swear it."

"Good."

An hour later Jerome deposited in a corner of the Palais de Justice the inoffensive engine of destruction. As he was going away he was terrified to hear a deep bass voice at his elbow crying:

"Imbecile! Is that the way to place a bomb?"

White with terror Jerome turned about. It was the strange man who had come from Paris with him in his compartment, the man of the glass eye and wooden arm.

"Yes," continued this apparition, "you were unwilling to wait for me, you others. Not only did you fail to pay my traveling expenses, but you gave me as a traveling companion an idiot, who put me off the track. And you think that you are clever enough to succeed alone without Gueulemer. You are a fine lot down here Happily, I don't cherish any ill-feeling against you. Go and watch outside the door until I readjust this fuse."

He bent down over the bomb. Jerome, bathed in sweat, fled from the building, rushed to his hotel, packed his valise, and without being seen reached the depot. Six hours later he was in London. He dared not go back to Paris for a month afterward.

Never has he heard of the Third-three or the redoubtable Gueulemer since that time. But whenever he overhears a conversation upon the subject of Anarchy, of explosives or of bombs he assumes a very mysterious air and nods his head gravely.

He has been there himself, has Monsieur Jerome.

RETROSPECTION

It is strange as I sit here to-night,
In the fitful light,
That her form and her features should flash on my sight.
The past and the present are set in the scene,
With the fathomless gulf of the years between;
While to and fro,
In the mimic show,
The ghosts of the actors come and go.
Time and the traces of time are gone,
And we live and move in the splendor of dawn;
In the golden glow of that wonderful past,
Only Immortals are in the cast:
Who cares for the sneer of the worldly wise,
When youth looks down with its love-lit eyes.
Sir Romeo waits at the wings for his call,
While a strain of Strauss,
Thrills the breathless house,
And a glory and glamour is over it all.
O the sights, and the sounds, and the one face there,
With the rose I had given her twined in her hair.

—LUCIUS HARWOOD FOOTE.

This idea seems a little fantastic, but it should be said that so great an authority as Professor F. W. Warner, in a recent lecture on "Biometry, or the Science of Measuring Life," includes abundant sleep among the four essentials to a long life, which are: 1. To be descended, at least by one side, from long-lived parents. 2. To be of a calm, contented and cheerful disposition. 3. To have a symmetrical form, i. e., a full chest, well-formed joints and limbs, with a neck and head large rather than small in proportion to the size of the body. 4. To be a sound sleeper. The Professor went on to show that women are longer lived than men, and that married women live longer than single women. The statistics show that few nuns attain old age, and that monks also die on the average earlier than men who marry.

Seismology is now so far developed that seismologists are able not only to study earthquakes which no one feels, but have begun to investigate their relations, of which there are many, with most promising results as far as geology is concerned. There are thousands of earthquakes or earth tremors every year, and half of them come from deep water. The ocean is really the home of earthquakes. Twenty years ago their study was commenced in Japan with the result that the seismology of that country has revolutionized the seismology of the whole world. As a consequence the methods of building in Japan have been entirely altered, so that houses erected on new principles stand while their neighbors are shattered.

They are agitating in France with considerable alarm the question of divorce—a question, by the way, that seems to be among the very foremost in nearly every civilized nation on earth. It seems that the United States is not the only country where divorce laws are lax and the number of divorces equally proportionate, for it is a fact that ever since separation has been legalized in France the number of martial differences and divorces has been on an alarming increase. French statisticians claim that when the law permitted separations alone, the number in one year reached only three thousand, but since divorce has been countenanced by the courts their number in the same time has exceeded eight thousand. The most alarming aspect of the question, however, is that divorce, formerly a luxury to be enjoyed only by the wealthy, is becoming prevalent among the working classes. "No one, unless a person who has studied the question deeply," said a French magistrate recently, "can realize how serious a matter this divorce is becoming for the future of our country. The women in our laboring and working classes have come to look upon divorce as the sovereign remedy for all their ills. But," continued the magistrate, "this is a frightful error on their part, for, as a rule, they only jump from the frying pan into the fire." It is deplorable that this should exist, for it is apparent that the very stability of society is becoming threatened, and the only remedy that seems to present itself is to do away with absolute divorces save in exceptional cases, where absolute divorce, and it alone, will bring peace to the afflicted family.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

A good story is going the rounds just now in which the laugh is turned on Mr. C. D. Lane of the Utica mine. Mr. Lane as third owner of one of the richest mines the world round, may be supposed to know something about getting gold out of the hole-in-the-ground. As a rule his ideas and theories are received with the respectful attention they deserve, and as a rule, let us add, such theories and ideas have been proved successful. It remained, however, for his own son, young Tom Lane, to upset all the old gentleman's calculations and to demonstrate that, in part at least, his notions on mining were awry. Young Tom, it would seem, entertained certain beliefs of his own on the subject of digging gold, beliefs which Lane Sr. regarded in the light of the rankest and most flagrant heresy. He refused even to listen to the young fellow's explanations, pooh-poohed his ideas and would none of his schemes and innovations.

***

At last young Tom, believing in himself and his notions, went off on his own account, and, nosing about the State, finally pitched upon a bit of a claim down at Milton on the edge of the San Joaquin Valley. The claim

H. H. SHERWOOD
A well-known business man, who has drawn the attention of the Chamber of Commerce to the "Antagonistic South."
Photo by Taber

had not been worked for years, and was generally believed to be worthless. People laughed at the idea of exploiting it, none so heartily as old Lane himself, considering it as he did the chimera of an enthusiast. The enthusiast, however, went ahead prospecting and shaft sinking according to his own theories, saying nothing but shoveling gravel. In two weeks he hit pay rock. The old gentleman was puzzled; declared it mere bull luck, and asserted the bottom would fall out of his son's mine in two months. In two months there was a mill on the property. The mine was paying some $2,000 a month to Lane Jr. It has kept this gait up steadily for fifteen months past. What Mr. Lane Sr. thinks and believes now is a matter of conjecture. He is ready, however, to advance the young man enough capital to work out his heretical theories upon a much larger basis.

***

And in speaking of mining it will be well to mention the extraordinary strike just made in El Dorado county, where it is pretty generally conceded all the rich spots have been long since taken up or worked out. It is a good story of good luck, and is worth telling. The mine in question is called the Griffith Queen mine, and is located at Diamond Springs, El Dorado county, and until recently has been the property of Charles Bryant, an old-time lumber merchant of the place. Nobody paid much attention to the property until recently the Gow syndicate of Scotchmen came along and bonded it for $25,000. They put up no money, but drove in a tunnel to the tune of some nine thousand. The natives conceived an idea of Bryant as a sharp financier outwitting another dull-witted British syndicate. They clung to this idea until a week or two ago, when the Scotchmen refused to part with the mine in exchange for $250,000. The moral of this fable teaches that there are still fortunes to be made in the Sierras, and at the same time it is a fair example of one of those turns of fortune which in the early days lent to mining all the enchantment and fascination of a prodigious gamble.

***

There is a wonderful man now performing at the Orpheum, and his name is Pantzer. He is not so wonderful on account of his contortionist performance—which comes as near the sinuous coilings of a snake as one would care to see—as he is on account of the way in which he entered the profession. He is the original contortionist and the founder of a family of contortionists. The interviewer of specialists often has occasion to wonder how it happens that all and each of them are in the business because their father or mother was in it before them. One asks one's self where was the man who first conceived the idea of "specialty work." Pantzer is such a one. He says he "did not begin to twist and bend until nearly twenty." He was working for a jeweler somewhere in Germany, exercising in a gymnasium at nights on the trapeze. According to his story the gyrations upon the swinging bar had more attraction for him than the dissecting of timepieces, and at length he fled the world of the Philistine and the mechanic, decided to become an "artist," and found a traveling circus. The twisting business somehow grew out of the trapeze, and so here we have him at last, the contortionist that was made, not born, the specialty artist evolved from the watchmaker's apprentice. That his children should follow his profession was inevitable. There can be no going backward now in the family Pantzer, no reversal to the despised artisan's bench. The little Pantzers are "artists," and the children of "artists." Bright little midgets they are, of fourteen and nineteen, looking very demure in their street dresses, but capable nevertheless of twisting their little bodies in most terrifying fashion.

***

A movement has of late been set on foot to unite the Associated and the United Press into one vast organization for the handling of telegraphic news. If the thing is successful the public will probably be the losers, as the tremendous competition and rivalry that exists between the two concerns is productive of an energy in the acquiring of news items that would perhaps lose some of its ardor were the two to combine. However, the New York "Sun," which is the dominant element in the United Press, promptly withdrew from that association as soon as it heard of the intended formation of a trust, with the announcement that hereafter it would find its own news. In this city the "'Chronicle," "Bulletin" and "Post" are members of the Associated Press, the "Call" and "Examiner" being United Press papers, and as such enjoyed the benefit of Harold Frederick's London correspondence. Creelman is the "Examiner's" big man for foreign dispatches, but though Mr. Creelman may be a very smart young person his infallibility is not so generally recognized as that of the Pope. The "Examiner" sometimes hits upon the truth, but it has lied so often that it is now paying the penalty of exaggerated reports and falsified telegrams, and, Cassandra-like, is now disbelieved even when uttering true prophecies.

***

Most people who know Andrew McCreery, the millionaire, as a strong upholder of property rights, were surprised to find him upholding in the "Examiner" the sensational attacks that journal has been making on the water and gas companies. Men of his type are generally opposed to this form of agitation, and it appeared for the moment as though some strange change had come over the mental attitude of the capitalist. Imagine a millionaire joining a fight to reduce interest rates or assisting in a contest to decrease rents. That is exactly the position of Mr. McCreery. I don't believe for a moment that Mr. McCreery believes that the rates exacted by the gas or the water companies are unreasonable. His objection is that he is not participating in the profits of the illuminating company's last deal. For many years Mr. McCreery has held among his best assets a large block of gas stock. It paid dividends and made a sensible addition to his income. Then he had no idea that Mr. Crockett was oppressing the community. Some few months back, however, a certain broker approached the old gentleman with an offer to purchase his shares, advising him that it was the psychological moment to sell, as a fall in value was imminent. The old gentleman did business and turned over the scrip. A few weeks later the deal with the electric light corporation was consummated, and gas went booming up into the nineties. Mr. McCreery has never forgiven the company this outrageous advance, and purely out of sympathy is also a bear on water.

***

There is no accounting for the tastes of a San Francisco audience, no way of foreseeing how it will receive a theatrical production, no matter what is its musical or dramatic merit, nor how high in the professional firmament may be the members of the company who render it. Many and many are the good things which San Francisco has refused to "push along," and many are the theatrical managers who sedulously keep their companies away from the Pacific coast rather than risk the hazardous chances of a success in the city of the Golden Gate. Farce comedy, if well played, it is generally conceded, will "go," but a singer of an ability easily superior to that of Nordica, Mme. Trebelli, is given the cold shoulder. However, San Franciscans are to be put

CHILDREN TURNED OUT OF LONG ISLAND CITY SCHOOL
By Trowbridge of the New York "World"

ILLUSTRATION TO A STORY OF THE SEA
By Keller of the New York "Herald"

JOURNALISTIC ART: TWO CLEVER PICTURES IN THE "CHRONICLE'S" EXHIBITION

to still another test. The Symphony Society, gotten together largely through the efforts of Mr. William Greenbaum, who is deeply interested in classical music, has given two performances to a practically empty house. Thursday afternoon of this week Trebelli is again announced. The orchestra will give Berlioz's "Roman Carnival," and altogether a very attractive programme has been arranged. It is a chance for the city to redeem itself from the imputation of apathy and blindness to what is better for them, and accord Trebelli and the orchestra the hearty support and applause that both deserve.

***

Among the eminent hands in whose grasp the destinies of the Iroquois Club are vested, there is jubilation over the doing up of Dr. Ragan. This physician is the educational representative of Sam Rainey, and conveys his will to those select circles where the presence of the Boss might prove an embarrassment. He had at one time been a brave of the tribe, but had dropped out. Having won political importance by the friendship of Rainey he desired an opportunity to resume war paint and wampum, for which, since his elevation, he had discovered a new use. So when Louis Metzger, the person who conducts the little Louisiana lottery and officiates as banker for politicians and others in exchange for those favors which the conduct of an illegal business makes necessary, approached the physician with a request that he appoint a certain brother Metzger assistant storekeeper to the Board of Education, the doctor gently hinted the value to him of an opportunity to answer the toast of the public schools at the forthcoming banquet of the club, of which Metzger is an influential member. Metzger set about meeting the situation, and approached the directors with a suggestion for the readmission of Ragan. A new election was prescribed, and the distinguished physician's name posted. It was the opportunity the tribe had longed for. Rainey is an object of general hatred within its ranks. The braves were summoned and the physician subjected to the ordeal of the blackball with a unanimity rare in the annals of the institution.

DRESSING-ROOM TENTS

EQUIPMENT RACE

***

There is a man in this city who says he is qualified to assume the duties of sociological expert. He says so himself, and he ought to know; also, his name is Gavigan. He is a doctor and a lawyer, or rather, a doctor or a lawyer as occasion requires, since he has a medical office on one street and legal chambers on another. Mr. Gavigan is not unknown in San Francisco. In fact, he was once rather famous here in connection with the delinquent tax list, just prior to the time when he felt himself suddenly called upon for a little excursion across the Canadian frontier. On his return, after the proper lapse of time, Mr. Gavigan assumed the pose of social reformer, and went about denouncing side-doors and saloons and police methods in general, until Chief Crowley became exasperated, and published his record in full. Finding that neither law nor medicine nor the barren laurels of social reformation could satisfy his ambition Mr. Gavigan, M. D., LL. D., turned his attention elsewhere. At the last session of the Legislature he made heroic attempts to secure the passage of a bill providing for a hospital for dipsomaniacs. The bill went through thanks to Mr. Gavigan's cunning engineering, and in course of time the Supervisors—whom Mr. Gavigan had sedulously "seen"—were called upon to make appropriation.

***

Now the bill had been so worded that no one but Gavigan—at least so Gavigan himself supposed—could be chosen as superintendent of the institution. Very unfortunately, however, a certain Dr. Sussdorf, a real authority on dipsomania, came forward for the place at the last moment, and was promptly chosen by the Board of Health, a finale not at all on Mr. Gavigan's programme. The appropriation was in the hands of the Supervisors, where Gavigan had influence. The Board at his instigation refused the appropriation, and the matter was shelved. Balked in his dipsomaniacal idea Mr. Gavigan next appeared as a sociologist, and but recently began a second exploitation of the Legislature, this time in order to secure the creation of an office known as sociological expert, which could only be filled by an individual at once a lawyer and a doctor—as, for instance, Mr. Gavigan. The bill was in a fair way to pass, and Mr. Gavigan might have at length succeeded in feeding himself at the State's table, had not the newspapers suddenly discovered and exploded the whole scheme. In consequence of all of which, the dipsomaniacs are without a hospital, society without an expert—and Mr. Gavigan without an occupation.

***

On Wednesday of this week the first monthly field day of the Presidio post was held on the parade ground of the Presidio, the contestants being chosen from the enlisted men of the infantry, cavalry and artillery companies. So far as the regulation track events, such as hurdling, pole vaulting and the like, were concerned, the meet afforded only a relative interest, and no very brilliant performances were recorded. Fortunately, however, there were but two events of this character. The purely military competitions on the contrary were really thrilling, and those few civilians who were knowing enough to be present were rewarded by a positive treat. The day was absolutely perfect, and the men entered into the spirit of the games with the enthusiasm of collegians. It is an admirable idea to invent and encourage trials of strength and skill peculiarly adapted to soldiers, as such contests are not only of immense practical benefit to the rank and file, but have also the charm and interest of picturesque novelty for the spectator. As, for instance, the wall scaling contest. Six or eight soldiers in teams of two and in full marching equipment, dash at a twelve-foot wall, one member of the team helping his fellow in the ascent and being pulled up by him afterward. The contest is awarded to the first team who fires five shots upon the other side of the wall. Besides this is the mounted cartridge race, a sort of potato race on horseback. The section race between two batteries of artillery—perhaps the most exciting of all—and the mounted tug-of-war. A military post such as the Presidio has everything in its favor for the development of a very high class of amateur athletics. The men have a certain amount of leizure for training, regular habits, solid, muscle-forming diet and an esprit de corps second only to that of colleges. In fact, we look to see the monthly field days of the Presidio become quite an event amongst amateur sports.

FINISH OF THREE-LEGGED RACE

POLE-VAULT FOR HEIGHT

FIELD-DAY SPORTS AT THE PRESIDIO

The Archduke Johann Salvator of Tuscany, nephew of the Emperor of Austria, who renounced his titles and royal estates to marry an opera-singer, and then assuming the name of Johann Orth, sailed off to the south seas and incidentally to oblivion, has been legally pronounced dead by the Austrian courts, and a million francs willed by him to his wife's relatives, and deposited in a bank by the erratic prince before his departure, has been ordered distributed. This is practically the end of this romance of the nineteenth century, although it is quite certain that rumors will be revived from time to time of his whereabouts and of his wonderful adventures.

Cecil Rhodes is credited with having a trump card to play in the game of disclosures before the Select Committee on the Transvaal raid. He is said to be in possession of letters that passed long prior to the Jameson expedition between President Kruger and Emperor William and between Dr. Leyds and the German Foreign Minister. These documents were abstracted from Dr. Leyds while at Pretoria, before his visit to Berlin.

A Republican politician who aspired to a position in the Consular service went to Canton about the appointment, and found about five hundred candidates awaiting the pleasure of Major McKinley for the very same office. It is needless to say that he soon returned cured of the hope and even desire of Consular glory.

ILLUSTRATED JOURNALISM

The "Chronicle's" Exhibit of Newspaper Art at the Partington School.

Perhaps the very latest important form in the development of pictorial art is the newspaper sketch. It is absolutely different from the magazine illustration, but is capable of a treatment quite as serious and artistic as the pictures reproduced in "The Century," "Harper's" and "Scribner's." There is no doubt, however, that this standard of excellence has not yet been reached, and it is equally certain that it will not be reached for a long time. The reason for the tardy development of newspaper illustration is probably to be found in the fact that as soon as an artist on the staff of one of the journals progresses beyond a certain point in the excellence of his work he is very apt to be caught up by the great monthly magazines or by the weekly illustrated papers of New York, unless, indeed, he is lucky enough to be bid for by one of the "new" dailies, such as the New York "Journal," which paper, we are told, pays Homer Davenport as large a salary as that enjoyed by Gibson himself.

However, newspaper illustration is an art by itself. The character of the subject, the demand for quick execution, and the spongy, unglazed surface of the paper itself all combining in the demand for a piece of work done in a style entirely unique. It is the events in the world of men, bits of city life, murders, accidents, prominent characters in the fields of politics or of literature or the drama that are most sought for. As a consequence tne pictures made are "figure drawings," as distinguished from landscape or architectural work. As often as not an artist is called upon to produce a picture illustrative of an event in a minimum of time, sometimes even while the printers are holding the forms. There is little time for detail work. The picture must be broad and simple, the greatest effect produced with the fewest possible lines. A last consideration is that of the paper upon which the sketch is to be reproduced. Small, delicate strokes, "cross hatching," and any effect which demands that the lines be drawn closely together is out of the question, as such lines would soak into the soft paper used by the dailies and mingling together form a meaningless blur of black.

A very fair idea can be gained of the character and requirements of newspaper illustration by means of the "Chronicle's" exhibit (comprising some twenty American dailies) now being held at the Partington school. The best exhibits are those shown by the N. Y. "World," the Detroit "Free Press," the New York "Herald" and the "Press." No. 185 in the "Press" exhibit is perhaps as good an example of the kind of art spoken of as any upon the walls. It is not only cleverly drawn and composed, but is "open," to use a technical expression, and free from all masses of intricate line work. At the same time the relative values of the figures in the foreground and background are well brought out, an effect very difficult to produce without masses of light and shade.

The "Chronicle" art room makes as good a showing as any other paper, East or West. Lyon's work in particular, while not brilliant, is strong and serious, his portraits being especially successful.

CLOVERDALE'S CITRUS FAIR

Cloverdale is now rejoicing in the largest and most successful citrus fair ever held in the history of the town, and not a train pulls into its picturesque little depot that is not loaded from end to end with troupes of excursionists. The raison d'etre for Cloverdale is its oranges. Nowhere in California, perhaps nowhere in the United States, can there be seen such a quantity and such a quality of oranges as yearly loads the trees of the orchards in the vicinity. Cloverdale as a town thinks well of herself, has enthusiasm for her "local institutions," and believes in the ultimate success of her undertakings. For one thing she is determined to grow oranges as fine as can be produced anywhere in the world. This she believes she has already accomplished, and invites her guests to come and make merry with her over the fact. In comparison with the last event of the kind that occurred at Cloverdale the present fair shows every sign of advancement and improvement. It is an admitted fact by nearly all of the citrus experts that not half a dozen more years will elapse before the Cloverdale oranges will compete in all markets with the richest orange producing districts throughout the whole State.

At present the trees are rather young, and the oranges do not quite evince that delicacy of taste and fineness of texture which combine to make the perfect fruit. In a few more years, however, all that will be changed, as with growth and careful nurturing the oranges decrease in size and lose that thickness and coarseness of grain that is the characteristic of the produce of young trees.

All sorts of amusements are the order of the day, in which, amongst others, a baby show has been held, a dozen or more of the very young hopefuls of the surrounding country were rounded up and placed on exhibition. Judges were appointed and awarded prizes with the gravest deliberation. Every night the pavilion is thronged to the doors with the gayest of gay peanut-eating and ice cream soda-drinking crowds. The cornet soloist divides popular favor with the old well-and-bucket done in oranges, while Mrs. Anna Morrison Reid, said to be the best female platform speaker in California, occasionally discourses upon future prospects and the "development of natural resources."

INTERIOR OF THE MAIN BUILDING

Photo by E. W Jensen

In his "Diplomat in London" M. Charles Gavard presents a lively picture of the Athenaeum Club in 1871, and introduces Abraham Hayward, so long the Nestor of that institution:

Here, the law, the church at one side, the Bible minus the church hard by, or else Catholicism and Darwinism side by side, great explorers and members of the Royal Academy of Fine Arts, the House of Commons or the House of Lords and the Cabinet. All of them make their honey in the Athenaeum—climb ladders to hunt out a book, descend again, exchange a word as they pass each other by, take tea on their writing tables, drop letters in the box; and again when the sig n is given for collecting the mail, their activity redoubles. Few of them have gained the right to trouble the silence by talking aloud. My old friend, Abraham Hayward, the eldest surviving "British Essayist," notably possesses it. Towards four o'clock you see him appear in the great reading room. His day's work is done, he goes from table to table trafficking in news and recruiting players for the whist table. (One or two card tables are tolerated in a room apart.) Towards seven o'clock he comes back again to pick up company for dinner. He has his especial table in one corner of the vast dining room—it is often doubled and tripled by the neighboring tables being drawn up alongside of it. There is a good deal of talk and loud laughter in that privileged corner—it is called the Hayward corner. People sit at table there long after their more silent neighbors have disappeared. The conversation increases as the time goes on—the voices rise higher; the amiable and impassioned old gentleman's memory is inexhaustible, but he grows less and less indulgent for those who have crossed his path in the fields of literature, and he subjects English ears (always chaste in a public place) to a more and more severe ordeal. The talk, or rather the dissertation, sets out from literature and history, parliamentary and political reminiscences and anecdotes; but it declines in dignity as the bottles one after another are emptied; the supernatural is as little respected in royalty as in religion; and it becomes annoying to have to play the chorus, and one is glad to gain the door.

Anthony Hope says he does not in the least object to being interviewed, the only thing about it all that he takes exception to being the aftermath when he sees his conversation in cold print; then he is troubled exceedingly.

A DUAL EXISTENCE

Marie Bates as She Is and As She Appears When Playing "Mrs. Murphy."

There can be no question as to the art Marie Bates has displayed in the creation of the character of Mrs. Murphy in the "Chimmie Fadden" company. It is what the critics choose to call a "finished and highly artistic performance." It's all that and a great deal more. We have all heard from the lips and pens of artists since the days of Siddons that once on the stage they lose their identity and become instead the character represented. A great deal of this is mere posing, part of the business, as it were. But in the case of Marie Bates it happens that it is quite real, but in a rather different sense than that generally received by the public.

San Francisco audiences know Mrs. Murphy by this time as well as if they had been acquainted with her all their lives. Mrs. Bates herself is quite a different person. The truth of the matter is that she lives a dual life; on the stage she is a half tipsy Irish slattern; off the stage she is a woman of forty odd years constantly trembling on the verge of nervous hysteria. I found this out on making an attempt to interview her on the subject of making up, an attempt which I promptly abandoned by reason of Mrs. Bates' condition. Even as I was talking to her one of the scene shifters came down a flight of steps behind us and let the stage door slam. If a mine had been exploded beneath her feet Mrs. Bates could not have been more startled. She gasped, turned pale and staggered where she stood. I took myself off as swiftly as possible, not so swiftly, however, but what I saw that a man who had been standing behind her took her by the arm and led her back to that point in the flies from which she made her entrance.

Mrs. Bates has recently suffered the loss of her only sister, and this fact, combined with the unavoidable excitement of stage life, has altogether unnerved her. During progress of the play at such times as she is off the stage some one has to be constantly at her elbow to lead her to and from the dressing room, to pilot her about the wings and to tell her when to go on and such like. Were she left to herself—such is the shattered condition of her nerves—she would lose herself amongst the flats, would go back to her dressing room and resume her street dress, would forget entirely what she was about and what she was expected to do.

The curious part of the matter is that on the stage she is perfectly at home, completely at her ease, self-possessed and self-controlled; only it is not as herself, it is as Mrs. Murphy. No wonder she acts well; it is not a question of subduing her identity, it is a question of complete loss of identity, it is a dual existence. But if she is not herself when off the stage, and if she is really and literally Mrs. Murphy when she is on it, one asks where, then, is the real Marie Bates? It is a question for the psychologists.

The determining factor in sex has always been the subject of controversy, but up to the present time, although numerous theories have been propounded, none can be deemed satisfactory, and the causation of sex is still as much shrouded in mystery as is biogenesis. The latest assumption is that of J. F. Chambers, who propounds what may be called the katabolic and anabolic theory. He says the foetus passes through three cycles: (1) sexless; (2) hermaphrodite or bisexual, and (3) unisexual; and argues that at the second stage the "breeder may step in and enjoin nature to proceed after his wishes." The practical results of breeders' experiments, however, will be more valuable than any number of theories.

In his salad days Senator Quay was a bashful young man, who hated public speaking. In his first and last law case, on rising to address the jury he became exceedingly nervous, and could scarcely proceed with his speech. While struggling to overcome his excessive diffidence he saw some of the other attorneys in the room laughing, and believing it was at his forensic efforts, he sat down and refused to proceed further. From that day he gave up the practice of law, refused all cases that were offered to him, and entered into local politics.

Dr. Nansen has gone to Scotland after an exhausting fortnight in London, during which he has been the biggest of recent lions. His Scotch lecture tour will end on Thursday at Aberdeen. The finest souvenir which he will take away from England is a complete library of forty volumes, bound in navy blue, in which British Arctic explorers have recorded their adventures. It is a present from veterans like Nares and Markham. Nobody who had been less than a twelvemonth within the Arctic circle was allowed to subscribe to the fund.

EXHIBIT OF LEMONS BY THE CITRUS FAIR ASSOCIATION

HERNE, THE UNCONVENTIONAL

His Theory of Art Opposed to All Theatrical Tradition.

Mr. Herne was writing letters at an absurdly small table when I came in. He got up and took another chair, and ran his fingers through his hair, and remarked resignedly :

"I'm a very bad sort of interview, and generally make a mess of it. What do you want me to say? You'll have to do all the talking."

Just here I was inspired by some happy providence to express interest and curiosity in Mr. Herne's theory of dramatic art. I could not have chosen a more fortunate subject. I did not have to do all the talking—hardly any of it, for that matter. The author of "Shore Acres" at once took the conversation out of my hands—precisely as I wished him to.

"Truth, truth, truth, is what I am after," said Mr. Herne. "My idea and theory of dramatic art is fidelity in the making of a picture of a certain phase of life."

"How about plot?" I remarked. "There is little 'plot' in real life."

"Precisely, and for that very reason there is little plot in 'Shore Acres.' I want to make things happen on the stage as though they were a little segment cut out of life, on the street, in the country, here in this very room. I don't use plots. I don't like the word."

"What then?"

"Themes. I choose a certain theme, very simple, very direct, and work out my play in reference to it."

"But you plan and map out the main idea of the action?"

"No, I don't. When I sit down to write a play, when I first dip my pen in the inkwell, I have no notion of how it will turn out—more than that, I have no notion how it will begin to run after the first scene. The play works itself out."

"And the characters?"

"The characters, too. How can I interfere with a character? It's independent of me entirely. Certain characters must of absolute necessity die, others must go through a certain amount of affliction; and there are even some who are born, as it were, who suddenly came into existence without my planning it."

"Now isn't that rather unusual, Mr. Herne?"

"Yes, it's an innovation."

"How about the critics at first?"

"They would have none of it. They said that my plays had neither wit nor pathos, nor plot, nor character, nor situation."

"But the public?"

"Ah, that's a very different thing. The public recognized the humanity of it, the truth of it, not the mere fidelity to local color, but the elemental truth, the universal principle. Now this play of 'Shore Acres' is supposed to happen on the Atlantic seaboard of the United States, but only the other day a Scotch gentleman said to me, 'Herne, you know when I heard "Shore Acres" I could just shut my eyes and go right back in memory to the little Scotch village where I was born.' That was one of the most flattering speeches ever addressed to me. You see, I had somehow struck a note of human sympathy that was universal, something the Scotchman recognized at once. It was realism, it was truth. That's the kind of thing I'm after. The papers speak of the steaming kettle and real roast turkey of 'Shore Acres' as though these details were realism. They are nothing but details, mere accessories. The realism of the thing is something higher and subtler than that."

"Then how do you account for the roast turkey, what's the raison d'etre of the roast turkey?"

"Well, ten years ago a papier mache turkey would have done equally well. But we've got beyond that. Just as we've got beyond gilded wooden goblets and such like. I don't use the real turkey merely for the sake of realism, but so that the actor who is to carve it may the better act the part. Suppose he were to carve a papier mache turkey. He would be out of his part at once. Take, for instance, the stage inkstand and the stage quill pen—which nobody thinks of using nowadays. I couldn't act with them at all. The moment I picked up that absurd goose quill and jabbed it into the absurd empty inkstand and scratched it over the paper very loud, so as to make the gallery hear, I would know they were 'props,' mere shams, and would be 'off my part' in an instant."

"I would assume, then, Mr. Herne, that you do not allow yourself to be hampered by stage traditions."

"I have broken with them all," said he with great emphasis. "One must if one is to adhere to truth and to reality. The ordinary stage manager is continually breaking up his groups by crossings and all that, and is somehow just as artistic notwithstanding. There is no good and sufficient reason for this crossing left and crossing right, and for delivering impressive speeches in the center of the stage. In this room, for instance, if I take up a position on the left-hand side of the table, close to you, is it incumbent on you to 'cross R' and stand in the right-hand corner? Or if I want to be particularly emphatic must I feel that the effect is spoiled if I do not stand directly under the gas fixture?"

From the point of view of his personality one is apt to be surprised at first sight of Mr. Herne. One is apt to judge a man's appearance according to the character of the work he produces. I confess I had an idea that Herne would be a sort of Denman Thompson, a gentle-mannered, easygoing "down-Easter," with an air of the farm about him. Instead of this, however, you carry away with you the impression of a college-bred man, of highly educated intelligence, a student, a litterateur, and a man of the world. After all, one should expect the unexpected. It is, perhaps, the realism of life that Mr. Herne speaks of.

Addison Cammack, one of the old timers of Wall street, has sold his seat in the Stock Exchange, and has dropped out of the speculative world. Cammack was a natural pessimist, and consequently a bear by instinct, and to this quality he owed his immense fortune. The biggest turn of his career was made in the West Shore-Vanderbilt fight. He had fought the stock vigorously, and the bear contingent learned that a peace between the contending factions had been patched up. Immediately he covered his shortage, went over to the bulls, and converted paper profits into something like ten millions in cold cash. At this time Cammack was sixty years of age, but he proceeded to marry a young wife and settled a million upon her as a marriage portion. He always boasted that he began operations on Wall street with a capital of ten thousand, and as he has left out of his gains two and a half millions, he can hardly be termed a failure.

In spite of his millions and his success, E. T. Hooley, the great company promoter, is decidedly unpopular in Great Britain. In compliance with the suggestion of the Prince of Wales that Queen Victoria's sixtieth anniversary would be best celebrated by the giving of large sums of money for the relief of the deserving poor, he donated two million dollars, the income of which is to be used in bettering the condition of the poor in that part of Derbyshire with which he is most closely associated. Excellent though the scheme is, Hooley is given no credit, but is accused of doing it all out of a desire for personal advertisement. Some weeks ago he presented to St. Paul's Cathedral a magnificent communion service of pure gold, and immediately a great outcry was raised all over England protesting against the action of the cathedral authorities in accepting the gift.

THE ORIENT ENTERTAINING THE OCCIDENT

On the occasion of their annual banquet, the Yinn Yee Kong Sow Society invited the Supervisors of San Francisco and their lady friends to a banquet in the Hong Fer Low restaurant.

From a flashlight by Taber

IN SOCIETY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

There will be a larger crowd at the coming Mardi Gras ball than there was at last year's affair, owing to the increased number of invitations issued. Masking is expected of every lady admitted to the floor, but costuming is not so much of a necessity, but with the men the rule is the reverse—they are requested to be in costume, but masking is optional. The supper rooms and the drawing room will be decorated with any amount of yellow and white roses, making an exceedingly pretty effect, and the grand stairway will be set off with date palms from Santa Barbara. Robert Fletcher, who is on the Committee on Decorations, will be poet of the occasion, and A. C. Hellman Prince Carnival.

Howard W. Adams and Miss Edna Van Wyck led the last german of this season of the Saturday Evening Cotillion Club, which came off in Lunt's Hall. The four figures danced were quite pretty. They were called the Japanese lantern, hollow saman, double triangle, and a marching figure. The next cotillion to be given by the club will take place after Lent at Native Sons' Hall in April.

Those who will be present at the Crocker tea this afternoon will hear some especially good music, as Herr Anton Schott and Mrs. C. O. Richards are to sing, and Miss Alice Ames, who studied in Europe with Joachim, will play the violin. There is a genuine desire to hear Miss Ames, as she is said to have improved immensely in having won commendation from Joachim. The Presidio band will play between the numbers on the programme, which also includes Miss Lillie Lawlor and Mr. Giulio Minetti.

MISS ETHEL COHEN
Whose engagement to Lieutenant Bent was recently announced
Taber, photo

Miss Grace Watt Kerr and Charles Allen Hulme were married last Monday evening by President Martin Kellogg of the State University. The affair took place at the home of the bride's father, James W. Kerr, on Golden Gate avenue. The decorations were lilies and smilax. The bridesmaid was Miss Sarah Cofer, the groomsman, George Taylor, and the maid of honor Miss Alma Hulme.

There is a big rush for admissions to the Concordia Club's performance of "Zenda's King," a burlesque of "The Prisoner of Zenda," which has been written by John P. Wilson of the Tivoli. I am told it is a first-class farce, and is to be produced with all the accessories of scenery, which has been painted and designed for the occasion. There are two prima donnas, Leon Greenebaum, who is to be the Princess Flavia, and Milton Bremer, who is to do Antoinette de Mauban. Eugene Korn, Ben Davis and all the fun-makers of the club are in the cast. George Lask is stage manager; the dialogue is full of fun, and there is general interest in the affair. Should the performance be as good as the rehearsals, it will be among the events of the Concordia's history.

The dinner at the Hellman's on Monday night was a colonial entertainment, and was conducted on the progressive basis ,which has become so very popular. There were some sixty people there, and most of them had an opportunity to exchange ideas and other currency with every one else. The reorganized Hellman house, though by no means a thing of beauty on the outside, is very sumptuous within, and it was beautifully adorned for the occasion. In honor of the imomrtal George, the table decorations were cherry blossoms and blue ribbons, and the menu cards were printed on cherry bark in gilt letters. There were any number of pretty girls present, but I noticed Miss Sussman, Miss Hecht, and Miss Frank as looking particularly handsome. Another affair of this week was a dinner given by Miss Alice Bachmann to a number of her friends at her home on Devisadero street, Thursday last.

In society there is considerable motion offered to record. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Frank have returned from their bridal tour, and are installed at their charming flat on Polk street. I am told that the Frank brothers in their travels around the world gave themselves up to the collection of curios, and gathered all manner of Chinese, Japanese and Indian ware, which they agreed among themselves should go to the one of the brothers who first succumbed to matrimony. So their treasures are all the property of the newly wedded pair. Colonel and Mrs. M. H. Hecht are expected back from the East very shortly, and Mr. and Mrs. Sol Ehrmann go East next week. Mr. and Mrs. Benno Hart are home again, and the Adolph Sonns are at the carnival at San Diego.

There was a good deal of fun over the baseball game Washington's birthday between a team of University freshmen and a nine from the Calliopean Club. All the brethren and sistren of the Calliopeans turned out, and gathered at the Presidio to witness the trial of skill, and were very happy over the victory of the clubmen.

***

The character of recent entertainments in Oakland has been decidedly juvenile. The older set seem to have retired into seclusion for the time being, of course. It is true there were a few luncheons and dinners, but the recital of the week's events consists largely of school and college happenings and debutantes' teas. It is true that Mrs. Requa had a luncheon for Mrs. Laidlaw, of New York, and that Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Price gave a reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Cameron, who were recently married, but otherwise one must speak of the cotillion of the University, Miss Horton's party, and Miss Head's affair.

The Price reception went off very nicely. The house was beautifully decorated with the proper allowance of bamboos, acacias, and other floral accessories, and there was a capital supper. Mr. and Mrs. Cameron left on Monday for their home at Rossland, B. C. The party at Miss Horton's school Friday evening, last, was a very jolly affair. The dance hall was sumptuously arranged in greens and manzanita blossoms. Dancing was, of course, the order of the occasion. Then, on Thursday, Miss Head had a dance for the seniors at her school in Berkeley, at which the Oakland sets were well represented. In anticipation there is a play by the students of the Berkeley high school. The class of '97 has it in charge. They are to produce "A Scrap of Paper," with all the proper accessories.

The event of the week, however, was the annual cotillion at the University. This was a proper affair in which the three classes participated. The Harmon gymnasium was the scene of the revelry and was converted into an appropriate background with greens, ferns, and other insignia of festivity. Mrs. Glascock and Mrs. Pringle were the chaperons, and the affair went off beautifully. Will Smith and Brick Morse led the german. Innumerable pretty girls came from as far south as San Jose, and there were emissaries from each of the three or four Oakland sets from the peninsula. I noticed the belles of the Saturday Night, Monday Night, Fortnightly and Cotillion among the dancers. A new idea was inaugurated, that of presenting the various couples with little flags after they had participated in each figures, they had participated in each figure, to germans. Among the girls I noticed Miss Florence Green, who is decidedly a comely maiden, and Miss Gibbon, who looked very charming, but I will not further particularize, inasmuch as the list might be too long. An amusing incident terminated the affair. At half-past one the electric lights were all shut off with a suddenness which left the assemblage in darkness. Confounded confusion reigned for some moments while the gas was being put into operation, but I have not been told of anything untoward happening. Most of the young people were put up at Berkeley for the night. The Fi Gi and Chi Phi Fraternity houses were converted into temporary headquarters for the fair sex, and the men found accommodation elsewhere. Much to their regret the Betas were inhibited from offering hospitality owing to the condition of Mr. Ransome, who was then serously ill.

A pretty pink and green wedding occurred in Sacramento last week, when Miss Mollie Sheehan, of the Capital city, became Mrs. Vincent Merkeley. The affair took place at high noon at the home of the bride's parents on Sutter Terrace, in the present of relatives and a few invited friends. The rooms were prettily decorated with pink and green, the bridal arbor being covered with trailing vines and La France roses, making a very dainty effect. The bride's gown was of white satin covered with white chiffon and trimmed with point lace. A diamond crescent held the veil in place. Miss Ednah Sheehan, the maid of honor, was in pink satin covered with satin-striped tulle, and the bridesmaids, Miss Della Mills, of San Francisco; Miss Mildred Francis, of Napa; Miss Ruby Merkeley, Miss Maud Merkeley, Miss Alice Sheehan, and Miss Rose Sheehan, were gowned in silk covered with chiffon, three in pink and three in green. After the ceremony the breakfast was served, and in the afternoon a reception was held, in which Mrs. Sheehan was assisted in receiving by Mrs. William H. Mills, of San Francisco; Mrs. Merkeley, and Mrs. C. K. McClatchey, or Sacramento, and Mrs. George Perkins, of Oakland. Mr. and Mrs. Merkeley will travel for awhile in the southern portion of the State, and on their return will occupy their new home now almost completed.

TWO FOOLS

By SARAH DEAN

The music reached them faintly, mingled with the hum of voices and stabbed now and again by a dart of laughter. Beside them a heavy-headed rose dreamed out its fragrant life.

They were friends.

"Poor fools," he said, opening and shutting her fan with masculine recklessness.

She assented dreamily.

"Fifteen hundred a year. No club dinners on that. Such a jolly chap, too."

"No Paris gowns nor boxes at the opera. Hetty was designed to adorn an opera box."

He laid her fan on her knee and smiled at her.

"Two more friends off our list, eh Edith? We'll soon be quite alone in our sensible insensibility."

"Yes, left to wither on the bough, I suppose Hetty would call it."

"Well, that's a matter of opinion."

He stretched out his long legs, tucked his thumbs in his trouser pockets, and leaned back with the ease of long established good-fellowship and studied her. He noted with appreciation the tall, graceful figure, the sweep of her shoulders, the delicate poise of her small head, and the patrician purity of her features with their healthful pallor. At last he said with an air of languid discovery, "Why do you wear your hair that way? I don't like it."

"That's sad. I do. I suits me."

He sat up with sudden animation.

"By jove! there you are mistaken. It doesn't. It suits your brow and that Grecian nose of yours—but I'm not sure it always suits your mouth, and it doesn't suit your eyes—that I know."

She leaned her elbow on her knee, rested her firm, round chin on her hand, and looked at him quietly.

"Doesn't it?" she said.

"No. Your lips are so sweet, like a half-blown rose, with a dimple at each corner—and your eyes—two great crystal wells that glow and change like an April sky."

He was rambling—he had lost the train of his thought. He leaned back suddenly and twisted his mustache.

"So you don't believe in love?" he said at last.

"You said that."

"Oh, did I? Well, it's just the same. You agreed with me."

"Not exactly. I said it was all imagination, but it was as good as true, I supposed—if they believed it hard enough—and never waked up."

"It is comfortable to dream."

"Oh, no. I want to be always wide awake."

"Your brow and nose said that—your eyes and mouth will contradict it in a moment."

"No, they won't. When I marry I'll do so with my eyes open."

A sudden draught of cold air struck him.

"I see; certainly, of course," in confused acquiescence.

"As love is all imagination, I'll simply imagine myself in love with the right man. Isn't that simple?"

"Perfectly."

"When one comes who has brains enough, and money enough—I think I'll accept him."

"Whew! Talk about the North Pole!"

"But do be reasonable. There is no such thing as love—you said so yourself—why not then be sensible?"

"I always said you were a wonderful woman."

"Yes; am I not?"

The music floated to them faint and sweet, the fountain twinkled, the rose dreamed on.

"I wonder," he said at last, "how those two infatuated fools think they feel?"

"Well—happy to begin with."

"Yes?"

"The world forgetting, by the world forgot."

"That theory does until the bills come in, then the world develops a wonderful memory."

"This earth is a planet filled with love and brightness—and they exist on it—alone."

"Humph! What about taxes?"

"And when they are together all the cares and meanness, all the false friends and disappointed ambitions grow insignificant—because she has him, and he has her."

She was looking straight before her, her eyes luminous.

"When he is by, the music is full of mysterious subtle sweetness, the flowers bloom brighter, the sun shines clearer."

He leaned toward her, and his voice was low and not quite steady.

"It's very stupid being sensible. Let us be fools."

"Shore Acres" will play two weeks longer at the Baldwin, and there is every indication that the audiences will be larger during the rest of the engagement than they have been through the past week.

MISS BETH FRANKLYN
Of the Chimmie Fadden Company
Thors, photo

Madame Trebelli announces two farewell concerts before going east — one on the afternoon of Saturday, the 6th of March, and the second on the evening of Tuesday, the 9th instant, at Golden Gate Hall.

The Clara Schumann Quartette will give a concert on next Tuesday evening, for the benefit of the Society of Christian Endeavor of Plymouth Church.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

THE THEATRES

An Impression of "Shore Acres"—The Volatility of Fanny Rice.

When the curtain rustles down on the closing scene of "Shore Acres," muffling the ticking of the noisy kitchen clock, and hiding away from view the flickering firelight that dances among the shining pans of Mrs. Berry's well-appointed kitchen, you feel as though you had looked on a something very real, upon which you would like to look a little longer. You have a definite and distinct feeling that the Berry youngsters and all the Berry family are snugly tucked away in bed behind the painted "flat," and that good, old, lovable Uncle Nathan'l is hanging his store suit away in his attic chamber preparatory to sliding in between the cold sheets of his lonely couch. You picture him in a homely red night-cap and canton-flannel gown, and would be shocked to know that he was making for his dressing-room and would that night sleep in a comfortable hotel.

If you give yourself over to the play, and it is not difficult to fall in with the simple tale of Maine life that it tells, the whole thing will seem very real and very lifelike to you. The story commences naturally and moves smoothly along in a serene atmosphere of quiet country life, without a hitch or a break or a suggestion of the stage to jar upon one. In the third act you are reminded of the "theater" when the schooner, Lydia Ann, which bears the runaway Helen, is tossing about in a sou'easter. The painted canvas sea, the rolling, rocking, mimic craft, are distinctly stagey and disallusioning. They are a concession to the play-goer who runs after the tank scene, the jump-from-the-bridge, and the like of them, and although the audience broke into loud, and, to me, quite senseless applause over the scene, I did not like it to intrude upon the quiet of the story or the spirit of enjoyment that had taken possession of me. But you soon forget the Lydia Ann, the canvas sea and the lighthouse, in the presence of the closing scene.

MISS KATE MICHELENA
Of the Fanny Rice Company
Elite, photo

You must not imagine "Shore Acres" to be like unto "The Old Homestead," because it pictures the homely life of New England country folk. "Shore Acres" is true where the "Homestead" is false to nature. "Shore Acres" is life in reality. Denman Thompson's piece—I could never bring myself to enjoy it—is the merest dross and stuff beside it. The distinctive feature of "Shore Acres" is its naturalness. It looks so easy, so lacking in effort, as to charm and captivate you. Unless you be captious, indeed, its simplicity, which can only grow out of infinite pains and untiring care, disarms you and enlists your sympathy with the story and the people who are in it.

Perhaps Mr. Herne may be charged with acting a bit here and there, but the fact that his "acting" is noticeable at all, and that his forgetfulness in that respect—or perhaps it was remembrance—jarred a little upon you, is in itself a high compliment to the performance as a whole. I don't fancy his facial work as he sits up front and looks over the footlights at the audience, for then he is Herne, not Nathaniel. Doubtless, he has given over many an hour to training the children of the play to be entirely unconscious of the audience, for they were oblivious to everything in front, and acted as though they did not realize that a thousand eyes were upon them. From little Mary Berry Herne might take a lesson in this respect.

The toothless Joel Bates was a clever study, and to his little daughter, Mandy, we were prepared to extend something of sympathy. Grace Gaylor Clark, as the New England housewife, was so true to nature that she brought up recollections of another New England housewife in real life who can lay claim to a large store of my affection. The dailies have gone over the story of "Shore Acres," but it will never be brought home to you from anything you may see in print. Nothing but the thing itself is satisfying. They have two weeks more of "Shore Acres" at the Baldwin, and that they will be two weeks of crowded houses is certain.

Fanny Rice is smiling over the footlights at the Columbia, with a "new version" of "At the French Ball." The house was well filled Tuesday evening, and the audience giggled, laughed, and in some places roared over the mishaps befalling the dissatisfied shoemaker's wife who went forth from her humble home in search of happiness among people with money.

It is one thing never before to have seen "At the French Ball," and it is quite another to attempt it a second time. There is enough material—singing and acting material—in Miss Rice's company to justify the making of a "new version" that will be something more than a new version in name only. They have good voices in plenty in the company, as the rendition of the sextet from "Lucia" plainly indicated, but the fact that it was possible to have had some passably good music emphasized the scarcity of it and gave us something to regret. Miss Rice is ostentatiously the head of the company. The play was written for her; she owns it and runs it and proposes that you shall not misunderstand it. Perhaps more of singing would mean less of Rice, perhaps the performance would be better for the change, but Miss Rice's voice is lame and halt, and such an innovation might relegate the mistress of the troupe to a position she is unwilling to occupy. Just why she insists on telling the audience how she would say "Good-bye" under three different circumstances is as inexplicable as why Miss Alice Gaillard should consider it necessary to bedaub herself with red paint until she resembles a malignant case of scarlet fever or a well-spanked baby. She was simply hideous with paint, and Miss Rice's "Good-bye" efforts were so obviously intended to "show off," so manifestly lugged in, and so far from being artistic, that it was painful everywhere except in the gallery.

Kate Michelena, soprano; John S. Terry, tenor, and George Broderick, baritone, have voices above the average of the stage not operatic. One cannot resist the feeling that he would like to take a shy at the "French Ball," and cut some of its dreary parts out and inject into it something of the variety it so sadly needs and the abilities of the company would seem to fully warrant. "At the French Ball" will doubtless draw, despite its drawbacks, for the audience generously and good-naturedly insisted on being pleased.

B.

MISS BERNICE WHEELER
Of the Chimmie Fadden Company
Thors, photo

"Saints and Sinners" is well played at the Alcazar this week, as well played, in fact, as anything has been at this theater for some time. George Osbourne's work as Jacob Fletcher is excellent—it is the feature of the performance. Hugo Toland is too placidly calm, too generally good-natured to be a thoroughly villanous Captain Fanshame. Francis Powers has everything requisite for a detestable Samuel Hoggard, and a capital companion piece is the Prabbles of Maurice Stewart. Miss Jolliffe has proved quite an attraction, and it is not probable that her friends are disappointed in her work, as it is quite good. There are some rough edges in her emotional business, especially in the fourth act, but she will improve. A word should be given to Miss Crosby for her make-up as the bashful Fanny. It is good, and has taken immensely.

At the Orpheum this week the Pantzer Trio give an exhibition of wonderful twisting and turning—the most novel and startling work of the kind seen in San Francisco for years. Barney Fagan and Henrietta Bryon, two of the week's new people, appear in a sketch entitled "Idol Fancy," in which Mr. Fagan introduces some characteristic dancing, and Miss Bryon makes some quick changes, appearing to advantage in several handsome gowns.

Edward Hayes and Emily Lytton have a new sketch entitled, "The Talkative Man," in which Hayes will make use of but five words, Miss Lytton filling in the balance. It is an amusing affair and promises to be the best thing they have done yet.

DRAMATIC NOTES

The Alcazar will put on next [illegible] celebrated Boston Museum [illegible] success, "By Proxy." The entire company will appear in the cast, including George Osbourne, Hugo Toland, Frances Jolliffe, and May Buckley, and in addition Adele Belgarde and Charles Wyngate, the latter making his first appearance at this theatre. At the matinee today the 250th performance of the Alcazar Stock Company will take place, and everybody in the house will be presented with a satin souvenir program. "Jim the Penman" is underlined for an early production.

The Tivoli will put on "The Mikado" next week with Elvia Crox Seabrooke as Yum Yum, Arthur Boyce as Nanki Poo and Ferris Hartman as the Lord High Executioner Ko-Ko. The season of Gilbert and Sullivan opera will be continued after the run of "The Mikado" with "The Sorcerer," "Trial by Jury" and "Iolanthe."

With to-morrow night's concert Sousa's band will end its engagement in San Francisco. So far the California has been crowded with audiences appreciative of the "Band King's" music and of the ability of his musicians. Miss Northrup, the soprano, has made a pleasant impression, as also has Miss Johnstone, the violiniste.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

MISS IRENE VANCOURT
Of the Chimmie Fadden Troupe
Thors, photo

VINTINE
(REGISTERED)

A Nerve Food

Nutrient Tonic

Blood Cleanser

The Vintine Co.

NEW YORK, N. Y., U. S. A.
LONDON, ENG. MELBOURNE, AUST.
HONOLULU, H. I.

Main Office, San Francisco, Cal.
119 Powell Street.

It is not generally known that we originate, write, design and print unique, out-of-the-ordinary invitations, programs, and so forth, for society affairs. That's why we mention it. WILDER & CO., 20 to 24 Geary street.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

THE MUTINY IN FICTION

A New Novel, Which Fills a Long-Felt Want.

The world has long awaited the "Novel of the Indian Mutiny." Writer after writer has essayed to make a background out of that strange and terrible uprising against British misrule, but the results have had no relation to the magnitude of the subject.

This theme, with various variations, has, during the last few weeks, been clamored from the pages of the literary magazines—apropos "On the Face of the Waters" (Macmillan & Co.), by Flora Annie Steel. The long-felt want has at last been filled; the world's hunger has been appeased. A chorus of praise of the volume, led by J. Lockwood Kipling in the "New Review," has gone up in two hemispheres, and the publishers are keeping their presses busy issuing new editions. In fact, "On the Face of the Waters" is the latest sensation, and if you know nothing about it—why, you are simply not in the swim, literary speaking.

"On the Face of the Waters" has virtues to counterbalance its magnitude. It is a big canvas, minutely worked over. The background is India—the city of Delhi—the foreground is crowded with natives, soldiers, princes, kings, begums, and ayahs, and mem-sahibs. Half a dozen dramas unravel themselves, the main interest being concentrated on James Douglas and Kate Erlton, the former a brave Scotch officer in disgrace, and the latter the wife of Major Erlton, who is in love with Alice Gissing. Subsidiary complications are the passion of Princess Farkhoonda and Abool-Bukr, the intrigue of the Queen, Zeenut Maihl, for the succession of her son, the love affair of Zora and Douglas on the roof garden. There are long episodes devoted to the adventures of Douglas and of Tiddu, the fakir, to the interior economy of the palace and of Bahadur Shah, the last of the Moghuls, who writes verses. The siege of Delhi is described at portentious length. Indeed, in the mass of material one loses the sense of proportion. The impression left on the mind is that of a crowd, a vast array of figures and scenery from which the characters fail to detach themselves. Contrast the treatment of the subject with Zola's "Debocle." There the story is unrolled like an epic; there is absolute proportion, a careful subordination of detail and scenery to the central fact.

The value of "On the Face of the Waters" lies in the insight it gives into the Indian character and atmosphere and into the causes which led to the terrific uprising of nations at Meerut and Delhi. There is offered here a working theory to account for the Mutiny. The currents of discontent through the conquered nation are skillfully mirrored, and one has the impression this is the real India that is painted, not the India of surmise or imagination. The dreaminess and indecision of the Oriental are admirably rendered and harmonize with the romantic background which the old city, its turrets, palaces, roofs and bazaars affords. I have not space to attempt even a resume of the several plots, but here are some impressions from the volume. Here, for instance, is a scene in the harem of the historic palace of the Moghuls at Delhi. The Queen, Zeenut Maihl, is one of the actors in the story:

"Hush!" The whispered monition made Hafzan pause in the screener archway till the game was over. It was a sort of dumb-crambo, and a most outrageous double entendre had just brought a smile to the broad, heavy face of a woman who lay among cushions in the alcoved balcony. This was Zeenut Maihl, who, for nearly twenty years, had kept her hold upon the King, despite endless rivals. She was dark-complexioned, small-eyed, with a curious lack of eyebrows which took from her even vivacity of expression. But it was a man with experience in many wives who remarked that favor is deceitful and beauty is vain; he knew, no doubt, that in polygamy the victory must go to the most unscrupulous fighter. Zeenut Maihl at any rate secured hers by ever-recurring promises of another heir to her octogenarian husband; a flattery to which his other wives either could or would not stoop. But the trick served the Queen's purpose in more ways than one. Her oft-recurring disappointments could have but one cause: witchcraft. So on such occasions, with her paid priest, Hussan Askuri, saying prayers for those in extremis at her bedside, Zeenut Maihl's enemies went down like nine-pins, and she arose from her bed of sickness with a board cleared of dangerous rivalry. For none in the hot-bed of shams felt secure enough to get into grips with her. Ahsan-Oolah, the physician, might have; she had cried quarter from his keen fence before now; but he did not care to take the trouble.

Princess Farkhoonda, the beloved of Prince Abool, is introduced, doubtless, as an historic character, because she has little to do with the drama. Here she appears:

The roof on which he sat was a secluded roof, protected from view, even from other roofs, by high latticed walls; its only connection with the world below it being by a dizzy brick ladder of a stair climbing down fearlessly from one corner. Across the further end stretched a sort of veranda, inclosed by lattice and screens. But the middle arch being open showed a blue and white striped carpet, and a low reed stool. Nothing more. But a sweet voice came from its unseen corner.

"Art not ashamed, Abool, to come to my discreet house among godly folk and sing lewd songs? Will they not think ill of me? And if thou comest drunken horribly with wine, as thou didst last week, claiming audience with me, thine aunt, not all that title will save me from aspersion. And if I lose this calm retreat, whither shall poor Newasi go?"

They were the most beautiful eyes in the world. Such is the consensus of opinion among all who ever saw them. Judged indeed by this standard, the Princess Farknoonda Zamani, alias Newasi Begum, the widow of one of the King's younger sons, must have had that mysterious charm which is beyond beauty. But she was beautiful also, though smallpox had left its marks upon her. Chiefly, however, by a thickening of the skin, which brought an opaque pallor, giving her oval face a look of carved ivory. In truth, this memento of the past tragedy, which at the age of 13 had brought her, the half-wedded bride, to death's door, and sent her 15-year-old bridegroom from the festival to the grave, enhanced, rather than detracted, from her beauty. Her lips were reddened after the fashion of court women, her short-sighted hazel eyes were heavily blackened with antimony; but she wore no jewels, and her graceful, sweeping Delhi dress was of the deadest, purest white, embroidered in finest needlework round hems and seams, and relieved only by the lighter folds of her white, lace-like veil.

The Mutiny was precipitated by the greased cartridges served out to the native soldiers in India. It was reported that the cartridges made in the arsenal were smeared with pig's grease and cow's fat, and to touch either meant loss of caste. In those days it was necessary to bite the end of the cartridges, and the Sepoys declared that if they did so their wives would leave them and their relatives would shun them. Very injudiciously an effort was made to force down this prejudice, and at Meerut Colonel Carmichael Smyth, commanding the Third Bengal Cavalry, picked out eighty-five men from his regiment and commanded them to accept the cartridges. They refused, and were court-martialed and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude in irons. In order to terrify the rest of the army into obedience, the irons were riveted on at a grand review. This is the scene:

The knot of European spectators round the flag listened with yawns to the stout General's exordium. The eighty-five being hopelessly, helplessly in the wrong by military law, there seemed to be no need to insist on the fact. And the mass of dark faces standing within range of the loaded guns and rifles, within reach of glistening sabres, did not listen at all. Not that it mattered, since the units in that crowd had lost the power of accepting facts. Even Soma, standing to attention beside the tumbrils, only felt a great sense of outrage, of wrong, of injustice somewhere. And there was one Englishman, at least, rigid to attention also before his disarmed, dismounted, yet loyal troop, who must have felt it also, unless he was more than human. And this was Captain Craigie, who, when his men appealed to him to save them, to delay this unnecessary musketry parade, had written in his haste to the Adjutant, "Go to Smyth at once! Go to Smyth!" and Smyth was his Colonel! Incredible lack of official etiquette. Repeated hardily, morover. "Pray don't lose a moment, but go to Smyth and tell him!" What? Only "That this is a most serious matter, and we have the whole regiment in open mutiny in half an hour if it is not attended to." Only that! So it is to be hoped that Captain Craigie had the official wigging for his unconventional appeal in his pocket as he shared his regiment's disgrace, to serve him as a warning—or a consolation.

And now the pompous monotone being ended, the silence, coming after the clankings, and buglings, and trampings, which had been going on since dawn, was almost oppressive. The three sides of steel, even the fourth of faces, however, showed no sign. They stood as stone while the eighty-five were stripped of their uniforms. But there was more to come. By the General's orders the leg-irons were to be riveted on one by one; and so, once more, the sound of iron upon iron recurred monotonously, making the silence of the intervals still more oppressive. For the prisoners at first seemed stunned by the isolation from even their as yet unfettered comrades. But suddenly from a single throat came that cry for justice, which has a claim to hearing, at least, in the estimation of the people of India.

"Dohai! Dohai! Dohai!"

Some gave a sort of sigh, and a faint quiver of expectation passed over the sea of dark faces.

Clang! Clang! The hammers, going on unchecked, were the only answer. Those three sides of stone had come to see a thing done, and it must be done; the sooner the better. But the riveting of eighty-five pairs of leg-irons is not to be done in a moment; so the cry grew clamorous. Dohai! Dohai! Had they not fought faithfully in the past? Had they not been deceived? Had they had a fair chance?

But the hammers went on as the sun climbed out of the dust-haze to gleam on the sloped sabres, glint on the loaded guns, and send glittering streaks of light along the rifles.

The consequence of this brutal and ill-advised policy came sooner than was anticipated. Revenge was determined on, but the comrades of the disgraced soldiers delayed to strike. The torch was applied to the powder by a woman:

For, as Jim Douglas paced slowly down the Mall toward Delhi, and Soma, his buckles gleaming, his belts pipe-clayed to dazzling whiteness, was swaggering through the bazaar, on his way to the rest-house with his word of warning—the word which would have given Jim Douglas the power for which he had longed—another word was being spoken in that lane of lust, where the time had come for which Nargeeza had waited all day. But she did not say it. It was only a big trollop of a girl hung with jasmine garlands, painted, giggling.

"We of the bazaar kiss no cowards," she said derisively. "Where are your comrades?"

The man to whom she said it, a young, dissolute-faced trooper, dressed in the loose rakish muslins beloved of his class—the very man, perchance, who had gone cityward that morning, and dropped an alms into the yellow fakir's bowl—stood for a second in the stifling, maddening atmosphere of musk and rose and orange-blossom; stood before all those insolent allurements, balked in his passion, checked in his desires. Then, with an oath, he dashed from her insulting charms; dashed into the street with a cry:

"To horse! To horse, brothers! To the jail! To our comrades!"

The word had been spoken. The speech which brings more than speech, had come from the painted lips of a harlot.

From this scene onward the book is devoted to the siege of Delhi. The manner in which Jim Douglas guards Kate Erlton from the sanguinary natives is detailed at length; the scenes on both sides of the wall are rendered. We have the army on the ridge and the palace intriguers inside. The absence of proportion is most marked through these chapters which, even considering the brilliancy of color and effect, lose because of this excessive prolixity.

Moet & Chandon Chosen.

At the Bradley-Martin dress ball, surpassing anything of the kind before attempted in this country, the cost of which was not less than $300,000, competition among the champagne importers was so strong that it was decided to submit to the most noted epicures of the Four Hundred unmarked samples of all the leading champagnes, and thus it came about that those who, by their taste and experience are the qualified judges of that which is best, selected the brand of Moet & Chandon, which was the only champagne served at this event. —San Francisco Chronicle.

REASONS FOR USING

Walter Baker & Co.'s

Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

Polished

Hardwood Floors

$1.50 per Square Yard

Fine Work—First-class References

INLAID FLOOR CO.

602 Market St., Crocker Building

Telephone Main 5998

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY

E. L. G. STEELE & CO.

208 California St., San Francisco

Fine Furs and Sealskin Garments

To order. Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast. All work guaranteed first-class

AD KOCOUR, Fashionable Furrier

5½ Kearny Street

Upstairs opposite Chronicle. Formerly cutter with Revillion Freres, Paris, London, New York

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Ross's
Royal Belfast
Ginger Ale

Made with water drawn from the celebrated Cromac Springs. Pronounced by analysis to be the finest and most wholesome.

PURITY GUARANTEED

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood & Sherwood

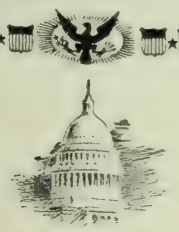
Portland San Francisco Los Angeles



THE GREAT INAUGURATION NUMBER OF THE CENTURY MAGAZINE

*****

MARCH

*****

RICHLY ILLUSTRATED.

New Portraits of President-Elect McKinley and President Cleveland

Taken specially for The Century.

Articles on The President's Life in the White House, The Nation's New Library, Inauguration Scenes and Incidents, Etc., Etc.

SOUVENIR NUMBER.

All News-stands, 35 Cents.

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

"It gives me great pleasure to accept the dedication of your beautiful songs. "S. JADASSOLEN, Leipsic."

Song Album by H. B. PASMORE

Nineteen Beautiful Songs Sent for One Dollar

OLIVER DITSON CO., Boston

RACING

The Four-Mile Run at Emeryville — Napamax's Victory.

The latter part of the meeting at Emeryville was brought off in miserably wet weather, but with the opening at Ingleside came bright sunshine and a settled appearance to which we have been strangers for weeks, affording a track of which the condition left little to be desired.

The renewal of the Thornton stakes, four miles, weight ten pounds below the scale, on Saturday last, was in more ways than one somewhat of a disappointment, but chiefly so in that only three horses out of thirty original entries faced the weight had the pull, the 4-year-old Schilstarter. With a heavy track the lightweight had the pull, the 4-yearo-ld Schiller (imp. St. George—Fraulein), 109 pounds, owned by Mr. Barney Schrieber, and bred by Mr. J. B. Ferguson at his stud in Kentucky, scoring an easy victory in the slow time of 8:04½, as compared with the California record of 7:20¼. Sims handled the winner nicely, making no more use of him at any time than was necessary, and assisting him with steady seat and hand throughout the entire journey. Schiller's only competitors were Lobengula, 5 years, 117 pounds, who ran in the colors of Mr. T. H. Williams, Jr., and Thornhill, 6 years, 118 pounds. The tactics adopted with the former did not meet with general approval, W. Martin dropping astern with him in the first quarter of a mile and remaining from twenty to forty lengths away from the leading horse until less than a mile from home, when he began to make an effort. By the time the head of the stretch was reached Lobegula had so far improved his position as to raise a momentary flutter of hope in some quarters that the gallop might develop into a race, but it was evident that the younger horse was easily master of the situation, Sims eventually bringing him home with some four lengths to spare. Thornhill had waited on Schiller for the firts two and one-fourth miles, after which he now and then showed the way, the son of St. George as he passed the stand for the third time seeming hardly comfortable. Nursed along judiciously, however, by Sims, and favored by his blood and style of going, he soon had the old white-faced chestnut in trouble, the latter unfortunately breaking down, and so being forced to drop out of the running a quarter of a mile from the winning-post. The event had been keenly looked forward to, the old-time traditions of California racing lending a glamour to the occasion, and bringing out a large attendance, many being present from distant parts of the State, notwithstanding the smallness of the field and the unfavorable state of the track for so severe a contest. Under the circumstances the run was fully equal to four and one-half miles if not more, on a course in good going order. The following tally of the time for each mile is interesting: First mile, 2:08; second mile, 2:02; third mile, 1:54; fourth mile, 2:02½. Total, 8:04½. Beyond being a bit pumped out when they returned to the scales, the two placed horses appeared little the worse for their exertions, Schiller showing the better condition of the two, as his appearance before the start suggested. The character of the race has left some portion of the public in doubt whether the result might have been different, had more use been made of Lobengula, but this impression is hardly warranted, everything considered.

The Elmwood stakes for 2-year-olds was captured by The Cheat, by imp. Deceiver, who had previously shown himself to be a fair colt on the same track. In this race the imp. Duncombe colt, Al Koran, made his debut and in the course of the running made a couple of flash bursts. He is a lengthy, ragged-looking gentleman at present, but when one of his sort furnishes up and trains on such speed as he showed he is apt to make a race horse.

---

The doings at Ingleside on the Monday holiday included two of the greatest morals Mr. Pat Dunne has treated us to this season. Salvable and Preston played with their fields in both cases, the former bringing his successes up to ten firsts and one second out of twelve starts in less than three months. He is certainly a feather in Salvator's cap.

The star event of the day was the Moet and Chandon stakes, four furlongs, for 2-year-old fillies, for which a field of twelve sported colors. The breeding of the lot was distinctly choice, and the show in the paddock was most interesting, the two couples representing the Burns and Waterhouse and Ezele stables respectively attracting much attention, although, it is needless to say, that Rosormonde (imp. Ormonde—imp. Fairy Rose) came in for her share of gapeseed on her first appearance. Her make-up is more on the useful than the beautiful side, her ample bone and good feet being perhaps her strong points. The promise of her foalhood has been borne out, and in point of size she is under the average. To the eye in search of speedy looks and that undefinable something rarely missing in the make-up of a good one. Napamax, the white-stockinged brown daughter of the dead imp. Maxim, out of Napa, bred at Rancho del Paso, was decidedly attractive. Making her first appearance in public she seemed a little high in flesh, but her breedy look, true proportions, beautifully turned quarters and well let-down thighs, made a mark for her that was confirmed by her subsequent performance, for in the resolute hands of Thorpe she stepped the half mile, timed at 50 seconds, in such fashion that, had she been pushed, the record of the track might have been cut down. The honors of second were taken by Queen Mab, who has been running all her races so far very consistently, while Rosormonde, with quite a bit the best of a bad start, had to be content with third place. She ran gamely, however, and came again after her bolt was shot, making up some lost ground in the last few strides. Salmere, a sister to Salvation, is a nice looker and ran fairly, as did another new-comer, Martha, by imp. dandie Dinmont. Free Lady, a previous winner, was unluckily left at the post.

---

The Schrieber stakes for colts, set for decision to-day, should throw further light on the 2-year-old situation, and by the time the Crocker stakes, to be disposed of this day week, has been got through, several of the stables will have shown their hands and given us an opportunity to judge of the quality of the crop, or, at all events, that portion of it which is ready for early handling.

---

Since the particulars were given in this journal a week ago of the stud work of imp. Ormonde, in California, some inquiry has been made for his services, and, if terms can be arranged, Mr. Barney Schrieber intends to breed a mare or two to him this season. It is understood that the fee is to be $1,000.

---

One of the best investments in the world is a successful stallion. When the season of 1899 comes around the subscription to St. Simon will be raised by the Duke of Portland to 500 guineas ($2,625). His 4-year-old son, St. Frusquin, the rival last year of the Prince of Wales' Persimmon, by the same sire, has already been retired to the stud, limited to fifteen mares, and booked full for the current season at 200 guineas ($1,050). High as these figures seem, they are eagerly paid, and, in view of the fact that St. Simon's progeny sacked about $300,000 last season in thirty-seven victories, it is hardly surprising.

---

Persimmon is to be trained for his 4-year-old career, the Prince, no doubt, hoping to swell his list of triumphs by the capture of the Ascot gold cup.

---

Mr. Richard Croker evidently intends to make a determined effort this coming season with his string in England, of which the California-bred horses, Santa Anita and Americus (formerly Rey del Caverres) are prominent members. The weights allotted to them in some of the spring handicaps show that both horses are held in fair esteem on the other side.

BENEDICT.

For Bronchial and Asthmatic Complaints "Brown's Bronchial Troches" have remarkable curative properties. Sold only in boxes.

How's This.

We offer one hundred dollars reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last fifteen years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo.

Walding, Kinnan & Marvin, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is take internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggists. Testimonials free.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75cents.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco, Telephone Pine 1692.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER

SUCCESSORS TO H. P. GREGORY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO

MACHINERY

Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St. San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

521-523 Market St., San Fran.

The Rubber Tipped Arrow Family Game

It is just the thing for amusement, just the thing for discipline; just the thing to help our boys and girls grow up strong, healthy, manly and womanly. The Game in Bronze costs only $5, including pistol, arrow, target and target holder in nickel, 50c., all complete.

ELASTIC TIP CO., 735 Market Street

Patentees and Manufacturers of Rubber Specialties

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market Branch Stores 752 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from Feb. 22 to March 6, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar.

Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

Moet & Chandon White Seal Stakes Monday, Feb. 22d
The Schreiber Stakes Saturday, Feb. 27th
The Crocker Stakes Saturday, March 6th

A. B. SPRECKELS, President.

W. S. LEAKE, Secretary.

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

Commencing Next Monday, March 1st
Last week but one of

JAMES : A. : HERNE

As Nathaniel Berry, in

"SHORE ACRES"

Direction of MR. HENRY C. MINER

Next attraction: Fanny Davenport

Columbia Theatre

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

She never had such a play! The best of them all!
Second and last week of DAINTY

FANNY RICE

In the new version of her latest and greatest success

AT THE FRENCH BALL

Assisted by an excellent company of comedians
Next attraction: Cissy Fitzgerald in "The Foundling."

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, March 1

Dudley Prescott, the "Human Brass Band"
Waterbury Brothers and Tenney, Classical and Comedy Musical Artists
The Grand Opera Stars: Guille, Abramoff, Napoleoni and Miss Cotte.
Barney Fagan and Henrietta Byron
Edmond Hayes and Emily Lytton, in "A Talkative Man." The Pantzers, the Finneys, etc.

Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

The Gilbert & Sullivan Season
Last nights of PATIENCE

One Week Only, commencing Monday, March 1st, every evening, the Original Japanese Opera

THE MIKADO

Great cast, beautiful scenery, correct costumes, and appropriate accessories!

In preparation: Iolanthe! The Sorcerer!

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : MANAGERS

250th Performance this Afternoon! Souvenir Matinee!
Last performances to day and to-morrow, matinees and nights, of the great play, Saints and Sinners
Monday Next, the Successful Comedy

"BY PROXY!"

A great cast: George Osbourne Hugo Toland, Adele Belgarde, Frances Jolliffe, Charles Wyngate, May Buckley, Francis Powers, Kate Belmour, John Armstrong, Frank Claytor, Gordon Foster, Chas. Bryant.

Play produced under the direction of Mr. Osbourne

15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991

COLUMBIA THEATRE

Next Thursday Afternoon, March 4, at 3:30 sharp

Third Symphony Concert

GTSTAV HINRICHS, Director

Greatest programme ever offered: Brahm's Symphony No. 4, Berlioz's Carnival Romaine and Hansel and Gretel Fantasie

Soloist, the Great Soprano, TREBELLI

Seats Now on Sale. Fifty Cts. and One Dollar

GOLDEN GATE HALL

Two Farewell Vocal Recitals

Will be given by the Great Prima Donna Soprano, MLLE.

TREBELLI

Saturday Afternoon, March 6th, at 3 p. m.
Tuesday Evening, March 9th, at 8:15 p. m.

Admission, 50c. and $1

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 292
Crocker Building, San Francisco

AS THE WORLD WAGS

Fancies and Foibles of the Smart Set the World Round.

At the Bradley-Martin ball, says the "Sun," the men unquestionably excelled the women from an ornamental point of view. In any clime or any century, for instance, it would be difficult to find a more perfect specimen of kingly dignity than Mr. Winthrop Rutherford presented as Henry III. of France. His costume, made of purple satin with a profusion of laces and jewels, was eminently becoming, and as he wore his hair, without wig or powder, there was nothing to detract from the becomingness of the dress. Mr. James L. Breese in a costume of white satin and silver, with jeweled order of the Saint Esprit supported by a blue watered ribbon across his chest, was a flattering production of the Duc de Guise, and Worthington Whitehouse, who danced the minuet with Mrs. Ogden Mills, and was also in white and silver from his plumed hat to his white shoes and stockings, were both remarkable in their different styles. Mr. J. J. Astor, who opened the ball with Mrs. Bradley-Martin, looked remarkably well as Henry of Navarre in a rich velvet costume and wearing the white plumed hat which was that hero's distinguishing badge as he led his forces to victory.

It seems almost a just retribution that the elaborate and expensive costumes ordered by cable from Messrs. Rouffe, Worth, and others, in Paris, for the Bradley-Martin ball, have in almost every instance proven a great disappointment, notwithstanding the long cables of instruction and suggestion that were sent without regard to cost. Just at this time, when so many of our own country people are out of employment, it surely would have shown more patriotic feeling to have given the large orders at home. "Moreover, it is just as well to remember," said a fashionable woman, "that ordering a gown by cable from Paris at this season is a very dangerous experiment. It is a time of 'conge' at all the great ateliers; the heads are sure to be away, and also most of the principal designers. There really is no competent person to receive an order. I ordered a dinner gown for an especial function from Doucet last winter by cable, just at this time. It came promptly enough, but it was quite hideous and actually old-fashioned. I packed it promptly back by the very next steamer, and received an apologetic letter from monsieur himself, saying that he and madame had been away on their annual trip, and that at this slack season the most competent members of his 'staff' were also apt to be off on their 'vacancies,' and that if the gown was unsatisfactory he would willingly take it back. All the same, however, I had paid over $100 duty and had to wear an old dress, after all."

The latest craze in Paris is to collect old rugs. Indeed, their value since last summer has been steadily increasing, until now it takes a very clever bargainer to buy the least interesting ones for anything like a reasonable price. There are, of course, several public collections of these generally overlooked objects of interest, the one at the Hotel de Cluny in Paris being, no doubt, the largest and the most valuable. Until last summer in Paris, where this fad had birth and gained a wondrous hold among fashionable men and women, the collecting of rugs did not awaken interest. They could not do so until miniatures, ivories, snuff boxes, watches, seals, fans, lace, china, glass, etc., had, in a measure, their day; and not until their marvelous and multiplied unearthing quite ceased to surprise even collectors themselves. Therefore this interest has only recently appeared on the fashionable horizon.

The rather independent views held among smart society people in London undoubtedly astonish many well-bred and well-born Americans who have the opportunity of studying English manners and customs after the most accepted London models. Here men and women of undoubted social position and rank are much less narrow in their views of life and people than are our representative Americans of "swaggerdom." "I know," says Annie Marton Lane, "a very charming American here in London, for instance, whom circumstances have compelled to come and live over on this side of the water with her husband and family. They are enormously rich; they have the world at their feet, and they should feel thoroughly independent. Mme. l'Americaine came to see me, however, the other day, and confided in me. She said she had dined the previous evening with her husband at Lady de la Mode's—and there she had met not one, but three or four well-known actresses and actors, and that they had seemed to be received quite as equals of the other guests present.

"'Now, you know,' said my countrywoman, 'theaters amuse me, and I like to go to them, but I don't care about meeting actors and actresses off the stage.'

"This remark afforded me a good deal of amusement, and it was with some difficulty that I explained to my friend the fact that in English society actors and actresses of a certain kind are sought after and courted and petted by the smartest and most exclusive people in society. The dramatic star is in the ascendant socially in London, and to express anything but pleasure in meeting many of those people who 'fret their little hour upon the stage' is absurd: Such people as Sir Henry Irving, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Terry (Miss Julia Neilson), Mr. and Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, Mme. Cavalazzi (Mrs. Charles Mapleson), Mr. and Mrs. George Alexander, and Miss Eleanor Calhoun, and many others that I could mention, it is rightly thought a privilege to know, for they are men and women who are both clever and interesting. I never can understand why, because a man or a woman happens to have a gift for portraying human emotions upon the stage, they should at once be branded as public property and put outside the pale of what is known as "exclusive" society. Because there have been, and perhaps always will be, men and women who disgrace the theatrical profession, there is no reason that they should all be tarred with the same brush.

In the Rothschild family it is the custom at the birth of each little girl to purchase six pearls, each one costing £100. Upon every birthday six more are added to the original half-dozen, so that when the young lady comes out she has presented to her a casket of magnificent and flawless gems.

To almost all families the time invariably arrives when the services of a trained nurse are a necessity. Very often people with the best intentions in the world fail to treat her in a way at once respectful to her personality and her position, yet designed to render her most useful. A well-known member of the profession, in speaking on the subject not long since, laid down these rules:

"If the nurse cannot leave the sick room, put up a cot for her, and have some one at hand to call her if needed. Never leave a sick patient alone. If the temperature is high delirium may occur.

"Serve the nurse's meals to her alone. It is not necessary for the family to be thrown with her thrice daily; she has not time to change her dress for each meal, and her uniform would be unsuitable at the family table. She will prefer to be alone. But do not let her eat in the sick room; let her come down when the household has finished, or serve her meals on a tray in an adjoining room, and serve them hot. Never ask her to go to the servants' table. The physician's dependence on the nurse insures her the respect of the family. Let her be in the fresh air half an hour daily; she will work better for it."

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Ladies interested in Japanese curios and bric-a-brac should not fail to attend the first clearance sale of Ito, Sotomi & Co., 116 Sutter street.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

For Two Weeks Only

SECOND
Great and Genuine Clearance
Sale of

Art Goods

AT

S. & G. GUMP

113 Geary Street.

Pictures, Mirrors, Vases, Ornaments, Bric-a-Brac, Clocks, Brass Tables, Lamps, Crockery and Glassware, Paintings, Bronze and Marble Statuary, Pedestals, French and Dresden Furniture—in fact every article in our establishment

AT A DISCOUNT OF

TWENTY PER CENT

FROM OUR REGULAR PRICES

Perrier-Jouet Champagne

EXTRA DRY "SPECIAL"

Also specially selected stock of Clarets and White Wines on hand

W. B. CHAPMAN, Sole Agent Pacific Coast
123 California St., San Francisco

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 18191—Dept. 9.—In the matter of the Estate of SARAH SMITH, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased, with the will annexed, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator, at the office of Frank P. Kelly, 101 Sansome street, rooms 21 and 22, San Francisco, California, the same being the place for the transaction of the business of said estate, in the City and County of San Francisco.

W. R. FELTER,
Adm. of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, February 25, 1897.

FRANK P. KELLY,
Attorney for Administrator.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

. . ALSO . .

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore

Murphy, Grant & Co.
. . Pacific Coast
Sole Agents

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971. S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte; "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

ASSESSMEMT NOTICE — BULLION MINING COMPANY — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 14th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 49) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the offices of the company, room 11, No. 331 Pine street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of February, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday the 11th day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

R. R. GRAYSON, Secretary.

Office, room 11, 331 Pine street, S. F.

---

ASSESSMENT NOTICE — BEST AND BELCHER MINING COMPANY — Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 26th day of January, 1897, an assessment (No. 61) of twenty-five cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately, in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on 2d day of March, 1897, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before will be sold on Tuesday the 23d day of March, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office, room 33, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

---

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Julia Consolidated Mining Company

Assessment No. 28
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied January 21, 1897
Delinquent in office January 26, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, March 19, 1397

J. STADTFELD JR., Secretary.
Office, room 56, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

---

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 26
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied February 10, 1897
Delinquent in office, March 16, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 6, 1897

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary,
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

---

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF JOHN PHELAN, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOHN PHELAN,
Adm. of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, February 7, 1897.
J. D. SULLIVAN,
Attorney for Administrator.

---

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE. 615 SIXTH ST

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

The Wave's Clubbing List

For 1897

By special arrangement with the publishers THE WAVE is prepared to offer the following

Subscriptions must be paid in advance

| | |
|---|---|
| THE WAVE AND ARENA | $5 00 |
| " " ARGOSY | 3 00 |
| " " ART AMATEUR | 5 75 |
| " " ATLANTIC MONTHLY | 5 25 |
| " " BLACKWOODS MAGAZINE | 5 75 |
| " " CASSELL " | 3 75 |
| " " CENTURY " | 5 00 |
| " " CONTEMPORARY REVIEW | 5 25 |
| " " COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE | 3 00 |
| " " CRITIC | 3 00 |
| " " DELINEATOR | 3 50 |
| " " DEMOREST MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW | 5 25 |
| " " FORUM | 5 00 |
| " " FRANK LESLIES MAGAZINE | 4 00 |
| " " HARPER'S BAZAAR | 5 70 |
| " " " MAGAZINE | 5 80 |
| " " " ROUND TABLE | 4 00 |
| " " " WEEKLY | 5 70 |
| " " ILLUSTRATED AMERICAN | 7 75 |
| " " JUDGE | 5 70 |
| " " LESLIE'S WEEKLY | 4 50 |
| " " LIFE | 5 75 |
| " " LIPPINCOTT'S COMPANY | 3 15 |
| " " LITTELL'S LIVING AGE | 4 80 |
| " " MCCLURES MAGAZINE | 7 75 |
| " " MUNSEY'S " | 1 75 |
| " " NEW ENGLANDER | 3 15 |
| " " NINETEENTH CENTURY | 5 00 |
| " " NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW | 5 25 |
| " " NOVA SCOTIAN | 5 50 |
| " " OUTING | 3 75 |
| " " SUNDAY | 5 00 |
| " " OVERLAND | 4 50 |
| " " SUNDAY | 4 50 |
| " " N. Y. WORLD SUNDAY | 4 75 |
| " " " " | 4 75 |
| " " " " | 4 50 |
| " " " " | 5 50 |
| " " " " | 4 50 |
| " " " " | 5 50 |
| " " " " | 5 50 |
| " " " " SUPPLEMENT | 5 50 |
| " " " " AND | 5 25 |
| " " " " | 5 50 |
| " " " " | 5 50 |
| " " " " | 5 75 |
| " " TOWN TOPICS | 5 50 |
| " " TRUTH | 5 25 |
| " " VOGUE | 3 50 |
| " " YOUTHS COMPANION | 1 75 |

An Advantageous Offer!

Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan McClure's Magazine
Ladies' Home Journal Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.

Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits June 30, 1896 - $23,657,219
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,364,085

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER PHILIP BARTH
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. Califor ia and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Pa - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a gener banking business and allows interest on deposits, p able on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor dministrator and Trustee under wills, or in any othe ust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. TOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and examined.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,446,100 Assets, $21,584,473
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

in one of the townships near Chicago the people once elected as judge a man known for his strict application of parliamentary rules to everything possible. Among his first cases was one of trifling importance — an assault. Epler and Delew, two Chicago lawyers who knew the judge's peculiarity, represented the defendant, and a man named Smith the prosecutor. Both sides announced that they were ready for the trial. Just as the court was about to proceed Mr. Epler rose and said, "If you honor please, I move that this case be dismissed. "I second the motion," Mr. Delew put in quickly. "It is moved and seconded that the case be dismissed," said the judge. "But, your honor," interrupted Mr. Smith, not a little surprised at such procedure. "Mr. Smith, this court has presided over meetings before, and is thoroughly familiar with parliamentary procedure—it needs no assistance from you in this matter." "But your honor——" "I shall fine you for contempt, Mr. Smith, if you continue to disturb this court." The question was then put, the judge saying, "All in favor of the motion will rise." Epler, Delew, and the prisoner rose. "Those opposed will rise." Smith and the prosecutor rose. "The motion is carried by three to two. The case is dismissed," declared the judge.

A distinguished canon of the Church of England while traveling in Egypt engaged the services of a dragoman to conduct himself and his family up the Nile. In speaking of the affair a short time afterwards the clergyman discovered that he had given the Egyptian an unusually large fee over and above the real value of his services. This alarmed the good man, as he did not wish to be considered by anyone as reckless in the use of money, and on his next meeting with the dragoman, explained the mistake. "But," he added, "although I have overpaid you grossly, I do not regret it. I only hope that you have made good use of the money." "Yes, sir," returned the Egyptian, with much gratitude and profound salaaming; "you may be very sure of that, for I have already bought another slave wife."

The old generation of Galloway lairds were a primitive and hospitable race, but their conviviality sometimes led to awkward occurrences. In former days when roads were bad and wheeled vehicles almost unknown, an old laird was returning from a supper party, with his lady mounted behind him on horseback. On crossing the River Urr, at a ford at a point where it joins the sea, the old lady dropped off, but was not missed until her husband reached his door, when, of course, there was an immediate search made. The party who were dispatched in quest of her arrived just in time to find her remonstrating with the advancing tide, which trickled into her mouth, in these words: "No anither drap; neither het nor cauld."

The late Master of Balliol was walking one day with a student who had only just come to Oxford. The student was expatiating upon Plato, and pointing out with great emphasis the particulars in which he considered Jowett's exposition to be wrong. The Master said nothing in defense, but merely ejaculated in his chirpy way, as each point was brought out, "H'm! D'you think so?" Finally, when the walk was over, and the pair were separating, Jowett spoke. "Good morning, Mr. X. You are, I think, the most conceited puppy that ever came to Oxford!" Immediately came the answer, in exact imitation of the Master's tones, "H'm! D'you think so?"

Cecil Rhodes has so intense a prejudice against the fair sex that he will not have a woman in his service. One day his secretary, of whom he thought considerable, announced to him his intention of marrying. "What!" exclaimed the millionoire, almost overcome with surprise, "Going to be married! Where, then, am I going to get another secretary?" He left the room, banging the door. His anger soon cooled, for he remembered the bride at the time of the wedding with some splendid diamonds, and on his return to England left her the use of his horsess and carriages. But he did not retain the groom in his service.

A well-known judge, noted for his tendency to explain things to his juries, expressed in a recent case his own ideas with such force that he was surprised the jurors thought of leaving the box. They did leave it, however, and were out hours. Inquiring the trouble, the judge was told one of the twelve was standing out against the eleven. He summoned the jury, and rebuked the recalcitrant sharply. "Your honor," said the juror, "may I say a word?" "Yes, sir," said the indignant judge; "what have you to say?" "Well, what I wanted to say is, I am the only fellow that's on your side."

Not long ago a Scotch lad ran away from farm service, and, on being questioned by his friends as to the reason, he said he did not like the meat he got. "The farmer," he said, "had a sheep that deed, and I had to help to eat it. Then a calf deed, which I had to help to eat as weel. Then the auld farmer's wife deed, and I was sent to a shop for a lot o' salt. Div ye think I was gaun to stop to eat the auld woman? No likely! So I hooked it."

Lobengula, the Matabele chief, took a practical view of the death punishment. On being on one occasion remonstrated with by an Englishman for punishing people by death, he said: "The laws in your country are bad, for when a man does wrong you put him in a house and take away food from the poor people to feed him. Whereas I give him one or two warnings, and then put him in a place where he can't eat."

A person was recently explaining to some friends a motocycle — a self-propelling carriage. He told them the ins and outs of it all very knowingly, and what everything about it meant. "But," he concluded, "the only thing about it that I do not quite understand is, how the thing goes without a horse!"

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

HIRSCH & KAISER

Successors to HIRSCH, KAHN & CO.

Opticians

Will remove March 1st to

NO. 7 KEARNY STREET

Opposite the Chronicle Building

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign 403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SUNSET LIMITED

The Famous Palatial Flyer

BETWEEN

San Francisco and New Orleans

SEMI-WEEKLY

EASTBOUND

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Lv. San Francisco | 10.00 P.M. | Tues. and Sat. |
| Lv. Los Angeles | 3.00 P.M. | Wed. and Sun. |
| Ar. El Paso | 4.40 P.M. | Thurs. and Mon. |
| Ar. New Orleans | 6.55 A.M. | Sat. and Wed. |

WESTBOUND

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Lv. New Orleans | 10.00 A.M. | Mon. and Thurs. |
| Lv. El Paso | 8.05 P.M. | Tues. and Fri. |
| Ar. Los Angeles | 7.45 P.M. | Wed. and Sat. |
| Ar. San Francisco | 12.45 P.M. | Thurs. and Sun. |

Agreeable connections in New Orleans with through limited trains for Eastern cities.
To St. Louis in 24 hours; Chicago, 27 hours; Cincinnati, 24 hours; Atlanta, 15 hours; Washington, 34 hours; Philadelphia, 38 hours; New York, 40 hours; Boston, 50 hours.
Delightfully equable climate en route; train service unapproachably superb throughout; quick time; no additional cost.

TAKE SUNSET LIMITED

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. February 10 and 25.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, February 4, 10, 15, 20, 25, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. February 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. February 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.
The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing.
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Mar. 23, 1897, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.
S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, March 4, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular.)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

Ladies' Day at Ingleside The U. C. Celebration

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 10 SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 6, 1897 PRICE 10 CTS

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

WARDS OF THE CITY

A NIGHT SCENE IN THE HOWARD-STREET ARMORY, WHERE THE UNEMPLOYED SLEEP

From a flashlight by S. M. Williams

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 6, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2-3 |
| The U. C.'s Endowment | 4 |
| "The Dark Hour": a story from the French | 5 |
| Installing a President | 5 |
| Piutes and Ghost Dancing: by Oliver Roberts | 6 |
| Reign of King Carnival | 7 |
| Things and People: by Boswell Jr. | 8 |
| Ladies' Day at Ingleside | 9 |
| A Home for Sick Babies | 10 |
| In Society | 11 |
| The Theatres | 12 |
| "The Subliminal Mind": a Review | 12 |
| "To the Lord of Potsdam": a Parody | 13 |
| The March Magazines | 14 |
| Racing: by Benedict | 16 |
| New Stories Re-Told | |

IS IT NOT TIME FOR INTERFERENCE IN CUBA?

The telegraphic report of the summary resignation of Consul-General Lee at Havana, the reasons put forth as causing the resignation, its subsequent withdrawal and the refusal of the President to impart to the Senate the correspondence that has passed between the State Department and the Consul-General have directed more general and serious attention to the Cuban question than anything else that has occurred during the two years that have passed since the present revolt broke out in the island. Some characteristic efforts of the "new" journalism together with a widespread belief in the great ability, as liars, of Spaniards and Cubans alike, have produced an impression on the public mind that it was impossible to arrive at any safe conclusion as to the actual state of affairs in Cuba. As the State Department is supposed to have, in our Consular establishments, sources of accurate and direct information, and as it seems only reasonable to assume that the official action of that Department is guided by its own representatives, the average citizen has been inclined to believe that the policy of inaction which the Administration has resolutely pursued has been based on good reasons, even though the reasons have not been made public.

But the rupture, which even now seems to be only temporarily patched up, between the Consul-General and his superiors at Washington, has had a tendency to open many eyes which have remained contentedly closed on the faith of whatever Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Olney had done was undoubtedly right. On the question of the propriety of recognizing the independence, or even the belligerent status, of the Cuban republic, a majority of American citizens would probably accept as justifiable and final the decision of the Administration. Such a question is clearly not within the purview of a Consular officer. But General Lee is known to be a soldier by training, experience and habit. Such a man would undoubtedly carry into the Consular service those habits of disciplined subordination which are characteristic of the soldier, and which would enable him, much better than a Consul of purely civilian training, to carry out the directions of his superiors even when those directions are bitterly distasteful to him personally. The refusal of such a man to continue in a position in which his most important duty is to see that American citizens, native and naturalized, are assured of the protection due them at the hands of the Spanish authorities in Cuba, under our laws and our treaties with Spain, is a matter of grave significance; and when there is even remote cause for suspicion that his relinquishment of that duty, for which he was specially selected by the President, and for which he seems to be singularly well qualified, is due to lack of proper support on the part of his superiors, of his efforts on behalf of his fellow citizens in Cuba, the significance of the matter is gravely emphasized. The policy of secrecy which has been steadily pursued by Mr. Cleveland and his advisers has been calculated to arouse rather than to allay suspicion as to the motives of the Administration and its purposes in dealing with the Cuban question. Since the President's message was delivered to Congress at the opening of the session which has just closed no information in possession of the Government as to the actual condition of affairs in Cuba has been given to the Congress or to the public. General Lee was not permitted to appear before the Senate Committee which had summoned him for examination in December last, at a time when the public was eager to hear what he was not permitted to tell. The President has within a week declined to furnish to the Senate the dispatches which have passed between Secretary Olney and the Consul-eGneral. We are thus thrown back on the ordinary sources of public and unofficial intelligence, and these, with ample allowance made for the raw sensationalism of the "new" journals, and for the natural tendency of both Spaniard and Cuban to falsify and exaggerate, reveal a condition of affairs in the war-plagued island which may at any moment produce a crisis in our relations with Spain from which it may be difficult for us to extricate ourselves peaceably and with honor. The contention that a state of public war does not exist in Cuba is idle and false in the face of the fact that the insurgents have for two years maintained themselves in possession of three-fourths of the island in spite of every effort of the greatest army, numerically, that ever crossed the Atlantic, and are now, to all appearances, as strong as ever. It is true that the military exploits of the 200,000 Spaniards in arms in Cuba have not even risen to the dignity of a caricature of modern soldiership, but the Cubans can afford to be judged by their own strength as well as by the weakness and incapacity of their enemies. Maximo Gomez has not only demonstrated that he is a brave leader and a more skillful soldier than Valeriano Weyler, but also that his followers in the field are better men in arms than the Spanish conscripts who are opposed to them. There seems to be no cause to doubt that if the Cubans had had from the beginning of the contest free access to a base of military supplies they would long ago have driven the Spanish into a range even more narrow than that which they now enjoy precariously. Men who have fought so bravely and so successfully for such a cause as that of Cuba libre are soldiers who are entitled to receive civilized treatment even at the hands of foes who are only presumably civilized. Like other civilized nations the United States have their law of war, the code which humanity has devised for minimizing the horrors of war without defeating its purposes. So long as war continues to be a necessary human failing, however horrible it may be in the abstract, it can be conducted with some degree of humanity by the observance of such a code as is made obligatory on any army of the United States. When our armed enemies fall into the hands of our own troops they are treated with the respect and the care due to prisoners of war. Our soldiers are forbidden to fire on hospitals or to assail their sick and wounded enemies, and any violations of these rules are as rigorously punished as are offenses against the Articles of War. In our own civil war these rules of conduct were observed by the Federal armies toward the insurgent troops of the Confederacy. In marked contrast with this is the conduct of the Spanish commanders in Cuba. We hear nothing of prisoners of war remaining in their hands, but we have daily accounts of unfortunate prisoners who are shot in Spanish fortresses "for the crime of insurrection." We read in reputable journals of Spanish raids on Cuban hospitals and the ensuing slaughter of sick and wounded captives, and these reports remain uncontradicted. If Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Olney have had in their possession the information that would disprove these imputations on the honor of Spanish arms and the humanity of Spanish government, it was their duty to make it public. The policy of further secrecy, in the face of such accusations of atrocity, can only result in hastening the minds of the people and their representatives to the conclusion that, without regard to Spanish political rights or to Cuba's political wrongs, a power which cannot or will not wage civilized war shall not be permitted to wage war at all on this side of the world, and that will mean the prompt extinction of Spanish sovereignty outside of the Iberian peninsula.

M'KINLEY'S METHOD OF CABINET-MAKING.

President McKinley's Cabinet can hardly be said to be homogeneous. The President has gathered together, for reasons of political expediency, a group of men which is remarkable in many ways, and in none more than this: That not one has been his personal friend and political follower. Mr. McKinley has not used his positions in the Cabinet to pay political debts. He seems to have chosen his political family largely because of their geographical position; one from New England, one if possible from New York, another from the South, a fourth from his home State, another from the northern tier, a Secretary of the Treasury from the middle West, a Secretary of Agriculture from a prairie State, and he has bestowed a portfolio upon the Pacific Coast to our great rejoicing, but not one of these men, from Long of Massachusetts to McKenna of California, has been a warm personal follower of the President or has contributed in any material degree to his success.

Cleveland rewarded theMugwumps by giving Gresham a seat in the Cabinet and McVeigh a foreign post, but McKinley has in no way recognized the National Democracy, which was a potent factor in his election. Cleveland took from his own State a man who had been one of his political managers and made him Secretary of War for no other reason than that he might guide him in questions of patronage. McKinley takes from his State the foremost Republican statesman in the Senate, a man more or less embittered by being forced to give place for younger and less able men in the race for President. Harrison placed at his right hand his leading rival for the nomination, while McKinley leaves Tom Reed to soak in the Speaker's chair, where possibly he may do the Administration serious damage through personal pique. In his first administration Cleveland took with him to Washington a man who had been to him all that Hanna has been to McKinley, but Hanna prefers to play his part upon the stage of the Senate. While McKinley is an exponent of the radical school of protectionists, he has chosen as his Secretary of the Treasury a strong free trader. Alongside of Sherman at the council table will sit Alger, whom Sherman in his memoirs openly accused of having bought negro delegates to a national convention, and thus defeated the ambitions of the Ohioan. In the circle there is but one man of national reputation, and he has been chiefly identified with treasury matters rather than foreign affairs. The new Attorney-General never had a case in the United States Supreme Court, and the Secretary of the Navy has been a criminal lawyer most of his life. The average age of the members of the Cabinet will exceed that of the President, and at least three of the Cabinet officers are millionaires. If McKinley is able to weld together these elements and make a harmonious and independent Cabinet such as Mr. Cleveland has had, he will prove himself a man of most eminent personal qualities. He has certainly been bold in his selections.

THE WATER QUESTION FROM THE INVESTOR'S POINT OF VIEW.

From a gentleman whose acquaintance we have enjoyed for several years and for whose veracity we vouch, comes the following communication, which tells in a simple and unaffected manner a story which brings home a truth with unmistakable force. He makes some inquiries that should be answered, indeed, demand an answer, and we invite our morning contemporary to reply to them:

Editor of "The Wave": I am a commercial traveler, with my home in San Francisco, where I have resided for upwards of twenty-nine years. Twenty years ago I was in comfortable circumstances, but bad investments and speculating in mining stocks stripped from me every penny I had accumulated. I was not too old to work, but I did have strong doubts as to my ability to retrieve my fortune—if my small savings could be called a fortune. I did not doubt my ability to support myself while health lasted, but shuddered at the thought of what might come with sickness or with age and inability to work. I believe if the choice lay between death and the alms-house or county hospital, I would readily and cheerfully embrace the former.

I obtained employment in my present position twelve years ago. From that day to this my life has been one of unceasing work and absolute self-denial. The extravagances and small luxuries of life were as enjoyable to me when poor as they were when well-to-do, but I determined to and did set my face against every expenditure of money, however small, for personal gratification that could possibly be avoided. Do not imagine all this was accomplished without a struggle, for it was far from being an easy undertaking. It was not long before my frugality was rewarded with a modest bank account. During one of my stays in San Francisco, I inquired diligently among my friends for an investment that would be safe and remunerative. I was advised to purchase gas and water stock, which I finally did, although the word "stock" itself still had terrors for me. A banker whom I had known in better days agreed to loan me a certain percentage upon the stock at a fair rate of interest, so I purchased one-third more stock than my money would pay for, leaving all the securities with the banker, he to draw the monthly dividends as they were declared and credit such dividends monthly to the principal and interest. I continued to practice rigid economy and religiously forwarded every dollar of my savings to assist in paying my indebtedness on the stock. The debt gradually disappeared. I bought another block of stock upon the same terms, and in time with combined dividends and monthly savings lifted that debt, and so for twelve years I have been doing this thing, never drawing a dollar of interest for personal use and never failing to save the major portion of my salary. To-day I have an investment that will, when the present debt is liquidated, keep me when old or sick from being a public charge in the alms-house or the county hospital. My savings are the result of hard and untiring work, a constant struggle and a constant and systematic self-denial of things which most men hold dear. I have earned every dollar of my money honestly, and have lived a life empty of men's customary pleasures to do it.

Every year I have watched with trepidation and alarm the assaults of the politician and the demagogue upon these corporations, every year I have seen my savings and my earnings threatened, and all that I have worked so hard and denied myself so much to obtain made the subject of abusive, and I believe, unwarranted, attack. I want to ask you, sir, if there is to be no end to this thing? What is there in the shape of an investment in California that is safe? Will you tell me? In the East there are investments in plenty, I am told; but to find a safe investment is it possible that I must send my savings East, out of the State where my money was earned? In view of the constant assaults on railroad corporations, I do not feel inclined to purchase their securities. The street railway companies are now coming under the eye of the same evil forces, and reductions in rates are being threatened, so I cannot turn that way. Gas and water and electric companies are subject to vicious annual attacks. Will you, dare you, publicly recommend a single local security that a man who is not a stock sharp may buy in perfect safety, one that is not open to the assaults of every sensational newspaper and demagogic mayor and supervisor who gets into office? What am I to do? What is any man who is not an expert and a thorough business man familiar with stocks and bonds to do?

I recently read an article in your paper on the law of State regulation, which struck me with great force, and it seemed to me then as it does now, that the quicker we can in this State have this law settled, and have the rights of all parties finally and conclusively determined, the better it will be for the whole State and for its future prosperity, and certainly it will be better for the peace of mind of Yours truly, A. F.

The question asked by our correspondent—"Is there no end to this thing?"—is pertinent. It ought to be answered. The end of this agitation ought to come somewhere. Some time this community should be relieved of any necessity for this constant and unbearable annual agitation. It is a serious question how to reach it. It is doubtful if it ever will be reached so long as the present system of fixing and regulating water rates continues. If some one could devise a means to reach the end, he would earn the gratitude of every decent man in this community.

In the "Examiner" some time ago there appeared an open letter from the pen of Mr. John T. Doyle, which carried with it a suggestion of a means to secure this end. No man will charge Mr. Doyle with corporate affiliations. His tendencies, so far as they have come under our observation, are distinctly contrariwise. Perhaps his reputation in that respect may, with minds unable to think for themselves, cause these suggestions to carry something more of weight than they would if emanating from some other source. Regardless of Mr. Doyle's personality or of his well-known anti-corporate attitude, the suggestions are well worth considering for their intrinsic value.

He points out that in other cities, New York and Philadelphia, where the charge for water is vastly less than here, the difference arises out of the fact that the water works belong to the public, and that instead of their cost being charged to the consumer in his monthly water rate it is represented by municipal bonds, the interest on which is paid, not by the rate-payer, but out of the general taxes. All that the consumer is called upon to pay in these cities is the mere operating expenses, and Mr. Doyle points out that if we follow a similar plan here the consumer would only be called upon to pay $300,000 per annum as against $1,553,000. He also points out that this plan if followed here would reduce the average contribution of the rate-payers from $29.90 to $5.00, a saving of fully eighty per cent. The bonded indebtedness of the water company represents the cost of its plant, its reservoirs, its pipes, its vast properties acquired for the storage of water. The interest upon these bonds is fixed and cannot be reduced or whittled down. In fixing the water rate of the consumer, the corporation must take into account the interest due on these bonds, which amounts to some $540,000 per annum. "Whoever pays the interest on capital employed in an enterprise in effect furnishes the capital himself," says Mr. Doyle, and he asks, "Why should the sixty thousand consumers of water in San Francisco furnish the capital for supplying, storing and keeping ready for distribution all the water used and provided for use, whereas they are not the parties benefited?" Consumers of water are not benefited to the slightest extent because there is in the reservoirs of the water company double, treble and quadruple the amount of water that will be necessary for their use for ordinary domestic and bathing purposes, but the existence of that immense water supply does benefit and does serve the owners of land and of houses and of valuable stocks of merchandise which are protected from fire by it, and which would not be insurable at any bearable rate of interest were it not for the existence of it.

There are two methods by which we in San Francisco may reduce our water rates to the consumer and place the burden where it rests in the Eastern cities, namely, on property. We may as a municipality, purchase the water system outright, but this course is open to serious objection, as we have heretofore indicated. Avoiding these objections, we may pursue another method; we may fix the charge upon hydrants and place the burden of interest upon the municipality, as the Eastern cities do whose rates are quoted as being forty per cent. lower than those prevailing here. This is Mr. Doyle's solution of the problem, not ours, it is his contention, and we must confess it appeals somewhat to us. He says:

"All real estate in the city owes its permanent value to the presence all over of water under pressure in pipes, and this amounts to thousands of millions of dollars. Hundreds of millions have been saved from impending destruction by the same agency, and it is not too much to say that the foundations of the city are laid on the Spring Valley Water Works. The property therefore thus made valuable should furnish the capital for its own protection. It should pay the million and a half needed for interest on the capital involved in the works, and the consumers should pay no more than the $300,000 needed for operating expenses.

"Let me illustrate the justice of this contention by one or two examples. Take the case of a mercantile house carrying a large stock—Baker & Hamilton, Murphy, Grant & Co., Sachs Brothers, Levy, Strauss & Co., or W. W. Montague & Co. I suppose some of these concerns are carrying a stock of a million dollars, and they probably average a half million apiece. Without the water works the lowest rates for their insurance would be five per cent., or $25,000 each per annum. The water works reduce that rate to one per cent., and each of them saves $20,000 per annum thereby. What do they pay for water? Perhaps $10 per month each. The money they save the rate-payers pay for them."

The "Examiner" assumes to stand for the masses and to speak in behalf of numberless rate-payers. Why does it not advocate Mr. Doyle's method? Does it desire to punish the water company or the stockholders situated as is our correspondent, or does it really desire to relieve the consumer of the burden of rates that now rests upon him? If its purpose is to deal fairly with the corporation, and at the same time distribute equally the charges where they really seem to belong, why is not Mr. Doyle's propositon the solution of the controversy?

OAKLAND'S NEXT MAYOR.

Residents of Oakland who are interested in an honest municipal government will not fail to support Captain W. R. Thomas, the Republican nominee for Mayor. The nature of the attacks that have been leveled against this gentleman, which can only emanate from candidates who are opposed to him, cannot lessen public regard for him, and must fix a character to their authors that is beneath contempt. They are slanderous, false, contemptible and mean. Every dishonest and disreputable interest in Oakland is opposed to Mr. Thomas; every blackleg and ward-striker, every foe to honest government will be against him. The respectable element of Oakland whose party affiliations chance to throw them in this election in company with such a rabble, should for the time being renounce party and vote for municipal decency, which certainly will come with Mr. Thomas' administration. This gentleman has been a resident of Oakland for many years. He is a clean, upright, able man. He is acquainted, as are few men, with the needs of the city, has its intersts at heart, and would serve the municipality as Mayor with fairness and intelligence. He has been prominently identified with every movement that made for the welfare and prosperity of his city. He is thoroughly a man of Oakland, and should by all means be elected. It will require the votes of many honest men to counteract the evil influences that will work against this gentleman, but we feel assured that decency will unite for his support and place him in the Mayor's chair.

THE RETORT OF SOUTH TO NORTH AND THE JUSTICE OF IT.

The press of the south is saying some very true but very disagreeable things about the people north of Tehachapi. They charge us with a lack of spirit and of State and civic pride, if the indulgence of such a sentiment promises to cost us any money. We cannot deny that there is much of truth in this charge. The Los Angeles "Times" says:

"The trouble with the residents of Northern California is that they fail to pull together for the purpose of making known abroad the attractions of their section, and consequently they do not receive their due share of immigration. Once in a while they make a spurt in that direction, but it never lasts long."

That we, as a community, are woefully lacking in public spirit, must be admitted. Within its lines of effort the Merchants' Association has accomplished much for the city, but its work needs to be supplemented by some sort of a bureau of publicity. Even our daily and weekly papers, the only existing means of disseminating knowledge of our resources, are not patronized, except in a niggardly manner, by our mercantile houses. Pick up any one of them and compare their advertisements with those of the papers of the East, with those of Los Angeles, or even those of Sacramento, which latter city has infinitely more of civic pride than have we in San Francisco. Our great dailies are made up of two or three pages of small advertisements of clairvoyants, spiritual mediums, want ads and the like; next a page of quack doctors and patent medicines stare you in the face, the later of which come largely from the [illegible]. But in the whole mess there is not, all told, one page of reliable San Francisco business houses. The San Francisco merchant spends money in advertising, but the cheap clap-trap devices are things that catch his eye; the theater curtains, theater programmes, fences, bill-boards, souvenirs and special fakes, because they are cheap, attract him. Of course, this is merely a symptom of the disease, not the disease itself. It indicates lack of enterprise, public and private. What San Francisco needs is a severe shock to awaken it out of a hypnotic slumber before it gets beyond the awakening point. We need something that will startle us into a realizing sense of the duty we owe to the community and the dangers which overshadow it.

Some years ago the Sacramento "Bee," under the caption "Thank God," announced that the State Legislature had decided to adjourn. With its customary frankness that journal gave voice to some truths regarding the character of the members of the Legislature which, while they were well known and almost publicly confessed, so aroused the ire of the members that during the remaining days of the session an effort was made to remove the State capital from Sacramento to San Jose as a matter of punishment and reprisal. For a time matters looked serious for the capital city, and the measure threatened to pass. Finally it was defeated, but the spirit of municipal pride which fear had aroused to life, lived on. Stinging under the criticism of the streets and the general appearance of their city, the citizens of Sacramento for the first time probably in her history combined for public improvement. The result was immediately apparent. From a muddy, filthy and slatternly country town, Sacramento has within the past few years devloped into a cleanly, wholesome and altogether attractive place. Her streets are well paved and well swept, and even the new buildings erected there have taken on a character in harmony with the progressive spirit of the times. That this all grew out of the "Thank God" edition of the "Bee" and the hubbub and consequent alarm it created, there can be no doubt. The community received a shock that threatened its future welfare. If ever any community stood in need of a similar shock, it is San Francisco. We need something that will operate as a goad to our sleepy mercantile community. The certain, but slowly progressing, inroads which Portland and Los Angeles have made upon our commerce have not been sufficient to awaken us to a realizing sense of impending dangers. Something more apparent is needed.

COMMUNICATION.

THE ANTAGONISTIC SOUTH.

Editor of "The Wave": In the Los Angeles "Times" of the 26th is a copy of C. P. Morton's letter to your publication of a recent date. As a long-time resident, and one who has seen Los Angeles develop from a crude Spanish pueblo into a modern metropolis, we feel competent to criticise.

Mr. Morton's keen insight into the actual condition of affairs here, and his unvarnished statement of facts, is truly refreshing to one satiated with the exaggerated, highly-colored statements of the cheerful liars this side of Tehachapi, and who, by the way, are for the most part exotics, unwittingly developed proportionately to the size of their heads and their capacity for sunshine. Mr. Morton, in his summary of what has gone to make up the country, neglected to mention the money loaner and the landlord, both of which thrive here upon the sucker and the tenderfoot, and possibly to a degree unknown elsewhere in the United States.

As a matter of fact, Southern California from Santa Barbara south, is little more than a huge sanitarium, the Mecca of the unfortunate one-lunger and the man of small income, either of whom wants an occupation just remunerative enough to pay living expenses. The wonderful sunshine contributes to the balance of fair pay. The robust individual with brain and brawn finds little demand for either. The "Inns," of course, will refute this, but the "Outs," a no inconsiderable number, furnish pertinent testimony. Under present conditions, due largely to large land-holdings, and the undeveloped possibilities of an adequate irrigation system, the southern country is overcrowded. Cities of substantial growth are dependent either upon manufacturing or agricultural interests. We are without the former, and the latter are as yet scarcely developed, notwithstanding newspapers and circulars to the contrary. In the limited area of arable land of Southern California, there is now probably sufficient population and money to develop its possible resources for years to come. Nevertheless, tons of circulars and printed information are scattered broadcast over the country by Chambers of Commerce, eulogistic of this particular section, and thereby attracting hither two undesirable classes of people—the one in search of employment, and the other, the small capitalist seeking for an investment insuring an easy livelihood with little work. These latter the landlord receives with open arms, and later turns them over to the money shark, who greets them with a smile and an interest at five to twelve per cent. per month, or more if possible. A little later on, the sheriff makes their acquaintance.

We might, as a pertinent reference to the social and industrial conditions as they really are down this way, mention the fact that Los Angeles (City of the Angels?) has in the neighborhood of six hundred lawyers, and courts enough to conduct the business of a larger city, but scarcely sufficient to meet present demands. The dockets are overrun with civil cases, the lawyers are busy and fairly prosperous, all of which is ironically suggestive of the supposed serenity and harmony born of sunny days and an easy livelihood, so fondly imagined by these "heads full of sunshine and little else."

L. N.

THE U. C.'S ENDOWMENT

What the State Has Done for the College at Berkeley.

There may be richer colleges now than the University of California is to be in the twentieth century, but if so they can be numbered upon the fingers of one hand, and the excess of the wealthiest of them over the endowment of our own contra costa institution will not be great enough to make much difference. The truth of the matter is that the little town of Berkeley will one day hold a wonder, a group of university buildings the statliest between the two oceans, equipped with a faculty that shall be as large as was the entire student roll of the college itself in the first years of its existence.

Mrs. Hearst and other public-spirited men and women, whose names are not yet made known, have subscribed between four and five million dollars for the purpose of erecting suitable buildings that shall conform to a "Grand Plan," and last week Governor Budd signed the bill that gave to the U. C. an income of about $110,000 per annum, half of which for ten years to come is to be expended on new buildings. It is to be devoutly hoped that the regents and faculty will co-operate with Mrs. Hearst in the matter of these new buildings—to be begun, so it is said, in May of this year—so that the erection of such constructions would not in anywise interfere with the "Grand Plan."

Prior to the recent action of the Legislature the University of California had been endowed by special funds as follows:

ARTHUR CAREY [illegible]
PROFESSOR OF JURISPRUDENCE

| | |
|---|---|
| J. Clute Wilmerding Endowment | $400,000 00 |
| Hastings College of Law | 100,000 00 |
| Lick Observatory Fund | 90,018 16 |
| Michael Reese Library Fund | 50,000 00 |
| D. O. Mills Endowment | 100,000 00 |
| University Medal Fund | 3,739 72 |
| Edward Tompkins Endowment | 67,907 82 |
| Frank J. Walton Memorial Loan Fund | 2,093 45 |
| P. Charles Cole Scholarship | 1,000 00 |
| Miss Mary Jucksch Donation | 50 00 |
| Making a total of | $814,809 15 |

But besides the special endowment funds is the Consolidated Perpetual Endowment Fund of $1,930,264.00 and the amount received from the State tax of one cent on each $100 of value of taxable property of the State, which is the interest at 5 per cent. on $2,250,871.20. To these figures, however, must be added the value of the U. C. property, which includes the plant at Berkeley, the buildings, apparatus, etc., the plant on Mount Hamilton, the Medical College building in San Francisco, the United States land grant, unsold land, the Hopkins Institute and the Mary Jucksch donation, aggregating a total of $3,364,817.74. Adding this property value to the cash capital of the U. C. we get a grand total of $8,360,762.09. Eight million, three hundred and sixty thousand dollars is no mean possession for any university, but the new bill just passed by the Legislature virtually adds to this amount another two million, two hundred and fifty thousand, so that we may now make the statement that the University of the State of California is worth ten million, six hundred and ten thousand dollars.

The question has now arisen, what is the U. C. to do with all this money? The first, greatest and most crying need is for buildings. It needs no minute examination into the condition of affairs across the bay to see that there are now at the U. C. three times as many students as in 1890, but no new buildings have been added since that time. The college needs new class rooms, new lecture halls, a new gymnasium, an assembly hall and dormitories. For years the military department has been clamoring for more room, while the chemical, physical, botanical and biological laboratories are wretchedly overcrowded. There is urgent need for permanent equipment in these and in many other departments. To meet this necessity the heads of the various faculties concerned had made the following estimates:

The chemistry department asks for an expenditure of $10,000, the electrical engineering department for $10,000, the mining department for $20,000, the gymnasium for $15,000. This only in the matter of equipment. In the matter of buildings the chemistry department asks for $25,000 (additional), the agricultural department for $30,000 (additional), the physical culture department for $25,000, while the demands of some dozen other inadequate and cramped branches of the college swell the total amount asked to be expended on buildings to $315,000. However, estimates on new buildings cannot be made until the general plan now under way is completed. Buildings worthy of the State will cost at least $1,000,000.

So with the twentieth century it seems as though the U. C. was to enter upon a new lease of life, a newera of prosperity, made over and remodeled from one end of the campus to the other. The first step in that direction was when Governor Budd signed the new bill last Saturday afternoon on the Berkeley football field in the presence of the entire student body, who had turned out en masse to do honor to the occasion. The students feel a greater joy over the matter than perhaps any other of the parties concerned, though, alas for them, the new era will hardly dawn during the college days of any of the present Freshmen. But undergraduates are notably enthusiastic, and on Saturday last they celebrated the future glories of their Alma Mater—which they will only appreciate as "old grads"—with as much exuberance as though the "Grand Plan" was mature and finished before their very eyes.

THE UNIVERSITY BATALLION PASSING THE GOVERNOR'S STAFF

GOVERNOR BUDD DELIVERING HIS ADDRESS

Crown Prince Constantine of Greece, who has made himself prominent in the struggle of Greece with Turkey over Crete, is a man of much decision of character and of great ambition. He hopes some day to replace the cross upon the dome of St. Sophia, and to sit enthroned in the Turkish capital as Emperor of Constantinople. Emperor William of Germany will not further any such idea, as he and the Grecian Prince are not on speaking terms, owing to the fact that the Emperor's sister, who is the wife of Constantine, renounced the Lutheran faith for that of the Greek Church upon the occasion of her marriage.

BERNARD MOSES
PROFESSOR OF HISTORY AND POLITICAL ECONOMY

Dr. Rainsford, the New York clergyman who denounced the Bradley Martin ball, declares that if he had three million dollars to dispose of in charity he would with one million buy a a large plot of ground in the heart of the city and make a children's playground of it. With a second he would establish kindergarten schools all over New York, with accommodations sufficient for every child over three years of age in the city. And with the third million he would erect dwellings for workingmen, to be rented at a low rate, all money received from such sources to be reinvested in the erection of more tenements.

Colonel John Hay, who is to take Mr. Bayard's place, has served America many years as a diplomatist, having filled positions at Paris, Madrid and Vienna. He is a brilliant conversationalist, shines as an orator, and has, moreover, won no little distinction as a writer of humorous verse. But he does not confine himself to humor in writing. His volume, "Castilian Days," the outcome of his residence in Spain, is a more serious effort. Colonel Hay was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1861, served with distinction in the war between the North and South, and from 1870 to 1875 was connected in a journalistic capacity with the New York "Tribune."

Mrs. Bradley Martin has a fad for collecting watches, and already possesses the most complete and valuable collection of time-pieces in the country. One of the gems is a watch pendant, at one time the property of Queen Anne, and another prize of the collection is a watch set in the heart of an apricot made of onyx, the works of which are of solid gold.

THE DARK HOUR

By CAMILLE MAUCLAIR

Luc Deraines wrote "Finis" in the middle of the last page in small capitals, and below, to the left, "Begun Ferrieres, 189—. Finished, Paris, June, 189—." Then he laid down his pen and looked around him.

Soon his eyes wandered to the table. The manuscript of the finished novel was lying there before him, rectangular and massive, with its title, "The Triumph," in huge letters, followed by a quotation from Edgar Poe, the date, and his own signature, already famous. Just at that moment it seemed to him as though something had gone out of his life. He experienced an indefinable sensation of uneasiness—the phantoms which had haunted his brain for eight months had vanished into the written pages. He fell into a train of thought, his eyes fixed vacantly on the block of paper before him, heavy, immovable, like a white centotaph covered with funeral inscriptions. It seemed to him that the room was no longer peopled with the phantoms of his imagination. The written pages had engulfed every one of them, and one novel more was but one dream less.

This singular sensation of uneasiness seemed to contend in his imagination with the natural satisfaction of having finished a long and painful work. He arose, lit a cigarette, and began to walk up and down his study, astonished that he could not feel as contented and lighthearted as formerly, when he had finished his other novels. Little by little the feeling of ennui grew upon him. He paused and examined his Claude Monet, although he already knew it by heart. Then he lounged to the window, looked at the accustomed view of Paris, and followed with his eye a procession of beautiful clouds which were slowly defiling across the horizon. Gradually they disappeared. Deraines turned about, his head empty of thought. In another moment, he was surprised to find himself standing before his etchings gazing at them stupidly. Suddenly he threw himself into a chair.

"Ah! what is the matter with me?" he exclaimed. "I actually believe I am in a bad humor."

Then swiftly and surely the profound melancholy enveloped him pitilessly. Suddenly he felt himself alone in the world, without real friends, surrounded only by a crowd of mere acquaintances, literary people, critics and journalists. He wrote to amuse himself, but he admitted that at the bottom of his heart he did not care for literature. Success had come upon him all at once on the publication of his first few novels — mingled tales of irony and passion, written in an easy style, more musical than colored, more insistent than powerful. Deraines had created a romance of idealisms, and had been fortunate enough to express in words that which many people are unable to formulate even in thought. He had worked out in several different forms the initial theme of his first effort, and now, in "The Triumph," just finished, had made a resume of his theories — had arrived at certain definite conclusions. He could go no further. Now he must either repeat himself or discover a new field. But these novels of his were no longer the playthings of his imagination. They were different phases of his very life. For the matter of that, the idea of this last novel could be found in all the preceding ones. His final conclusions could be foreseen from the opening chapter. What now was there left for him to do?

"The fact is, I cannot see anything ahead of me," Deraines admitted. "I have said everything that I could say. I have exhausted my material. It is just as well to admit it. Parbleu! I can always write pretty little novelettes. I have a public, and they would sell, but seriously, now——"

Mechanically he turned toward the manuscript that embodied his last ideas. It seemed forbidding — menacing, this heavy cube of written paper, lying on the table before him. It suggested a legal document—a will.

"A will! What an expression! I am not very gay." And he smiled mirthlessly. The aptitude of the term held his imagination, nevertheless.

"What a sham, what a weariness it is, this literature!" muttered Deraines. "People read my novels. I know beforehand precisely what the public will say—the harsh criticism of this one, the praise of another, neither of whom understand anything of my system or of my ideas. Then the avalanche of letters, and the people who come up to me on the Boulevarde, who have read the preface and the names of the chapters so that they may appear to speak intelligently. I suppose a certain class of young writers like all that, and believe that it means success. I am forty-three years of age, and have written seven volumes. The public has had enough of me. I am sure of it. They will weary of me as they have wearied of so many others before me. I pretend that I write for myself — that I am indifferent of public opinion—but nevertheless I am full of a thousand little prejudices and jealousies. I am as nervous as a novice each time a novel of mine is brought out. I make myself unhappy over the harsh censure of some idiotic critic whom I know very well has misunderstood me. I am eager for his good opinion, nevertheless. It is all one that I tell myself he is an imbecile. Ah! How utterly wearisome it all is."

Above all else, Deraines dreaded a loss of popularity. This feeling that he was a plaything of fashion, this fear that any time he might be thrown aside, entirely unnerved him. One was never sure of anything. And all this commonplace ceremonial of publication, with its rites and formalities all known in advance—how exasperating it was! Had he worked for eight months merely to see again for the seventh time the same articles, the same jealous or admiring faces, the same advertisements in the daily papers, the same grimaces of the old women who had influence, and whom it was necessary he should cultivate? He foresaw the whole scene, and was filled with unutterable disgust at the thought of going through with it once more.

A procession of disagreeable fancies thronged through his imagination. The sentiment of unreasoning melancholy grew upon him every moment. He opened his manuscript at random and read a passage. Never had his work seemed so feeble and ineffective.

"I have already said that in my fourth volume," he exclaimed. It was true. He had begun to repeat himself. And was he sure that "The Triumph" was up to the standard of his other novels? It was fatal to fall into a groove. Ah, no! Never that! To lower his standard, to publish stupid books, to piece out and rewrite old material! Never could he bring himself to that.

Deraines thought of the academicien Demarne. He too had enjoyed a rapid success with his novels of sentimental travels. He had had his little day — his era of popularity. Then the public had forgotten him, and for the last two years he had been publishing fugitive articles collected in separate volumes, in order that he might still seem to be alive. But the public knew, nevertheless, that he had written himself out. The sale of his works fell away in spite of energetic advertising. Would it end so with him? Deraines thought of it, despairingly. Had the time come when he himself must descend to such devices to maintain his waning popularity. He realized keenly how quickly an author can lose his public—can fall from the pinnacle of brilliant success into utter oblivion.

Deraines felt everything crumbling about him. It was the great crisis, come upon him suddenly with the termination of this last novel, in which it seemed his life was cloistered. He re-read the last page, where he had so confidently formulated his belief in himself and in his theories, his fine disdain of contradiction, his hope in ultimate acceptance.

"Liar!" he cried. "If the public only knew of your inconsistencies, your disbelief in your own theories, your miserable lack of confidence! 'Young Master' they call you! Master of what? You are the plaything of the public. The instant you have ceased to amuse them they will abandon you, as they have already abandoned so many others! Confidence in myself? I must make them believe I have it, or they will not be long in noticing. 'Ah, ha! he seems to be fatigued, this Deraines!' Imbeciles! You will never know how true it is. And to think that I have written seven volumes, only to repeat the same idea—an idea I have even ceased to believe in!"

GENERAL RUSSELL A. ALGER
THE NEW SECRETARY OF WAR
Taber, photo

A feeling of disgust and utter lassitude seized upon him. He leaned upon the table, covering his face with his hands.

"Good God! I am done for! I have run my race! I am written out! You are done for, Deraines! Give up your place to a new man! Move on! You are growing old! You have lost your grip upon your public! You have lasted too long, my poor fellow!" And the tears came to his eyes and trickled between his fingers.

Then without knowing how it happened, he found himself looking into the open drawer of his desk, where he kept his revolver. For a moment his eyes fixed themselves upon it. Then his hand closed upon the butt. He drew it out, and laid before him on the table this glittering weapon, decisive and mute.

There was a noise of feet at his door, and his valet came in.

"Monsieur Deraines, there is a gentleman down stairs who would like to speak with you. It is the reporter from the 'Figaro,' who called yesterday when you were out."

"I am not at home," said Deraines, absently. The door closed.

"I must make an end of this," said Deraines. Then, as the idea of suicide assumed more definite shape in his mind, he shuddered again with a renewed feeling of disgust and weariness, muttering:

"That would be the most stupid of all."

He arose, thrust back the revolver into the drawer, and threw the manuscript upon it, and running to the door, called after his valet:

"Yes! Yes! I am at home! Show him up!"

The door opened, and a young man appeared, smiling and holding out his hand.

"A la bonne heure, my dear Master. You see I came in spite of your orders. But you seem ill. Is there anything the matter?"

"No; it is nothing," said Luc Deraines, with an effort. "I am very glad to see you," and with a vague gesture, which was the expression of all his discouragement and all his weariness, all his supine acceptance of the emptiness of life, he advanced toward the reporter.

"No, no; you don't interrupt me. Be seated."

INSTALLING A PRESIDENT

Reminiscences of Old-Time Inauguration Ceremonies.

Custom is law in matters of inaugural and is inexorable in its regulation of the conduct of the great ceremony, not only in the larger and broader conceptions of the affair but also in the detail and minutia of deportment, and even in the very clothes to be worn by the chief actor of the scene. Thus, no President-elect can think for a moment of taking the oath of office in anything but a suit of American cloth and manufacture. Washington established the precedent by wearing a suit of black of Massachusetts manufacture, and Lincoln went so far as to read the famous inaugural address in trousers, waistcoat and frock coat given to him by an "enterprising" Washington tailor.

Inaugurations are as different in character as can well be imagined. There has been the inauguration gay and the inauguration solemn, orderly inaugurations and riotous inaugurations, such as Jackson's, where punch was served in the front yard of the White House and an inebriated gentleman was found under a sofa of the Blue Room towards two o'clock a. m., long after the guests had departed. There once lived an Englishman named John Davis who declared in print and over his signature that he saw Jefferson ride a white horse to the Capitol building on his inauguration day and hitch the animal to the palings. The picture hit the eye of the fanciful populace and has steadily refused to fade. The truth of the matter is that Jefferson walked from his boarding-house to the Capitol escorted by a procession of citizens and a militia company, which—barring always the palings of the fence about the nation's Hall of Government, a truly delicious touch—was perhaps a more democratic method of procedure after all.

The custom of open-air inaugurations is to be traced back to Monroe's time, and arose from a quarrel between the Senate and the House over the choice of seats at the ceremonies, the Senate claiming precedence as the more dignified body and the House as the larger. A deadlock resulted, only to be broken by a compromise which provided for one open-air ceremony on the porch of the Capitol, where everybody, Senators and Representatives alike, would have an equal opportunity of seeing.

William Henry Harrison was inaugurated, as it were, with "a whoop and a bang." The fourth of March of that year, 1841, was the climax of the Tippecanoe canvass, which, if all tales are true, was the most enthusiastic and uproarious presidential campaign in the history of the country. Washington was jammed to overflowing with delegations, clubs and companies from all over the Union. Never had so great a throng been seen in the city, and so unbounded was the joy and gaiety of the occasion that the procession was obliged to march and counter-march throughout the city for fully two hours before depositing the old hero at the foot of the Capitol stairs.

Contrast this with the solemn rite of another fourth of March some twenty years later, which Stephen Fiske describes in a most readable article in the "Ladies' Home Journal":

"Regular troops were posted at intervals along Pennsylvania avenue, sharpshooters were climbing over the roofs of the houses, a mounted officer at every corner was ready to report to headquarters the passage of the procession. Detectives in plain clothes squirmed through the masses of the people. The police had been instructed to arrest for disorderly conduct any person who called the President-elect an opprobrious name or uttered a disloyal sentiment. The President and the President-elect rode in an open barouche, but this confidence in the people was more apparent than real. * * * A guard of the regular cavalry surrounded the carriage, beyond were mounted marshals four files deep. Close behind marched regiments of militia and marines fully armed. It seemed more like escorting a prisoner his doom than a President to his inauguration. Little cheering and no enthusiasm greeted the procession. Every now and then an arrest for 'disorderly conduct' was quickly and quietly made in the crowd. * * * The whole affair was as gloomy as if the President-elect was riding through an enemy's country—as indeed he was."

Under such circumstances and amidst such gloom and forebodings was Lincoln escorted to the chair of office.

His was every way an unusual inauguration. Not the least extraordinary incident connected therewith was the official introduction of himself and Mrs. Lincoln to Washington society. The elite of the Capital had gathered in the parlors of Lincoln's hotel to do him honor. Cabinet officers and their wives, foreign diplomats and ambassadors and attaches of legations accustomed to the gorgeous ceremonials of continental courts. "Presently," says Mr. Fiske, "from a side door that suggested a scene on the stage, emerged the face of Mr. Lincoln, smiling nervously; then his tall, thin, awkward body; then a long arm, and finally, at the end of his arm a dumpy little woman. He was dressed in a new suit of shiny black; she was wrapped in a white shawl. Mr. Lincoln looked at the fashionable assembly and said, in his clear, distinct voice: 'Ladies and gentlemen, permit me to present to you the long and short of the Presidency!'

"As he said 'the long' he bowed; as he said 'the short' he looked down at Mrs. Lincoln and smiled. A shudder ran through the parlors. The ladies stared at the strange couple; the gentlemen bent their heads. That man the President of the United States! That woman the first lady of the land! All the etiquette of the Republican court that had been established since the days of President Washington was violated."

During the present year one hundred and twenty-five million dollars will be expended in New York in the construction of new buildings, and the activity that exists among architects and builders as a result of this impetus has never been equaled before in the history of the metropolis. The rivalry among the capitalists seems to be for architectural attractiveness rather than of height. This promises well for the beauty of the new structures.

PIUTES AND GHOST-DANCING

The Making of a Medicine-Man and What Came of It.

A good deal of talk has been occasioned of late by the news of Piute outbreaks in Nevada. There is not the slightest ground for apprehension. Not one Piute in seventy-five is possessed of a rifle or would know how to use one if he had it. The trouble is no doubt merely outcome of quarrels between the Piute bucks and white woodchoppers who cut down the pine nut trees on the reservation, and thus deprive the Indians of their winter food.

It might have been different with the Piutes some years ago, at the time of the ghost dance mania that spread through the tribes. It originated with the Piutes, and the Indian who invented the now famous dance I was acquainted with, in fact I met him just at the time he was preparing himself to act as the great medicine man, the Messiah. It was like this. I had known him up and down Nevada for an ordinary Piute buck, not much different from a thousand others of his tribe. One day when I was prospecting near Walker Lake, in a desolate and forlorn piece of country, I came upon him quite suddenly sitting on a rock with his head between his hands. He was "mourning," rocking himself to and fro and keeping up a monotonous whining murmur, "Um-um, um-um." They do this sometimes—go off into the wilderness and "mourn" and half starve themselves in order to develop into medicine men. So I knew what he was about. Says I, "Hello, Jim."

"No Jim," he answers, "no Jim—Wilson Jack" (that was the name he assumed).

"What you do here, Jim?" Then he told me.

"No talk now," says he. "Bine-by heap talk. Stayum here pretty much time. Somethin' say, 'Wilson Jack! go down Walker Lake. I come down Walker Lake. No eat much, no sleep much, no drink much; stay pretty much time; cry pretty big; catch-um grasshopper; eat-um grasshopper—three, four, five—not pretty much eat; bine-by see-um pretty big. Ah, yes, bine-by see-um pretty big."

ROPING A BAD INDIAN
Taber, photo

"See what, Jim?"

"White men; pretty many, many white men, maybe so two time high as you, come along, then change-um to buffalo. Then Indian kill-um, oh yes."

Then he turned to his mourning and refused to answer or even speak again. I left him a solitary, striking figure in the widlerness, sitting on a stone bent over and mourning into his clenched fists. I suppose his fasting and mooning and mourning worked upon him till he did really begin to see things. Anyhow, the next I heard of him he was teaching the Indians the famous ghost dance. He began his mission by making rain. He got up a rain dance among the Piutes and did his medicine, and the rain came sure enough. He had phenomenal luck. He brought on—apparently—a second downpour by a second medicine. Next a scoffing Indian mocked and laughed at him, and Wilson Jack covered him with his eye and said: "I think that in a very short time you will die," which, luckily for Wilson Jack, actually came to pass. An immense crowd of Indians had heard the prophecy, and the death of the scoffer, combined with the two rainfalls, was told by runners throughout all the tribes, and Wilson Jack came to be a marvellous medicine man. Why, you should have seen the letters he received from Cherokee Indians, school-bred fellows, who wore white men's clothes, and even from some white men, too. Indians came from everywhere—from Pyramid Lake, from Lincoln county, from way up in Idaho and Montana—and he taught them the ghost dance—nothing more wonderful than a little side-step snuffle and a chant—and they took it back and taught it to their tribes, until by and by every tribe of importance in the West was dancing. Then the Sioux got hold of it—the Sioux, who are, to my thinking, the cleverest Indians of them all—and they thought they would go off the reservation and have a little dance by themselves. That's all they wanted. They wanted to dance. Perhaps they took their rifles, as you or I would do if we were going out in the country. Of course, they were off the reservation, which was not according to regulation. But if they were, it did not justify what happened. A lot of West Point chaps came along with a cavalry company or two and begin taking pat shots at the Sioux bucks, without so much as saying "by your leave." Result, Wounded Knee Creek and some thousands of dollars expense for the Government, and a lot of good men killed. Then Washington put a stop to the ghost dance and Wilson Jack lost his job. He's mad now with things in general and has gone to chopping wood somewhere near Colfax.

It is generally believed that the ghost dance was something much more exciting, a wild, screaming sort of melee that brought on hysteria and hallucination and the like. This is because the Piute ghost dance has been confounded with the sun dance of the Sioux. The sun dance has been stopped now by Washington, and for good reason. They'd drive a pole into the ground, would the Sioux, a pole like a May-pole, and would attach thongs to it, from the top to the ground, thongs of deer skin. Then the bucks would punch a hole like a loop through the fleshy part of their breasts and tie one end of the thong through it. When tney were fixed this way, they'd draw back till the thongs was pulled taut and begin to dance around the pole, their heads thrown back and their eyes fixed on the blazing sun. When the loop pulled out, as it often did, they would cut another strip of flesh and tie themselves up a second time, and keep the thing up till they dropped. Half of them died after every dance, or went blind; but those who survived were regarded with the greatest veneration.

OLIVER ROBERTS.

Michael Cudahy, who has been selected, it is said, for a father-in-law by Mr. Jack Casserley of San Francisco, is a partner in the Cudahy Packing Company of Chicago, and one of the most successful business men in the Western metropolis. Cudahy was born in Ireland, and is one of four brothers who came West and made fortunes. Michael entered the packing business with his brother John, organized the Cudahy Packing Company and subsequently became associated with P. D. Armour, with whom he controls the Omaha Stock Yards. He is well educated, and is a chemist of considerable ability, and has made the discoveries of oleomargarine, butterine and a substitute for lard. He has acquired a fortune of several million, and is rated amongst the most astute financiers of Chicago. In 1893, at the time of the World's Fair, the elder brother, John Cudahy, suspended payment, with liabilities of $1,524,000. He was not disconcerted at this enormous debt, but faced it bravely. In less than thirty days he had effected a settlement with his creditors, and thus far has met his engagements. The balance of Mr. Cudahy's indebtedness will be due next year, and he not only has enough to pay it all, but is said to possess two hundred million dollars beside. Michael and John Cudahy are the two greatest opponents the Standard Oil Company has ever known. They have entered into the fight against the great monopoly's cotton seed trust. They have captured the Ohio and Indiana fields, and are building three large refineries in which they will be able, as they have already proven, to turn out as good kerosene, lubricating oil and axle grease as come from the manufactories of the Standard. This movement on the part of the Cudahys will strike an important blow at the great monopoly and will be of incalculable benefit to the independent refiners, especially those in the Pennsylvania oil fields, who are already looking to the Cudahys to deliver them from the grasp of Rockefeller et al.

A dispatch from Constantinople some time ago announced that the Porte had given orders for the mobilization of the Turkish fleet into two squadrons. This meant war and bloodshed to most Americans, but the idea is more humorous than anything else, for the Turkish fleet consists of several small ships that a single torpedo might totally destroy and a few rotten old vessels that have been at anchor for years because of the depletion of the Sultan's treasury. The barnacles are as thick upon these old hulks as they are upon the conscience of the Porte himself.

The wife of Home Secretary Asquith, who, as Miss Margaret Tennant, was the original of "Dodo," created a sensation at a skating party party recently given in London at the Prince's Skating Club by Admiral Maxse. Instead of attending the affair well wrapped in furs and mufflers, as were the other ladies present and the men as well, the fair Dodo appeared upon the frigid scene very much unwrapped in white satin and sparkling diamonds. The effect, as may be imagined, was rather startling. But it is not difficult to think of Dodo doing such a thing.

REIGN OF KING CARNIVAL

The Season Ends With a Rollicking Masque at the Hopkins House.

There was no absence of the carnival spirit at last Tuesday's Mardi Gras ball at the Hopkins house. It began with a rush, went through with a rush and ended in the large hours of the morning with a climax of gaiety and exuberant jollity that stamped it as the most joyful and successful masked ball—of the proper, decent sort, be it understood—ever given in San Francisco.

A PIUTE FAMILY
Taber, photo

In the first place, no fitter setting for a masque could be found than the Hopkins house itself. It is a splendid background, as more than one domino and court lady found out before the end of the evening. There was a picture in every corner, a tableau along every reach of wall, an effect upon every staircase, and in every alcove, nook and space that seemed made for showing off to best advantage the velvet train of a Juliet, the motley of a Jester or the blue and buttons of a continental officer. This would have been the case even if no decorations had been attempted, but with garlands and garlands of huge yellow roses, festoons of paper lamps, stands and clusters of ferns and hothouse plants, hanging draperies, rugs, stuffs, ribbons, panels and the like catching and holding the eye at every turn, the effect was fairy-like. When, towards ten o'clock, the grand march was formed, and the halls and stairways and ante-rooms crammed with maskers in every conceivable guise and costume, flashing and scintillating with every conceivable color and hue and shade, when the orchestras, three of them, each some twenty strong, swung off into the first waltz and the gigantic pied herald announced that the carnival had begun, there was not one among the huge throng of guests but was not glad that he was alive and dancing on the night of Mardi Gras in the year of grace of '97.

But what contributed more than anything else to the success of the evening was the spirit in which the maskers entered into the fun of the thing. It must be confessed that Western masked balls are either one of two undesirable extremes, too reserved, too stately or too gay—altogether quite too impossibly gay. The maskers of the Hopkins Institute hit the happy medium. Everybody was there that you knew; you felt that, intuitively, yet nobody was there that you knew you knew. Nine out of ten of the maskers were masked for keeps, and kept their identity as closely concealed as if they were secret service detectives. You were continually dancing with people whom you did not know from Adam—or from Eve, as the case might be—and yet who knew you and what you had hoped were your private affairs with a familiarity that was disconcerting.

Everything was all right on this memorable occasion. The music was all right, waltzes and two-steps that went to your feet with the same alacrity and effectiveness as the punch in the Art Gallery went to your head. The floor was all right, smooth as glass and only one degree less buoyant than a wire mattress. The supper was all right, the lights were all right, the costumes worn and the people who wore them all right. In a word, the Bal Masque was a success, a jolly, rollicking, merry-go-round of a dance, where every one came to be amused and in amusing himself made amusement for others.

COWBOYS BRINGING A PARTY OF RENEGADE PIUTES
Taber, photo

THINGS AND PEOPLE

John M. Oakley, a millionaire of Pittsburg, a distinguished soldier, a well-known philanthropist, a member of the church, a husband and father, deliberately drank himself to death at the Palace Hotel this week in the company of a disreputable woman whom he had brought with him from the East. For seven days he drank steadily, eating scarcely nothing. It was a champagne debauch of a week's duration, while his heart beat slower and feebler, like a pendulum of a clock running down, and his nerves drew tighter and tighter till at length they snapped and crisped like broken banjo strings; the heart stopped, and it was time for the coroner and the reporter. There is a certain dramatic unreasonableness about this whole matter that is more striking than the actual death itself. For some fifty odd years John Oakley was at pains to build up a reputation as a good business man, a good citizen, a good father and a good husband. It has been learned that there was nothing vicious about the man. He was what the reporter calls "a prominent church member," and at the time of the Johnstown disaster was in the forefront of those who toiled to relieve the horror of the situation. The community respected him, he respected himself. Besides being a good man, he was a sensible man; he was no fool, he showed good judgment, moderation, solid business conservatism. Thus John Oakley lived for fifty years. If ever a man's character could be said to have formed it was in his case. Nothing erratic about him. His life had found its groove, and in it was running evenly. Then suddenly comes the San Francisco debauch, with the Booth woman, the man going back on every characteristic he had shown, upsetting every theory, overturning and destroying every previous idea of him. It is a sudden turn of character that no novelist even of the wildest imagination would dare put into a story. The thing is out of character with every indication of the fellow's personality. It is improbable, unheard of, absurdly forced, as unreal as the Arabian Nights and as true as Zola. Even putting the man's "goodness" and uprightness aside, one must remember that Oakley was par excellence a sensible business man, no dreamer, no erratic, hot-tempered youth, yet he plays the fool, the utter, absolute, inexcusable fool upon a scale worthy of a Caracalla. He finds a woman of a disreputable house, a woman common as the city road, goes off with her upon a debauch of two weeks' duration and drinks champagne, as a suicide would drink a poison, until he kills himself with alcohol. There is no accounting for this thing, except upon one rather feeble hypothesis—that of the natural, innate vice common to humanity in genral, slumbering and subdued in this man for fifty years suddenly rousing at the last moment, strong and vigorous from its long inertness, leaping to life all in an instant and overpowering and trampling under foot every barrier of custom and habit, every sense of restraint and temperance, clutching the man with an irresistible grip and worrying him to his dissolution ere he was aware. A strange, hideous end of an upright life; a case, perhaps, for our friend Lombroso.

***

It is not good to be "unemployed" in these latter days, when any invention for removing superfluous appetite can be called food and a newspaper spread on a floor answers to the name of bed. The "unemployed" is lucky or considers himself so, if the floor on which he sleeps is surounded by four walls and topped with a roof. The newspaper is an essential element in the "bed" of the unemployed, and its use is almost universal among the houseless vagrant of a great city. For some time one is puzzled to guess just what purpose it may serve. It cannot be for the effect of softening the hardnes of the floor or of the ground, as the unemployed spread it out to one thickness, nor can it be for the sake of cleanliness, for obvious reasons. It is only upon inquiry that it is learned that the newspaper is used to take off the first chill of the ground that would otherwise penetrate the lamentably sparse clothing of the sleepers. Another make-shift of the unemployed that can be observed in the picture on the title page of this paper is the knack of adaptability of limited resources as illustrated in the conversion of shoes and waistcoat into a pillow or, more correctly speaking, a headrest—a proceeding rather significant of an entire condition of life, a certain morbid ingenuity developed and sharpened by stress of hard circumstances and dire necessity.

***

The Governor debates within himself the selecoion of Harbor Commissioners to succeed Mr. Cole and Mr. Chadbourne. The places are well worth having, not only because of the salary ($4000 per annum, but for the patronage controlled. It is rather a cute way the Executive has of trying out possible candidates by means of the papers. He gives currency to a rumor about some individual or other, the press takes hold of him, and in nine cases out of ten that is the last of the applicant. When all these possibilities are disposed of, we will have a flash of the Governor's real intentions. As the situation was neatly put by a politician the other day, "Budd will give us one man from the country and another from up his sleeve." It is fairly certain that both appointees will be selected through the personal favor of the Governor, and all their gratitude will be due him directly, and not to the party organization. Two years hence he will have retired to the bourne of private life, and yet will retain a base of power of patronage through his Commissioners in office. The Front makes the foundation of an excellent machine, if the Governor should entertain further ambitions, which is very doubtful at writing, as his health is wretched.

VIEW OF MAIN HALL, WHERE KING CARNIVAL REIGNED

***

You should have been at the Cuban meeting the other night. Heavens, but what a spread of oratory there was! Liberty had a hundred bass voices there, and figures of speech virtually crowded one another into the rafters. Ex-Judge Ferrall, who can turn out quite a dashing form of rhetoric when the occasion requires, had Kassuth, Washington and Brutus a-stocking through the hall. Charles Shortridge, who was not only chairman but orator, kept the eagle's wings busy. The upshot of the gathering was the announcement of a mass meeting to which all the mass meeters in San Francisco—a race not unrelated to gas meters—are invited. We will have indignant resolutions then, couched in fiery terms, and other manifestations of our sympathy and rectitude, and General Weyler nor Spain will never be a whit the wiser.

***

One is led to believe that the most difficult part of the training of Mr. Corbett and Mr. Fitzsimmons is the compiling of that daily letter to the "Examiner." The task must prove most deadly nauseating after a time. To write one letter per day to the same person and upon the same subject and to keep it up for over a month is of necessity searching on the system. It is like eating a quail a day for thirty days. Perhaps, however, the daily letter is no new thing for the gentlemen concerned. We should remember that they are both married men, but even then we doubt if either Miss Julian or Ollie Lake were so exacting in their demands, so voracious for news as is the Monarch. Really the Monarch should have compassion upon the overworked bruisers. Why not cause to be struck off and forwarded to them printed forms with blanks left for names and dates? The result would be the same, as already the letter-writing champions have begun woefully to repeat themselves. Who is not familiar with the wording of the pug's letter on the eve of battle? The printed forms would simplify matters. We would suggest something like the following:

CARSON, Nev., March .....—The weather was ..... to-day, so I ..... ..... ..... I then returned to my quarters, and after a rub-down lunched on ..... ..... After lunch I rested until .... o'clock, then sparred .... rounds and punched the bag for ..... minutes. Mr. ....., so-called champion, is an unqualified and unmitigated.....

.....

(Three or four lines might be left blank here.) I never felt better in my career, and mean to put up the fight of my life on the seventeenth of March. I am fully aware of the importance of the coming event, and mean to win.

Signed.....

Champion of the World.

So much for the champions' difficulty over these exclusive letters. The trouble experienced by the "Examiner-Journal" in the same direction has been the slowness with which the public at large has realized that no other paper in the world has a line on the fighters authorized by the men themselves. It must be admitted, however, that the "Examiner-Journal" has scooped the world in this particular. The letters from Corbett and Fitzsimmons may lack the delicacy and literary finish of those of Mme. de Sevigne. They are, however, the only ones published, and the sooner the public realizes the fact the better. One may poke fun at the "exclusive" letters, and no doubt they are absurd, but the "enterprise" of the paper that made them such is beyond all question.

BOSWELL, JR.

TURKISH ROOM IN THE HOPKINS HOUSE

Clara Louise Kellogg, in speaking of the Metropolitan Opera Company, says that the extraordinary high prices paid to singers are not a good thing for the opera itself. She thinks the present system of enormous salaries harmful, in as much as it makes operatic production precarious undertakings, involving great financial responsibilities. Miss Kellogg, or as she is now called, Mrs. Carl Strakosch, considers Signor Sbrigba of Paris to be undoubtedly the best living vocal teacher, and in referring to Mme. Melba's recent breakdown, compared the Australian Prima Donna to Sembrich and Gerster, who broke down under similar circumstances, and at the same time intimated that the unfortunate occurrence was the result of a false vocal method. This is a quiet thrust at Mme. Marchesi, the celebrated Parisian vocal teacher, who was Melba's instructor, as well as Gerster's and Sembrich's.

"They're Out!" Springing the Australian Gate

A Corner in the Clubhouse

The Judge's Stand. Sizing Up a Race

The Biscuit-Shooter of the Restaurant

In the Club, "where they can talk it over quietly"

Blanketing the Winner

LADIES' DAY AT INGLESIDE

A HOME FOR SICK BABIES

The Children's Hospital — Built and Maintained by Charity.

It is the custom in San Francisco to speak of the Children's Hospital as "the most popular charity of the city," and it is rather to be regretted that it is spoken of after such a fashion, as though it were a kind of a fad or a thing to be treated with flippancy. Why not say that the hospital for little sick girls and little hurt chaps appeals more strongly to one's sentiment of humanity, takes a larger grip upon one's sympathy, arouses in a greater degree one's feeling of pity or commiseration or philanthropy—anything but the word "popular."

Nothing could be better than the management of this hospital, begun and carried on as it has been solely by charity, solely by a desire on the part of the kind-hearted to mitigate the pain and suffering of little twisted limbs and little diseased bodies. The hospital, in a sense, is free, and in another sense it is not free. In so far as it charges for services rendered in the case of well-to-do families it is not free, but it is pre-eminently so in so far as it throws wide open its doors to the children of poor parents, asking neither question nor price.

There is only one drawback about the hospital, which even the directors and president admit, namely, that it is not large enough to accommodate more children. At present but some hundred, to speak in round numbers, can be housed and attended to. The hospital has a staff of eight visiting physicians and surgeons, together with a corps of trained nurses. Besides this, however, there are a number of female internes, who live at the hospital constantly and work turn and turn about. It is one of the few hospitals in the United States who have adopted the system of female internes.

The Little Jim ward of the Children's Hospital has long been famous throughout the city and even throughout the State. Its origin dates from the time when a certain woman presented herself one day at the office of the hospital in company with a little boy sadly crippled by hip disease. Unfortunately at that time the wards were full, and the little sufferer was denied admission.

THE "LITTLE JIM" WARD

GENERAL VIEW OF THE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL.

"Come on, Little Jim," said the woman, as she turned to go. "There don't seem to be any place for us anywhere." So she went away, but in some manner the case touched the hearts of the management of the hospital more than any other that had come under their notice for many years. After talking it over among themselves it was decided to make a call upon the charity and philanthropy of the business men of the city. Mr. Crocker was first appealed to, and promptly responded with a check for two hundred and fifty dollars. This was the beginning of the "Little Jim ward" now one of the best organized and finely equipped hospital wards in the country.

It is the ward into which are gathered the little incurables, pitiful little flotsam and jetsom of a great city, maimed and strained and twisted sometimes out of all shape. The ward itself is a moving spectacle, each child lying quite flat upon his or her back, with great weights attached by ropes to the feet and run over pulleys at the bottom of the bed. But the little fellows are cheerful enough for all that, and shout across beds to one another and laugh—that is, when the pain doesn't twinge them—and find amusement in—what? God knows. Everything is relative after all, as well as in hospitals as in the "world outside," and perhaps the highest form of amusement that these little twisted mites are capable of is the mere negative sensation of the absence of pain.

The best of the whole thing is that Little Jim was found again after a time, and given a bed in the ward he had been influential in founding.

A bankrupt Peer cannot occupy his seat in the House of Lords during the time which elapses between his application to the courts for relief and the granting of his petition, and also until he has paid the last of the small dividends for the benefit of his creditors. This is a startling statement, but, as far as England is concerned, is a timely one, as bankruptcy has become so much a part of the social system that it needs a little palliation of some kind or other. The decision of Lord Esher will doubtless prove welcome to impecunious noblemen, but there is a drawback even his tolerance cannot palliate.

Mrs. Nellie Grant-Sartoris, who has returned to America with her children to make her home with her mother, Mrs. U. S. Grant, in Washington, is even prettier and more attractive than when she left the National Capital, a bride, in 1874. Mrs. Sartoris is a year or so over forty, is a little under medium height, and her figure is very girlish. She has dark eyes and a pretty, natural, color in her cheeks, and she wears her abundant black hair in a graceful coil on the top of her head.

A Louisville man was recently brought to trial for beating his wife with a sledgehammer and abusing her in other ways. The prisoner admitted the charge, but defended his actions by declaring to the court that when he married he thought his wife a white woman, but afterwards made the discovery that she was colored, and this so enraged him that the complained of assault followed. The judge listened attentively to the man's defense, and then formally dismissed the charge, solemnly stating that the provocation was sufficient to justify the assault.

Doctor Liebeault, a French scientist who has devoted his time and energies to hypnotism, claims that it is possible to hypnotize ninety-five per cent of mankind. Recent experiments under Dr. Liebeault show that women are less liable to be hypnotized than men, because it is more difficult for a woman to fix her attention upon a given object than a man. The doctor also claims that it is impossible to make anyone hypnotized perform a crime and as equally impossible in the first place to be hypnotized against one's will.

A PLAYROOM FOR CONVALESCENTS

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Well, Deary dear, ere I am back from Santa Barbara, fully recovered in health, lusty with renewed vitality—only cast down at the thought of the coming six weeks of Lent. I did not have an altogether blissful time owing to the absurd conservatism of that Aunt Sybil. Would you believe it, she actually would only allow me to speak to those people whose pedigree was obvious, who wait around, so to speak, with a neatly trimmed family tree! A collection of well preserved old bachelors and antiquated spinsters, who delighted to linger on the following topics: The lack of culture of the coming generation and the longevity of one-lungers. I nearly perished from ennui, and then to come back to Lent—I wish I were engaged—then I should not mind.

MISS LEILA BURTON AS ESTHER
Thors, photo

I have a theory, based upon no fact, legend nor fable, that Lent was made for herb-mooning. It is essentially the season for solitary walks, rides, tete-a-tetes and the thousand and one amusments that engaged couples delight in. But for us, who fly like humming birds from pleasure to pleasure, sipping the honey of life, it is mearly a season of boredom, varied perchance by visits to church and informal teas. I have joined ever so many classes from cooking to the study of the Rubyiat, which some aver is to take the place of the Bible as a guide to morals and manners. I hope it will, as then Lent will be a dead letter.

Let me see, what have I been doing during the past week. On Friday I went to the last meeting of the FridayFortnightly and had a perfectly glorious time. That looks superlative, but only expresses my feelings. I was called out every single time, and was actually besieged by the boys. You know it was our breaking-up party, so we had six pieces of music. The hall was prettily decorated with palms and ferns, and we had a Ludwig supper. It was all charmingly arranged. Little tables were spread in the main hall, which was so much more comfortable that standing in that crowded little room, scrambling for the food, and running the chances of having one's gown ruined with punch or lemonade. We anticipated having Mr. Greenway lead the cotillion, but he was ill, unfortunately, so Mr. Al Russell and Lieutenant Bent conducted the affair. They did admirably, too, and allowed no sneaking. The figures were really pretty and not too complicated to follow. There was a goodly gathering of army men, which added much to our enjoyment.

I think Lieutenants Nowlin, Kilbourne and Rutherford are the most popular with the girls, though we are all devoted to Lieutenant Bent. Poor man, how he and Ethel Cohen suffered at the hands of their friends. Every one insisted on congratulating them time and again, until they must have simply been exhausted. I wonder how many cups will Ethel receive? There were several exceedingly pretty girls present. Miss Prat and Miss Birkheimer, two army girls, seemed very popular. Miss Birkheimer is quite handsome. Of the debutantes Miss Salisbury in pink satin looked very well and seemed a great favorite. Miss Hopkins wore a fetching white gown. I always like her frocks, and she is so tall she shows them off to advantage. I think Alice Hoffman was the prettiest and most popular girl in the room. I quite envy her, she is so fresh and fair and strong looking. She wore a sweet girlish frock of white silk. Of the younger girls Edith Stubbs, who will not come out till '98, was the greatest favorite. I think Bernice Drown the best dancer, and so apparently do a number of the men. We danced till past one o'clock, and then, after thanking Mrs. Salisbury for the good times she had given us, retired till next season.

On Saturday I was very tired, but nevertheless determined to go to the Crocker tea in aid of one of the charities in the afternoon. It was a terrible jam, and everyone in town was there. Later I went to the Sketch Club to a charming reception. A number of the ladies wore Dutch caps, which were eminently becoming. On Sunday I just stayed in bed all day in order to be fresh for the closing meetings of the Saturday Fortnightly, which took place on Monday evening. It was a very well attended affair, and everyone seemed to succeed in having a jolly time. They are to have their regular party after Easter. The german was led by Mollie Hind and Douglas McBride. The figures did not differentiate in any especial degree from the usual marching. There are so many pretty girls in this class that it is difficult to select the belles. Those I admired the most were Marie Oge, in pale blue organdie over satin. She has so sweet an expression that it renders her face, which is really pretty, exceeding attractive. Lucy Jackson is tall, blonde and undeniably handsome.

On Tuesday evening I of course went to the Mardi Gras ball. It was the most beautiful sight I ever beheld. I went a year ago to look on, but this time I participated, and how that does change the aspect of things. I spoke to every one whom I fancied in any degree, and I did have fun. Some of the costumes were magnificent, others poor attempts, but there was so much more fancy dress than on the last occasion. I think Mollie Thomas' gown was the handsomest in the room. She went as a Venetian lady of the XVI century, wore pale blue velvet embroidered in pearls with long train. Her hair was twisted and strung with pearls. On her head she wore a round cap. Saidie Howard's costume made the sensation of the evening. She is an exceedingly pretty girl, to begin with, and wore a short low-cut gown of pure white duchesse muslin made over satin, which gave it a stiff effect. On her head she wore a blonde wig and big picture hat. As her eyes are black and she has rosy cheeks, the effect was bewitching. Miss Blanche Partington looked lovely as a Turkish lady, and the Loie Fuller veil was so becoming. Many of the girls wore dominoes, which I hate. I went as Will o' the Wisp. My frock can be imagined, so now, good night, dear Diary. I wonder shall I have so good a time next year, but as reflections are not becoming a cricket I shall hie me to bed.

MISS BEATRIX LYONS
Who made her debut in society recently
Marceau, photo

MISS CRICKET

* * *

Burlingame is threatened with a boom. Not a vulgar, wild-eyed early Californian land excitement, but a well-regulated demand for building sites by the right kind of people. The Mountford Wilsons, Joseph Crockers and Kruttschnits are all negotiating for locations and will build in the immediate future. They are looking at sites on the hill near the clubhouse, and once the deeds are signed there will be a rush of building material there and the noise of the hammer will disturb the environment. Colonel Crocker's purchase of the William Howard mansion is hailed with great pleasure by the set as it ensures his participation in the gaiety of the region. There is no doubt but that the Colonel will entertain, and he certainly makes an excellent host.

In his cellars a well-known connoisseur tells me, there are some of the best clarets and burgundies ever imported here. The Howard house is really one of the finest mansions round the bay, and especially adopted for entertaining in.

The final cotillion of the Thursday Fortnightly, or the Southern Club, was held last week under the chaperonage of Mrs. S. M. Van Wyck. It went off very nicely, and there were the usual number of pretty girls garbed in organdies and other soft looking materials. The most suggestive of the Southern novel type were Miss Churchill Jones of St. Louis, who might have stepped out of one of Cable's books; Miss Nannie Van Wyck, a picturesque looking girl, and Miss Dollie Mitchell, a dainty little brunette.

Considerable interest was evinced over the nuptials of Miss Hilda Levy and Mr. Joshua Eppinger, who were married at the Concordia Club on Tuesday evening. The personality of the participants was of more interest than usual owing to the romance connected with their engagement. They attended college together and found love more beguiling even than study. Miss Levy is a very fine looking girl, and never appeared better than in bridal array. Her gown was very artistic. An exquisitely cut satin with demi-train. The waist was high, the yoke outlined in point lace, with bouquet of orchids on the left shoulder. The veil of lace covered the entire gown, and was fastened with diamond sunburst and bunch of orange blossoms. The bridesmaids, Miss Alice Bachman, Miss Daisy Schweitzer, Miss Rica Triest and Miss Sadie Hirschman, wore frocks of white satin covered in illusion and carried bouquets of bride roses. Miss Eppinger, the maid of honor, wore a handsome gown of white satin veiled in net. One of the prettiest of the costumes was that of the bride's mother, of black moire silk trimmed with duchesse lace. Mrs. John Deiglein wore grey crepe de chine over pink taffeta, trimmed with pink velvet, and Mrs. Henry Ahpel wore yellow satin covered in spangled net.

The event of the week was the dramatic performance of "The Mystery of a Misanthropic Monarch," a burlesque on the "Prisoner of Zenda," which was given at the Concordia Club rooms on Saturday evening. It was a most laughable affair, and remarkably well done. Mr. Milton Boemer as Antoinette the Mauban was irresistibly funny, and when he was referred to by Mr. Ben Davis on entering as "Ah, here comes one of my early indiscretions," it brought down the house. Mr. Leon Greenebaum took the part of Princess Caviar with remarkable skill. Mr. Weil made a very clever Lieutenant Fitz, and Mr. Korn was inimitable as Colonel Sapt. Not only did he play the part, but looked it. Mr. Davis and Mr. Swabacher are receiving the thanks of the club for their admirable management of the affair. The ballroom was charmingly decorated and the costumes were in excellent taste. Of the younger married set, honors were divided between Mrs. Maurice Rothschild, Mrs. William S. Hochstadter, Mrs. Heller and Mrs. Ed Rothschild. Miss Rose Neustadter looked very pretty, as did Miss Loosy Wangenheim in a soft pink gown and Miss Adler in white and red looked stunning.

MRS. EPPINGER
NEE HILDA LEVY
Thors, photo

On Thursday evening of last week Miss Beatrix Lyons made her society debut at a reception given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lyons. Miss Lyons is an attractive and interesting girl and is certain to have a distinct social success.

Like the final flicker of a candle was the burst of gaiety that brightened the last week of the season in Oakland. Lent is observed with much more strictness over there than on this side of the bay, and among the "Church" people, i. e., Catholics and Episcopalians, even small dinners are condemned. The society maidens spend their time getting ready their summer wardrobes, building up their health and improving their minds. Several of the girls have formed a basket-ball team under the leadership of Miss Nellie de Fremery. Mrs. Knox has lent her large schoolroom for the practice, and the girls are quite enthusiastic. Misses Martie and Belle Hutchinson, Miss Glascock and a number of Miss Head's old graduates belong to the club. Then there is a class devoted to "Kitchen Gardening" where the young girls train the children of the poor to wash windows, scrub floors, polish silver, etc. Certain other maidens propose to spend the six weeks in travel, Miss Isabelle Palmer and Miss Bernice Landers left on Friday for Honolulu, and Miss Ethel Moore, the Misses Welman and Miss Alexander have departed for a summer tour of China and Japan. They will not return before the end of next September.

MISS ROSE HOOPER AS POLLY ECCLES
Thors, photo

The onus of entertainment seems to have fallen lately upon the shoulders of the younger set, the maidens who, as yet, have not made their formal entrance into society. Last week these young people vied with one another in their efforts to make the week memorable. The event par excellence was the final meeting of the Friday Fortnightly Club. It was very well attended and was followed by several jolly suppers. The german was rather disappointing. The first figure being merely a galloping of couples into one corner of the room, a division and a scramble for partners. However, the third figure redeemed the affair, as it was especially pretty. The young people formed lines divided into rectangular figures, came together and marched under crossed flags to the music of the national airs. Miss Irene Baker and Mr. Beach Soule, assisted by Miss Jean Flush led the cotillion. Miss Baker was charmingly gowned in pink pineapple cloth over pink silk with garlands of roses round the corsage and arranged as a ceinture. Miss Flush was in figured organdie over green silk. Miss Carmen Moore in white miroir silk and chiffon. There are a number of pretty girls in this club, though not nearly so many as in the Deux Temps, where it is a more difficult matter to select the

Chew Adams' Pepsin Tutti-Frutti. It is sovereign for indigestion and agreeable to the taste

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

plain maidens than to pick out the prettiest. Miss Quinan struck me as being the most stunning looking girl in the room. She is a blonde of medium height, with a graceful figure and a mass of soft golden hair. She was in white organdie with pink bodice and sleeves. Miss Mary Randall made a pretty picture in flowered organdie over pink silk, and Miss Ione Fore was bewitching in a pink dotted Swiss. Miss Coit wore a fetching gown of pale sea foam silk trimmed with bands of green hunter's velvet. Of the San Francisco girls Miss Marie Oge looked charming in pale cream taffeta trimmed with cardinal velvet.

DRAMATIC NOTES

Joseph Haworth will make his appearance at the Columbia next Monday evening in a production of "Ruy Blas," the same version of the play as that used by Edwin Booth. Mr. Haworth's engagement will continue for one week, and the supporting company will include Miss Margaret Craven, who has just returned from the land of the Phadaohs, several members of the Frawley company who have recently arrived from the East, and Messrs. Fenton and Milroy, who were with Modjeska. "Ruy Blas" will be preceded by Augustus Thomas' dainty one act play, "A Man of the World."

There wil be a number of new people at the Orpheum next week, including the Jordans, who are on their way to Australia. John Burke, the comedian, who succeeded Eddie Foy in the Henderson company, Virginia Arragon, the beautiful wire walker, and the Cliftons, who will appear in an act that is said to have turned Europe upside down. The grand opera singers will give the sextette from "Lucia," and Guille and Abramoff will have new numbers.

"Jim the Penman" will be presented at the Alcazar next Monday evening, for the first time in its history at popular prices. The cast will include George Osbourne, Hugo Toland, Adele Belgarde, May Buckley and Charles Wyngate. The play will be mounted especially well and it should draw heavily.

Miss Margaret Craven has brought with her from Paris a gorgeous Worth costume which she will wear as the Queen in "Ruy Blas" at the Columbia next week. In the curtain raiser, "A Man of the World, which will precede "Ruy Blas," Miss Craven will appear in a new Redfern gown.

MISS MARGARET CRAVEN

Who appears at the Columbia next week in "Ruy Blas"
Thors, photo

"Pinafore" will be sung at the Tivoli next week and with it will end the season of Gilbert and Sullivan opera. Elvia Cox Seabrooke will be Josephine, Ferris Hartman Sir Joseph Porter, and Bernice Holmes Little Buttercup. The bill will be elaborately mounted and will run through the week. Following "Pinafore" Nicolais' "Merry Wives of Windsor" will be put on, and will be the occasion of the reappearance at the Tivoli of Miss Laura Millard.

It is not generally known that we originate, write, design and print unique, out-of-the-ordinary invitations, programs, and so forth, for society affairs. That's why we mention it. WILDER & CO., 20 to 24 Geary street.

THE THEATRES

An Amateur Performance Which Was Worthy of Professionals.

Mammas with marriageable sons and daughters were not pleased with the selection of Robertson's play of "Cast,' which was presented at the California Theater last Monday evening. "Caste' deals with low life and a mesalliance in which a penniless girl of lowly birth who takes small parts in cheap theaters is made the heroine, and the hero is a young aristocrat who falls desperately and shockingly in love and marries, contrary to the plans and ambitions of a proud and aristocratic mother. Society is not enamored of this sort of story, and it has little if any interest in the love affairs of plumbers and the like. Young ladies who take small parts in theaters, and who have, besides, drunken and disreputable fathers, and who live a miserable existence in wretched attic apartments, are in real life shocking, and upon the stage quite unbearable as possible wives for impressionable aristocrats. So "Caste" in view of all the circumstances, was not a wise selection for the occasion. I have this upon the authority of one of the mammas. But the staging and production of the play were quite another thing. There was a polish and a finish to the performance that was quite unexpected, and pleasing as well. The company of ladies and gentlemen who presented the play did not have behind them an experience of three hundred consecutive nights in New York, so it would have been unfair to have expected from them even as clever a performance as they gave. Indeed, so clever was their handling of the play that it served to emphasize the extreme badness of some of our professional performers. The tendencies of the amateur are always to overact, and to a greater or less extent this fault was manifest in all of the young performers, with the exception of Dickman. His Eccles was from any point of view really superb, quite worthy of a professional. His makeup was artistic, his dialect admirable, and the whole presentation a finished piece of work.

The Polly of Miss Rose Hooper was sprightly, bright and vivacious, and the Marquise de St. Maur of Miss May Robeson was presented with grace and naturalness. Miss Burton, who essayed the role of Esther, was manifestly playing under a high tension, which led her at times to overact her part. Doubtless it was the result in a high state of nervousness. The young lady gave indications of capabilities along strong emotional lines, but at the same time it was apparent that she needs training down, rather than training up. Mr. Norris, as Sam Gerridge, astonished his friends a good deal. His makeup was so accurate that he might have stepped out of a south-of-Market-street plumber's establishment and been taken for one of the journeymen. Mr. Seldon Hooper as Captain Hautree was quite acceptable. Young Dr. Robinson appeared at short notice as George d'Alroy. Originally Mr. Mathieu was cast for this character, but two deaths in his family prevented him from taking part. Mr. J. C. Wilson, who would have made an admirable D'Alroy, was next pressed into service, but the death of his father, Captain Wilson, made it necessary to look elsewhere. Young Dr. Robinson was then induced to take the part, and in view of the circumstances, did remarkably well. Flowers there were in abundance, and the audience was warmly approving. Taken as a whole the performance was distinctly creditable, and that it was remunerative to the charitable institutions in whose benefit it was given the crowded house testified.

***

The bills at the Baldwin and Columbia offering nothing new for review, I concluded to introduce this week's Orpheum into polite society. Your enjoyment of the Orpheum depends largely upon the seats you have assigned you, as I found upon Tuesday evening. The house was not crowded, for the night was stormy and forbidding, and the week's entertainment not especially inviting. You rub up against such queer characters at the Orpheum that the quality of your neighbor's cigar can almost make or mar your evening's enjoyment. I don't think I will ever be able to forgive a thrifty waiter who discovered three half inebriated individuals in the twenty-five cent portion of the house, and invited the aforesaid to fifty cent seats just in front of me. These favored gentlemen were not choice in their language or in their cigars, and seemed possessed of a thirst which no doubt the waiter had discovered by some system of telepathy or trick of psychology. I did not wait to see the tank scene, which was at the foot of the bill. With these three unfillable and unsatisfied tanks in front of me, there was no desire to see more. As the beer made its way to their stomachs, and thence to their heads, they generously took to including the waiter in the "treats." He was a thrifty waiter, for he simply sucked the foam from off his beer, collected his money and disappeared. Shortly another round would be ordered, including one for the waiter, and I verily believe he sold that same glass of beer to himself a half-dozen times. Occasionally one of the thirsts would wobble out, and then wobble back again with a worse cigar than its predecessor, and so, between the bad cigars, the bad language and the beer, one was not in a frame of mind to enjoy even the delights of Guille.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

A SCENE FROM THE AMATEUR PERFORMANCE OF "CASTE" AT THE CALIFORNIA
Thors, photo

"She's damn good," said one of the "thirsts." I peered over their heads at a young lady in bloomers on the stage, who, if she was ever "damn good," it was not while I was looking at her.

The selection of the grand opera quartette included "Faust, "The Huegenots," "L'Africaine" and "William Tell," but while Sig. Abramoff was in the midst of the beautiful aria "Die Possenti, from "Faust," a "ge'man of color," who had been flitting to and from the barroom, stumbled and fell flat on the floor close beside me, which raised a giggle and guffaw that quite drowned all sounds from the stage. I left while the orchestra was playing the Charles Bank March, and my friends with the thirst were discussing the merits of "Mister Gaily who uster sing with Patti." B.

The French opera season commences at the California next Wednesday evening with Il Trovatore." The opera will be elaborately staged and will introduce the principal singers and the corps de ballet. On Friday evening "L'Africaine" will be sung, at the Saturday matinee "Faust," and on Saturday evening "Miss Helyett." Not since Patti and Albini were here seven years ago has San Francisco had such opera as it will have during the coming season. The company is large and thoroughly efficient, the ballet is directed by one of the ablest ballet masters in all Europe, and there will be any amount of novelty in the repertoire. The demand for seats has been enormous, and the success of the season is already assured.

"The Mikado" has been sung at the Tivoli this week with commendable dash and spirit. Many of the numbers have been awarded repeated encores, and the entire piece takes almost as well as a new opera. Ferris Hartman gets all the humor possible out of Ko-Ko, and W. H. West is a thoroughly dignified and readily insulted Pooh Bah. Arthur Boyce is vocally romantic as Nanki-Poo, and J. J. Raffael is good as the Mikado. Elvia Cox Seabrooke as that sweet child of nature Yum-Yum looks very pretty and sings as well as she looks, her song in the second act being especially well given. It is in such operas as "The Mikado" that the Tivoli company appears to best advantage, in something light and airy, full of bright, catchy music, and plenty of movement and merriment.

The coming week at the Baldwin will see the last of James A. Herne and of "Shore Acres." This idyll of New England life has been exceptionally successful in San Francisco, having been received by large audiences at every performance, and the last week of the play bids fair to exceed in attendance the two preceding it. Fanny Davenport will follow Mr. Herne in a magnificent production of Sardou's "Gismonda."

Cissy Fitzgerald, the London Gaiety girl whose wink was discovered by Alan Dole and immediately became famous, will come to the Columbia after Joseph Haworth in the new Frohman comedy, "The Founding." Miss Fitzgerald will introduce into the play some sensational dancing.

The illustrated lectures on Japanese art which were to have been given at the First Unitarian Church on March 9th and 12th by Mr. Ernest Francisco, Fenollosa, have been postponed owing to the detainment of Mr. Fenollosa in New York.

Adams' Tutti-Frutti Chewing Gum for Indigestion

Half-Sick People

Just sick enough to feel heavy-headed, lazy and listless, to have no appetite, to sleep badly, to have what you eat feel like lead in your stomach. Not sick enough to take to bed or call a doctor, but just sick enough to not know what to do.

Take a Tonic

That's what you ought to do—a good sensible tonic that will sharpen your appetite and put new "go" in your nerves and muscles. Come to-day and begin taking it right away. You'll find just what your system needs right here.

VINTINE

Is the tonic you want. Pleasant to take, permanent in results. Not a patent medicine, but a regular medicine that gives the contents on the bottle. It is the greatest nerve food, nutrient tonic, and blood cleanser known. Try it. Price, One Dollar.

Manufactured by the Vintine Company

SOLD BY

BROOKS'

Homeopathic Pharmacy

119 Powell Street

AND AT DRUG-STORES

THE SUBLIMINAL MIND

A Theory of Dual Personality Which Explains Psychic Phenomena.

The theory put forth in "Telepathy and the Subliminal Mind" (Henry Holt & Co.) disturbs those impressions of personal unity and independence which every man presumes to act upon. The ego, it seems, is not a single entity at all, but a corporation, in which it has the role of chairman. Under ordinary circumstances it dictates policy and answers questions, but when it is asleep or is hypnotized a second self emerges and develops strange and superior powers, of which the ego wots not. The idea of a second self is not original with Dr. R. Osgood Mason, the author of this book. It was urged by Hudson in his law of "Psychic Phenomena" as the rational interpretation of all the phenomena of telepathy, spiritualism and mesmerism. He defined an objective and a subjective mind, the former communicating with the world and its fellows through the senses, the latter endowed with powers which enabled it to see, hear and taste without the aid of eyes, ears or a palate. This subsidiary mind he held to control memory, dreams and the automatic functions of the body, but it lacks volition and the power of attention, which the objective mind possesses. Dr. Mason deduces the existence of this secondary personality from similar facts and experiences. He presents us with curious instances of clairvoyance, automatism and somnambulism, which require accounting for by some such condition. Indeed, in the light of the evidence submitted this supernormal self is developed as having a marked individuality of its own quite different in instances to that of the ordinary self. It has its own opinions and dislikes, but its sway is only assumed after a terrible shock or an aggravated illness which dislodges the seat of reason, or under hypnotic influence.

In his treatment of the several phases of psychic phenomena, Dr. Mason is very lucid. Of clairvoyance he has this to say:

From a careful consideration of the best authenticated facts and examples, we are led to believe that the faculty of clairvoyance is no supernatural gift, but may be possessed to some degree, by many, perhaps by all, people; that it it a natural condition, developed and brought into exercise by a few, but undeveloped and dormant in most; that the faculty may include not only the power of obtaining visual perceptions at a distance and under circumstances which render ordinary vision impossible, but also the perception of a general truth and the relation of things in nature to such a degree as to render the person who possesses it a teacher and prophet of seemingly supernatural endowments. Carefully excluding cases of unusual extension, or skill in using normal perceptive faculties, and also thought-transference, which, although bearing a certain relation to clairvoyance, should not be confounded with it, the phenomena of independent clairvoyance appear in certain persons under the following conditions:

In certain states brought about by disease, and at the near approach of death, in the hypnotic condition, whether self-induced or produced by the influence of a second person, and especially in the condition known as trance; it may also appear in sleep of the ordinary kind—in dreams, and especially in the condition of reverie or the state between sleeping and waking; a few persons also possess the clairvoyant faculty while in their natural condition, without losing their consciousness. In general it may be said that the faculty is most likely to appear when there exists a condition of abstraction, and the mind is acting without the restraint and guidance of the usual consciousness—and it reaches its most perfect exercise when this usual guidance ceases entirely—the body becoming inactive and anaesthetic and the mind acting independent of its usual manifesting organs. Such is the condition in trance.

This view is, of course, in direct opposition to the materialistic philosophy which makes the mind simply a "group of phenomena;" the result of organization and absolutely dependent upon that organization for its action, and even for its existence.

Among the strangest phenomena known to science are those that pertain to dual personality. We read often of men through some violent shock losing their sense of individuality and developing under new circumstances a different entity. In Binet's "Transferences of Personality" many curious instances were recorded, but no attempt was made to deduce a subliminal self. An extraordinary example of this character is submitted by Dr. Mason:

A fourth typical case is that of Alma ..., recently reported by me for "The Journal of Nervous and Mental Diseases." In this case, an unusually healthy, strongly intellectual girl, an expert in athletic sport and a leader wherever she might be, on account of overwork, and finally of broken-down health, developed a second, and, later, a third personality. Each was widely different from the others, all were normal so far as a perfect knowledge of and adaptation to their surroundings were concerned, and all were of unusual intellectual force and brightness, as well as moral worth; but each was distinct, peculiar, and even in marked contrast to the others in many important characteristics. No. 1 had no knowledge of No. 2, nor of No. 3, except from circumstances and the report of others, and also from letters which passed betwen them giving information of No. 1 regarding changes which had occurred in her absence, as, for instance, of expected company or other engagement which it would be important for her to know.

An instance of this occurred at one of the concerts of a distinguished pianist a few years since. No. 3 was the reigning personality, and she was herself a lover of music and an excellent critic. Beethoven's concerto in C major was on the programme and was being performed in a most charming manner by soloists and orchestra. I was sitting near her in the box, when all at once I noticed a change in the expression of her face, which denoted the presence of No. 1. She listened with intense interest and pleasure to the performance, and at its close I spoke a few words to her and she replied in her usual charming manner. It was No. 1 without a doubt. Soon after, she leaned back in her chair, took two or three quick, short inspirations, and No. 3 was present again. She turned to me smiling and said:

"So No. 1 came for her favorite concerto. Wasn't it splendid that she could hear it?"

I said: "Yes, but how did you know she was here?

"Oh, I sat on the front of the box," she said. "I heard the music, too, and I saw you speaking to her."

He sums up the evidence and concludes thus:

The facts thus brought into view are these: That in a considerable number of persons there may be developed, either spontaneously or artificially, a second personality different in character and distinct in its consciousness and memories from the primary or original self that this second personality is not a mere change of consciousness, but in some sense it is a different entity, having a power of observation, attention and memory not only when the primary self is submerged and without consciousness or volition, but also at the same time that the primary self is in action, performing its usual offices, and in its turn it is equally capable of managing the affairs and performing the offices properly pertaining to the common body whenever needed for that purpose.

Dr. Mason regards the theory of a subliminal self as explanatory of innumerable instances of the supernatural related in history, besides the phenomena of automatism, planchette and mind reading. He calls the voices which the child Samuel heard in ministering to the High Priest Eli an instance of sensory automatism. The Demon of Socrates, the voices of Joan of Arc, the inspiration of Swedenborg are all of the same origin. In regard to the attitude the mind should take towards such communications he says:

It seems wisest, therefore, at least to examine these and all cases of automatically received messages, whether by writing, trance-speaking, dreams, visions or the hearing of voices, with a definite conception of a rea land natural cause and origin for these messages in a subliminal self, forming a definite part of each individual bearing in mind also that this subliminal self possesses powers and characteristics varying in each individual case, in many cases greatly transcending the powers and capabilities of the normal or primary self. But infallibility, though sometimes claimed, is by no means to be expected from this source, and the messages coming from each subliminal self must be judged and valued according to their own intrinsic character and merit, just as a message coming to us from any primary self, whether known or unknown to us, must be judged and valued according to its source, character and merit.

Assuming that the subliminal mind has powers of communication superior to the sensory faculties of the ordinary self the explanation which Dr. Mason offers of apparitions is not extravagant. We are often told that the characters created by Balzac in his "Comedie Humaine" had for him a tangible existence. They had become externalized—actual objects of visual perception. Another instance is that of a certain great painter, who, after carefully studying a sitter's appearance, could voluntarily project it visibly into space, and could paint the portrait from the phantom so produced.

Considering these facts, Dr. Mason's theorem is not violent. He claims that perceptions may have their origin telepathically—that is, scenes and incidents transpiring at too great a distance to affect the bodily organs of sense in a direct way, nevertheless in some way cause perceptions to arise in the mind corresponding to these scenes and incidents. He proceeds then to give instances of apparitions produced by will power, both under hypnotic and normal conditions. In each example it is shown that a definite purpose was formed by the agent to produce a certain hallucination, generally a representation of himself, and that the percepient sees the phantom thus projected under the conditions intended. Here is a case in point:

"For the last year or fifteen months I have been in the habit of mesmerizing a fellow-student of mine. The way I did it was by simply looking into his eyes as he lay in an easy position on a bed. This produced sleep. After a few times I found that this sleep was deepened by making long passes after the patient was off. Then comes the remarkable part of this sort of mesmerism." (Mr. Sparks then describes his subject's ability to see in his trance places in which he was interested if he resolved to see them before he was hypnotized). "However, it has been during the last week or so I have been surprised and startled by an extraordinary affair. Last Friday evening (January 15, 1886), he (Cleve) expressed a wish to see a young lady living in Wadsworth, and he also said he would try to make himself seen by her. I accordingly mesmerized him and continued the long passes for about twenty minutes, concentrating my will on his idea. When he came round (after one hour and tweny minutes' trance) he said he had seen her in the dining-room and that after a time she grew restless, then suddenly she looked straight at him, and then covered her eyes with her hands: just then he came round. Last Monday evening (January 18th) we did the same thing, and this time he said he thought he had frightened her, as after she had looked at him a few minutes she fell back in her chair in a sort of faint. Her little brother was in the room at the time. Of course after this he expected a letter if the vision was real; and on Wednesday morning he received a letter from the young lady, asking whether anything had happened to him, as on Friday evening she was startled by seeing him standing at the door of the room. After a minute he disappeared, and she thought it might have been her fancy; but on Monday evening she was still more startled by seeing him again and this time much clearer, and it so frightened her that she nearly fainted."

C.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Dr. H. G. Young — Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Mr. Hermann Schwarze (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

TO THE LORD OF POTSDAM

On Sending a Certain Telegram.

The parodies of Owen Seamen are pronounced by the critics the cleverest produced since the days of Calverly and Bon Gaultier. This poem to the Kaiser is said by the "Saturday Review" to be the best of the collection. From the "Battle of the Bays": John Lane.

Majestic Monarch! whom the other gods,
For fear of their immediate removal,
Consulting hourly, seek your awful nod's
Approval,

Lift but your little finger up to strike,
And lo! 'the massy earth is riven' (Shelley),
The habitable globe is shaken like
A jelly.

By your express permission for the last
Eight years the sun has regularly risen:
And editors, that questioned this, have passed
To prison.

In Art you simply have to say, "I shall!"
Beethoven's fame is rendered transitory;
And Titian cloys beside your clever all-egory.

We hailed you, Admiral: your eagle sight
Foresaw Her Majesty's benign intentions;
A uniform was ready of the right
Dimensions.

Your wardrobe shines with all the shapes and shades,
That genius can fix in fancy suitings;
For levees, false alarums, full parades
And shootings.

But save the habit marks the man of gore
Your spurs are yet to win, my callow Kaiser!
Of fighting in the field you know no more
Than I, Sir!

When Grandpapa was thanking God with hymns
For gallant Frenchmen dying in the ditches,
Your nurse had barely braced your little limbs
In breeches.

And doubtless, where he roosts beside his bock,
The Game Old Bird that played the leading fiddle
Smiles grimly as he hears your perky cock-a-diddle.

Be well advised, my youthful friend, abjure
These tricks that smack of Cleon and the tanners;
And let the Dutch instruct a German Boor
In manners.

Nor were you meant to solve the nations' knots,
Or be the Earth's Protector, willy-nilly;
You only make yourself and royal Pots-dam silly.

Our racing yachts are not at present dressed
In bravery of bunting to amuse you,
Nor can the licence of an honoured guest
Excuse you.

But if your words are more than wanton play
And you would like to meet the old sea-rover,
Name any course from Delagoa Bay
To Dover.

Meanwhile observe a proper reticence;
We ask no more; there never was a rumour
Of asking Hohenzollerns for a sense
Of humour!

How's This.

We offer one hundred dollars reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last fifteen years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo.

Walding, Kinnan & Marvin, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is take internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggists. Testimonials free.

Wise people seeking advice on important matters consult only the best authorities. Thos. Cook & Son are the recognized authorities on Travel in all Civilized Countries. The knowledge attained during their fifty-six years of experience as travel experts, is at the disposal of all intending travelers. San Francisco Office, 621 Market street.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

Old Saratoga

PURE OLD

RYE WHISKEY

THE FINEST BRAND OF PENNSYLVANIA

o

MATURED BY GREAT AGE IN WOOD

o

A SUPERB MEDICINAL WHISKEY

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood & Sherwood

SAN FRANCISCO

PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

$500 IN GOLD FREE

Sixty-one Prizes, aggregating $500. A Genuine Bona-Fide Offer. We give nothing but cash for prizes. No trash. Here is our proposition. Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in INSTRUCTION. You can make twenty or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. Use no language except English. Use any dictionary. Plurals, pronouns, verbs, adverbs, prefixes, suffixes, adjectives, proper nouns, allowed. Anything that is a legitimate word will be allowed. Work it out in this manner. INSTRUCTION: In, Tin, Ton, Sin, Son, Sir, Scion, Run, Us, etc. The publisher of WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY will pay $100.00 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word INSTRUCTION; $50.00 for second largest; $25.00 for each of the next three largest lists; $20.00 to each of the next three; $15.00 to each of the next three; $10.00 to each of the next nine; and $5.00 to each of the next forty largest lists—sixty-one prizes in all for the sixty-one largest lists. Don't you think you could be one of these sixty-one? You will enjoy the making of your list. Why not try for the first prize? The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome woman's magazine thirty two to thirty-six pages, each page containing four long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter long and short stories by the best authors. price $1.00 per year It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 25 cents (money-order, silver or stamps) for a three-months trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 25 cents and a list of twenty words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine), of a 100-page book, "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," by the famous Ian Maclaren. This book has attracted more attention in the United States than any book of recent years. We give a complete unabridged edition handy size, finely printed in handsome type. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than April 20. The names and addresses of successful contestants will be printed in May issue, published April 25. Our publication has been established ten years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Make your list now. Address JAMES H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 225-226-227 Temple Court building New York City

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY

E. L. G. STEELE & CO.

208 California St., San Francisco

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

"It gives me great pleasure to accept the dedication of your beautiful songs.

"S. JADASSOLEN, Leipsic."

Song Album by H. B. PASMORE

Nineteen Beautiful Songs Sent for One Dollar

OLIVER DITSON CO., Boston

THE MARCH MAGAZINES

Depressing Conclusions About Venus — The Month's Fiction.

It is no light task examining the pile of the month's magazines. Bound together they would make a book of several thousand pages, relieved by pictures it is true, but laden with essays and discussions that require attentive reading if one purposes expressing familiarity with their contents.

I shall make no attempt here to deal with the "Forum" or the "North American Review," though neither of these highly important organs contains anything better than Woodrow Wilson's estimate of Mr. Cleveland as President, or John Fisk on the Arbitration Treaty, which are the star features of the "Atlantic," or even the "Century's contribution of "Nelson at Trafalgar," in which Captain Mahan explains technically how England's great admiral fought and the maneuvers by which he achieved his victory.

Woodrow Wilson's article on Grover Cleveland is an excellent estimate of the character of the ex-President, of whom he says: "No such great personality has appeared in our politics since Lincoln, and whether greater or less, his personality is his own, unique in all the varied history of our government." He describes him as a man without a party, but one who has made politics and altered policies after the fashion of an earlier age in our history. "He is no diplomat," he says, "but is possessed of a sort of robust sagacity."

Passing from this somewhat serious study of an eminent politician, we come to Mr. Wentworth Higginson, gossiping along in his "Cheerful Yesterdays." Now he is in the anti-slavery period, and is enterta ning and easy in a light friendship. I must not forget astronomy, however. It takes up considerable space this March. Both the "Atlantic' and "Harpers' " have articles on stars and gazers. In the first, Percival Lowell writes of "Venus in the Light of Recent Discoveries," and leaves the impression that the discoveries are of a somewhat depressing character. Venus has an atmosphere, but is destitute of polar caps, and seems to be dowered with neither vegetation nor water. He says: "It is a world which, as a world, has run its course, and it is distance alone that gives her a seeming loveliness and endows her with eternal youth. She is old and wrinkled and dead." A conclusion that dissipates a number of entertaining delusions in regard to the brightest of the planets. Henry Smith Williams in his "Astronomical Progress of the Century," furnishes a complacent frame to some very excellent pictures, but that is a combination too often a characteristic of the big magazines. In Charles F. Lummis' articles about Mexico one finds excellent reading. The illustrations are especially fine, and will doubtless develop their second usefulness in the volume form. This is the great advantages of a magazine attachment of a publishing house. Apropos of pictures one cannot but admire the execution of "Harpers' " pictures. They are always admirable, mechanically, and perfectly printed. For all that the frontispiece requires explanation. It represents a girl and a youth under a cherry tree, facing a poem. The eyes of the maid are closed. The man is steadfastly gazing at her. Can it be that she has just departed without due notice to her lover. She might have selected a more appropriate place for death, for in "Harpers' " a demise should always be conducted with due ceremony. The article on Henry G. Marquand, describing his magnificent collection of pictures together with views of his beautiful home in New York, is most readable, a verdict that cannot be passed on the story by Owen Wister, which is sadly drawn out. "The Martians" disappoints as its length is unrolled. It is certainly not destined to have the popular success which its predecessor enjoyed.

"The Century" is easily first among the monthlies this month. The introductory article, "Our Fellow Citizen of the White House," is a capital and thoroughly readable article, not only entertaining but full of facts, and it blends beautifully with the second article on "The Nation's Library," and the third on "Inauguration Scenes and Incidents," by Joseph B. Bishop, which is a model harmonizing of reminiscences and detail. There is good stuff in "The Art of Large Giving," by George Iles. The "Cosmopolitan" hardly holds its own this month. The article on "Methods of Banking" seems only an attenuated frame for the portrait of bank presidents and safes. That on "Corfu and its Olive Groves," is a type setting for some excellently printed engravings. Impressive indeed is the editor's review of the currency problem. There are besides innumerable pictures, including a photographic story of a boy's trip to Europe, neither the value nor the interest of which is apparent.

To turn to the fiction of the month, I find that Crawford's "Modern Fairy Tale" ends rather weakly. The President of the Universal Trust, who has been engaged in gving people their heart's desires, discovers that the secret of happiness is love, and goes into the building and loan business. Conan Doyle's "Uncle Bernac" is engaged in a good deal of fighting, and is of course readable. If you are disappointed in "Front Name Dick," which is too olng for its value, turn to "The Man Who Worked for Collister" in "The Century," which is really a pleasant and graceful story, or to "An Entomological Wooing" in "Harpers'," a continuation of the charming tale of Peacney, Martin and the geese, which appeared in a previous issue. "La Gommeuse," by Belmont Davis, who bears up under the distinction of being the brother of Richard Harding of that famous ilk, is fairly good, but it has not the latter's finish. "Dead Selves," by Julia Magruder, which forms the novel in the March "Lippincott,' I have not read, but it looks good enough to get through. But if anyone wants live, vigorous, entertaining reading let him run over the description of Harvey Cheyne's trip across the continent from San Diego to Boston in "Captain Courageous" in "McClure's." Kipling alone could write such vivid, virile narrative. It is a splendid, piece of writing. The reader flies with the train across mountain and valley. It is the best railroad journey I know, and it brings nearly to a termination what is certainly this author's best novel. Here, too, is the commencement of Robert Louis Stevenson's "St. Ives," which is said by those who have followed it in the "Pall Mall Magazine" to have something the quality which distinguished the "Master of Ballantral." Clinton Ross is also represented. Of this writer we are all having rather more than anyone bargained for, and several pages more than anyone wants. I must not forget Blanche Willis Howard's story in the "Atlantic." It is gracefully written and relieves the magazine of the reproach of weight.

C.

NEW BOOKS OF VERSE

There are good lines, many good lines, in Emily Dickinson's "Poems," (Roberts Bros.) but they are very much like wild-flowers growing in the midst of a dense thicket, through which one must struggle to reach them. There is a queer quality—an odd originality—about Miss Dickinson's work that makes it different from that of most versifiers: it is almost too odd to be thoroughly enjoyable.

The poems of Celia Thaxter have been collected in one volume (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) The book is attractively gotten up, and contains the poems, as near as possible, in the order of their writing. Miss Thaxter's life was an interesting and an observant one, and her work possesses a charm that is distinctly its own. Some of the songs are as rythmical and as soothing as the very breezes that blew over the Isle of Shoals and the sands of Appledore—the places the poetess loved and wrote about so well.

Johanna Ambrosius, a German "Poetess of the People," has contributed to literature a volume of poetry, which has been translated from the German by Mary J. Safford. The authoress has lived her days in a remote German village, "far from the madding crowd," and all the culture pertaining to it. She has lived her days in the fields and among the flocks. She has labored and she has suffered, and her poems bear the imprint of it to a remarkable extent. "Poems by Johanna Ambrosius" (Roberts Bros.)

In John Davidson's "New Ballads," (John Love) there is work that will easily place the author among the very foremost of modern poets. There are verses and verses in the little book as beautiful and as perfect as any that have ever been written. Mr. Davidson is not equally happy in all of the poems, nor is the smoothness of rythm sustained equally throughout, but in "A Ballad of a Poet Born" and the "Serenade," there are lines perfect in beauty and perfect in melody—matchless lines that conclusively prove his genius.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream—it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

HENSHAW, BULKLEY & BELCHER

SUCCESSORS TO

H. P. GREGORY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO

MACHINERY

Heating and Ventilating Plants
Electric-Lighting Plants
Engines and Boilers
Gas and Gasoline Engines
Asbestos Materials

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

521 523 Market St., San Fran

Have you a friend who a Smoker is,
Tell him there is just out a Smoker's Tip,
Which will prevent a cancer lip.

Mailed on receipt of three 2 cent stamps by

ELASTIC TIP CO.

Boston 735 Market St., S. F. Chicago

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market

Branch Stores: 302 Kearny St. and 1212-14 Market St.

HARTSHORN'S SELF ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOVICE SAME THIS LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE
Stewart Hartshorn ON HARTSHORN

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, March 8 to 20, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track. Buy your tickets to Berkeley.

Returning trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.
R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

BALDWIN THEATRE
AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Beginning Next Monday, March 8th
Third and Last Week

JAMES A. HERNE

In his own beautiful play of American Home Life

"SHORE ACRES"

Remember: There are but seven more performances!
Monday, March 15th, Fanny Davenport in "Gismonda"

CALIFORNIA THEATRE
AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS

GRAND OPERA SEASON

The Famous French Operatic Organization direct from Europe via New Orleans, where they have just completed a brilliant subscription season of twelve weeks . . . .

Wednesday, March 10th, IL TROVATORE
Friday (first time in years) L'AFRICAINE
Saturday Matinee, FAUST
Saturday Evening, MISS HELYETT

125 People! Grand Chorus and Orchestra! Grand Ballet at every performance! Prices: $1, $2, $2.50, $3

Columbia Theatre

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS

An Extraordinary Event! Commencing Monday Mar. 8
Matinee Saturday Only

MR. JOSEPH HAWORTH

Supported by MISS MARGARET CRAVEN and a Powerful Company, in a Great Double Bill!

Victor Hugo's Master-piece "RUY BLAS!"

Preceded by Augustus Thomas' Beautiful Dramatic Sketch, A Man of the World
Magnificent New Costumes and Stage Effects!
March 15th, Cissy Fitzgerald

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, March 8

The Flying Jordan Vaudevilles, headed by the Great Flying Jordans. Marlo & Marlo, Horizontal Bar Performers. Virginia Aragon, High Wire Artiste. John Burke & Grace Forest, Comedians. The Oliphans, Three-headed Nondescript. Grand Opera Stars in the Sextette from "Lucia." Continued success of Waterbury Bros. and Tenny, Barney Fagan and Henrietta Byron, Dudley Prescott, the Human Brass Band, the Finneys
Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

The Gilbert & Sullivan Season
Last Nights of THE MIKADO

Next week, their most popular satire

H. M. S. PINAFORE

Great cast, new ship scene, new specialties

Next Week, The Merry Wives of Windsor!

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : : MANAGERS

Last performances to-night and to-morrow, matinee and evening, of Charles Klein's Brilliant Comedy, "BY PROXY!"

Monday, March 8th, the Greatest Play of the Century

JIM THE PENMAN

By Sir Charles L. Young, Baronet
Presented for the first time at Popular Prices!
An unrivaled cast: George Osbourne, Hugo Toland and the entire Alcazar Company
The play produced under the direction of Mr. George Osbourne

15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991

GOLDEN GATE HALL

Next Tuesday Evening, March 9th, at 8:15

MLLE. TREBELLI'S

Farewell Song Recital

Assisted by Misses Jean and Florence Hush (Violin and Piano), Miss Van der Naillen, G. Sauvlet, A. Rodeman, J., Mazzion

The Prima Donna will sing Bizet's Chanson Arabe, "Lo! Hear the Gentle Lark," with Flute Obligato, Arioso by Delibes, Laughing Song, etc.

Seats now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.: $1 and 50c.

RACING

Late Events at Ingleside—The Two-Year-Old Colt Race.

After a week of the most lovely weather imaginable the new month opened with a return of the wet and dreary days that deprive race-going of nearly all pleasure, interfere with training operations, reduce the strength of fields and upset all estimates of form.

With few exceptions the racing at Ingleside since last writing has brought out nothing but horses of moderate or inferior class.

Confirming her victory on December 8 last over Preston at six furlongs, Mr. W. O'B. Macdonough's handsome mare Imp. Santa Bella (St. Serf-Imp. Maiden Belle) easily vanquished Mr. Dunnes' useful gelding at the same distance again. On their first encounter there was practically nothing between them at the finish with the mare giving Preston one pound, while on this latest occasion, was in receipt of 8 pounds and passed the winning post two lengths to spare. The time of the two races was 1:15¼ and 1:15½ respectively, with track conditions about the same and W. Martin up on the gelding in both races. Preston has been a consistent performer and we may therefore conclude that we have been shown the mare's form to an ounce. She will shortly be turned out of training and bred to Imp. Ormonde this season.

We know already the result of crossing the Galopin blood with that which flows in Ormonde's veins, as witness Orme and the recent Rancho del Paso purchase Imp. Order (Sire of Ornament), and it will hardly be surprising if Santa Bella should produce for Mr. Macdonough something that will win renown for California in years to come. Her lineage, her individuality, and in some measure her performances, make this young mare a worthy mate for the premier of the stud at Menlo Park.

Last Saturday race-goers were given a treat, though the contests were in more than one instance shorn of their full interest by indifferent starts, horses with undoubted chances being left at the post.

The Schreiber stakes for two-year-old colts and geldings, four furlongs, brought out a field of eight out of 63 original entries, and was landed in fairly good style by Mr. Naglee Burke's Estro (Flambeau-Sallie G.) Time, 50¼. The little chestnut was hardly expected to beat The Cheat (Imp. Deceiver-Katie J.) who had previously earned two brackets and one second in three essays, although the former had run well a week previously across the bay. His success was in no small measure due to Tod Sloan's riding. The Cheat was second. The Burns & Waterhouse stable pulled out a nice-looking, well-grown colt named Thorpe (Morello-Deception), who was reported to be able to go one better than their smart filly Napamat, but he was sore in front and incapable of making a show. E. J. Baldwin's Emperor of Norfolk colt Rey el Santo, an unmistakable chip of the old block in appearance, was much admired in the paddock, but didn't get off with the rest and remained out of the race. The Imp. Duncombe colt Al Koran again flashed his speed just before reaching the stretch, but has not at present the strength to lay down to real work in a fast gallop. The Brutus colt, Irritator, scored a somewhat lucky win last Tuesday, and on the following day Niton (imp. Islington-Aunt Jane) demonstrated his ability to gallop by winning handily enough in a field of eight. He is a wiry, clever-looking colt, and this being the first season his sire's get are old enough to race, he has lost no time in earning credit for the family. So far this season the honors of the two-year-old racing are with the lilies.

The most attractive event of Saturday was last on the card, and, though for a purse of $400 only, afforded sport of a high class. The field consisted of Magnet, Libertine, 107 pounds each; Buckwa and David, 104 pounds each; distance, six furlongs. Tod Sloan adopted his favorite tactics and got Buckwa to the front immediately the barrier rose, the rest of the horses, Magnet, Libertine and David, following on in the order named, with from one to two lengths between each until the stretch was reached, when Magnet got on even terms with Purser's big gelding. The pair tramped it out in true race-horse fashion to the finish, Slaughter handling the chestnut with quiet firmness at the critical moment, and bringing him home cleverly by a head. Sloan on the other hand passed the judges' stand with his whip in the air, and once more proved that even a crack jockey cannot win when he is not on the best horse. Some eight lengths in the rear David and Libertine were understudying the leaders while striving to leave each other last at the wire, the former saving his bacon by a head at the finish. The performance of the latter proved clearly enough if that be necessary that stud work and racing as alternate diversions are not conducive to the display of the best galloping form, while it is equally certain that a horse, when in training, cannot do justice to himself at the stud. In the paddock the four competitors had sized up well, David being the plain one of the party. Magnet looked big and full of muscle, if anything a little too sleek, although it is no uncommon thing for horses of high class to perform at moderate distances really well if not quite their best, when seeming to the eye a bit above themselves. Buckwa appeared as hard as nails, and big withal, so that, with the prestige of his two-fold defeat of the good Mount McGregor in January last, when he was receiving 5 pounds from the latter, his party were not without reason for the confidence they displayed before the fall of the flag. Libertine looked as handsome as paint, but hardly as if he were in trim for a bustling race, while David, who invariably contrives to earn a dividend of some sort for his owner when he sports silk, seemed as fit as need be, minus the bloom of perfect condition. The race was run in the fast time of 1:13½.

BENEDICT.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" give relief in all Bronchial Affections. A simple and safe remedy. Avoid imitations.

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

ART IN ADVERTISING

A view of the exhibition of drawings in the studio of Wilder & Co., 20 Geary street

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Polished Hardwood Floors

$1.50 per Square Yard

Fine Work—First-class References

INLAID FLOOR CO.

602 Market St., Crocker Building

Telephone Main 5598

Hotel Mateo and Cottages

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A charming resort, both winter and summer. A pleasant forty-minutes' ride by rail from San Francisco, with frequent train-service.

Delightful surroundings and comparative freedom from fog, together with all essentials to the comfort and pleasure of the guests, combine to recommend Hotel Mateo to those who appreciate such advantages.

Illustrated descriptive souvenir sent upon application. F. A. SHEPARD, Manager.

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from Feb. 22 to March 6, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar. Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

Moet & Chandon White Seal Stakes Monday, Feb. 22d
The Schreiber Stakes Saturday, Feb. 27th
The Crocker Stakes Saturday, March 6th

A. B. SPRECKELS, President.
W. S. LEAKE, Secretary.

Fine Furs and Sealskin Garments

To order. Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast. All work guaranteed first-class

AD KOCOUR, Fashionable Furrier

5½ Kearny Street

Upstairs opposite Chronicle. Formerly cutter with Revillion Freres, Paris, London, New York

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

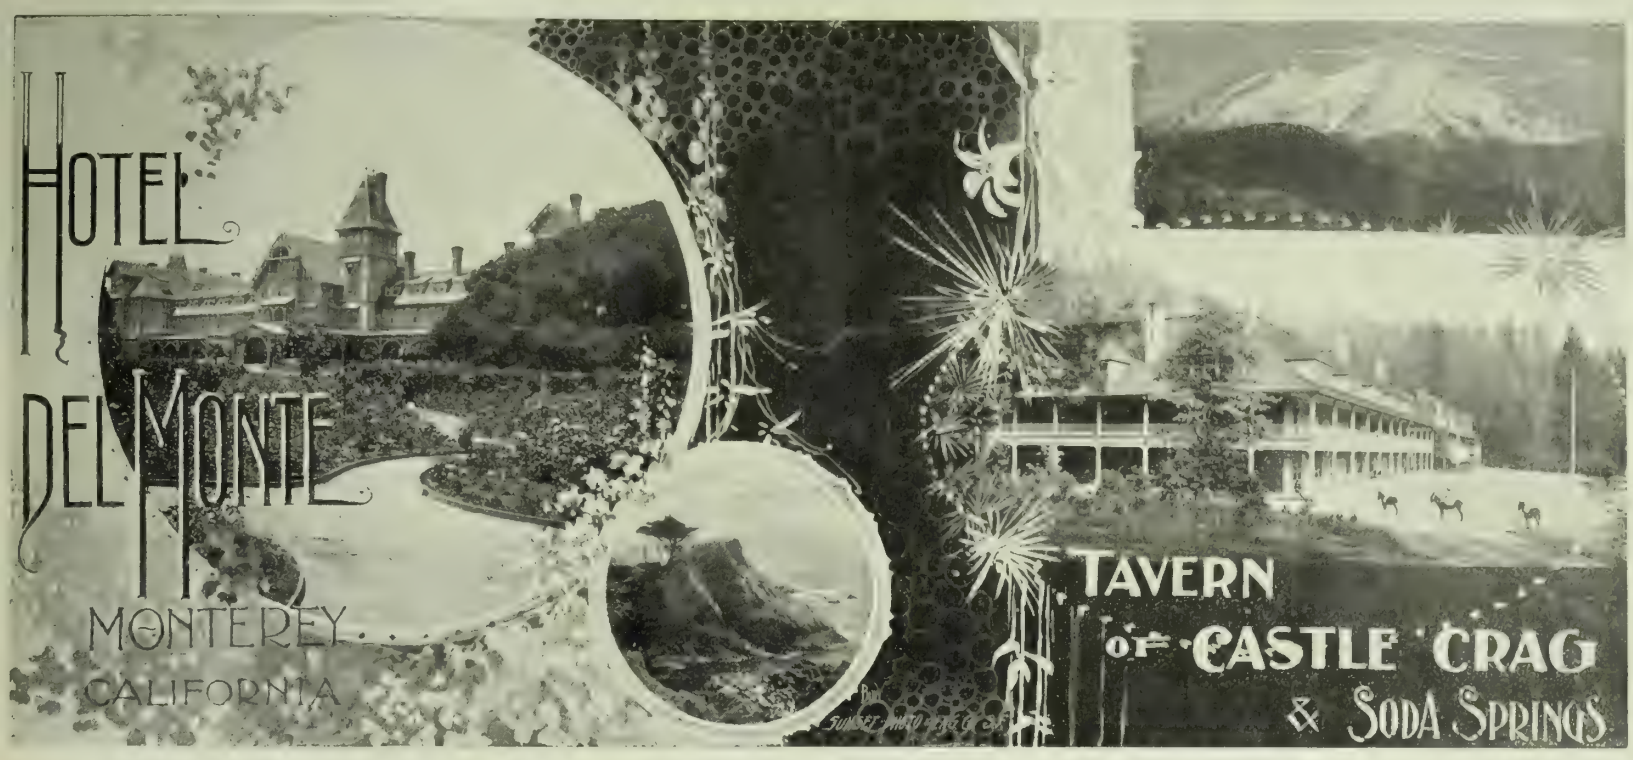
Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

BELCHER SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Gold Hill, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 2d day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 54) of twenty-five cents (25c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, San Francisco, Cal. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the 27th day of April, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. C. L. PERKINS, Secretary.

Office, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, northeast corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF JOHN PHELAN, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOHN PHELAN,
Adm. of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, February 7, 1897.
J. D. SULLIVAN,
Attorney for Administrator.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 18191—Dept. 9.—In the matter of the Estate of SARAH SMITH, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased, with the will annexed, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator, at the office of Frank P. Kelly, 101 Sansome street, rooms 21 and 22, San Francisco, California, the same being the place for the transaction of the business of said estate, in the City and County of San Francisco.

W. R. FELTER,
Adm. of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, February 25, 1897.
FRANK P. KELLY,
Attorney for Administrator.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 26
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied February 10, 1897
Delinquent in office, March 16, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 6, 1897
A. K. DURBROW, Secretary,
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,
Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971. S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

Sent Free!
To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address
THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

REMOVAL
Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .
W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at 128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON
Johnson & Company
MERCHANT TAILORS
No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.
Dealers in PAPER
Fine Coated Papers a Specialty
401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

ELECTRIC
Supplies
Construction
Repairs
CALIFORNIA
ELECTRICAL WORKS
409 MARKET STREET

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
. . ALSO . .
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company . . Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

GRAY HAIR RESTORED
to its natural color by LEE'S HAIR MEDICANT, no dye harmless, pleasant odor. $1.00 a bottle
LEE'S HAIR TONIC removes dandruff, stops hair from falling out and promotes growth $1.00 a bottle
LEE MEDICANT CO 108 Fulton st. N.Y.
Illustrated Treatise on Hair on application FREE

An Advantageous Offer!
Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan
Ladies' Home Journal
McClure's Magazine
Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

Wealth

Of vitality and energy, a good appetite and perfect health are obtained and endured by taking

Peruvian Bitters

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $24,885,277
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER — ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE — GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY — DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER — GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. TOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES.; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES.; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to [illegible]

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1720

Capital Paid Up, $3,415,100 — Assets, $[illegible]
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

An eminent painter is noted for his economical and sententious habits. One of his pupils broke a pane of glass in his studio window and replaced it temporarily by pasting a sheet of paper over the aperture. When the painter next entered the room, he thrust his stick through the makeshift, with the remark, "He that breaks pays." None of the class, however, took the hint, and the next morning another sheet of paper was pasted across the window. It met with the same fate; and so on the next day, and so on the fourth. On the fifth day, when the artist came down, there was the paper as before. Fire flashed from his eyes, and, roaring "He that breaks pays!" he drove his cane through the paper — and through the pane of glass behind it that had been put in by the students and then pasted over with paper.

John Ruskin was one day taking a walk in a lonely country lane near his home, when he espied a smart-looking man coming quickly towards him. The stranger looked every inch a journalist, and, firmly convinced that he was about to be interviewed, Ruskin dodged aside down a convenient bridle-path. But the stranger wouldn't be shaken off, and doggedly followed his quarry down the path, through a broken hedge, and across a meadow, at last running him to earth behind a haystack. Resigning himself to his fate, Ruskin turned and faced his tormentor. "Glad you've come to anchor at last, old man," said the latter, cheerfully. "Please tell me where I shall find a public house. I'm just about dying for a glass of beer."

A good yarn is to hand from the wilds of Australia. Two impecunious Scotsmen, traveling North in search of gold, came upon a saloon. They only had "saxpence" between them, so they ordered one "nip o' whuskey." They were hesitating who should have the first drink, when an "auld" acquaintance joined them. Pretending they had just drunk, one of them handed the newcomer the whiskey, requesting him to join them in a drink. He drank, and, after a few minutes' of painful and silent suspense, said, "Now, boys, you'll have one with me?" "Wasna that weel managed, mon?" said Number One to his pal afterwards. "Ay, it was," replied Number Two, solemnly: "but it was a dreadfu' risk!"

"Did you actually see the shot fired?" asked the judge. "No, sorr, I only heard it," was the evasive reply. "That evidence is not satisfactory," replied the judge, sternly; "stand down!" The witness proceeded to leave the box, and, directly his back was turned to the judge, he laughed derisively. The judge, indignant at this contempt of court, called him back and asked him how he dared to laugh in court. "Did ye see me laugh, your honor?" queried the offender. "No, sir; but I heard you!" was the irate reply. "That evidence is not satisfactory," said Pat quietly, but with a merry twinkle in his eyes. And this time everybody in court laughed heartily except the judge.

A countryman was being shown the whispering gallery and the stone which deadens all sound at the Capitol in Washington. After the usual experiments were completed, he astonished the guide by saying: "Mister, kin a body get a stone like that thar hyar in Washington? Yo' see, my wife gits cantankerous at times, an' she kin talk pow'ful hard when she gits started. If I could git one o' them things ter stan' on out in our kitchen, I'd be willin' ter pay well fer it."

When the Duke of Abercorn visited President Kruger of the Transvaal, he was introduced as an ex-Viceroy of Ireland. The homely President replied, "A Viceroy! A Viceroy! That is a very great personage, and I have never had the opportunity of seeing one before for, you know, I am only a peasant—the son of a shepherd." To which the Duke of Abercorn answered. "But, your honor, David was also the son of a shepherd, and nevertheless became a great king."

Ambassador Bayard was once the guest of some friends in Cambridge, and in the household of his host was a little boy of about six, who asked his father just before a function that was to be given, who was coming to the entertainment. The youngster was told that, among others, there would be the American Ambassador, upon which he naively remarked: "Papa, is he black?" "No, my son," the parent replied; "not even as black as he is painted."

The new Primate, Dr. Temple, once entered an East-end church while a mission-service was being held, and, standing in a back pew, joined in the singing of a Moody and Sankey hymn. Next to him stood a workingman, who was singing lustily in tune. The workingman stood the dissonance as long as he could, and then, nudging the bishop, said, in a whisper, "Here, dry up, mister; you're spoiling the show!"

A certain regiment had a very small band; but the commanding officer's feet were very large. One day the regiment was to march out, but the music was not forthcoming. "Where the deuce is the band?" queried the adjutant. For some time there was no reply, but when the question was repeated, a gruff voice was heard from the rear rank, "I believe, sor, the colonel trod on it be accident."

It was at the Alcazar Theatre. "Mr. Henry," said the stage manager, "You will take the part of Alonzo." "But I have never seen the play, sir," replied Mr. Henry. "Do you think I can please the audience in that part?" "Immensely. You die in the first act."

The late S. Teackle Wallis of Baltimore was asked by a friend if a certain rich lawyer had made his money by his practice. "Oh, no," replied Mr. Wallis, "not by his practice, but by his practices."

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

..OF..

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Rafael

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

The Society Resort Winter and Summer of the Pacific Coast.

FIFTY MINUTES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Average winter temperature 64 degrees. The State statistics prove the climate to be the healthiest on the Pacific Coast.

IT WILL GIVE IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO THE WORST CASE OF ASTHMA.

The management is personally supervised by General Warfield, of the California Hotel, San Francisco.

R. H. WARFIELD & CO.
Proprietors.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS——
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME
CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

HIRSCH & KAISER

Successors to HIRSCH, KAHN & CO.

Opticians

Will remove March 1st to

NO. 7 KEARNY STREET

Opposite the Chronicle Building

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

HENRY ST. GOAR — EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign 403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SUNSET LIMITED

The Famous Palatial Flyer

BETWEEN

San Francisco and New Orleans

SEMI-WEEKLY

EASTBOUND

| | |
|---|---|
| Lv. San Francisco | 10.00 P.M. Tues. and Sat. |
| Lv. Los Angeles | 3.00 P.M. Wed. and Sun. |
| Ar. El Paso | 4.40 P.M. Thurs. and Mon. |
| Ar. New Orleans | 6.55 A.M. Sat. and Wed. |

WESTBOUND

| | |
|---|---|
| Lv. New Orleans | 10.00 A.M. Mon. and Thurs. |
| Lv. El Paso | 8.05 P.M. Tues. and Fri. |
| Ar. Los Angeles | 7.45 P.M. Wed. and Sat. |
| Ar. San Francisco | 12.45 P.M. Thurs. and Sun. |

Agreeable connections in New Orleans with through limited trains for Eastern cities.

To St. Louis in 24 hours; Chicago, 27 hours; Cincinnati, 24 hours; Atlanta, 15 hours; Washington, 34 hours; Philadelphia, 38 hours; New York, 40 hours; Boston, 50 hours.

Delightfully equable climate en route; train service unapproachably superb throughout; quick time; no additional cost.

TAKE SUNSET LIMITED

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. March 12, 17, 22 and 27.

For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, Mar. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. Mar. 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. Mar. 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. March 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.

For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.

The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing

Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Mar. 23, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.

S. S. "Alameda," for Australia, Thursday, March 4, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.

TEL. 5610 — 609 SACRAMENTO ST

BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

The Hearst Country-Seat  Scenery Along the Proposed Boulevard

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

VOL XVI. No. 11  SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 13, 1897  PRICE 10 CTS.

HER LAST GROOMING

Giving the finishing touches to United States Gunboat No. 16, to be launched on the 17th of this month

THE WAVE

Is published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 13, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2–3 |
| Views Along the Line of the Proposed Boulevard | 4 |
| A Citizen-Queen | 4 |
| Stevenson's Tomb | 5 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 5 |
| The City's Pleasure-Drive | 6 |
| An Ideal Summer Home | 7 |
| Hacienda del Poso de Verona | 8–9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres | 11 |
| "Quo Vadis": a Review | 12 |
| Personalities of the Wives of the Cabinet Ministers | 13 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 17 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

THE MORAL OF THAT TWENTY-THOUSAND DOLLAR FEE.

Now is the season for great rejoicing and much thanksgiving among the taxpayers, for the State Senate has decided to pay W. W. Foote and R. Y. Hayne twenty thousand dollars for being the people's "friends" and legal "counsellors" in that most stupid and uncalled for litigation known as the Railway Commissioners' case. Of course, the State Senate was not unanimous upon this point, and many honest men declined to discover just why these gentlemen were entitled to so much money. One Senator, arguing in favor of the appropriation, as though seeking to defend these gentlemen for having lost the case, stated "that every lawyer in the State knew the result of that litigation would be abortive, but he thought, nevertheless, that counsel should be paid." When asked if he believed it to be right to pay two men twenty thousand dollars of the State's money for what every lawyer in the State knew in advance would be abortive, he replied that he did, and forthwith gave proof of his willingness so to do by voting in favor of taking twenty thousand dollars out of the State treasury for the use and benefit of these distinguished anti-railroad attorneys.

This whole proceeding is a farce, if it is not something worse than that. It is downright wastefulness of money, arising out of deliberate wantonness. There never existed for a moment in the minds of well informed attorneys any question as to the power of the Board of Railway Commissioners. All the agitation, all the shrieking and howling mock-virtuous protests that went up from the "Examiner" and its followers advocating these reductions were insincere, knavish and made in bad faith. But they were successful in arousing public sentiment and in dragooning the two Democratic members of the Commission to do an illegal thing that was fruitful of litigation and deserved defeat, and now the taxpayer is paying the piper twenty thousand dollars for the dance.

Just now the same sinister and insincere forces are at work in the Board of Supervisors, urging them to a course of action with respect to gas and water rates that if followed must inevitably result in plunging the city into an equally expensive and useless piece of litigation. No doubt when that time comes, Mr. Foote, who has been the "Examiner's" favorite attorney, will come to the front as an anti-corporation man who is an expert in trying "abortive" cases. No doubt another appropriation of ten or twenty thousand dollars will be forthcoming to pay for his experimenting in the "abortive" litigation that will certainly follow.

While the Railroad Commissioners were discussing the threatened reduction "The Wave" pointed out to the Board the limit placed by law upon its powers. Had our advice been then followed, the legal experts upon "abortive" litigation would not be so rich to-day, but the State would be infinitely better off. We have indicated to the Supervisors the scope of their power in respect to gas and water rates. The law is plain, irrevocable and explicit. The experience of the State is still fresh in memory, and the influences that are urging that Board to desperate, illegal and ill-considered action have been so thoroughly discredited by the courts that it seems impossible that honest, thinking men can now be led astray by such cajollery or threats. Out of this very expensive agitation and experiment, the "Examiner" has secured some advertising, no doubt, and possibly some subscribers, but we object to the State paying the advertising bills of that journal.

THE NEW SUPERINTENDENT OF MINT.

The selection of our Congressional delegation of Mr. Frank A. Leach, of the Oakland "Enquirer," for the superintendency of the Mint, is a something that is worthy of comment and of recognition. It is neither because Mr. Leach is a journalist, nor because he has ability, nor because his appointment will serve to liquidate the political debt owing to him from his party that we applaud it, though all of these things might be urged in his behalf. We regard his selection as a tribute to honest, clean and reputable journalism, of which the "Enquirer" stands typical, and we cannot but believe that this selection is a recognition of this fact, as well as of the immense service he has been to his party. The influence of money has never within our knowledge dictated, colored or modified the editorial views and expressions of his paper. Personal gain has been to him a thing without influence to guide his journalistic policy. Uniformly and unalterably he has stood for the right as he saw it, and maintained his post to the end in the face of threats and dangers. If the course of his journal has ever erred, then his judgment has been at fault, not his heart. Those whom he opposed, if they but speak the truth, must admit that his convictions were against them, not his selfish interests. If he took up the cudgel and in behalf of the public belabored individuals or great corporate interests, those whom that course happened to oppose might rest assured he was not bidding for a subsidy, and that neither money nor threats could induce him to withhold from advocating what he considered just and for the public welfare. He has steadily adhered to the right as he saw it, has avoided sensationalism and all the ruder things that go to mar modern journalism. If this course has resulted in the upbuilding of a prosperous and profitable journal, no one will regret it, and, if, in personal recognition of the man who stands at its head, his party has determined to reward him with an office that was unsought and unasked, it should be a matter for congratulation among honest men and with the press throughout the State. We congratulate the gentleman and the members of Congress who stand responsible for his choice.

THE CORONER'S USURPATION OF POWER.

The right of the Coroner to enter the rooms and rifle the trunks and packages of strangers who have died suddenly at our public hotels ought to be more clearly defined. The claim that he is entitled to take charge of the effects and valuables of the deceased in such cases is absurd and without warrant. That the management of the Palace Hotel stood between the deputy coroners and the property and jewelry of Mr. Oakley of Pittsburg, who died recently at that hotel, is commendable. The Coroner has no more right to the custody of this property than has any other public officer. If there is any suspicion of crime attaching to a death, he has, or should have, a clear right to make a thorough investigation as to the condition of the room and be entitled as well to the possession of anything therein that might lend assistance in ascertaining the true cause of death, or fixing the crime if there be crime. But the powers claimed by this functionary are not limited to any such narrow or restricted scope. He claims the custody and possession of all the property of the deceased as a matter of right, practically usurping the powers of the Public Administrator, who has been armed with letters of administration and an order from the court.

A few weeks ago a laborer named Braun fell from the roof of the new depot building, in process of construction at the foot of Market street, and was killed. In this case there was no room for any suspicion that Braun had met his death through foul play. It was purely accidental. Notwithstanding this fact, our inquisitive and superserviceable Coroner hunted through the directory and located a man of the same initials named Brown, whom the fat-witted officer decided must be the deceased. He forthwith sent two brawny deputies to the rooms of the supposed Braun. These cheerful morgue attaches informed the ignorant landlady of the gentleman's death, and were admitted to his room, where they proceeded to rifle Brown's trunks and break open his table drawers, and gathering the effects together they removed all his possessions to the Coroner's office. It developed that the Brown whose rooms were rifled was not the Braun who was killed.

A hotel, under our laws, is responsible for the safekeeping of the property of its guests. Death does not terminate this responsibility; indeed, in the nature of things, it should increase it. If the hotel is responsible while the owner is alive and able to contribute to the care and safety of his belongings, certainly the duty rests more heavily upon the management to care for the property of the deceased who cannot contribute to its protection. The management of the Palace Hotel showed wisdom and shrewdness in refusing to permit the Coroner's deputies to handle the property found in the room of the unfortunate Mr. Oakley. The ordinary Coroner's deputy is not a man of strict probity, and would be entirely irresponsible in case anything of value was missing. Doubtless our Coroner will go on with this outrageous practice, and those who are less brave or less informed as to their rights will be imposed upon by him.

THAT ELECTION IN OAKLAND.

The freakish tendency of the Oakland voter was developed to a remarkable extent in the recent municipal election across the bay. A few years ago Mr. John L. Davie stood for all that was antagonistic to property and inimical to political decency. He was the shrieking, agitating, howling man of Oakland politics; he was the man of mobs and mass-meetings, the man of strife and unreason. When Mr. Debs visited California, Mr. Davie very naturally honored that national-lawbreaker by presiding over the Debs meetings in Oakland and introducing him to the people; but at the late election, in which Mr. Davie was a candidate for Mayor, we are told that bankers and men of large property interest came to his support in opposition to Captain W. R. Thomas, the Republican nominee, whose whole life's course has been one consistent with decency, and with the law, and with order. Mr. Davie, although disowned by his local party, is a Populist at heart and in principle, and yet the moneyed and property interests, who, during the late campaign, were quaking in fear lest the same principles that are advocated by Mr. Davie would succeed in national politics, are reputed to have encouraged and aided toward his success in the late election.

"Municipal government is business, not politics." To this declaration "The Wave" adheres, and we have from time to time preached this very doctrine. But it is neither business nor common sense to build up a man of the character of Davie politically, particularly when he threatens to ride upon that popularity into the halls of Congress, and there join votes with his Populistic colleagues from other States. The Oakland banker or man of property who confesses to have supported Mr. Davie should hide his head in shame. We have just passed through a national crisis that should have taught him to avoid Davies and the like of him, even if they were candidates for the ignoble office of assistant deputy poundmaster. While the men of money were whining and howling during the late campaign, expressing fear and trepidation over the result and prognosticating all sorts of calamities and evils to follow the victory of Populism in national politics, it is safe to say that Mr. Davie was a man of Bryan and that Captain Thomas was a man of McKinley. We have no patience with the ingratitude and small selfishness that cropped out in the late Oakland election.

THE DONAHUE FOUNTAIN.

Now that a decision has been reached in the settlement of the estate of Mervyn Donahue and his bequest of $25,000 for the erection of a drinking fountain at the intersection of Bush, Battery and Market streets is available, it is to be hoped that the very best results in the way of artistic design and execution will be the outcome.

The memorial to the late Richard M. Hunt, the architect, which is to be erected in the Fifth avenue wall of Central Park, New York, will cost but a similar sum. Mr. Daniel C. French's model was the one accepted, and it is expected that the memorial will be in place by next November. In form it is to be a circular seat, backed by a colonnade, the cornice of which is supported by four columns and by two pilasters. Figures of Art and Architecture stand against the pilasters, while in a niche under the frontal of the colonnade is the bust of Mr. Hunt, heroic size. This shows how much can be done with $25,000.

It is now more than seven months since Judge Angelotti rendered his decision in regard to the distribution of the Donahue estate. Yet after all this time the executors have but barely finished carrying out the decree of distribution. The other legacies have been paid; all matters in connection with the estate, which has been in litigation ever since the filing of the will in 1890, have been settled; and now the sum of $25,000 remains in the hands of the executors, J. F. Burgin and Peter J. McGlynn, to be expended in the erection of the fountain.

It is devoutly to be desired that these gentlemen will make no mistakes in the expenditure of this money, which has practically been given to them in trust for the benefit of the citizens of San Francisco. The triangle on which the fountain is to be placed is one of the most prominent sites in the city, having a frontage of 114 feet on Market street by 91 on Bush by 43 on Battery.

Now as to the proper method of procedure to be followed that we may obtain a suitable and artistic design. Plans should be solicited from several of our best local architects, who would work in conjunction with the sculptor to accomplish the most pleasing results possible. There are any number of American sculptors of world-wide repute, whose work has been hitherto unknown in this city, but who could and should now be called upon to compete. For instance, Daniel C. French, sculptor of the Hunt memorial already mentioned. Frederick Macmonnies, whose fountain at the Columbian Exposition has been talked about the world around, and Augustus St. Gaudens, known principally through his graceful figure of Diana in gold on the tower of Madison Square Gardens. Karl Biher is still another His work at the Chicago Fair in the decoration of the great Manufactures Building has made him famous, in America at least. This is leaving out of consideration Mr. Douglas Tilden, who, with Willis Polk, has the execution of the Native Sons' monument for James D. Phelan. The executors of the Donahue will could make no better selection, among the artists of the old world, than one of these fine American sculptors. The lot upon which the fountain is to stand is worthy of a masterpiece; and from the description of the memorial designed by Daniel French we have a right to expect that $25,000, if carefully expended, will give us a beautiful and substantial work of art, as well as a drinking fountain that will be of great service to the public in so prominent a location on the main thoroughfare of our city.

Governor Budd is again offered an opportunity to popularize his administration in the way of appointments. Two vacancies in the Board of Harbor Commissioners are soon to be filled, and to the selection of the gentlemen for these places he should give most careful consideration. Some of the appointments made by Governor Budd so far during his administration have not only been extremely popular, but equally wise. Labor Commissioner Fitzgerald has made an industrious public officer, and has invested his office with an importance never before equaled. Mr. E. E. Leake is another appointee of Governor Budd, who has proved himself to be entirely capable. He will bring to the credit of this administration the solution of the river dredging problem, which ought to earn the gratitude of thousands of farmers whose lands are threatened with annual overflow. It will increase the value of the taxable property of the State, and remove obstructions and barriers from our river commerce. The recent appointment of A. S. Cooper to the position of State Mineralogist lends weight to the belief that the new Harbor Commissioners to be selected by the Governor will be men of sterling ability and distinct probity, holding a high place in the public mind. The post of Harbor Commissioner is an important one. Like that of Labor Commissioner, it has seldom fallen into the hands of men who considered the trust reposed in them as being of greater consequence than their salary. No doubt, friends of the Governor will urge upon him the appointment of men about town, "good fellows," who are both lacking in ability and in force, and no doubt, too, such men may bring to their assistance friends who are anxious to see them placed in office; but, after all, the duty rests with the Governor to select men of high ability, the mere mention of whose names will bring approbation from our commercial and mercantile world.

It is a wonder that some of our enterprising dailies have not before this published a list of our nabobs and nabobesses whose marriages would be invalid had the law recently passed concerning remarriages after divorce been in force heretofore. There are a great many men and women in this city who have married within a few months, sometimes within a few days, after they had procured divorces from their former partners. But this has now been stopped. A bill has been signed by the Governor which makes a marriage contracted within a year after a divorce invalid, and from this time forward the grass-widow and the grass-widower must perforce remain such for at least a year. The purpose of this law is not to embarrass the divorcee, but to maintain the status of the parties for the year during which an appeal is allowed to the defeated party. As the law has been, a man might be divorced to-day and his wife be remarried to-morrow. The divorced husband would then have the right of appeal within a year, and if successful in his appeal he would be entitled to the wifely affections of a woman who was another man's spouse.

THE ANTAGONISTIC SOUTH

The Los Angeles "Times" shall not beguile us into a controversy over the resources of Southern California. We have no quarrel with its orchards or its soil or its resources. We have no quarrel with its progress or its prosperity; we have no fault to find with the great majority of its people. The discussion raised by "The Wave" was not as to whether the south was a better or more prosperous or more healthful locality than the north. Our animadversions upon our neighbors have not been prompted by any desire to steal their thunder, or to lure or entice from their sunland the Eastern tourist brought there by their liberal advertising. The grannies of newspaperdom published north of Tehachapi, who have affected to see a danger in the discussion of this subject, represent nothing but themselves. What concerns us and what we complain of is the manifest spirit of antagonism toward the north which lives in the south. It is a spirit of lying and misrepresentation that abideth down there that raise our ire, and we may go to the pains very shortly of proving to the "Times" that the spirit of which we complain is not confined to a few hackmen and real estate agents.

Since this discussion arose we have received a number of communications, some of which we have published, concerning the south, and we direct the attention of our lively southern contemporary to the fact that these letters all emanate from residents of Los Angeles, not from jealous or envious citizens living north of Tehachapi. In politics, the public officers that have been forced upon the State by the South were feeble and incompetent men. Los Angeles has something more than its quota of unscrupulous men. The glittering opportunities afforded by a land boom and the presence of gullible tourists has attracted to her the American nomad, the fellow with the thrifty, hungry, eager, furtive eye, the snapper-up of unconsidered trifles, the man whose domicile is his hat, whose home is nowhere, and whose past is a blank. It has attracted to that community a class of men who follow the opportunities to make quick money without regard to the means by which it is made, and if the questionable opportunities disappear, or appear in a stronger manner in some other community, these confidence operators would quickly steal away as softly as they came, only to begin their operations among a new people. There are plenty of such cattle in the south, but the great objection we find to their presence is that they infest politics, and succeed in fastening themselves or their accomplices in public places to the detriment of the State and the public service.

One letter, which we have received from a lawyer who has been a long resident of the south, speaks in a complaining voice of the invalid attorneys who have taken up their lodgment in our sunland for the benefit of their health. The writer tells us that these men, upon whom wasting disease has made sad inroads, though often possessed of a small competency, bid against the older practitioner at prices that would cause an attorney's clerk to blush for shame should he accept the same amount for lesser services. He complains that this practice has led to the establishing of law offices in boarding houses and hotels, and that it tends to destroy the business of men long residents of this section of the State. The "Times" impudently asks our correspondent, Mr. Morton, and others who think as he does, why, if Southern California is so altogether objectionable to them, they do not return from whence they came. Perhaps they were the first comers. The letter published in last week's "Wave" came from a gentleman whose name is well known throughout the length and breadth of this State, and whose residence in Los Angeles has extended over a period of years that dates from the domination of the Spaniard there. These things are local in their nature, and we have no quarrel with them. That they do exist and that they are objections cannot concern us of the north. We refuse to stand sponsor for the issues raised by our correspondent; indeed, there does not seem to be any necessity that we should. Mr. Morton, who was our first contributor from the south, seems perfectly able to take care of himself. He has sent us a communication which he addressed to the "Times," and which that journal refused to publish. It appears in another column and is well worth reading.

Some one has said that to obtain a public office in the south one needs but have a copious expectoration and evidence of a strong desire to return to the East, and then to prevent the escape of another citizen, the people come together and nominate the threatening deserter for office.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Editor of "The Wave": The Los Angeles "Times" to-day published an editorial called "North and South," also an article entitled "An Angry Wave." Both articles refer to a letter of mine under date of February 8th, which you published. I enclose a copy of my reply to the "Times" article of to-day. If any further proof were needed of the truth of what I said in my letter of February 8th, and of what you say in your issue of February 20th, the article in the "Times" of to-day would be sufficient. I also give a copy of an article which appeared in the Los Angeles "Capital" of February 20th. The "Capital" is supposed to represent the very best Los Angeles people. The article speaks for itself. Yours very truly,

C. P. MORTON.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 26, 1897.

Editor Los Angeles "Times," Los Angeles, Cal.: In your issue of to-day you publish an editorial entitled "North and South," also an article entitled "An Angry Wave." In the editorial you intimate that my head is full of cussedness, discontent and jealousy, all because of a certain statement of mine to the San Francisco "Wave," under date of February 8th, which that paper published. You also say that I am either an ignoramus or a willful prevaricator, on account of certain other statements I made in the letter referred to.

I am not cussed, discontented or jealous. If any of these qualities appear in the letter they are the reflection of the characteristics of the people to whom I have talked, and when I want information I go to reputable residents, common, sensible merchants, lawyers, brokers, bankers, clerks, laboringmen and ranchmen, who will and do tell the truth. I do not go to people who have axes to grind, or to boom newspapers, or to those who shift their sails to suit any breeze, political or otherwise, as does the "Times," and who are constant to nothing except a conceited belief in their own importance and infallibility, nor to papers who would not hesitate to blackmail and misrepresent anything or anybody in order to serve their own purposes. Nor am I an ignoramus, nor do I make false statements, as to my assertions that the people south of Tehachapi distort and misrepresent what is north of them. Read the article in the "Capital" of February 20th, published on first page, in which occurs the following sentence referring to the proposed plan that San Francisco men have to establish in Los Angeles a bureau for giving out information in regard to the central and northern part of the State:

"They even talk of establishing a bureau here to be headquarters for those able Jaw-smiths, who will be employed to talk visitors into the delusion that there is any attraction for them north of the Tehachapi."

Let those who have seen the glorious beauties of the Yosemite, or of Kings River Canyon, who have admired San Francisco, with its beautiful location (I have never had the advantage of foreign travel, but those who have been around the world tell me there is no city so charmingly placed between the Bay and Ocean, with a healthful and invigorating climate, that Constantinople is the only city that approaches it, and that place, though celebrated for the beauty of its view, does not equal it), who have passed many a pleasant day at Monterey, who have looked up at magnificent Mt. Shasta—let them say with me whether there is anything attractive north of Tehachapi. The truth is that the best part of the State, all things considered, lies north of that range. The rest of the article is even more slanderous and untruthful. One would imagine that San Francisco was inhabited by people unfit to associate with, and the article referred to is but one of many similar and that constantly appear.

I am not an Eastern "tenderfoot," who can't make a living without working. I work as do others, but I am not wholly dependent on my efforts in Southern California, for which I am very thankful. I notice many, however, who are so dependent, who are in a sorry plight. Your scornful reference to tenderfeet does not jibe very well with the fact that the "tenderfeet" have made your country what it is, and with the other fact that you constantly flood the East with tons of printed matter to induce more of the scornfully referred to genus tenderfoot to come here, well knowing, as you do, that, if they ceased coming and bringing the money, the result would be the reverse of agreeable.

You say that I do not furnish facts and figures to substantiate my statements. I could furnish them in plenty if the game were worth the while. If there is no misrepresentation of Southern California land and resources, why did you say a few days ago that the State should take some official cognizance of colonization abuses and to put into operation some plan to protect the public?

You claim that every family in Southern California has an income of $60 per month. Then why is it that you make constant appeals for donations of food, money, clothing, etc., to be brought to the "Times" office for distribution to the poor, and why, if what you say is true, is there a call for such work as Captain Frazier has been doing here? If everything is so prosperous here, if this is the best place on earth for men to fight the battle of life, why is it that your Los Angeles county ranchmen have not, for instance, $300,000 in the bank, as the farmers of one Iowa county, the despised tenderfeet, have?

SAMPLE OF SOUTHERN ABUSE.

Time was when the north, which means San Francisco, had nothing but contempt for the south of California, "the low counties," as they called our part of the State. Now they are planning how to induce the tourists who are attracted here by the climate, comfort and business opportunities we offer them, to go to San Francisco. They even talk of establishing a bureau here to be headquarters for those able jaw-smiths who will be employed to talk visitors into the delusion that there is anything attractive for them north of Tehachapi. It will not avail. The incoming Easterner who wants a true place—a city of open-hearted, energetic, hustling people, a climate that does not drive persons to murder and sudden death, a chance to invest his money with a certainty of deriving profit therefrom, a place that is growing, a place where his neighbors will try to help him along in his affairs and undertakings, in brief, the most charming, the liveliest, the most blessed city in the world—and in Los Angeles that is found. Those people who wish to find the opposite of the qualities above enumerated will obtain them by applying at San Francisco.—Los Angeles "Capital," Feb. 20, 1897.

Looking north along Central Avenue toward the Park

A bit of country near the Almshouse

Lake Merced: North Lake, south from the proposed Boulevard

View of the Old Almshouse Road

Where the Ocean Driveway will run

A vista of Lake Merced

ALONG THE LINE OF THE PROPOSED BOULEVARD

BITS OF SCENERY THROUGH WHICH THE CITY'S UNEMPLOYED WILL EUILD A HUNDRED-FOOT DRIVEWAY

A CITIZEN-QUEEN

Once a Seamstress and Now a Mother of Empresses.

All Europe is under obligations to a middle-aged woman who once did her own sewing and gave lessons in miniature-painting. This is the bald statement of a strange fact, but all Europe acknowledges the obligation and in particular it will be subscribed to by the Prince of Wales, the Czar and Dowager Empress of all the Russias, King George of Greece, and the Duchess of Cumberland's husband, claimant of the Hanoverian crown.

The name of this woman is Louisa, and the story begins in this fashion: On a certain day of May — the 26th it was — in the year 1842, this Louisa married a young officer in the Danish Army, named Christian Glucksburg. For ten years the two were obliged to practice the most rigid economy in order to get along at all. Each received a small income—he had an allowance from his father, she a small dot. Things went along like this for ten years.

If one were writing the story of Christian and Louisa in novel form, it would be the proper idea to break off at this point and "take up the thread of the narrative some ten years later," beginning the next chapter with a description of the diplomatic tangle over the succession to the Danish crown, which occurred in 1852. The thing was in a Gorgian knot, could not be untangled in any method or manner, and so Lord Palmerston, Premier of England, wielding a diplomatic weapon called a protocol, cut the knot in two at a single stroke. When the turmoil and confusion of the affair was over, Louisa of Hesse-Cassel and Christian Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glucksburg were King and Queen of Denmark.

QUEEN LOUISA OF DENMARK

It was a sudden fillip of fortune, totally unexpected by the two parties most concerned, but made possible by the fact that Louisa was a cousin of King Frederick VII of Denmark, and that her husband, Christian, was, in Lord Palmerston's opinion, possessed of better claims to the Danish succession than were any of the other candidates. This, however, was but the beginning of things. Christian and Louisa were King and Queen of Denmark (on an income, by the way, about equal to the salary received by Mr. John Hays Hammond as superintendent of the Gold Fields Company of South Africa). They were not yet the most powerfully connected of any European family. It was not long before they began to "reach out." One day Lord Russel chanced to attend a certain naval review of the Danish fleet. While on the bridge of the flagship he noted a young midshipman going to and fro with the admiral's orders. He was a fine, manly-looking boy, with a good bearing and a good name, and Lord Russel said as much to one of his companions, who replied that he had remarked as much himself. Then says Lord Russel (he may not have said the exact words, but the sense of the spirit was the same):

KING CHRISTIAN OF DENMARK

"I say, let's make that chap King of Greece!"

The Greek throne was a-begging at that moment, old Otto having been bundled out of Athens, horse, foot and dragoon, by a discontented populace. No one seemed to want it, not even England, whose rulers declined it on behalf of Prince Alfred, for prudential reasons. Why not give it to the young midshipman? He had good blood in him—was, in fact, son of King Christian and Queen Louisa of Denmark. The affair was settled out of hand, and now the young midshipman is the foremost figure of Europe, making head as King George of Greece against Turkey and the Powers simultaneously, and doing much toward a speedy settlement of the eternal Eastern question. Meanwhile great things had been happening for his brothers and sisters — the remaining children of Christian and Louisa. Dagmar was the second daughter, and in 1866, was escorted to the court of Russia, and there married to Alexander, the oldest son of Nicholas, then the Czar. But the Nihilists blew up Nicholas in 1881, and the daughther of the Danish seamstress became the mother of the White Czar.

Alexandra, the first daughter of the famous Christian and Louisa, will one day be Queen of England, and is now, as the Princess of Wales, the first lady of Europe and most popular woman of British society. She was married to the Prince of Wales on the 10th of March of the year 1863—the year that was so memorable and full of such portentious incident for the reigning family of Denmark. Of the other children of this family, Thyrza is the wife of the Duke of Cumberland: Christian, heir-apparent to the Danish throne, is married to Princess Louise, daughter of Charles XV. of Sweden; King George of Greece is husband of Olga, Grand Duchess of Russia, niece of the late Czar, while Waldemar has contracted an alliance with Princess Marie, daughter of the Duc de Chartres, the Orleanist pretender to the French crown.

OLGA, QUEEN OF GREECE

So altogether the little whilom seamstress and miniature-painter has not done so ill after all. For one must consider that the present European "crisis," apropos of Crete and the "Unspeakable Turk," has pushed the family to the very forefront of history. It would appear that Louisa and her husband are homely bourgeois people after all (perhaps keeping royal state on a hundred thousand a year has something to do with it), and that the King is something of the "citizen" variety, such as Louis Philippe—loved more than respected. At any day he can be seen going about the streets of Copenhagen, quite unattended save by a dog or two, nor is it considered etiquette (he himself desired the custom) on the part of his subjects, to remove their hats, or upon his passage, to salute him in any way.

---

The decoration of the Golden Rose, which is to be bestowed by the Pope this year upon the Princess Marie Louise, wife of the future King of Wurtemburg, is not, as most people imagine, a single flower. It is a golden branch, full of thorns and covered with leaves, buds and flowers, the topmost rose being the largest. It is all wrought in pure gold and within is a small receptacle, generally a tiny cup with a lid over it, containing palm and musk, placed there by the pope when blessing the flower. The branch is planted in a golden vase with the armorial bearings of both donor and recipient. There is much ceremony attached to the presentation of this coveted decoration, religious and civil. It is blessed by the Pope on Mid-Lent Sunday, and the Papal official who conveys the gift to the royal recipient is vested with all the attributes and privileges of a full-fledged ambassador, and is accorded all the honors, military and otherwise, that are paid to dignitaries of that importance.

GEORGIOS I. OF GREECE

---

Governor Bushnell of Ohio, who is considerable of a humorist and a good companion generally, went to see "Secret Service" at the Garrick Theater on a recent visit to New York. As the play proceeded the Governor's interest increased, and in one scene, where a negro servitor extracts the cartridges from the guns and replaces them with blanks to make harmelss the weapons of the firing squad, the Governor became visibly excited. He knows a thing or two about guns, as he is a large manufacturer of machinery. One of his friends, noting his intense interest, asked him what he thought of the scene. "I don't remember that we had ball cartridges in those days," said the Governor, drolly. "Mine was an old muzzle loader." So much for dramatic realism.

PRINCESS OF WALES

---

Prince Albert of Thurn dons a new suit of clothes every day and never wears any piece of linen more than twice. His neck ties average three a day, and at the end of every year has cast aside two hundred pairs of shoes. This well-dressed young man expends $1000 annually on cigarettes, and his sporting proclivities, consisting of hunting, fishing, golfing and bicycling, cost him $75,000.

STEVENSON'S TOMB

Name-Plates for the Mausoleum of the Novelist in Samoa.

The steamer Alameda bore away last week the bronze tablets, recently cast in this city by Whyte and de Rome, that will mark the grave of the late Robert Louis Stevenson, in Samoa. It is not generally known that Stevenson, beside being actively interested in Samoan politics, adopted that country as his own, gave it his allegiance, and was officially installed as "house-chief" of Vailima—his plantation of the "five waters." Here he had his "family" of thirty or more whites and natives, here he shared the councils of Mataafa, now deposed and in exile in Fiji, and here he said "crouched on the floor of his guest-house, conspiring with the war chiefs over smoky lamps." The warriors and old men of Samoa awaited his advice as eagerly as did the world outside await his latest story, and many a painted native has stolen across the "road of the loving hearts" (that perhaps he himself had helped with his own hands to build to testify his gratitude to the white chief), avoiding the ambuscades of marauding war-parties, and has appeared at midnight upon the porch of Stevenson's house to whisper of night attacks, of expeditions against Miletoa and the sack of villages. But to the Samoans also Stevenson was Tusitala, the "Teller of Tales," which title was given him after the publication of a translation of "the Bottle Imp" in the paper at Apia. He was also "the Rich Man of Vailima," open-handed in his hospitality to native and sailor as to his titled or influential guests.

NAME-PLATE FOR STEVENSON'S TOMB
Designed by Gelett Burgess

It was Stevenson's desire that he should be buried upon the top of Yeae Vaea mountain, and in the Samoan his tomb should be like those of the native chiefs. These consist of a simple sarcophaghus-shape block of concrete, resting upon a platform of the same material. Upon the sides of this block will be fastened the two tablets now on the way to the island. The one bearing his name is lettered his "Requiem," written by himself many years ago, and upon the stars under the years of his birth and death are the Greek alpha and omega—"the beginning and the end." The other bears a Samoan inscription—"the high-chief grave of Tusitala," with the Scottish thistle and the Hibiscus of the South Seas, and two verses from the Book of Ruth in the Samoan Bible.

> "Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God;
> "Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried:"

It is proposed to invite the natives in the near-by villages to assist in the erection of the tomb. How difficult the transportation of the material to the summit of Vaea, 1,600 feet above the sea-level, will be, may be under-imagined from the following description of the burial, two years ago, as described by Stevenson's stepson, Lloyd Osbourne:

"A meeting of chiefs was held to apportion the work and divide the men into parties. Forty were sent with knives and axes to cut a path up the steep face of the mountain, and Mr. Osbourne himself led another forty to the summit—men chosen from the immediate family—to dig the grave on a spot where it was Mr. Stevenson's wish that he should lie. Nothing more picturesque can be imagined than the narrow ledge that forms the summit of Vaea, a place no wider than a room and flat as a table. On either side the land descends precipitously; in front lies the vast ocean and the surf-swept reefs; to the right and left green mountains rise, densely covered with the primeval forest. Two hundred years ago the eyes of another man turned toward that same peak of Vaea, as the spot that should ultimately receive his war-worn body—Soalu, a famous chief.

AN INSCRIPTION IN SAMOAN

"All the morning Samoans were arriving with flowers; few of these were white, for they have not yet learned our foreign custom, and the room glowed with the many colors. There were no strangers on that day, no acquaintances; only those called who would deeply feel his loss. At one o'clock a body of powerful Samoans bore away his coffin beneath a tattered red ensign that had flown above his vessel in many a remote corner of the South Seas. A path so steep and rugged taxed their strength to the utmost, for not only was the journey difficult, but the extremest care was requisite to carry the coffin shoulder-high. Half an hour later the rest of his friends followed. It was a formidable ascent and tried them hard. Nineteen Europeans and some sixty Samoans reached the summit. After a short rest the Rev. W. E. Clarke read the burial service o the Church of England, interposing a prayer that Stevenson had written and read aloud to his family only the evening before his death. No stranger's hand touched him. It was his body servant that interlocked the fingers and arranged his hands in the attitude of prayer. Those who loved him carried him to his last home; even the coffin was the work of an old friend; the grave was dug by his own men."

At about the time this last office is completed in Stevenson's adopted country, San Francisco will see the erection of the first memorial to his fame and genius. The casting of the ship that will surmount the granite shaft of the Stevenson Fountain on the Plaza is being hurried, and it is hoped that the memorial will be set up in May next. As yet the sum necessary to defray the expense of this fountain has not been made up by the committee in charge, but it is to be hoped that the citizens of San Francisco will not be less willing to help on this tribute to the man and the poet, than have those of his admirers in the East, who have so liberally contributed.

AN IDEAL SUMMER HOME

Mrs. Hearst's "House of the Well" at Sunol.

Original in conception, delightful to the eye that loves harmony of form, well adapted to the country and climate and pre-eminently suitable for the especial kind and condition of life that is to be lived within its walls, such is the verdict that the intelligent will pass upon the country seat built for Mrs. Hearst by A. C. Schweinfurth.

Upon first consideration the term "country seat" would suggest a park—with deer in it, of course—and a lodge at the gate, and a stone-built mansion with French windows, a flood of wide, marble steps pouring out from the front door—I mean the main entrance—and a terrace with two urns, one peacock and sundry greyhounds, scattered about in "artistic disorder." If one were a very rich man, and had inherited tendencies as to country seats, one would have been tempted to have built some such abortion in California and might actually have perpetrated the outrage of a Surrey country-house upon a California valley—had not one first beheld the Hearst house. After this one realizes the inappropriateness of the conventional garbled designs of contractors, and begins to see what architecture really means, namely that a building of any description should closely conform to and be the expression of the life and conditions that surround it.

The Hearst villa, or more properly speaking, hacienda, is a white cluster of cement-covered buildings, constructed tower fashion, with flat roofs and windows irregularly placed, rising out of a walled-in court and approached by a really grand embankment or causeway that leads straight from the little railway station in between the massive gate heads of the court yard. It is situated near Sunol in a little valley overhung by wooded hills and watered by a tiny river, and is called the Hacienda Del Pozo de Verona. This is because of an old well in the center of the court whose well-head—a really fine piece of Italian workmanship of the sixteenth century—was brought over from Verona by Mrs. Hearst. The style of the hacienda's architecture is, perhaps a little puzzling to any one not familiar with the modes and manners of domestic building in Spain in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. At first glance the hacienda, with its embanked approach, huge gate heads, square walls and tower-like buildings, suggests a mediaeval manor with keep and portcullis. But this impression fades almost on the instant, and one sees the hacienda for what it is, a California country home built in a Spanish style. Mr. Schweinfurth calls it Provincial Spanish Rennaisance. It is very simple in design, rather rectangular, and one is almost tempted to add, severe. It would be severe were not the blankness of the walls relieved by unexpected bits of intricate design, a cornice or window frame or lunette. Here and there, against the frigid simplicity of the facade, iron work and terra cotta suddenly blossom out into delicate tracery and scrolls, charming as much for the design as for the unexpectedness of its occurrence. The court is surrounded on all sides by deep porches, shaded with awnings of the most brilliant stripes, while the two-foot pillars of cement are, or shortly will be, overgrown with a world of roses, clematis and creepers.

Mr. Schweinfurth believes that the style of the Provincial Spanish of the Rennaisance period is that best adapted to California, as well for business blocks as for country houses. He holds that architecture is or should be the rational solution of a practical problem." "Given your conditions," says Mr. Schweinfurth, "you must build accordingly." San Francisco, so he says, does not want the enormous, solid, metropolitan business block of New York and Chicago—does not want the sky-scraping office building, heavy, serious, overpowering. Ours is a gayer, sunnier, lighter life. More business is done in the open air. We are, says the architect, still provincial, and the lighter, airier, more provincial type is our best expression. Granite and steel in a city where water never freezes should give place to red tiled roofs and cement overlaid on brick. The cement and tiles are practical with us. They would not be practical in the Eastern cities. Steel frames and cubes of solid granite go very well in Chicago. There is no more call for them here than there is in Madrid or in Lisbon.

A simple style is our best expression, says Mr. Schweinfurth, a style that does away with the fanciful for which we have no time, and the elaborate for which we have no money. Nor, on the other hand, will he admit for an instant of the unspeakable "Neo-Grec-Corinthian" stuff, the ideal of the house contractor, and the creation of the mill. Mr. Schweinfurth's ideas are best embodied in his buildings. A very fair conception of his theories can be seen in the really beautiful two-story building of Spanish type, with far projecting roof, that stands on Sutter street, nearly opposite the University Club. Simplicity of design, honest frankness in the materials used and adaptability to climatic and sociological conditions, these are the guy ropes of Mr. Schweinfurth's "new architecture."

THINGS AND PEOPLE

I am become a-weary of the "literary criticisms" in the Sunday dailies, and the very sight of the solid double columns of gray matter—not in the biological sense—is absolutely terrifying; one feels the effort at production on the part of the unfortunate gentlemen who are obliged to write them. There is just so much space that has to be filled, and the two critics fill it, each according to his lights. The "Chronicle" gentleman elects to fill it by the turning on of a tap. It's not a tap connected with any light and sparkling substance, either. Nothing gushes therefrom. There is no foam, no effervescence. It is not the tap of a beer barrel; it is rather that of a molasses hogshead. The stream is slow, thick, ponderous, persistent. The "Chronicle" gentleman lets it run for an hour and a half, and then shuts it off, to open it again the next Sunday, and so on week after week. What would the "Chronicle" gentleman do without his dear old familiar phrases, one asks, the cut and dried and tabulated and assorted labels of the "literary critic?" As, for instance, "What lends force and vitality to Kipling's tales is his realistic imagination, which puts bodily before the reader's eyes certain types of that life he knows so well," or again, "Convincing proof that he has come to stay," or "Do not show the sustained power and the mastery of the story-teller's art that is revealed," etc., etc., etc., etc.

***

The "Examiner" gentleman, in using a different method, has gone to the other extreme. The "Examiner" gentleman's criticism does not flow, it spouts, it blows off like the discharge of a gauge cock, with such force that all substance is changed to mist and spray and vapor. Just now the "Examiner" gentleman has been blowing off on Harold Frederic. He dislikes Mr. Frederic, does this exuberant "Examiner" gentleman. The "Examiner" gentleman makes little allegories out of Miss Cleverness and Miss Seriousness and Miss Enthusiasm, and ever and anon breaks up the solid columns of his type by little short sentences that stand by themselves, as, for instance, a work of art in itself: "Never energize, but always lassify." It is fine, but do you know what this is? This is "lightening the supplement." This is throwing ballast overboard, substituting steam and vapor and gas for substance. Note what the rhetorics call the choice of words, "energize" and "lassify." To coin such words is an achievement. I do not think that in the bright vocabulary of youth there is such a word as "energize," but its use "lightens the literary supplement," which must never under any circumstances be allowed to "lassify" its readers. And this is literary fame!

***

And now the harmless, necessary hen has been immolated upon the altar of modern science. Rudolph Spreckels, who is the happy possessor of ten thousand farm yard fowls, has looked through a live hen by means of the fluorescent rays, and has determined by the sense of vision whether she does or does not contain an egg. Great are the wonders of science! Mr. Spreckels, as head master of a chicken ranch, does not believe in egg-less hens. They have no place in the Spreckels cosmos. But who could watch ten thousand hens? How to differentiate the fruitful from the barren? It was long before the thought of the X rays filtered through his mind, but no sooner was the idea conceived than it was acted upon. Mr. Spreckels rushed to the laboratory of Dr. Kern, a hen—caught at random from the ranks of the ten thousand—in each hand, and the experiment was made. There is a certain frightful indecency about the procedure, a positive, monstrous immodesty; the most sacred and intimate secrets of the hen's life ruthlessly held up to public view in the scathing light of the X ray. But as well be hung for a sheep as for a lamb. Go further, Mr. Spreckels. If we can see the egg inside the chicken why not make the attempt to see if there is a chicken inside that same egg? It might be the saving of many an embarrassing situation, might tend to obviate undesirable complications. Think of the grief that might thus be assuaged, the suffering that might be relieved, the profanity that might be prevented. It will not do to stop at half measures. How do we know but what Mr. Spreckels may be upon the threshold of one of those inventions that revolutionize humanity?

***

The unhealthy clamor and scramble around Randsburg has made one forget or overlook the splendid activity and natural, normal prosperity that prevails in the stretch of country down at Jamestown, where the Jumper, the Rawhide and Golden Rule are working double tides, night and day. Every man around Jamestown is employed, every claim is in operation, wages are high and stable, population increasing, money easy and going in and out of the mines with a rapidity that is bewildering. Nowhere in the State will you find a more prosperous mining strip. It is six miles long by two in width; situated about four miles from Sonora, from which point it continues to Quartz mountain, following the line of Table mountain.

***

Because ex-Commissioner Murdoch, manager of the Pacific Coast Savings Bank, and Fish Commissioner Emerick, capitalist, knew absolutely nothing about mining, and because a certain local light of Tuttletown, in Tuolumne county, taking advantage of their inexperience, wished and did sell them a hole in the ground which he and his fellow citizens were morally persuaded contained no pay, and because Murdoch and Emerick went in blind and blasted and shoveled and worked the hole in a manner totally devoid of sense, totally opposed to everything of mining, they have now exposed a seam of the very richest quartz, so rich indeed that within six months since its discovery the two "mining experts" have taken out enough gold to pay for the mine, erect a mill, and are now paying dividends to each other. Stories like these go a long way in proving that California is still and will continue to be the first gold country in the world. The new mine is on the edge of the wonderful mother lode, about eight miles from Jamestown.

***

The Golden Rule mine, which is one of the most notable claims of the district, is conducted in a manner rather unique. The parties "interested" in the claim are not exactly capitalists; they have no money, and are unable either to put up a mill or develop on a large scale. So they content themselves with exploring the resources of the mine, exposing the ore, but not milling it. So far they have laid bare several bodies of quartz of magnificent promise. They, too, are waiting for the foreign syndicate.

***

It is the custom to believe that mining fortunes are made solely by prospectors or millionaires. That this is not always the case is instanced in the Dutch mine, a property on Quartz mountain, which has been exploited by a syndicate of salesmen of the White House and the City of Paris, in conjunction with certain young lawyers, who had met one another as members of fraternal associations. One man engineered the scheme, of course, but they all chipped in, purchased the property, contributed a certain number of dollars per month to the expense of development, and in the course of two years their venture has expanded into a great property. Yes, they have paid for their mill, a five-stamp affair, for tunneling and other things, and last month had $7,000 over and above expenses to divide. But they propose to double their milling capacity, and, in the meantime, are entertaining an offer from a foreign syndicate, which, if accepted, will give them $100,000 down, and a million more on a bond after two years. That is an excellent return on a small investment, and, undoubtedly, is a good example for others to follow, if they can but discover the same kind of a property.

***

And speaking of the White House—be it understood without intent to advertise—it will not be out of place to note the effect of its management upon other and similar "concerns" along Kearny and Market streets. The directors of the White House are, of course, interested in building an interior "system" as well as an external clientele. They wish to keep their people, clerks, salesmen, heads of departments, etc., with them, and make them feel that they are part of the machine. The profit-sharing scheme is an outcome of this, and has proved so successful that there is talk of other institutions following suit. Not only do the salesmen receive their salaries, but there accrues to their pocket a percentage on their sales. The personal element that thus enters into the relations of seller and buyer makes a big difference in the demeanor and activity of the clerk and "saleslady." It is a tremendous incentive to finding "something that will suit," and in consequence is a rule that works both ways, or three ways if the term can be used, since it is agreeable to the firm, the seller and the customer. Possibly Raphael Weil and his associates have had before them the enormous success of the Bon Marche in Paris, in which this system prevails.

***

Ernest Francisco Fenollusa, who knows all about the art of the Japanese, and who has studied the "true inwardness" of the flying stork as adapted to screen and flower-pot decoration, is a bird of passage in the city this week. Mr. Fenollusa is better acquainted with the Japanese as artists than any other man in the world, at least such he is proclaimed by repute. He can talk as long as you care to listen on the subject of temples and bronzes and old coins, and the architecture of the Japs and its relation to landscape, and you will probably care to listen long, for he talks good talk and entertaining. Mr. Fenollusa absorbed all his knowledge during twelve years of residence and intimate life among the Japanese, most of which time he filled the office and discharged the duties of Professor of philosophy at the University of Tokio, and Imperial Commission of Fine Arts to the Mikado. Prior to his hegira to the land of the rising sun, Mr. Fenollusa was the creator of the Japanese department of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. It is announced that he will give two lectures in this city upon the results of his study and research, and it is safe to assume they will be delivered to large audiences.

***

In the general adjusting of salaries which is occurring at Sacramento, our protectors are not being forgotten. It is interesting to remember that Chief Crowley is in future to receive more money for his valuable services than we pay our Superior Judges, and that Chief Sullivan, of the Fire Department, together with his assistants, is equally well taken care of in a second bill which has received the endorsement of both chambers, and awaits but the golden touch of the Governor's pen. Not for nothing did Sam Rainey cultivate so assiduously the executives ear or feed fat his ambitions. The price of that homage is undoubtedly the signing of the measure, though if Governor Budd is true to his economical professions he will undoubtedly reject it. Maybe no one has informed him that it is a pretty costly institution as it is. Maybe he does not realize that our department, in comparison with the size of the city, is the most expensive in America. I hope soon to give him some figures in this connection, which may be enlightening, if not decisive, in strengthening him against the allurements of the boss. By the way, Rainey's fight for this bill was a feature of the session. For votes in its favor everything was traded, and its success has carried many another measure through Senate and Assembly.

***

There is a "crisis" at the Pacific-Union Club in these days, a perfect little ministerial crisis in miniature, in

HARRY H. BASS

EMMA CLAWSON

LEON J. SALOMON

DAN J. MARTIN

ETTIE R. MILES

DENTISTS AS ACTORS

On Friday evening, Students of the Dental Department of the University of California presented "My Neighbor's Wife" at Native Son's Hall in aid of the Chronicle's Relief Fund.

the shape of a split between the Board of Directors and the club in general. Four times has the club voted a certain measure relative to a change of residence to an up-town neighborhood, and four times has the directory, which seems to think it has the say in the matter, refused to execute the will of the organization. Result—dissatisfaction, general and pronounced, and in the end resignations falling thick as leaves in autumn—that is, of course, resignations from the directory. First George Newhall, and following him, James Phelan, and Thomas Brown, with some three or four more to hear from. The recalcitrants are quite peremptory in their refusals to reconsider their retirements, and in consequence J. D. Byne and Mr. A. Cheeseboro are to fill two of the vacant positions. Mr. Cheeseboro, by the way, is a manager par excellence in matters pertaining to catering. It will not be Mr. Cheeseboro's first experience in the management of the Pacific-Union Club. Tales, wonderful tales, are still told of his energy and activity at a time when he was in charge of the House Committee some years ago. They say that Mr. Cheeseboro used to be down at the club, in those days, at 7:30 in the morning to overlook the weighing in and weighing out of provisions and to O. K. all orders, and that two or three times during the day he would leave his business to hurry to the club and confer with the chef and steward upon details connected with the menu. I hear that Mr. Cheeseboro occupies this same position as regards the Sutter Club in Sacramento, and that he discharges the onerous and unremunerative duties connected therewith with the same decision and capability. What an ideal hotel manager Mr. Cheeseboro would make.

BOSWELL JR.

SUGGESTIONS

By FRANK NORRIS

1870.

The advanced post had made a barricade for themselves out of a vast quantity of furniture that had been flung out of the country house near by; sideboards, chairs, mattresses, a huge dining table and a big upright piano. Over this barricade leaned a sergeant and a corporal of the squad, scanning the country narrowly with fieldglasses.

One of the soldiers sitting on a packing case that had held cartridges was playing a song on the piano, singing the words at the same time. His head was wound up in a strip of brocaded satin torn from a chair back, for his temple had been laid open. It was bitter cold, and his feet were encased only in the cheap boots with pasteboard soles furnished by the government contractors; but he sang for all that at the top of his voice a pretty ...le song:

"Tu m'as promis un baiser pour Ce soirma brune."

On a sudden he stopped with a discord, and fell over upon the instrument, gulping up blood over the white ivory keys. A puff of blue smoke curled up from the window of the country house. The sergeant cried out, "Alerte, here they are; sight for one hundred meters."

* *

A HOTEL BEDROOM.

The walls were whitewashed and bare of pictures or ornaments, and the floor was covered with a dull turkey red carpet. The furniture was a set, all the pieces having a family resemblance to each other. The bed stood against the right-hand wall, a huge double bed with the name of the hotel on the corners of its spread and pillow cases. In the exact middle of the room underneath the gas fixtures was the center table, and on it a pitcher of ice water and a porcelain match safe, with ribbed sides, in the form of a truncated cone. Precisely opposite the bed stood the bureau, near to the bureau was the door of the closet, and next to this in the corner was the washstand with its new cake of soap and its three clean, glassy towels. To the left of the door was the electric bell and the directions for using it; and on the door itself a card as to the hours for meals, the rules of the hotel and the extract from the code regulating the liabilities of innkeepers. The room was clean, aggressively, defiantly clean, and there was a smell of soap in the air.

It was bare of any personality; of the hundreds who had lived and suffered and perhaps died there, not a trace or suggestion remained. Their different characters had not left the least impress upon its air and appearance. Only a few hairpins were scattered on the bottom of one of the drawers and two forgotten medicine bottles still remained upon the top shelf of the closet.

* *

BRUTE.

He had been working all day in a squalid neighborhood by the gas works and coal yards, surrounded by lifting cranes, piledrivers, dredging machines, engines of colossal, brutal strength, where all about him were immense blocks of granite, tons of pig iron; everything had been enormous, crude, had been huge in weight, tremendous in power, gigantic in size.

By long association with such things he had become like them, huge, hard, brutal, strung with a crude, blind strength, stupid, unreasoning. He was on his way home now, his immense hands dangling half-open at his sides; his head empty of thought. He only desired to be fed and to sleep. At a street crossing he picked up a white violet, very fresh, not yet trampled into the mud. It was a beautiful thing, redolent with the scent of the woods, suggestive of everything pretty and delicate. It was almost like a smile-made flower. It lay very light in the hollow of his immense calloused palm. In some strange way it appealed to him, and blindly he tried to acknowledge his appreciation. He looked at it stupidly, perplexed, not knowing what to do; then instinctively his hand carried it to his mouth; he ground it between his huge teeth and slowly ate it. It was the only way he knew.

* *

THE DENTAL PARLORS.

His office, or, as he called it, his Dental Parlors, was on the second floor over the butcher shop and faced the street. He made it do for a bedroom as well; there was a washstand behind the screen in the corner, where he made his moulds, and he slept on a big carpet lounge against the wall opposite the window. In the window itself, which was bay, was his operating chair, his dental engine, and his movable rack, where he laid out his instruments, burrs, extractors, pluggers, his spirit lamp and his pellets of sponge gold. Three chairs, a bargain at the second-hand store, were ranged against one wall with military precision, under a steel engraving of the court of Lorenzo di Medicis, which he had bought because there were a great many figures in it for the price. Over the sofa hung a rifle manufacturer's advertisement-calendar, which he never used. The other ornaments were a small marble-top center table, covered with back numbers of the "Dentist's Monthly Manual," a stone pug dog sitting before the little stove, and a thermometer. There was a stand of shelves in one corner filled with Allen's Practical Dentist. On the top shelf McTeague kept his concertina and the bag of bird seed for the canary. The whole place exhaled a mingled odor of bedding, creosote and ether.

THE CITY'S PLEASURE-DRIVE

The New Boulevard Which the Unemployed are to Build.

Between Golden Gate Park and Ingleside, by way of the Alms-house and the Laguna Honda, is two and a half miles of one of the prettiest reaches of country to be found within fifty miles of the city. The ground is level, well sheltered and covered with a splendid growth of trees. It is through this tract that it is proposed to run a hundred-foot boulevard. In fact, grading has already been commenced, and in a few days gangs of the "unemployed" of this city will be set to work in addition. The boulevard will begin at the junction of Seventh avenue and Golden Gate Park, or more strictly speaking, Seventh avenue will be converted into a boulevard. It is to run in a southerly direction from I street to O streets, where it will turn to the southeast, and skirting the Laguna Honda will make a big curve into the Alms-house tract. Thence it turns southwest, keeping to that direction till it reaches Ingleside at the junction of the Mission road and the Great Highway. In its course from Golden Gate Park the boulevard will run through the property of the Spring Valley Water Works, the Harmon estate, the Laguna Honda property, the Alms-house tract and the property of Adolph Sutro.

The most remarkable feature of the new boulevard will be the evenness and low percentage of the grades. The highest point of the driveway is in the Sutro property, and is 475 feet above the city base. The lowest points are at the Park and at Ingleside, both 260 feet above city base. Along Seventh avenue as far as Laguna Honda, the rise is but 102 feet in 4,000; thence to the Sutro tract—a distance by the boulevard of 3,000 feet—the rise is but 75 feet, and thence to the summit but 20 feet in 2,000. From the summit the grade descends with almost imperceptible gentleness to Ingleside, taking 6,000 feet to drop 215.

There will be few boulevards in the country superior to this Ocean Driveway, as it is to be called when finished. At present the exquisite stretch of low, wooded country around the Alms-house is known but to few energetic horsemen and bicyclists who have attempted the cross-country cut between Ingleside and the Park. But in a year or so the boulevard will be thrown open to the public, to carriages and equestrians, bicyclists and pedestrians alike, and will, no doubt, prove itself to be one of the greatest of suburban attractions.

The boulevard will be built entirely by the present "unemployed," who will be paid one dollar per day and —important item—be paid daily. The committee are making every effort to employ only such men as are really needy, especially those who have a family to support. In this they are aided to a great extent by the Associated Charities and by the Salvation Army. The men will be put on in squads of 100, and the committee hope soon to have 500 at work. To meet the expenses, contributions will be solicited from all quarters in general, but from wheelmen—of whom there are 20,000 in this city alone—in particular, since they more than any other class will be the ones benefited by the new driveway.

The material used will consist largely of macadamized red rock, rolled and re-rolled till hard and smooth as asphalt. It is proposed in time to extend the boulevard to the border of San Mateo county. However, that will come later. The finest part of the road, and the most expensive, will be the two and a half mile drive between the Park and Ingleside.

A BALLAD OF STEAM BEER

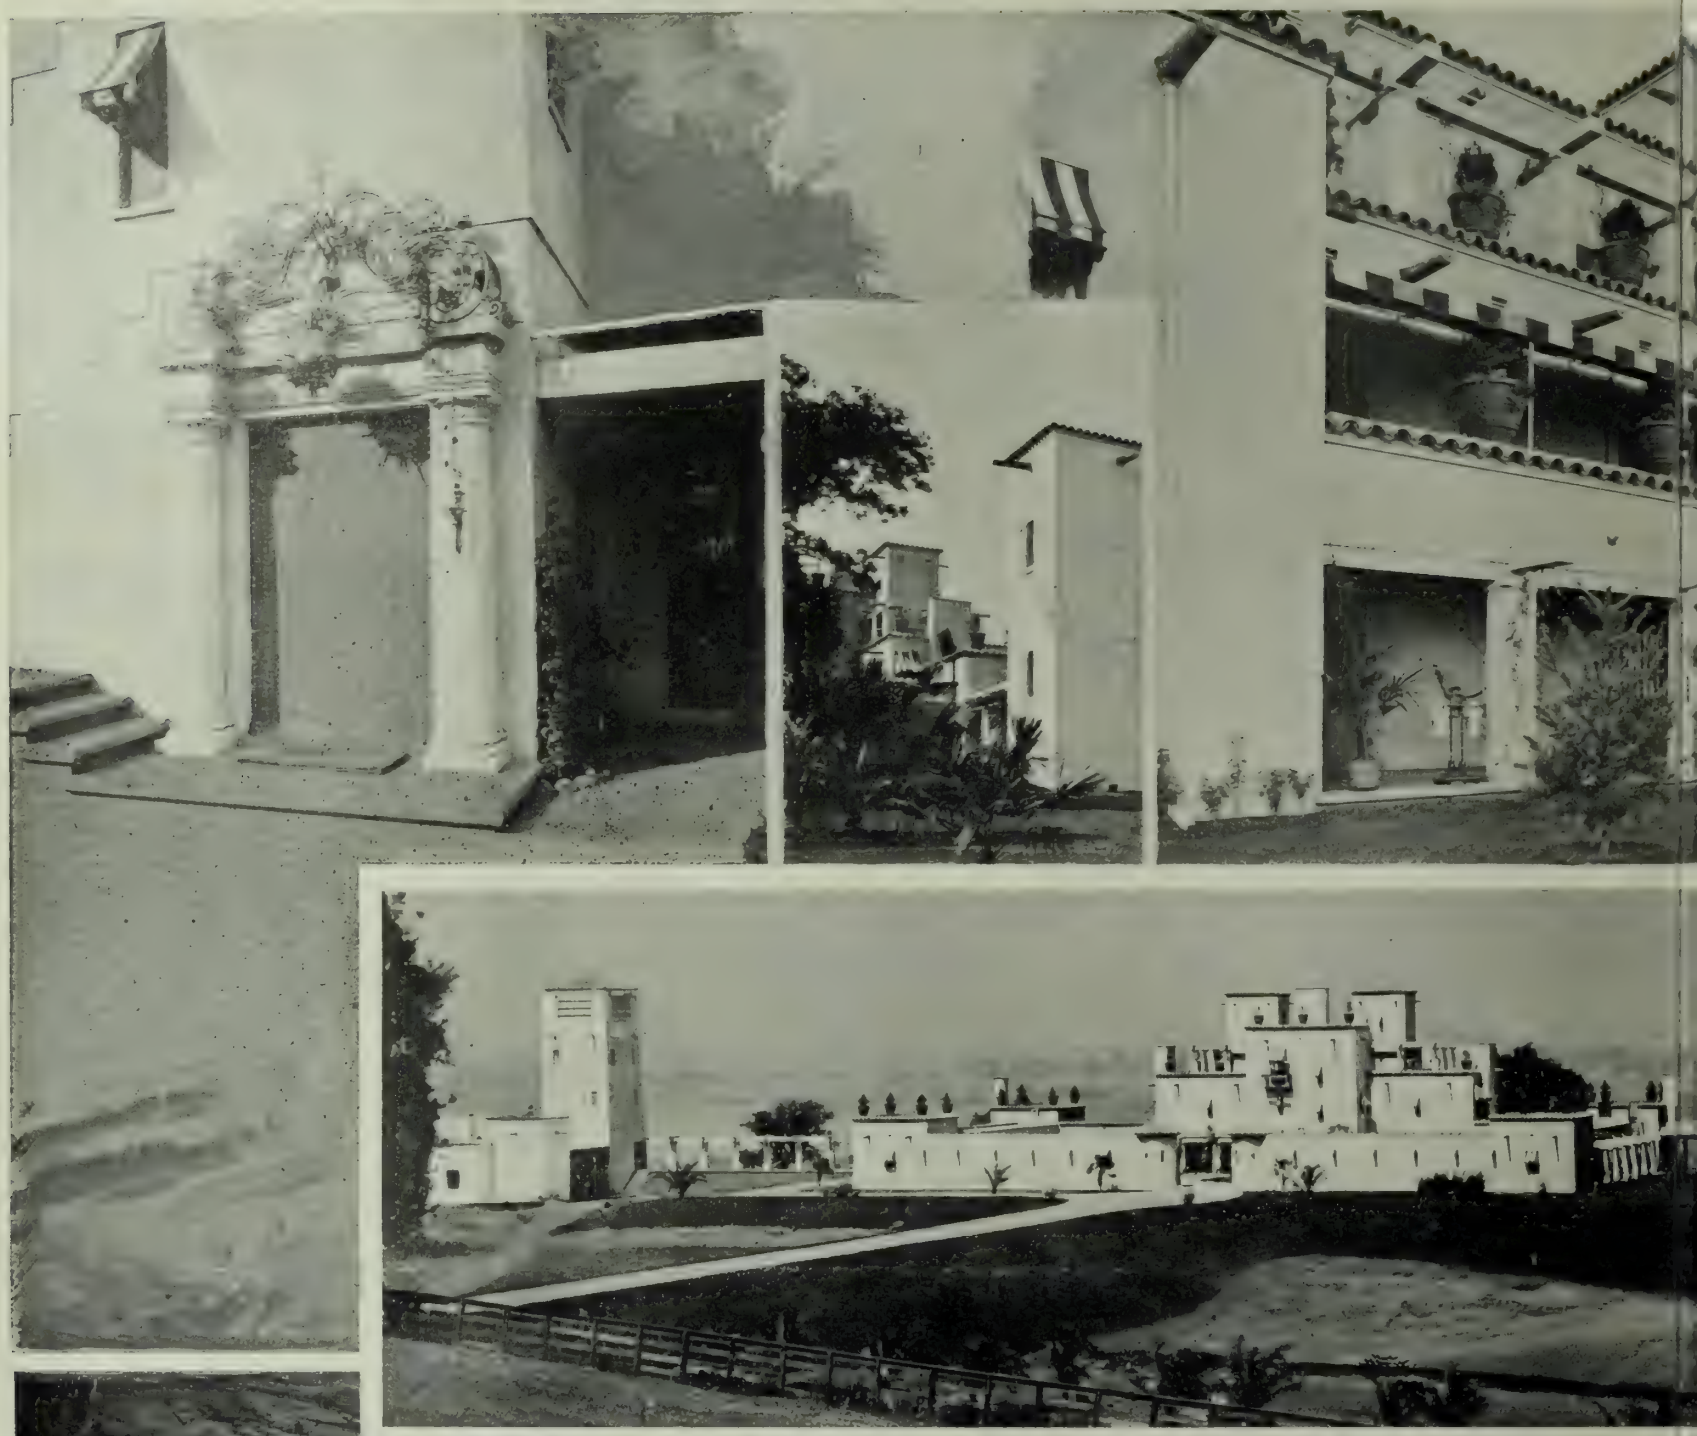
You may talk of your Moet and Chandon,
And all the Cuvees of Champagne,
Of Burgundy, ruby and royal,
From Romanée's storied demesne:
Of Lafitte and of Lachramae Christi,
Or the warm, blushing vintage that grows
Where Yquem and the premier cru Grand Vins
Gush forth from the hills of Bordeaux;
Of crusty old port and Madeira,
And all of the sherries of Spain,
All the liquers of castle and convent
That ever came over the main.
But I chant out a hymn to Gambrinus,
The god of small change and good cheer,
For I sing you the Song of the Nickel
That buys the big glass of Steam Beer.

A fig for straw-covered Chianti,
Or brandy a century old,
For foaming and flashing Spumante
That sparkles and glitters like gold.
Benedictine and opaline Absinthe
That gourmets and viveurs adore,
And the life-blood of amorous grape vines
That cluster along the Cote D'Or.
Not for me burn the molten sun-kisses
Upon the warm vineyards of France,
Not for me weave the chaplets of Bacchus
Nor call Satyrs and Nymphs to the dance.
I care not for these classical pleasures;
They are for my income too dear,
But still I can compass the nickel
That buys me my Schooner of Beer.

No flagons or wassail cups fill me
Of vintages priceless and rare,
Away with a stoup or a beaker,
And I scorn an effete petit verre;
My chalice is glittering crystal,
Full-bosomed, deep-chested, divine,
With the glorious crown of the hop-lands
That mocks at the glory of wine.
Come! drink of the soft flowing amber,
Come! lave in its somnolent streams,
Come! taste of the foam-flecked Nepenthe
That flows from the Kingdom of Dreams,
And sing, as afloat on its tideway
We gently and drowsily steer:
"Here's a health to the Nickel of Commerce
That buys me my Schooner of Beer."

B. B.



1. Main entrance door. 2. Corner toward the southeast. 3. Central Pavilion of south front. 4. Corner toward southwt.
9. Cloister about the Cou.

HACIENDA DEL POSO DE VERONA: THE C

5. General view of approach, facing north. 6. Interior of Studio. 7. Entrance gates from Courtyard. 8. Dining Room.
10. South end of Courtyard.

COUNTRY SEAT OF MRS. PHOEBE A. HEARST

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Alas, Diary, dear, it grieves me sorely to discover how few items of interest I have to confide in your sympathetic pages this week. Lent, somber, dull and colorless, that season of penitence, of fasting and of self-abnegation is upon us. Why, oh why, was I born with so great a longing for the fleshpots of Egypt? Mamma says I have no real religious feeling, so I suppose I must have inherited my depravity from some masculine ancestor of skeptical tendencies. Not that I need go far back. I don't note any keen church-going propensities in papa, who, on Sunday morning, coils himself up on a sofa and reads the newspapers instead of accompanying his family to church.

Well, we commenced on Ash Wednesday. Mamma, Leila and I went to service, both in the morning and in the afternoon. I really enjoyed myself; all the girls were there. Afterwards we had a pleasant little gossip, and compared notes with regard to our intentions for the week. Leila is the funniest girl! She causes me considerable amusement. She wears black in Lent, always buys a particularly effective gown, but somberlooking, and a dear little black toque with violets. Then she fasts. Oh, how we all wish she wouldn't. It affects her temper to a distressing extent, and the rest of the family have to bear the brunt of it. She is so irritable, and we are all afraid her fiance will find out how disagreeable she can be that we none of us dare cross her even in the most trifling thing. Mamma says she will make it up to me after Leila marries. She will have her hands full! On Thursday I went to the Symphony Concert—a very crowded affair. Every one in town was there—the cakes, as well as the plain bread-and-butter people. I did not care especially for the music. Brahm's Symphony was good, but they did not seem to have given sufficient practice. Then Mlle. Trebelli did not do herself justice. I was quite disappointed. Oh, I heard so funny a speech. Two men were sitting near us and discussing the respective merits of Sousa and Heinrichs as leaders. "Well," said one, pointing to Heinrichs, "that man knows how to lead; see how he moves his whole body, look at the way even his feet go! As for Sousa, he could not conduct a band of cadets, and in stiffness could give points to a poker. Why people should make so much fuss over him I can't make out."

"I always wondered," said the other, "what was the matter with Sousa, and I guess you're right about it; he did not work his body enough!" How we laughed!

On Friday, in spite of the rain, Lelia insisted on our going to Grace Church, where we found a bare handful of people, and got soaked to the skin. I was disgusted, I can assure you. Afterwards we went to call on Maud Younger. You know she and her sisters and brother are living at on Green street. Alice is recovering slowly, but is now out of all danger. Maud says she will probably remain here for some time, though she it not at all certain of her plans. [illegible]

On Saturday we went to the Trebelli concert, at least, Mamma and I did, and Leila went to church. We enjoyed it hugely. Mlle. Trebelli was in excellent voice, and responded to her encores in charming fashion. I particularly enjoyed her laughing song, and have been imitating her ever since. From there we went to the tea given to Mrs. William Younger by the ladies of the Sorosis, and had a fine time. Mrs. Younger looked exceedingly well, and was becomingly gowned. Maud and Lucille were also there. Lucille is quite a piquant-looking girl. I always enjoy entertainments given at the Sorosis. They are informal and interesting. The rooms, too, are so pretty, and Mr. Keith lent the ladies his studio, so that we had an opportunity of admiring his lovely pictures. They had a delicious little repast, the pistache cake being exceptionally good—I dote on pistache in any form, but cake, whew! Mrs. Joe Young was there in a swell Paris gown of dark red. The waist was tucked and cut in jacket form, with Maltese lace introduced in the vest. The sleeves were free and tucked from the tiny puff to the wrist. Then I scurried home to dress, for I was bidden to the dinner given by Mrs. J. F. Norris in honor of her son's birthday. We had ever so much fun. Fourteen were invited. You know it was a progressive dinner, and we changed partners at each course. I never expected to find enjoyment at a dinner party. They are usually so horribly stiff, and one usually either gets a man who simply eats and eats and won't talk or else a bore, and then I never can find topics of conversation to last through eight or nine courses. But when one has a partner for a course the attractiveness of each is doubled. Between times little trays bearing quaint cuttings from advertisements, tied up with ribbons, were passed around and later on read aloud by each recipient to the merriment of the others.

On Sunday afternoon I dropped in to the Hages to tea and discussed the Fortnightly Dramatic Club. I am a member, so cannot divulge much about it for fear of suspicion being directed towards me, and then! The Moores and Hoffmans belong, you know, and we are now deeply engaged in rehearsing a play. At first we decided not to have any audience, but just to act for our own delectation. Afterwards, however, we changed our minds; 'twould be a pity to deprive our dearest foes of the pleasure of contemplating our efforts. We shall hire a hall, and purpose inviting all our friends. There is quite a degree of histrionic ability among the members. I myself anticipate vieing with Ellen Terry or Ada Rehan, but mamma says all silly girls are stage-struck.

Is it not a pity that Dr. and Mrs. Younger have decided to live in the East. They had so pleasant a home and were such splendid hosts. Anna Duprey is to be married next week. Is she not young? I don't think more than nineteen. She is to marry Mr. Baldwin, son of Mr. O. D. Baldwin, you know. The wedding is to take place in the Unitarian Church on Tuesday afternoon, and is to be a pretty affair, the girls say. I don't know Anna very well, but she is a sweet girl and a favorite. I wonder when Aileen Goad is to be married? She is now in New York with her father and Genevieve, and, a bird whispered, is engaged getting her trousseau. She will not be back till after Easter, so I suppose hers will be a June wedding. Now, dear Diary, I must fly; in spite of Lent, in spite of everything, I am going to the opera, and must not dim the brightness of my eyes by burning more midnight oil. Your own,

MRS. SAMUEL NAPTHALY
NEE MISS MAYBELLE GERST
Bushnell, photo

MISS CRICKET.

An unusually pretty wedding was that of Captain Samuel Napthaly and Miss Maybelle Gerst which was celebrated at the California Hotel on Sunday evening. Mr. Napthaly is a son of the well-known lawyer, and is an aide-de-camp on General Warfield's staff. He is also a bright, clever and entertaining young man with a future. Miss Gerst is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Garrison Gerst, and is exceedingly popular. She looked very handsome in her bridal array. Her gown was of white satin, with long train and trimmed with orange blossoms. The waist was covered with lace and sprays of blossoms, and the long veil was caught in the hair in similar fashion. After the ceremony supper was served in the cafe on the lower floor, and then the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing.

An interesting engagement is that of Miss Helen Sutro, daughter of Gustav Sutro, and Samuel Schwartz. Miss Sutro is a decidedly handsome girl of fine figure and abundant sense and energy of character, who has had the advantage of an excellent education and much foreign travel.

Another engagement not devoid of interest that has recently been announced in New York—that of Mr. H. E. Keyes, son of the late General Keyes, and Miss Mary Louise Ward, daughter of Captain G. S. Luttrell Ward of the United States army.

An engagement of moment is that of Miss Rosalie Neustadter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Neustadter, and Mr. Albert Ehrman of the firm of M. Ehrman & Co.

A Turkish room has been fitted up in the Palace Hotel. It is the prettiest thing of the kind on the coast, and the decorations have been gotten up most elaborately.

In spite of gloomy prognostications, the first week of Lent in Oakland was by no means so dull and weary as had been anticipated. Mrs. Bowles ushered in the season of abstinence by giving a very smart ladies' luncheon to some thirty friends. The table decorations were pink carnations exquisitely arranged, and Mrs. Bowles was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Seward McNear.

A combined dinner and whist party was given by Mr. Stanley Cogill to several of the younger crowd this week. The table was prettily decked in ferns. Another affair was the violet luncheon of Miss Jean Clift to a dozen of her girl friends. During the afternoon the maidens amused themselves by playing flower games. Miss Beulah Stubbs carried off the first prize, an immense bunch of violets.

Considerable regret will be felt over the sad accident which befell Miss Lou Wall on her voyage across the Atlantic. The steamer encountered all the severe February gales and was several times given up for lost. In a lull in the storm the captain persuaded Miss Wall to venture forth on deck. She was walking up and down when suddenly a huge wave arose, completely covering the steamer. Miss Wall lost her footing, fainted, and knew no more until she found herself in her cabin with a broken knee. For the remainder of the voyage the storms continued, and on arriving at New York Miss Wall was obliged to go to a hospital where she expects to remain for a month or so.

The engagement is announced of Miss Louise Simmons, stepdaughter of Mr. J. Wright, the well-known capitalist, and Mr. Pheby of Oakland. Miss Simmons is tall and handsome, and one of the popular members of the Deux Temps set. Mr. Pheby is a decidedly handsome man, tall, slender, with dark eyes and hair. The Phebys are among some of the old residents of Oakland.

A dinner was given by Miss Mary Whitney in honor of Miss Simmons and Mr. Pheby, whose engagement was announced recently.

The principal topic of conversation among the Episcopalians in Oakland for weeks past has been the amalgamation of St. Paul's and St. John's Episcopal Churches. Most of the members were in favor of combining the two congregations, but the plan was opposed by the rector, Dr. Maynard, and one of the vestrymen. Now St. Paul's is divided against itself. A number of members have sent in their resignations, and intend going to St. John's, while some will attend the tiny new church on Telegraph avenue. What the remainder of the congregation is to do is still undecided.

Mr. Karl Howard returned from his prolonged sojourn in the East on Friday last. He met Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Peixotto in Washington, and said they both looked well and decidedly happy. They left for New York after the inauguration. Mrs. Charles Webb Howard, accompanied by Miss Francis, a sister of Mrs. John Dean of Berkeley, is touring the Mediterranean. She will return to Oakland some time in April. Miss Maud Howard is studying music in Dresden.

The Club of "Twenty-One" was entertained last week by Miss Ella Sterrett in the Wheaton cottage which is situated at the end of Lake Merritt. The big living room had a blazing log fire and was sweet with the fragrance of innumerable bowls of violets, which were placed in every possible corner. The young people who wished played cards and those who preferred to row around the lake had boats provided for them. The prize, a pretty silver hat brush, was won by Miss Holt.

Dinners have been marked by their absence during these latter days, and the only tea of note was that given on Monday afternoon by the Misses Gage in honor of Mrs. Arthur Malins (nee Hattie English). In spite of the showery weather it was a great success and was well attended.

During the winter months the Hotel Mateo has undergone a complete renovation; the grounds have been additionally beautified, new tennis courts have been constructed. Already some of the best people in San Francisco have engaged accommodations for the coming season, and many of the cottages have been rented. The hotel is under the management of F. A. Shepard, who has been for some time previous to this year in charge of fashionable hotels of Santa Barbara and San Rafael, and under his able direction this pretty place promises to be very popular.

"St. Nicholas" for March contains two complete stories, "Teddy Baird's Luck" and "Jed's Windmill," by Kate Dickinson Sweetser and Grace Wickham Curran. There is a poem, "The Little Shadow Folk," by Clinton Scollard, and the concluding chapter of Laurence Huton's "A Boy I Knew." The arbor defense of the country have a special article of much interest by Charles Rawson Thurster, and Clifford Howard tells how a President is inaugurated.

A Coveted Distinction.

Probably no private fete has ever been discussed to the extent of the Bradley-Martin ball, and the distinction conferred upon Moet & Chandon by the selection of their champagne, will be of lasting benefit to the wine, and stamps it with the approval of our ultra-fashionable set.—Bonfort's Wine Circular.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

VICTORIOUS AGAIN

GAIL BORDEN'S

Eagle Brand of Condensed Milk

PRONOUNCED by the CHEMIST of the BOARD OF HEALTH to be THE PUREST, RICHEST and BEST An analysis of Dr. Wenzell, the Chemist of the Board of Health, shows GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND to have nearly double the strength of many brands of condensed milk or cream, and stronger than any brand now before the public.

The record of half a century again confirmed, showing GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND to be without a flaw, and stronger, purer than any brand of condensed milk on the market.

Consumers should note that Prof. Wenzell reports that all the alleged brands of condensed creams are not condensed cream and are nothing but evaporated milk, and are greatly inferior in richness and quality to GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND.

NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

DRAMATIC NOTES

"Jim, the Penman" will be continued at the Alcazar for another week. This is because of the immense success the play has met with.

Georgia Cayvan, who will soon come to the Columbia, has a new play, entitled, "Mary Pennington, Spinster," in which she has a part that is said to be admirably suited to her temperament and personality.

The new people at the Orpheum next week will be the four Cohans, automatons and dancing dolls," who have made great hits in the East, and Keating and Walker, comedy dancers, who are said to be very clever. The Jordans will make their final appearance, as will also Marlo and Marlo, Virginia Aragon, the three Olifans, and John Burke and Grace Forest.

Cissy Fitzgerald and "The Foundling" will open at the Columbia on Monday night for an engagement of two weeks. The piece is by William Lecocq, author of "Jane," and E. M. Robson, and will be presented by the same company that appeared in the original New York production. Miss Fitzgerald is cast for the part of a music-hall artist, and she will have plenty of opportunity to introduce her famous dances and her captivating wink.

"Sigurd" will be sung by the French Opera Company at the California next Tuesday night. This will be the first time the opera has ever been heard in San Francisco, and as the production will bring out the principal members of the company the event will be especially interesting. "Sigurd" will be followed during the week by "Noces de Jeanette," another new piece, and by "La Juive," which will be sung at the Saturday matinee.

The elaborate mounting minute attention that Miss Davenport gives to the production of all her plays gives much gratification to Mr. Sardou. Fanny Davenport will open in "Gismonda" at the Baldwin next month. It is a play of mediaeval times, written in Sardou's most dramatic and intensely interesting style. The piece will receive the same elaborate mounting that has characterized Miss Davenport's production of "Cleopatra" and other plays of the kind.

Miss Gertrude Auld-Thomas, soprano, and Mr. Hugo Mansfeldt, pianist, will be the soloists at the fourth concert of the Symphony Society, which will take place at the Columbia next Thursday afternoon at 3:30. The orchestra will give the overture to Schumann's "Genoveva," Svensden's "Norwegian Artists' Carnival," and Massenet's "Les Erinnyes." An effort is being made to place the Symphony Society upon a sound financial basis, in order to guarantee a continuance of a symphony orchestra.

Owing to the great success of "Pinafore," the Tivoli will continue the opera for another week. This popular piece has never been more capably produced in this city. Every member of the cast has made an individual hit, and the scenery and accessories are new and attractive. On Wednesday evening the members of the United States Postal Service will attend the Tivoli, and a special performance will be given. "Pinafore" will be followed by Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor," in which Miss Laura Millard will make her reappearance.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

THE THEATRES

The Wherefore of Haworth—A Clever Performance at the Alcazar.

Where is Haworth's place in the drama? He has talent, and has besides a voice that would be a fortune to some man of bigger mold. True, he is not handsome, but he has to him qualities that even under the most unfortunate of circumstances force themselves upon you, and you feel sorry to see him diverting his talents into a channel where they manifestly do not belong, and investing himself with clothes and characters that do not fit him or his abilities. There is some place for him, some character that would dovetail and harmonize with his present accomplishments, but it is not Ruy Blas. He should hunt for it and find it for himself. Then the critics would "discover" him. Critics never discover a man until he has first discovered himself. Neither the critics nor the public have any concern as to what a man might be able to accomplish under different circumstances. They are merely concerned as to whether he is good or bad at the moment. For myself, I take an interest in these misfits, and take some enjoyment, too, in speculating as to where they properly belong. There was a time when to be an actor meant that to-day one was a gallant or a sighing swain, to-morrow an old roue or a superannuated servant; another time, a fighting, dashing hero of the melodrama; and still another, a slinking coward. That day has passed, and lives in tradition rather than in actual stage life. Everything, on the stage and off, is being reduced to a specialty. The actor of long ago was much like the physician and the lawyer of bye-gone times—they practiced everything coming under the head of their profession. To-day we have doctors of the ear, the eye and throat, doctors for the lungs, doctors for the heart; we have jury lawyers, admiralty lawyers, equity lawyers, and the like. The successful actor of to-day is as much a specialist as are our successful doctors. I am told Mr. Haworth has a brother who is something of a playwright, who, if he but turned his mind to fitting out the actor brother with a play within his grasp might make reputations for them both.

The idea of presenting "Ruy Blas" and "A Man of the World" at the Columbia was merely a hastily devised expedient to avoid closing the house until the arrival of Cissy Fitzgerald, and when one considers that the actors were hastily gathered together from every available quarter, just for the occasion, the verdict must be that, taken all in all, the presentation of the play was "not bad." Where under the heavens they ever found Mr. Ryan and Mr. Malloy, and why under the heavens the management did not leave them where they found them, instead of dragging them out of obscurity, is one of the mysteries that I will never be able to pierce. Mr. Haworth and Miss Alice Perkins were a portion of the Modjeska company which recently disbanded on account of the sickness of Madame Modjeska. Miss Margaret Craven just happened to arrive in San Francisco in time to be pressed into service for this production; Mr. H. S. Duffield and Madge Carr Cook were left over to us by the Frawley company, and the rest of the cast was made up of theatrical people who were floating about town out of employment. I don't know Carl Smith, who was the Don Salluste in "Ruy Blas," but whoever he is, he was far and away the best of the company, the one best fitted to his part. The heartless and intriguing Salluste could not have been more admirably or forcefully presented, and though I have known many Smiths I have never known such a one. Perhaps I have lost his identity in his name, but he is a clever and capable actor, whoever he may be.

Haworth's Ruy Blas was far from satisfactory. In spots he certainly rises to the occasion and thrills us a bit, but it is only in spots after all. His speech delivered upon his entrance to the council chamber was a fine bit of work, but in the next moment when reciting his tale of love to the Queen he falls sadly short of the mark and is disappointing. Miss Craven, who has done some good work in society plays, should not permit herself to be led away in the higher walks of the histrionic art. As the Queen of Spain she was lamentably out of place. Most of her lines were delivered much as a school girl would declaim upon examination day, and she was manifestly out of her element.

Aside from "Shore Acres" at the Baldwin, "Jim, the Penman," at the Alcazar, was the most finished production presented to the theater-goer during the past week. They have a competent stock company at the Alcazar, and are producing a series of modern dramas in a truly modern style. It would be hard to find in a day's journey, or a good many days' journey, for that matter, as capable a man as George Osbourne. His Baron Hartfeld in "Jim, the Penman" could not have been excelled. Upon the American stage there are few men with the all-round ability of Osbourne. The Captain Redwood of Francis Powers was admirable, and the trying part of Mistress Ralston was handled by Miss Belgarde with tact and ability. Miss Buckley and Miss Frances Jolliffe not only looked well, but were pleasing and capable. When one considers that the best seats in the house are but 50 cents, you are lost in wonder as to how they can do so much for so little.

B.

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

THE FRENCH OPERA

Characteristics of the Troupe as Revealed in "L'Africaine."

It may have been the promise of the ballet; it may have been the promise of something French; it may have been the coercion of wives or the pleading of daughters; whatever the reason, the California Theater on Wednesday night held more good gray heads—heads that have made millions, and have as little use for opera as they have for theosophy—than perhaps it has ever held before. Many were the round tables of green cover that stood their silent watch alone that night, many the bits of colored ivory that went unfingered by a loyal friend—for French opera was in town, and French opera one does not often hear, nor French ballet see.

Now there are many reasons why the "newly fortunate" should patronize opera, and one of the chief is that it gives the newly unfortunate a chance to hear good music. I felt an interest therefore in every gray head that I saw nod, in every pair of eyes that I saw close, in every reviving nudge I saw given by humiliated daughter or wife. For the nods and the nudges were the prices paid that I might enjoy Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine" sung by singers with voices worth mentioning.

It was announced on the programmes that the fourth tableau would introduce a ballet, and it was no secret that many a tedious wait was made endurable to those who have eyes but no ears by the expectation of this touch of the real French article—none of your Kiralfy affairs, no poor American attempts at the thing, none of your heavy, Teutonic marches, but the supple, graceful, sinuous, carry-you-off-your-feet-and-out-of-your-head ballet of Gay Paree.

And what came?

Oh! Horror of horrors! Blot it out! Forget it! No; don't forget! It will make bright and pleasing, gay, graceful and joyous, every ballet that you will ever see. The faces! Oh, the faces! A flat-nosed Siwash and a long-lipped lady from the County Donegal—they were there. French! Yes, the French of the type of Mme. Thenordier, perhaps—Thenordier, aged, cruel, accursed; the French of the New Orleans fishing boats, and of the Mexican border, but not the French that we had hoped to see, the French that had made lips to smack and eyes to open during three scenes of patrician patience.

Let me be just. There were two who were possessed of all things needed to please in dancers. These, it is perhaps not necessary to remark, were the leaders. They had seen Paris, no doubt, and if one could but have kept his eyes on them alone the memory of this imported ballet would be sweeter.

But a ballet doesn't make an operatic performance. Neither does it unmake it. The opera was one well adapted to reveal the ability of the singers, and in this revelation there was no disappointment. California has heard greater singers than Foedor, Alhers and Massart, but it has not been our privilege to see many companies in which all the leading parts were taken by those who were capable of doing them so well. No, it is not a "grand aggregation;" it is something better—a well trained and very even company of excellent voices. And how they were able to sing so well on stepping directly from the train to the stage is a thing remarkable. The honors were for Alhers, he of the rich and powerful baritone, a voice pure, strong, full, and held in perfect control. No opera could be a failure with Alhers in the leading role, and when supplemented by a tenor—truly, as the bills entitled him, a "grand tenor"—as Massart, and a soprano such as Foedor, the opera must give pleasure to even the most critical.

So while the gray heads nodded, those who had come for the music found new beauties in an opera which requires acquaintance to fully appreciate. F. L.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" will quickly relieve Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh and Throat Diseases. Sold only in boxes.

NEW BOOKS

"Boss and Other Dogs," by Maria Louise Pool, is a collection of short stories descriptive of canines of all sorts and sizes. The tales are all interesting enough to read and one of them is at least tearful. (Stone & Kimball.)

J. M. Dent & Co., of London, have brought out a new edition of Johnathan Swift's "Gulliver's Travels." It is edited by Israel Gollcanz, and is among the series of Temple Classics. (For sale at the Emporium Bookstore.)

Rebecca Harding Davis' latest novel, "Frances Waldeaux," is an interesting tale of Americans abroad. It tells of a mother who has made any number of personal sacrifices for her priggish son, and receives for it all the bitter disappointment of a mesalliance on the part of the young gentleman. The affaire, however, is made to end happily. (Harper & Brothers.)

S. R. Keightley, author of "The Cavaliers," has written a collection of five short stories, which he has published under the title, "The Lost Recruit of Clare's," the name of the first tale of the quintet. They are supposed to be the memoirs of a Colonel Anthony Dillon, and are full of blood and action. (Harper & Brothers.)

"Bound in Shallows" is the title of an interesting story by Eva Wilder Brodhead. The point of the tale is that people are not bound to sacrifice themselves in order to redeem the fallen. (Harper & Brothers.)

"In the Old Herrick House, and Other Stories," by Ellen Douglas Delaud, contains three short stories—simple tales of life among girls, but of natural incidents and much interest. (Harper & Brothers.)

In "Fontenay, the Sworksman," Fortune Du Boisgobey, narrates the adventures of a young staff officer of Napoleon, who serves with distinction during the Spanish campaign and finally weds a lady-in-waiting of the Empress Josephine. There are a number of historical personages introduced into the novel, and any amount of interesting adventure. (Rand, McNally & Co.)

G. B. Burgin, author of "Gascoigne's Ghost," has written another novel, entitled "Tomalyn's Quest." The scene is laid in Turkey, the Turkish question receiving considerable attention. The novel should be interesting on this account, if on no other. (Harper & Brothers.)

Lawrence Hutton's "Literary Landmarks of Florence" tells in an interesting way of the dwellings that have been made famous by men of letters in the former Tuscan capital. Many of the literati mentioned in the volume are Americans, and prominent among them are Lowell, Longfellow, Bryant and Hawthorne. (Harper & Brothers.)

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 569.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

WINTHROP

RANGES

The keynote to good cooking, even baking, economy and successful housekeeping

Chas. Brown & Son

807 MARKET STREET
Flood Building

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

"QUO VADIS"

A Remarkable Novel of the Times of Nero, by a Polish Writer.

It is interesting to consider the cause and effect of a great literary success. The newspapers are often effective in booming a novel into prominence. For instance, the enormous sale of "Dodo" was due to the journalists who alternately denounced or eulogize that volume; yet "Peter Stirling" passed to the public with but little notice from the papers, and edition after edition has been exhausted. The first three editions of Mrs. Steele's "On the Face of the Waters" were sold as soon as bound, because the big literary reviews and J. Lockwood Kipling had pronounced the book "The novel of the Mutiny." Ian MacLaren's "Bonnie Briar Bush," his first and best book, had no great assistance from the dailies until its sale was well into the thousands. The consumption of "Trilby," however, was valiantly assisted by printer's ink, though it would have gone just as brilliantly without the journalistic furore. The last novel to find public as opposed to a newspaper acceptance is "Quo Vadis" (Little Brown & Co.), by Henry Sienkiewicz. It has been taken up by the several reading societies, discussed at length in the literary clubs, has furnished a topic of conversation at Berkeley and its theology has made controversial material for ministers' meetings. Yet the "Examiner" has not yet given it a page nor has Editor Fitch treated its merits to one of his distinguished critiques.

"Quo Vadis" is a "narrative of the time of Nero." Its five hundred odd pages are divided fairly between Pagans, Christians and scenery. The Apostles Peter and Paul share the important roles with Nero, Poppaea Petronius and Tigellinus. Vinicius, a patrician and a Tribune, and Lygia, a hostage princess and a follower of Chrystos, are hero and heroine, respectively, and serve the purpose of contrasting the Roman and the Christian condition of mind and soul, besides furnishing a love interest and a shred of plot. Certainly it is a big, a notable book, but one chooses to term it a panorama rather than a novel. With mere fiction it has but distant kinship. One is reminded by the book of a great historic painting. The dramatis personae are creatures of the background. They are there but to give the semblance of human interest to the study. What is the hero but the incarnation of the arrogance, egotism, sensuality and determined strength of the Roman? The heroine typifies the Christian virtues of modesty and patience, and by her beauty and grace heightens and explains the passion of Vinicius. The treatment of Petronius and Nero is more realistic, however. They are individualized into striking portraits and their identities alone lend vitality to the book.

To estimate the accuracy of Sienkiewiez's color, of his descriptions, of his backgrounds, one requires the special knowledge of an archaeologist. The impression, however, is magnificent. What splendid passages those are that describe the festivals of Nero. In "Salambo" Flaubert gave us the semblance of a mosaic—the painting of "Quo Vadis" is of the impressionist school, bold and unrestrained. The value of the former lay not only in the unimpeachable veracity of its details, but in its superb composition, in the subordination of its parts and the heroic relief in which its hero and heroine detached themselves from the mass of plot and characters. Sienkiewicz alternates mechanically passages of Pagan life with Christian worship. The thread of plot is so obviously a subterfuge to afford change of scene that it fails of interest as a story, though the brilliance of its color and the magnificence of the scenery delights the mind. Truly it is inimitable material to work into a background, the gorgeous, extravagant luxury and splendor and the inconceivable depravity of the Rome of the Caesars. We have spectacle after spectacle, each surpassing its predecessor in gorgeousness. Here, for instance, is one of the feasts designed by the genius of Tigellinus, whose contest with Petronius for the favor of Nero affords pretext for disclosing the relations of the Emperor to his court:

* *

He had arranged to give the feast on a gigantic raft, framed of gilded timbers. The borders of this raft were decked with splendid shells found in the Red Sea and the Indian ocean, shells brilliant with the colors of pearls and the rainbow. The banks of the pond were covered with groups of palm, with groves of lotus, and blooming roses. In the midst of these were hidden fountains of perfumed water, statues of gods and goddesses, and gold or silver cages filled with various colored birds. In the center of the raft rose an immense tent, or, rather, not to hide the feasters, only the roof of a tent, made of Syrian purple, resting on silver columns; under it were gleaming, like suns, tables prepared for the guests, loaded with Alexandrian glass, crystal, and vessels simply beyond price—the plunder of Italy, Greece, and Asia Minor. The raft, which, because of plants accumulated on it, had the appearance of an island and a garden, was joined by cords of gold and purple to boats shaped like fish, swans, mews, and flamingoes, in which sat at painted oars naked rowers of both sexes, with forms and features of marvelous beauty, their hair dressed in Oriental fashion, or gathered in golden nets. When Nero arrived at the main raft with Poppaea and the Augustians, and sat beneath the purple tentroof, the oars struck the water, the boats moved, the golden cords stretched, and the raft with the feast and the guests began to move and describe circles on the pond. Other boats surrounded it, and other smaller rafts, filled with women playing on citharae and harps, women whose rosy bodies on the blue background of the sky and the water and in the reflections from golden instruments seemed to absorb that blue and those reflections, and to changë and bloom like flowers.

* *

There is not space to sketch the conversion of Vinicius by Lygia nor to reproduce the striking scene in the cemetery at Ostranium, where the bold patrician hears the Apostle Peter announce so simply the strange doctrines of Christianity. If it were only for these passages and the splendid chapters which describe the burning of Rome and the coming of Nero and his lute, playing on the Appian aqueduct, the book is worth reading. The interest culminates, however, in the rescue of Lygia by her servant Ursus the Lygian in the Amphitheater. With the other Christians she has been condemned to martyrdom, and all efforts of Vinicius and Petronius fail to save her. The cruel massacre of Christians in the arena have all occurred, and her death is the final scene in the brutal and bloody spectacle to which the tyrant and Tigellinus have treated Rome. Ursus, whose devotion to Lygia has been part of the idyll of his life, is also a Christian and is noted for his immense strength. As he stepped into the circus all Rome gazed wonderingly at his "mighty limbs, as large as tree-trunks, at his breasts as large as two shields joined together, and his arms of a Hercules. He stood more like a Colossus than a man," until the appearance of the great bull. Here is the scene:

* *

In fact, they had not long to wait. Suddenly the shrill sound of brazen trumpets was heard, and at that signal a grating opposite Caesar's podium was opened, and into the arena rushed, amid shouts of beast-keepers, an enormous German aurochs, bearing on his head the naked body of a woman.

"Lygia! Lygia!" cried Vinicius.

This time the amphitheater was silent. The Augustians rose in their places, as one man, for in the arena something uncommon had happened. That Lygian, obedient and ready to die, when he saw his Queen on the horns of the wild beast, sprang up, as if touched by living fire, and, bending forward, he ran at the raging animal.

From all breasts a sudden cry of amazement was heard, after which came deep silence.

The Lygian fell on the raging bull in a twinkle, and seized him by the horns.

"Look!" cried Petronius, snatching the toga from the head of Vinicius.

The latter rose and bent back his head; his face was as pale as linen, and he looked into the arena with a glassy, vacant stare.

All breasts ceased to breathe. In the amphitheater a fly might be heard on the wing. People could not believe their own eyes. Since Rome was Rome, no one had seen such a spectacle.

The Lygian held the wild beast by the horns. The man's feet sank in the sand to his ankles, his back was bent like a drawn bow, his head was hidden between his shoulders, on his arms the muscles came out so that the skin almost burst from their pressure; but he had stopped the bull in his tracks. And the man and the beast remained so still that the spectators thought themselves looking at a picture showing a deed of Hercules or Theseus, or a group hewn from stone. But in that apparent repose there was a tremendous exertion of two struggling forces. The bull sank his feet as well as did the man in the sand, and his dark, shaggy body was curved so that it seemed a gigantic ball. Which of the two would fail first, which would fall first?—that was the question for those spectators enamored of such struggles; a question which at that moment meant more for them than their own fate, than all Rome and its lordship over the world. That Lygian was in their eyes then a demigod worthy of honor and statues. Caesar himself stood up as well as others. He and Tigellinus, hearing of the man's strength, had arranged this spectacle purposely, and said to each other with a jeer, "Let that slayer of Croton kill the bull which we choose for him." So they looked now with amazement at that picture, as not believing that it could be real.

In the amphitheater were men who had raised their arms and remained in that posture. Sweat covered the faces of others, as if they themselves were struggling with the beast. In the circus nothing was heard save the sound of flame in the lamps, and the crackle of bits of coal as they dropped from the torches. Their voices died on the lips of the spectators, but their hearts were beating in their breasts as if to split them. It seemed to all that the struggle was lasting for ages. But the man and the beast continued on in their monstrous exertion; one might have said that they were planted in the earth.

Meanwhile a dull roar resembling a groan was heard from the arena, after which a brief shout was wrested from every breast, and again there was silence. People thought themselves dreaming till the enormous head of the bull began to turn in the hands of the barbarian. The face, neck and arms of the Lygian grew purple; his back bent still more. It was clear that he was rallying the remnant of his superhuman strength, but that he could not last long.

Duller and duller, hoarser and hoarser, more and more painful grew the groan of the bull as it mingled with the whistling breath from the breast of the giant. The head of the beast turned more and more, and from the jaws came a long, foaming tongue.

A moment more, and to the ears of the spectators sitting nearer, came, as it were, the crack of breaking bones; then the beast rolled on the earth with his neck twisted in death.

The giant removed in a twinkle the ropes from the horns of the bull, and, raising the maiden, began to breathe hurriedly. His face became pale, his hair stuck together from sweat, his shoulders and arms seemed flooded with water. For a moment he stood as if only half conscious; then he raised his eyes and looked at the spectators.

The amphitheater had gone wild.

The walls of the building were trembling from the roar of the tens of thousands of people. Since the beginning of spectacles there was no memory of such excitement. Those who were sitting on the highest rows came down, crowding in the passages between benches to look more nearly at the strong man. Everywhere were heard cries for mercy, passionate and persistent, which soon turned into one unbroken thunder. That giant had become dear to those people enamored of physical strength; he was the first personage in Rome.

He understood that the multitude were striving to grant him his life and restore him his freedom, but clearly his thought was not on himself alone. He looked around awhile; then approached Caesar's podium, and, holding the body of the maiden on his outstretched arms, raised his eyes with entreaty, as if to say:

"Have mercy on her! Save the maiden. I did that for her sake!"

The spectators understood perfectly what he wanted. At sight of the unconscious maiden, who near the enormous Lygian seemed a child, emotion seized the Senators and Knights. Her slender form, as white as if chiseled from alabaster, her fainting, the dreadful danger from which the giant had freed her, and finally her beauty and attachment, had moved every heart. Some thought the man a father begging mercy for his child. Pity burst forth suddenly like a flame. They had had blood, death and torture in sufficiency. Voices choked with tears began to entreat mercy for both.

Meanwhile Ursus, holding the girl in his arms, moved around the arena, and with his eyes and with motions begged her life for her. Now Vinicius started up from his seat, sprang over the barrier which separated the front places from the arena, and, running to Lygia, covered her naked body with his toga. Then he tore apart the tunic on his breast, laid bare the scars left by wounds received in the Armenian war, and stretched out his hands to the audience.

Then the enthusiasm of the multitude passed everything seen in a circus before. The crowd stamped and howled. Voices calling for mercy grew simply terrible. People not only took the part of the athlete, but rose in defense of the soldier, the maiden, their love. Thousands of spectators turned to Caesar with flashes of anger in their eyes and clenched fists.

But Caesar halted and hesitated.

* *

Caesar yields unwillingly. His cruel soul yearns for the death of the maid, but Rome will not have it so, and she is saved for the arms of Vinicius.

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Ieuch, proprietors.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

$5,000 will purchase half interest in United States patent controlling one of the most profitable advertising devices ever offered to the public. The device pays 25% per month on cost. Over $4,000 has already been realized from the sale of the right for three counties in California alone. The enterprise is well worth the immediate investigation of the most cautious investor. Serious illness of owner necessitates the sale. Address R. A. L., care The Wave.

Vintine Facts!

It cures nervous people, and is known as one of the greatest nerve foods, nutrient tonics, and blood and muscle-builders. It is pleasant to take and permanent in results. Not a patent medicine, but a regular prescription that bears the contents on the label. For weak, nervous women and overworked business-men, it stands without a peer. Try it and you will not be disappointed in results . . . . .

SOLD AT
Brooks' Homœopathic Pharmacy
119 Powell Street
AND AT DRUG STORES

MANUFACTURED BY THE Vintine Company
SAN FRANCISCO AND NEW YORK

Vintine Liver Pills Make a Lively Liver Try them! 25 cents

Polished Hardwood Floors
$1.50 per Square Yard
Fine Work—First-class References
INLAID FLOOR CO.
602 Market St., Crocker Building
Telephone Main 5998

Quintessence of Quality

QUALIFIES
THE QUEEN
OF TOMATO CATSUPS CURTICE BROS.
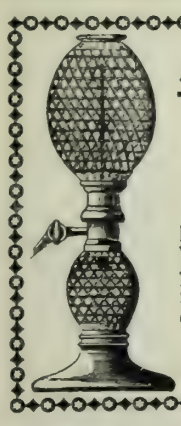
"Blue Label"
AS THE BEST!

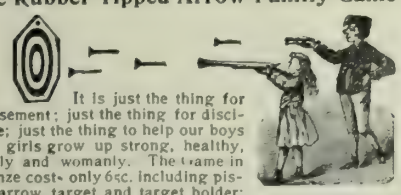
PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
Sherwood & Sherwood
SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.
19 Spear St., San Francisco
MANUFACTURERS OF
High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease
DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS
Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work



A Home
MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A
GAZOGENE
BUT NOT
If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See
Justinian Caire
521-523 Market St., San Fran.

The Rubber Tipped Arrow Family Game



It is just the thing for amusement; just the thing for discipline; just the thing to help our boys and girls grow up strong, healthy, manly and womanly. The Game in Bronze costs only 65c. including pistol, arrow, target and target holder; in nickel, 90c., all complete.
ELASTIC TIP CO., 735 Market Street
Patentees and Manufacturers of Rubber Specialties

Wedding Invitations
are properly engraved
and in correct form, at
ROBERTSON'S

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard
ALSO
Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks
From 30 to 120 inches wide
Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks
Manufactured by Mount Vernon Company Baltimore
Murphy, Grant & Co. Pacific Coast Sole Agents

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE
LANE & LANE
Attorneys and Counselors
Room 202
Crocker Building, San Francisco

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING
HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO
901 Sutter Street

THEIR BETTER HALVES

Personalities of the Wives of the New Cabinet Ministers.

The ladies of the new "Cabinet Circle" are just at present the objects of much attention—indeed, the fierce light that has the habit of beating about a throne is a mild glow in comparison with the steady glare that, like a searchlight, has been turned upon the lives and antecedents of these grande dames of Columbia's new court. It must be indeed gratifying, as well as a source of much edification to the great American public, to know just what these lives are, and just how numerous these antecedents. The very fact that they are Cabinet ladies is enough, it seems, to justify the daily press in ascribing to them every grace of manner and of form, but in reality one shrewdly suspects that they resemble the majority of middle-aged wives in being plain, comfortable, everyday bodies, not so very much unlike a hundred thousand others, after all.

Before her marriage Mrs. McKinley was Miss Ida Saxton, the daughter of an Ohio banker. She held a position in her father's bank, and it was over the cashier's counter that she first became acquainted with the future President. This acquaintance grew in proportion as time went on, and it resulted finally in marriage in 1871. This love story of Mr. and Mrs. McKinley might well be termed "The Romance of a Country Bank." Otherwise, the new lady of the White House is of middle height, has great, dark eyes, a sweet, firm face and short brown hair, which curls about a head of the type that one might choose for a medallion. She is a gentle, amiable woman, and will bring to the presidential mansion, along with a collection of valuable diamonds of which she is very fond, much experience in Washington society.

Mrs. Hobart, the wife of the Vice President, is the fortunate possessor of a face that is said to be "lighted up by a pair of dark, half-mischievous eyes that mirror the changing moods of an active and sympathetic mind." It is quite probable that Mrs. Hobart never knew this about her face before. That it is now brought so forcibly and vividly to her notice is no doubt due to the "enterprise" and "push" of some "new" journalist—a space writer, perhaps. As a young man, Mrs. Hobart's better three-fourths studied law under Socrates Tuttle of Paterson, N. J., and from his daughter Jennie took lessons in love. As the proper and highly respectable consequence a wedding occurred between the two young people. According to the same veracious authority we have it that Mrs. Hobart is of a cheery disposition, is a wide reader, is well up on politics, and is deeply interested in all sorts of charitable work.

Mrs. Sherman, the spouse of the Secretary of State, has spent winters in Washington for more than forty years, and in all that time has distinguished herself for her affability and what the Italians call "sympatica." She entertains frequently in her big white marble mansion, assisted by the women of her home circle, all of whom are young and charming—desirable attributes in society, though, singularly enough, they are the characteristics of the wife of every prominent leader of national politics.

Mrs. Alger is descended on both sides from Revolutionary parents; she has five children, two of whom are married. She possesses a kind heart, graceful manners, a strong nature and, incidentally, of course, money enough to ignite the proverbial dripping canine. In addition to all this Mrs. Alger is a gracious hostess and one of the best of mothers. Truly an exceptionally happy combination of virtue and fortune, quite idyllic, in fact.

Mrs. John D. Long, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, is small, dresses simply, and has the appearance of a typical New England school mistress, which, by the way, she was, until she married her husband, who has been Governor of Massachusetts and a member of Congress.

Very different from Mrs. Long is Mrs. Gary, who is very much interested in society and all that pertains thereto. Our own Mrs. McKenna has had a Washington experience that will be of much value to her during the coming four years. She has also the distinction of being the first Cabinet lady from California—a distinction that may make a difference to her successors. She is quite a handsome woman, thoroughly able to make the best of her husband's fortune.

Think of the luck—the Attorney General of the United States commenced life as a baker's boy in Suisun, a tiny California village. Yet no one has ever called him a genius, and he is not a millionaire.

Around the courtship and marriage of Mrs. Lyman J. Gage centers "tout un roman." She and her present husband were betrothed by telegraph; he was in Florida, and she here in San Francisco. Mrs. Gage was the widow of her husband's brother, and it was during this courtship that she first became acquainted with the future Secretary of the Treasury. She is described as a past grand mistress of the art of dinner giving. At any of the affairs over which she presides there is not only a feast of reason and a flow of soul, but also material comforts quite beyond criticism.

From all this it would appear that the wives of the new Cabinet members are likely to acquit themselves creditably in their social duties. Up to the moment they have lived their lives uneventfully, little reckoning of the greatness our glorious country has now thrust upon them. Some of them possess wealth and social position; all are endowed with the average amount of amiability and culture which generally accompanies them. An enterprising press will keep them and their doings well before the people; their movements will be carefully chronicled, and their gowns and ailments will receive similar treatment, and for all this an impressionable public, who believe everything they read in the Sunday papers, will, of course, be duly grateful. There may be, perhaps, a cynical few (led, no doubt, by the wives of those gentlemen who wanted to be Cabinet Ministers) who will carp and cavil and gird at the Cabinet ladies for their good fortune, but these, like the poor, we have always with us.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream — it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

LITERARY REISSUES

A New Measure of "Life"—The Veracious History of a Snob.

"Soldiers and Civilians" (American Publishers' Corporation) by Ambrose Bierce, is one of those volumes of fiction destined to gain their popularity only by slow degrees. That these stories will attain a prominent place in American literature at some future day is about as certain as that rivers run to the sea. No doubt one of the drawbacks of these tales—the one that sticks fastest in the crop of the G. P.—is the impossibility of their ever having occurred. But it is the improbable that damns a work of fiction, not the impossible. Mr. Bierce's premises once granted, nothing could be of stranger effect that such tales as "An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge," or "The Middle Toe of the Right Foot," or "The Watcher by the Dead." Mr. Bierce is at his best in those tales which turn upon the power of suggestion upon the mind where the imagination may be so distorted as to produce death. There is, perhaps, something more than a reminiscence of Poe in some of the weirder tales, but for all that Mr. Bierce has shown a power of original conception that we repeat will in time raise him to a high rank among authors of America.

Mrs. Hungerford's "Nor Wife Nor Maid" (American Publishers' Corporation) is one of those "novels" whose public is made up for the most part from the ranks of shop girls and of the inmates of boarding schools "of the baser sort." It is a miserable medley of intrigue and passion that never rises to the dignity of drama. The situations are forced, the characters absurdly unnatural, the plot a mere rehash of old themes, long since worn out. By a constant use of the present tense in every phase of the narration "The Duchess" has exclusively aimed to produce vividness of effect. She has gone wide of her mark, however; the only effect [illegible] ing being one of deadly monotony.

The "Square of Sevens," (Harper & Brothers), by Irenaeus Stevenson, is a little treatise on fortune telling by cards, related in archaic language with accompanying diagrams. There is an apparent straining after effect throughout, even if one were disposed to take the treatise seriously. It is safe to make the statement that the book will attract little interest beyond those who have made cartomancy a very serious study.

This is a tale of a certain "Mr. Bailey-Martin," (The American Publishers' Corporation), son of a small London grocer who becomes a social leader and a member of parliament. How these ends are compassed is told autobiographically by Bailey-Martin himself. They are accomplished by the meanest and most contemptible subterfuges, being hypocrisy, slander, etc. There is a grim sarcasm in the tale, since Mr. Bailey-Martin—as great a blackguard as ever dodged the noose—achieves a certain bad eminence, from which even the disreputable affair with "Mimi" does not quite succeed in dislodging him. There is a good love story interwoven with the tale, and, altogether, the history of Mr. Bailey-Martin is well worth while reading. The style is direct and incisive and many of the situations have considerable dramatic value.

After turning over some twenty or thirty of the illustrated humorous weeklies of two continents that come to hand upon our table, we are led to the conclusion that there are none of them equal to our own "Life." "Life" is a clean, fearless little paper, witty rather than broadly humorous, invariably apropos, interesting, and amusing. But it is not merely a funny paper. Its observations on literature, on art, on the drama, and on politics are as incisive and pungent as any of the periodicals that specialize in these branches. Of late "Life" has added to its pages a move that readers all over the country will hail with delight, as one can hardly get too much of this charming publication. From an artistic standpoint "Life" may be said to have done more in educating the public to an appreciation of draughtmanship than any paper ever published in America. It has introduced to the world such artists as Gibson, Wenzell, and Sullivant, and for this, if for nothing else, the world should be in its debt.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE, formerly at Herman, at Strozynski's, has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

How's This.

We offer one hundred dollars reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last fifteen years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRUAX, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo.
WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is take internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggists. Testimonials free.

Wise people seeking advice on important matters consult only the best authorities. Thos. Cook & Son are the recognized authorities on Travel in all Civilized Countries. The knowledge attained during their fifty-six years of experience as travel experts, is at the disposal of all intending travelers. San Francisco Office, 621 Market street.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

REASONS FOR USING
Walter Baker & Co.'s
Breakfast Cocoa.

1. Because it is absolutely pure.
2. Because it is not made by the so-called Dutch Process in which chemicals are used.
3. Because beans of the finest quality are used.
4. Because it is made by a method which preserves unimpaired the exquisite natural flavor and odor of the beans.
5. Because it is the most economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article made by WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass. Established 1780.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

BALDWIN THEATRE — AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS

Two weeks, commencing March 15th. Matinee Saturday

FANNY DAVENPORT

Supported by MELBOURNE MACDOWELL

First presentation in San Francisco

GISMONDA

By Victorien Sardou

Saturday Night, March 20th, FEDORA

Davenport-Sardou Silver Souvenir Saturday night to every lady on the lower floor as a mark of remembrance of Miss Davenport's farewell appearances in this city in Sardou plays.

CALIFORNIA THEATRE — AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS

GRAND OPERA SEASON

THE FAMOUS

FRENCH OPERATIC ORGANIZATION

To-night (Saturday) MISS HELYETT!

Tuesday, Grand Novelty, SIGURD

Thursday, double bill: "Noces de Jeannette" and "Cavalleria Rusticana"

Saturday Matinee, "La Juive"

Saturday Night, "Voyage of Suzette"

Tuesday the 23d, "Les Huguenots"

To be followed by "Dragons de Villars," "Aida," etc.

Columbia Theatre.

FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS.

Week of March 15th, First time here of New York's Jolliest Success

The Foundling

By Wm. Lestocq and E. M. Robson

Management Charles Frohman

First appearance here of the famous, the great and only CISSY FITZGERALD, in her inimitable Dances! The Fashionable Rage! See Cissy Wink! March 29th, For Fair Virginia

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, March 15

First times of The Four Cohans and Keating & Walker

Positively last week of the Flying Jordan Vaudevilles

Marlo & Marlo, Horizontal Bar Performers

Virginia Aragon, High Wire Artiste

John Burke & Grace, Forest Comedians

The Olihans. Three-Headed Nondescript

Reserved seats 50 and 25c: balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Every Evening, the Great Success

Scenic and picturesque revival of their Natuical Opera

H. M. S. Pinafore

New Ship Scene! Novel Specialties! Great Cast!

Monday, March 22d, Nicolai's Celebrated Opera

The Merry Wives of Windsor

Reappearance of Laura Millard

LOOK OUT FOR DON JUAN AD LIB!

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : : MANAGERS

Owing to the enormous success of the Greatest Play of the Century

JIM THE PENMAN

It will be continued for another week

Commencing Monday, March 15th

The theatre's record broken!

George Osbourne, Hugo Toland and the Superb Alcazar Company!

15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991

RACING

Recent Events on Two Tracks — The Imbroglio at Ingleside.

The talk of the moment in sporting circles is of changes in the direction of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club. Pending official announcements, the public will do well to avoid taking sides in any alleged dispute between members of the board, and racing men especially should resist temptation to prejudge the case. It is sufficient for the present to say that the reports which are in circulation in print and on men's tongues are not to be relied upon.

Although the fields at Ingleside during the closing days of the last meeting kept up well in point of numbers, no thanks were due to the clerk of the weather. At Emeryville, however, we are so far being treated with more consideration.

Since last writing, that good 3-year-old, Howard S. (imp. Whistle Jacket—Zelica), has, in some measure, proved his return to form by defeating a field of fair horses at a mile. He had a little advantage in the weights, but won his race so emphatically that he is entitled to full credit, particularly as David, the only one of the lot that got anywhere near him, is known to be in good shape just now. This colt has earned distinction many times, and is well worth all the care that can be given him in training and placing. He has not always had the best of jockeyship and has won more than one of his races on his own courage and determination to get there in spite of wretched riding.

After having been eased up for a while, Cash Day has picked up a further pair of brackets in a parody on racing. Applause, to whom the old horse was giving five pounds, being driven hard by Tod Sloan to no purpose, and the rest of the field being anywhere out of it.

The attractions of a $400 purse brought out fifteen 2-year-olds, two of which in the Macdonough stable, namely, Count of Flanders and St. Philip, both sons of St. Carlo, looked like having it all their own way, until Morellito, who had dropped back into the ruck after getting away pretty fairly in a generally bad start, came with a wet sail and nipped out the Count by a head. Sir William, giving away a lot of weight, ran most creditably and came in fourth.

Vile weather and the collapse of the mile special for Magnet, Libertine, Damien and David made Saturday somewhat of a disappointment. The event of the afternoon was the Crocker stakes, a selling sweepstakes for 2-year-olds. Eight youngsters only faced the starter, all of them fairly promising, six of the number having been winners previously, and one of the other two going to the post for the first time. The actual race was limited to Miss Rowena, Aluminum and Estro, who finished in the order named, Duckling and Morellito being the only others that succeeded in making any show. The comparatively high valuation fixed by his owner on the last-named subjected him to top weight, 112 pounds, or fourteen pounds more than the winner carried, but for which he would undoubtedly have given a better account of himself. Both this colt and Aluminum are more than likely to turn the tables on the Burns & Waterhouse filly later on, as they are of the sort that want time to furnish their lengthy frames, and will probably be better served by longer courses than by the short cuts to which they are at present limited. In this event the Australian blood showed up well, as Miss Rowena is out of the Australian mare imp. Paloma, and Aluminum is by the Australian sire imp. Idalium. William Murray brought out the imp. Islington colt, Mica, for his maiden essay, but was unlucky enough to draw outside place, and the youngster, moreover, lamed himself from some cause or another early in the race and had to be pulled up. He is a good looker, and, being blessed with the excellent legs and feet that distinguish his sire, there is no reason why, with care, he should not make a race horse.

In a fairly large field on Monday last St. Philip scored a somewhat easy win, and the following day the Morello filly Morana fulfilled the promise she has given of her ability by scoring another victory.

Wednesday's card did not pan out well, scratchings being numerous in four of the events. The 2-year-old race was landed in good style by Ezell's clever little colt, The Cheat. Thorpe was still somewhat sore, and could not make better than third place, while Hermoso failed to maintain his undoubted speed. Mr. Corrigan started Truth, a very breedy-looking little filly by imp. Sir Modred—imp. Evangeline, but W. Martin was unlucky enough to miss getting away when the barrier rose, and took no part in the race with her.

For the high-weight Piedmont handicap, seven furlongs, a field of eighteen was listed on the card, but only seven of the number sported silk, all the heavyweights but Caspar, 121 pounds, and Yankee Doodle, 123 pounds, declining the contest. The former ran well for six furlongs, but, collared by Lincoln II., 108 pounds, was not able to respond, and had to be content with second honors. Boots' Instigator, 100 pounds, ran a good race and landed third. Lincoln II. has invariably run well in his races this winter, and as he is a nice, well-bred, game little horse he was satisfactory to see him in front for a good stake.

The closing-out sale of Mr. William Corbett's trotting-bred stock in New York can hardly be said to have been a success, though, of course, the small figure of $5,000 paid for old Guy Wilkes, the star of the sale, must be considered in the light of the horse's advanced years and feeble condition. The whole tenor of this and other similar sales for some time past confirms the conviction generally entertained that the market for harness speed has permanently assumed a lower level, and is not likely to recover its one-time elevation. When the well-known hackney stallion, imp. Marquis of Londesboro, now 13 years old, was sold at auction in New York for $12,000, being but $3,000 less than Mr. Henry Fairfax, of Virginia, received for him from Dr. W. Seward Webb, some years ago. Good hackney blood was then scarcer in the land than it is to-day, and times were better generally. It is therefore clear that a horse known to be a producer of good, useful animals, suitable for high-class carriage work, has a stable value. A pedigree alone, however much it may bristle with records of speed, will not meet the requirements of the present day. Good breeding is, of course, indispensable, but it must be backed up by that individuality which combines the possession of good, natural action, power and style. On no other basis can the prestige of a breed of horses be steadily maintained. Many of the leading trotting-horse breeders in the East are showing that they are fully alive to this fact by insisting upon these essentials in their breeding stock, and their example should be closely followed on this coast, if California is to keep pace in horse-breeding with other sections of the country. Only the right type of mares should be bred to sires of high quality, sufficient substance and true make, as well as of fine, bold style in action. It may then fairly be hoped that the breeding of horses for business and family use will prove satisfactory and remunerative to men who understand and attend to it properly. Good horses of the kind are always steadier in the market than any other sort, there not being half the risk and trouble that the thoroughbred and trotter entail to ensure good results, while every now and then fancy prices can be secured for anything out of the common in the way of style and action.

BENEDICT.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

COLUMBIA THEATRE—Extra

Next Thursday Afternoon, March 18, at 3:30

Fourth Symphony Concert

GUSTAV HINRICHS, Director

GERTRUDE AULD-THOMAS, Soprano

HUGO MANSFELDT, Pianist

Schumann's Genoveva Overture, Raff's Piano Concerto, Svendsen's Norwegian Carnival and Massenet's Suite Les Erinnyes

Box Office now open. $1 and 50 cts.

Thoerner & Roesli

FLORISTS

Choice Cut Flowers and Plants

Funeral Designs

Also Artistic Designs made of Imported, Dry, Natural Flowers for Export Purposes a specialty

809 Larkin Street

BETWEEN GEARY AND O'FARRELL, SAN FRANCISCO

Spring Opening

MONDAY AND TUESDAY

March 15th and 16th

French Pattern Hats

AND THE LATEST NOVELTIES IN

Braids, Laces, Hats, Flowers, Malines, Ribbons, etc.

C. E. ADCOCK

10 Kearny Street

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

Fine Furs and Sealskin Garments

To order. Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast. All work guaranteed first-class

AD KOCOUR, Fashionable Furrier

5½ Kearny Street

Upstairs opposite Chronicle. Formerly cutter with Revillion Freres, Paris, London, New York

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, March 8 to 20, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track: buy your tickets to Berkeley.

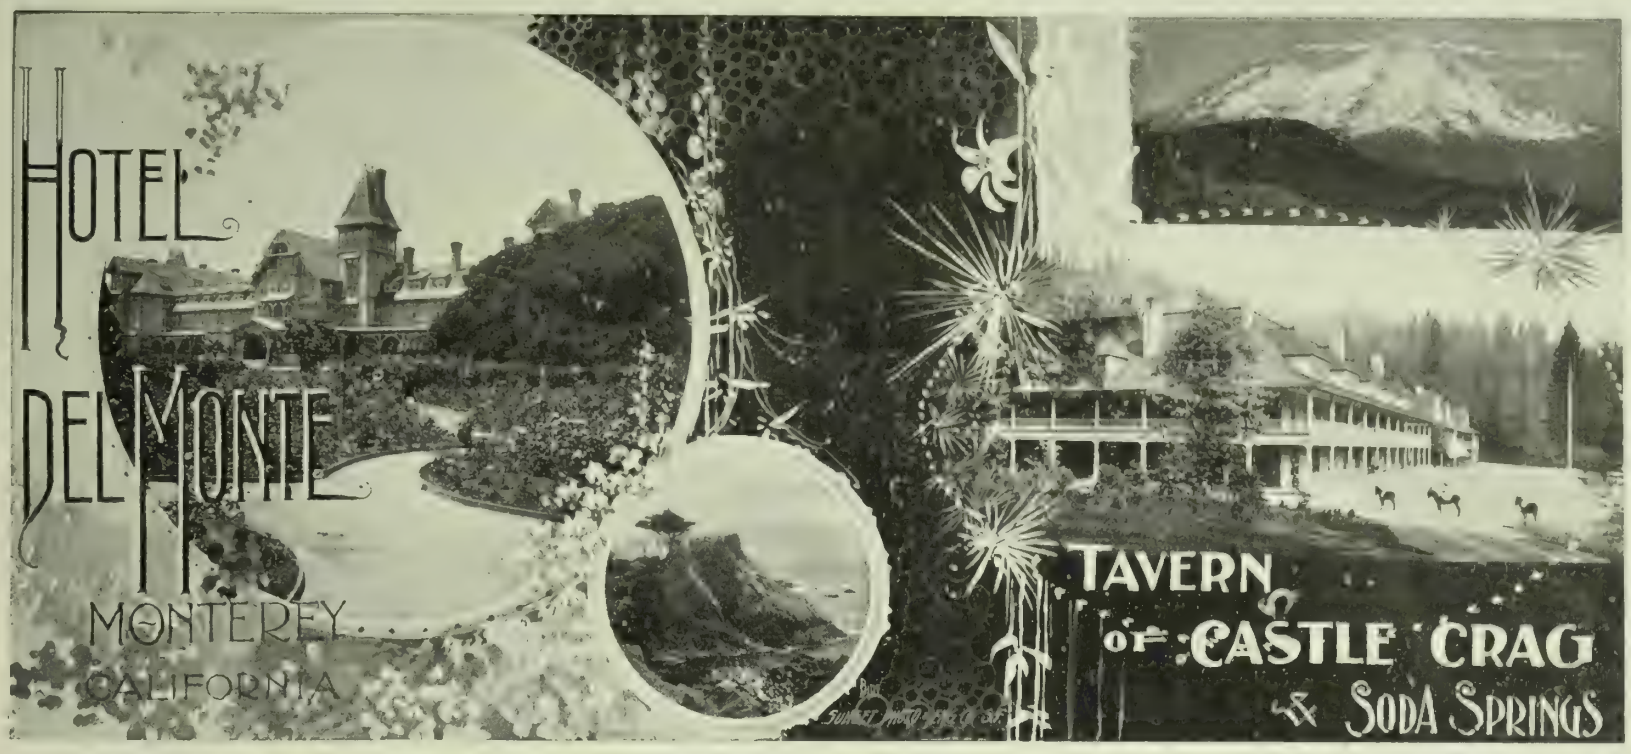
Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.

R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.



THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

BELCHER SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Gold Hill, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 2d day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 54) of twenty-five cents (25c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, San Francisco. Cal. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction: and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the 27th day of April, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. C. L. PERKINS, Secretary.

Office, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, northeast corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF JOHN PHELAN, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

JOHN PHELAN,
Adm. of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, February 7, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN,
Attorney for Administrator.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. F.
Telephone 305

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 18191—Dept. 9.—In the matter of the Estate of SARAH SMITH, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased, with the will annexed, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator, at the office of Frank P. Kelly, 101 Sansome street, rooms 21 and 22, San Francisco, California, the same being the place for the transaction of the business of said estate, in the City and County of San Francisco.

W. R. FELTER,
Adm. of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, February 25, 1897.

FRANK P. KELLY,
Attorney for Administrator.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Occidental Consolidated Mining Co.

Assessment No. 26
Amount per share, 10 cents
Levied February 10, 1897
Delinquent in office, March 16, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 6, 1897

A. K. DURBROW, Secretary,
Office, room 69, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 55
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied March 4, 1897
Delinquent in office April 8, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 9, 1897

J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,

of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

BAJA CALIFORNIA

DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

DR. G. A. DANZIGER

DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

"It gives me great pleasure to accept the dedication of your beautiful songs.
"S. JADASSOLEN, Leipsic."

Song Album by H. B. PASMORE
Nineteen Beautiful Songs Sent for One Dollar
OLIVER DITSON CO., Boston

An Advantageous Offer!

Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan McClure's Magazine
Ladies' Home Journal Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.
Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. TOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.
OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON
Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1726

Capital Paid Up, $3,416,100 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Branch Stores: Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
302 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971. S. W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Whistler, the artist, dropped into Sir Henry Irving's private rooms at the Lyceum one night to take pot luck with him. Other souls were there on the same errand, and of them all "Little Jimmy" alone was silent. Two of his landscapes adorned the walls, and apparently he wanted no further entertainment. They seemed to have an irresistible attraction for him, and every few minutes he would jump up from the table to get a better view of his own work. At length, after a prolonged examination of the studies in moonlight and moorland, he gave vent to a yell. "Irving, Irving, what have you done?" "What's the matter?" inquired Sir Henry, calmy walking up to the pictures. "Matter!" thundered Whistler. "Why, the matter is that these pictures have been hung upside down, and you've never noticed it! I suppose they have been like this for months?" "I suppose they have," responded the actor; "but I think I might be excused, since it has taken you an hour to discover the fact yourself."

A certain Marysville minister, who, on performing the marriage ceremony, always feels it incumbent on him to address a few words of serious advice to the bride and groom, followed this rule in the case of an excellent young woman from the mountains who had presented herself and her man at his vestry. "I hope you fully realize," he said, solemnly, "the extreme importance of the step you are taking, and that you are prepared for it." "Prepared?" she said, innocently; "well, if I ain't prepared for it, I don't know who is. I've got four common quilts and two nice ones, and four brand-new feather-beds, ten sheets, and twelve pairs of pillow-slips, four linen tablecloths, a dozen spoons, and a good six-quart kettle. If I ain't prepared, no girl in this county ever was."

A troupe of wandering musicians were playing before a Swiss hotel. At the end of the performance one of the members left the group, approached the leader of the band, and pulled out a little paper box, which he emptied into his left hand, while the eyes of the leader followed every movement. He then took a plate in his right hand, passed it round, and a large sum was collected, every one meanwhile wondering what he held in his left hand. "Why, it's very simple," said the leader, when questioned. "We are all subject to temptation, and, to be sure of the fidelity of our collector, he has to hold five flies in his left hand, and we count these first when he returns, to make sure of the money."

The late novelist, Charles Reade, was decidedly an epicure. He asked Howard Paul, the well-known journalist, to send him from America a brace of canvasback ducks. Mr. Paul sent him a brace by a quick steamer, with explicit instructions as to how they should be prepared and cooked. He sent by the same messenger a bottle of bay-rum, thinking Mr. Reade knew it as a toilet accessory. It seems not, for he wrote back to the donor—"My dear Paul: The ducks were excellent; I enjoyed them exceedingly; but the bay-rum must be an acquired taste and didn't go at all well with the wild fowl, so I substituted champagne. I liked the bay-rum better made into a hot punch."

They are very democratic in Aberdeen. A little while before the city election a candidate for an office thought he would call on a few of the leading city councillors. He hailed a cab and told the cabman to drive him to Councillor Bissett's, the treasurer. The councillor was found in a blacksmith's shop, shoeing a horse. "I'll see somebody better than this," said the candidate. "Drive me to Councillor Maitland's office." The cabman thereupon drove him to the pawnbroker's. "Drive me to Councillor Gray's," he ejaculated. "I am Councillor Gray, sir!" replied the cabman.

In a provincial theatre, where Macbeth was being recently played by a clever actor, who was also a great favorite with his audience, in the banquet scene he had delivered his words to the ghost of Banquo, "Hence, horrible shadow, hence," when he dropped on his knee, covering his face with his robe and shuddered convulsively. Just as the applause was over, a youth in the gallery, carried away with the intensity of the acting, cried out to him, "It's all right now, Craggs; he's gone!"

The late Professor Huxley was dining at Sir Charles Dilke's. Very stupidly, one of the guests began to deride "divine philosophy," and rudely expressed his opinion that "philosopher" was another way of spelling "fool." "What is your opinion, Professor? Is there much distance between them?" The Professor, with a polite bow to his boorish vis a-vis, responded gravely, "Sometimes only the width of a table."

The little girl had just returned from her elocution lesson, and had evidently made a discovery. "Mama," she said, "I know now why they say gesture," and she said the last word very slowly, accentuating both syllables. "And why?" asked her mama. "Because," replied the little one, "you are never 'jest sure' when to put it in!"

An English clergyman recently came across some small boys vigorously playing marbles. It was Sunday, and the good man was deeply shocked. "Boys! Boys!" he said, "you shouldn't play marbles to-day. Sunday's a day of rest." "Yes, sir," piped the smallest boy; "we knows it; but we ain't tired, sir."

A man went home the other night and found his house locked up. After infinite trouble, he managed to gain entrance through a back window, and then discovered on the table a note from his very thoughtful wife, which ran thus: "I have gone out. You will find the key at the side of the step."

"From what you say, madam," said the divorce lawyer, "your husband must have been a brute." "Indeed, sir?" responded the fair applicant. "I will consult another lawyer. I came here to get a divorce, sir, not to hear my husband abused."

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

. . OF . .

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Mateo and Cottages

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A charming resort, both winter and summer. A pleasant forty-minutes' ride by rail from San Francisco, with frequent train-service.

Delightful surroundings and comparative freedom from fog, together with all essentials to the comfort and pleasure of the guests, combine to recommend Hotel Mateo to those who appreciate such advantages.

Illustrated descriptive souvenir sent upon application. F. A. SHEPARD, Manager.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS—
—scrupulously clean;
—accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
—conveniently situated for business men;
—a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
—moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED OCCIDENTAL HOTEL SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., San Francisco

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

SUNSET LIMITED

The Famous Palatial Flyer

BETWEEN

San Francisco and New Orleans

SEMI-WEEKLY

EASTBOUND

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Lv. San Francisco | 10.00 P.M. | Tues. and Sat. |
| Lv. Los Angeles | 3.00 P.M. | Wed. and Sun. |
| Ar. El Paso | 4.40 P.M. | Thurs. and Mon. |
| Ar. New Orleans | 6.55 A.M. | Sat. and Wed. |

WESTBOUND

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Lv. New Orleans | 10.00 A.M. | Mon. and Thurs. |
| Lv. El Paso | 8.05 P.M. | Tues. and Fri. |
| Ar. Los Angeles | 7.45 P.M. | Wed. and Sat. |
| Ar. San Francisco | 12.45 P.M. | Thurs. and Sun. |

Agreeable connections in New Orleans with through limited trains for Eastern cities.
To St. Louis in 24 hours; Chicago, 27 hours; Cincinnati, 24 hours; Atlanta, 15 hours; Washington, 34 hours; Philadelphia, 38 hours; New York, 40 hours; Boston, 50 hours.
Delightfully equable climate en route; train service unapproachably superb throughout; quick time; no additional cost.

TAKE SUNSET LIMITED

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. March 12, 17, 22 and 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, Mar. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. Mar. 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. Mar. 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. March 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.
The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Mar. 23, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates
S. S. "Mariposa," for Australia, Thursday, April 1, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.
Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

HIRSCH & KAISER

Successors to HIRSCH, KAHN & CO.

Opticians

Will remove March 1st to

NO. 7 KEARNY STREET

Opposite the Chronicle Building

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

San Francisco's Crazy Architecture — The Tennessee Exposition

THE WAVE

VOL XVI. No. 12 — SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 20, 1897 — PRICE 10 CTS

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This P... to be taken ... the Library ...

PRESIDENT RENE BARRIOS

President Barrios formally opened the International Exposition at Guatemala on March 15th.

Photo by Taber

THE WAVE

's published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 20, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2 3 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 3 |
| An Unconventional Interview with Cissy Fitzgerald; by Gelett Burgess | 4 |
| San Francisco's Crazy Architecture | 5 |
| The Thawing of Old Frost; by John S. Partridge | 5 |
| Some Architectural Monstrosities | 6 |
| The Guatemalan Diaz | 7 |
| Money the Peacemaker | 7 |
| Views of the Site of the Tennessee Centennial | 8 |
| An Artist in Hawaii; by Fred Yates | 9 |
| The Tennessee Centennial | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| An Emperor's Wooing: a Review | 12 |
| The Theatres | 13 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

"NEW JOURNALISM" THAT IS JOURNALISM.

The Sacramento "Bee" has delighted its friends, confounded its enemies, and startled the entire community, with as clever and as commendable a piece of combined newspaper and detective work as ever lay to the credit of an American journal. But besides this, the "Bee" has done something more than demonstrate its enterprise by running to earth a gang of unprincipled blackmailers. It has taken the lead in a direction which "new journalism" might follow with profit to itself and to the public. This achievement of the "Bee," which is without a parallel in this State's history, may be briefly stated thus: For some time it has been suspected that there existed in Sacramento a combination of blackmailers organized for the purpose of compelling gamblers and other law-breakers to contribute monthly sums for protection from newspaper exposure and police interference. One Sheehan, a "reformer" and proprietor of the Sacramento "Sunday News," was shrewdly suspected of being one of the leaders of this combination, and a watch was set on him. About the close of last year the "Bee" in a methodical manner began the investigation.

On the 18th of December there arrived at Sacramento a Mr. C. J. Von Arnold, a distinguished-appearing German, who was reported as a wealthy Chicago saloonkeeper seeking to establish a combined gambling, concert and beer hall in the capital city. Mr. Von Arnold was free with his money, with his tongue, and with his showy pink business cards. He was not a thin-skinned Puritan, but was a man of the world and understood that to secure police protection he must pay for it. He was soon rated as a "thoroughbred." The proprietor of the "Sunday News" was not slow in scenting out Mr. Von Arnold, and as acquaintance ripened into friendship, which it did with remarkable rapidity, the editor of that very excellent family journal indicated to the ex-Chicago capitalist that freedom from exposure of his gambling house might be insured him by payment of one hundred dollars per month to his Sabbath day "News." The editor was all fairness, and to indicate to the stranger that no discrimination was proposed against him he satisfactorily showed that a monthly fee of one hundred dollars was customary from the other gambling houses in that municipality. The evidence thus obtained against Mr. Sheehan was of a most overwhelming and convincing character, but the detective also learned, to the great astonishment of his employers, that certain members of the Sacramento Board of Trustees must likewise be considered in a money sense in the matter. While the expense of further investigation was not slight, the "Bee" proprietors determined to follow it to the end. Among the city Trustees and their agents the detective worked for several weeks, and by ingenious devices, set out in Saturday's "Bee," effectually trapped as sorry a lot of lawbreakers as ever disgraced a California community. The story, with details that would provoke a horse to laugh, is told in the "Bee" of March 13th, and each day since then a chapter has been added to the tale of crime unearthed by the enterprise of this journal. This is, indeed, new journalism.

There is an old journalism and there is a new. The new journalism that has been forced upon the attention of the American public is now typified by the New York "World" and "Journal" and the San Francisco "Examiner." The old journalism needs no introduction. "The Wave" does not approve of the new journalism of the "World" and the "Journal." Their attitude is that of the common scold and fakir. True, they charge crime indiscriminately to public officers and sometimes specifically without the ability to sustain their accusations with proof. Their work is of the veriest slipshod character, and is purely sensational, without having real merit behind it. The journalism that has just come to the front through the "Bee" is a journalism that makes for good and for the benefit of government. It is a sort of journalism that purges the body politic of the infamous and degraded wretches who fasten themselves in fat office: it is a character of journalism that exposes the cancerous sores that threaten our existence, and plies the scalpel knife for their eradication. It is not abusive, it is not scandalous, it is not demagogic, it is not sensational; but it is honest, legitimate journalism backed up by courage and enterprise, of which no man need stand in fear who is not a public rascal and a thief. The "Bee" has set the pace which new journalism in America should follow. We know, if we know anything, that our public officials are often rascals, and that our State and municipal governments are often rotten to the core. To improve this condition of affairs and eradicate its consequent evils should be the highest aim of the modern journalist.

THE DAMNATION OF J. J. INGALLS.

A bright young man named White lifted himself into fame in a single night by an editorial written for a Kansas City paper, in which, in answer to the question, "What's the matter with Kansas?" he declared that Kansas started in to raise hell and was now suffering from over-production. Hitherto, this is the most satisfactory explanation that has been given to the world for the persistence of Kansas in going Populistic and sending such freaks of mind and hair as Peffer to the Senate. But there is another and a better reason.

Kansas sends Populists to the Senate because her standing Republican candidate is John Jacob Ingalls. The country has had something of an admiration for Mr. Ingalls, and has wondered often why such a man should be sent to the rear to give place to men of less ability and of no fame. But Kansas knew Mr. Ingalls better than the country. When she took her choice between the Populist and Ingalls she took the Populist, not because she loved him more, but because she loved Ingalls less. The country is now prepared to agree that the choice she made was wise, for the man who has been Vice-President of the United States and can fall so low as to become a reporter of prize fights for the New York "Journal" can hardly be said to have the sense of dignity and decency which would place him on a plane superior to that of a Coxey or a Cator. We can imagine no sufficient excuse for Mr. Ingalls' act. He has been honored by the people of the United States as few men living have been. Twice or more he was chosen the presiding officer of our highest legislative body, and once, had our executive died, he would, under the law, have been the President of the United States. He was a candidate before the people of his own State last November for election to the United States Senate, and up to this time has been regarded as a brilliant though somewhat erratic man. Though he were in actual want, his family destitute and on the verge of starvation, he could not be excused for consorting with pluguglies, gamblers and saloon-keepers. It is safe to say that no other man of equal prominence in the world could be hired by a newspaper to dip his pen in the blood of the prizering that the sports of the world might have the honor of reading an account of a prize fight by an ex-Vice-President. He knows that those who hired him did so that they might be able to exploit his hitherto honored name in the interest of the most degraded sport that civilized nations tolerate. In doing this work he has placed himself on a level with those women who exploit their sex for the benefit of a salacious and nasty-minded reading public. The name of Ingalls can no longer be honored by men of his own party. He has by his own act proved himself to be willing to do any act which those who pay his salary may command. He has forever made it impossible to receive further honor from the American people. He has presented an instance unparalleled of the depths to which a man may fall, in whom conscience has been deadened by long contact with those who do politics. No doubt, he is unable to see himself as the country sees him. The atmosphere in which he has lived has been such as to deprive him of that nice sense which keeps alive the pride of honor and respectability. For two things he sold himself, money and advertisement. Through his position he was able to keep in the public eye for years by cutting and epigramatic speeches. No longer having that position, he still craves notoriety as an aged imbecile actress flutters to the footlights in the hope that she may once again hear the applause which made her youth so happy. But the attention which is now paid to ex-Senator Ingalls is not a tribute of respect, but an evidence of the horror and repulsion felt by the people who have honored the man, and who has proved himself unworthy.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY AND THE FREE-TRADE DEMOCRATS.

If there was ever any question in the minds of the American people as to what concessions President McKinley would make to the free-trade-gold-Democrats who came to his support in the late campaign, it has been answered by his inaugural address and his first message to Congress. In the former the President declared that "nothing has ever been plainer at a general election than that the controlling principle in the revenue from duties on imports is jealous care for American interests and American labor." His first message to Congress is a plain, straightforward protection document, devoid of rhetoric and polished periods. He directs the attention of Congress to the fact that the expenses of the Government are greater than its receipts, and declares that an examination of the subject leads inevitably to the conclusion that the revenue that allows this deficit is unjustifiable and should be adjusted. He points out that in 1892, under a high tariff, the excess of receipts over expenditures amounted to over nine million dollars, and that during that fiscal year over forty million dollars had been paid on the public debt. He also points out that in 1894, under the Wilson tariff, there was a deficit of nearly seventy million dollars, which was the first since the resumption of specie payments, and that this deficit occurred notwithstanding the fact that there was a decrease of over sixteen million dollars in the ordinary expenses of the Government, as compared with the previous fiscal year. "Congress should promptly correct the existing condition," says the message. "The necessity for the passage of a tariff law which shall provide ample revenue need not further be urged. The imperative demand of the hour is the prompt enactment of such a measure."

These words will chill the heart of many a Democrat who flew to the McKinley standard because it was the single standard, and yet we cannot but admit that had not Mr. McKinley been recognized as the leader and apostle of protection, he would never have received the nomination at the hands of his party, nor would he today have been President of this nation. The silver question at the time of the Republican convention had not taken on the importance that was subsequently given it by the Democrats at Chicago. The action of the silver Republicans in walking out of the St. Louis convention did not foreshadow the coming of a Bryan. It was supposed then that the shibboleths of the campaign would be "Protection" and "Free-trade," and for this reason Mr. Hanna found it possible to so easily overthrow the combinations of Platt and Quay. The first official act of Mr. McKinley has been to push the helm hard down and shape the governmental course in a direction diametrically opposed to that of his predecessor. It is folly to say the people did not expect this of him, and it is too much for the free-trade-gold-Democrats to demand that he forsake or modify the principles of his party as a concession to them. Should President McKinley so alter his tariff views to meet the approbation of the free-trade-gold-Democrats, and should the Democratic party again come into the control of the Clevelands and the Carlisles, there would be no issues left between the parties. The protection message of the President is what was to be expected; it is a Republican message, and he is justified in believing that it will meet with the approbation of the great majority of his party to whom he owes his nomination and election.

We do not often find ourselves in sympathy or agreement with the attitude of the "Examiner," but the stand taken by its managing editor in preferring imprisonment to the violation of an obligation that journalistic practice and tradition has crystallized into a concrete rule of journalistic honor, commands our respect and admiration. In law, there is no justification for the "Examiner's" refusal to answer the prying interrogatory that sought to uncover the identity of the individuals furnishing them with information, but in honor and all the unwritten rules of journalism, to have failed to preserve inviolate these names would have been treachery unforgivable. Argument upon argument might be made to sustain the claim that such communications are, or ought to be, privileged and entitled to exemption from prying legislative or judicial inquiry, equally with communications passing between lawyer and client, or physician and patient. But the courts cannot take these elements into consideration. In the absence of a specific statutory declaration, neither custom nor practice nor the ethics of journalism can avail, for immunity from inquiry is purely statutory.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL AGAIN.

"The Wave" was the first journal on the Pacific coast to denounce the iniquitous Nicaragua canal job that was, for some inexplicable reason, receiving the wild and thoughtless support of the entire local community. The Mayor, our Boards of Trade, Mercantile Associations of every class and character, by telegraph and letter urged upon our Senators and Representatives at Washington immediate action. Their messages were clad in such warm literary garments of patriotism that one would have supposed none but a traitor to his country could have objected to the passage of that most beneficent measure. Now, however, it is generally conceded among disinterested, intelligent men that the promoters of this Nicaragua bill were mere adventurers hungry to dip into the millions of governmental credit that the bill proposed to grant, and we may thank our fortunes rather than foresight that we escaped them.

The Republican platform upon which Mr. McKinley was elected declared that "The Nicaragua canal should be built, owned and operated by the United States." This is the only sane method to pursue, and if our leading citizens who were enthusiastic for the construction of this work will now display the same energy to secure governmental construction that they did toward furthering the sinister designs of the Maritime Canal Company, we may hope within a short while to learn that the Government is again negotiating with Nicaragua in an endeavor to repair the mischief done by the withdrawal of the Frelinghuysen treaty, which was proposed under the Arthur administration. The question as to what, if any, benefits will come to this city and to this State by the completion of the canal is an open one. The weight of public opinion is to the effect that it will result in our upbuilding and will bring the products of our soil closer to the markets of the world. That New York will be benefited by the canal is apparent; that San Francisco will be is doubtful, and it is a subject fairly open to discussion, the which we promise at a future day.

The death of Gustav Sutro last Thursday terminated a life full of usefulness. I know it is customary when a man of prominence and wealth departs on the long journey for certain of my contemporaries to indulge in glittering compliments about his career, his benefactions and his integrity. In nine cases out of ten the eulogies of the obituary column are as unintelligent as they are erroneous. Few mortals are able to come up to their intentions—I won't say ideals. Most men who think have come to recognize the golden rule as the fairest law of life, and count as their real sins the times they have failed to "let live and live." There have been many kindly words said of the late Gustav Sutro; he has been praised as an honorable and earnest man, who worked industriously and met his obligations. This verdict I have not heard disputed. He was fortunate in having had that training which enables a man to plan for himself and execute as he has determined with no fumbling or indecision. He was admirably educated, came from a strong stock, studied hard and brought to America a thorough knowledge of business and the power to express himself in five languages. No wonder he succeeded and grew rich. A man who possesses the mental control necessary to grapple so with facts, figures and words encounters in life no problem he cannot solve or surmount. Gustav Sutro guided to prosperity two of our biggest corporations, and engineered deal after deal cleanly, cleverly and conclusively. That is his public record, otherwise he cared little for society, lived according to his own lights and no other man's, and died when he had exhausted the measure of life within him. If some others of us can do as well we will be fortunate.

Senator Frye is the father of a bill now before the United States Senate, which proposes that the Department of Commerce and Industry shall have jurisdiction over foreign and internal commerce, and also over all matters concerning the commercial interests of the United States, the extension of foreign markets, and facilities of trade with foreign countries. It also desires that the new department shall have control of the bureaus of life-saving, lighthouses, marine hospitals, steamboat inspection, affairs of navigation, coast and geodetic survey, bureau of statistics and the consular bureau from the State Department. A new feature of the new department is to be a permanent tariff bureau.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The Governor justified my prediction of his intentions in selecting for the important office of Harbor Commissioner an unimportant politician who, but recently, filled a subordinate role in the department which he is now to rule. Major Harney came into notice some years back as a species of third assistant in the Adjutant-General's office under Stoneman. Under Commissioner English he was given a post on the Front as wharfinger. Subsequently he obtained a small place with the Stockton Transportation Company, and acquired a reputation for energy in small politics. Latterly he made himself a part of the Rainey machine, being a friend and go-between for Dr. Ragan, and now is promoted over the heads and shoulders of all the Democrats in town, and appointed to the best place in the Governor's gift. The selection of this man for so prominent a position seems a strange misuse of power. The secret of Major Harney's preferment, however, lies in his insignificance. Of his own deserts—he could never aspire to the position; therefore, he has greater cause for gratitude to the Governor. Mr. Budd is not only his benefactor, but has really created him out of the dust. But it is the first instance of this post being awarded save as the desert for distinguished party service. We may presume that in combination with Editor Colnon Major Harney will use the patronage of the past as the Governor directs. Maybe it will aid the cause which Sam Rainey has undertaken of giving us, two years hence, a recurrence of Governor Budd.

***

It was a great victory. Not for Mr. Robert Fitzsimmons alone—he knew he was to win and had his wife with him to watch the duel, and to give him for his mascot a kiss at the ringside. Not only for the short-end winners of seven to ten wagers on the red-headed Australian. The greatest victory was won by the kinetoscope, that had more money placed on the chance of sunshine than all the bets that were laid upon the gladiators. The kinetoscope people backed the sun against the clouds, and the sun won, the result being that for every man who spent $70 to see the fight, a hundred thousand, more or less, will pay 70 cents to see the fourteen-round contest through the peep-hole of the up-to-date machines. The phonograph company paid the lately celebrated Mr. Butler a hundred dollars to read a few words into the mouthpiece of one of their instruments, and the cylinders that repeat the sentences of the alleged murderer are still being kept hot in their revolutions, urged by the nickels of the curious. Exactly how much money has been invested by the power that incited the recent battle would be hard for an outsider to guess. It was reported that Corbett was furious with rage when he found the decision had been given to his rival, the present champion of the world, but after he had been sponged off and cooled down, he probably made up his mind that all was over. But it has only begun. Pompadour Jim will probably, in the coming year, be knocked out several thousand times a day in every large city in the country. It will be an interesting sight to see the defeated pugilist watching his own gory struggle in the ring, round after round, passing from one machine to another till he reaches the flashing tableau vivant of his Waterloo in No. 14.

***

What is the secret of the "exclusive" advance intelligence to which the "Examiner" has accorded for a month quantities of space extravagantly disproportionate to its value, even in these degenerate days of the New Journalism? How has it tested the interest of the public in the exercise, the feeding and the light persiflage of the heavy-weight combatants? Not by the pulse of their South-of-Market-street clientele, which, though absorbed in the details of the encounter, do not form the most enthusiastic partisans of the pugilistic correspondents. Not by the sporting element, or the tastes of clubmen either, for they do not buy papers in immense quantities; their saloons and club tables supply a dozen readers for every sheet. The major portion of the edition of a modern journal is brought, read and discussed by women. And the New Woman certainly reads prize-fight news, deny it though she may. There is the seductive headline, to lead her first astray—there is the caption below the picture of the champion to lead her on, and before she knows it she is deep in rub-downs, punching bags and beefsteaks. The gossiping females of the boarding-house class cannot keep out of the excitement, the rural districts have Corbett and Fitzsimmons for breakfast, dinner and supper. It is horrid and brutal, but the women readers who devour the newspapers from local to bargain advertisements cannot help wondering which man is going to win. Women have already begun to "elevate" the ring by their presence—we shall have box parties no doubt at the next fight, much as the ultra-fashionable patronize Morosco's to-day. The women will discover a new sensation. They will see an orderly assemblage of men become a frenzied, howling mob at the sight of blood, as it did last Wednesday at Carson City. Indeed, they need not attend the fistic carnival to witness the transformation of man into brute. Even the crowds that blocked Market street in front of the bulletin-boards were transformed and all their primitive instincts boiled up at the simple legend, "First blood for Corbett."

***

The benevolent citizens who contributed sacks of flour, provisions and canned fruits to the "unemployed" two weeks ago, and who gazed with pity at the disreputable crew that paraded the streets begging for bread, would have received a salutary object lesson if they had taken the trip to the Park to see the meagre handful of men that accepted the opportunity of earning a dollar a day in the construction of the Ingleside boulevard. Of the hundreds that marched in the procession of the unemployed, only eighteen men turned up for work on Tuesday morning; the rest are still "unemployed," and undoubtedly intend to remain so as long as they are provided with free sleeping quarters, and the "Chronicle" Relief Bureau keeps open for the benefit of professional mendicants. We have had about enough of this sort of thing. San Francisco is well known to the gentlemen of the road as what is termed "a very good thing." It is the winter stamping-ground for the bum and the hobo. Its charities are distributed with more criminal disregard of merit and need than any Eastern city. Petty jealousies have prevented more than half of the organized benevolent associations from co-operating with the Associated Charities for the systematical investigation of cases, and the consequence is that a beggar is able to swindle one after the other of the societies that do not report cases to the central committee. It should be known by every citizen that there is an office which employs a responsible agent to investigate and report on the cases referred to it. A glance at the Report of the Associated Charities will show a large percentage of "wrong addresses," no one having been found at the alleged homes of the applicants for alms.

***

The task of investigating the cases of the members of the unemployed demonstration was divided between the Associated Charities, the Police Department and the Salvation Army, and the number of false addresses given has conclusively proved the character of the army of vagrants, but the eighteen men willing to work corroborated the discovery. Since then the force on the boulevard has been increased by honester men, not too languid to refuse the dollar a day that was offered for their services. And meanwhile the unemployes are snugly ensconced in the Howard-street Armory, and are organizing with a view to incorporating their very successful venture in "doing" the town!

***

Portraiture is the most exacting and arbitrary of all branches of the painter's art, and by its very nature and purpose it constitutes every acquaintance of the sitter a more or less competent critic. The artist's skill goes for nothing with these people — the painting must be first, last and always a good likeness — it is a success or a failure only in so far as it stands this test. J. D. Strong has recently done some very good work in pastels, and his portraits of members of the Bohemian Club exhibited in the Green Room of that institution have "caught on" to such an extent that Mr. Strong's order-book is bulging with dates for sittings. His first portrait was that of John Luther, which is reproduced in this number. It was the great success of this head that led to the painting of the rest of the series. Mr. Strong has executed portraits of R. G. Brown, W. H. Bagley, John Martin, Albert Miller, and William Payne. Some of these pictures are now on exhibition at the Century Club. Mr. Strong's treatment of these pastels so strongly resembles the brush work of an oil painting that the difference between the two can hardly be detected except upon the closest inspection. These portraits have a further advantage over oils in that their colors do not fade. They are sealed under glass and protected hermetically from the action of the air, while the canvas is so prepared that it permanently retains the color.

***

The recent purchase of the George W. Hooper ranch in Sonoma by Rudolph Spreckels places the latter in possession of one of the finest country seats in the State. It is a property of several hundred fertile acres, and is in proximity to the estate which General Vallejo selected as the most beautiful district in California. It lies between the Bennett, Los Guillicos and Napa valleys, and its soil is as fertile and its climate as soft and delightful as any in the West. The place was purchased by G. W. Hooper after he had made his fortune as a general purveyor of supplies in Arizona, and like most men who have made money on the Pacific slope he came to the Golden State to settle down and enjoy his wealth, and spend it in San Francisco, the gay metropolis of Western millionaires. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Hooper married a Maryland belle, a daughter of one of the Carrolls of Carrollton—and, both being devout Romanists, the villa at his Sonoma place was fitted with a private chapel, where services and high masses were held by special dispensation of the Pope. The Hooper villa became a species of ecclesiastical Mecca for the Catholic clergy, and the family made much of the priests and bishops who so often visited them. However, fortune refused to keep up its smiling. The phylloxera descended on the valley and killed every vine in the splendid vineyard. The wine-making, which was the great industry, came to an end; the revenues decreased, and things went from bad to worse, until the load was too great to carry, and the place has been sold for $75,000, a ridiculous fraction of its original valuation. Mr. Spreckels is to replant the vineyard with resistant stock, and is to be congratulated upon gaining possession of one of the most lovely of the historic California ranchos.

***

One of the most interesting figures in municipal politics is Reginald H. Webster. He was the Republican nominee in the late municipal election for the position of Superintendent of Public Instruction. The Democracy was united, but the Republican party was split into three factions, which refused to amalgamate and between whom there existed much bitterness. Notwithstanding the disadvantages under which he labored, Mr. Webster polled the largest vote of any candidate on the Republican ticket. But his contentions for the place were not to end here. His right thereto was contested upon a technical point, which we note with pleasure the Superior Court has brushed aside, and has declared the subject of this sketch the lawfully elected Superintendent of Public Instruction. The public may expect a creditable administration from Mr. Webster, for he is thoroughly conversant with the school department and all its needs. He was for many years one of the most prominent and popular teachers of the department. He graduated from the University of California early in the history of that institution, and commenced his career as a teacher in the Boys' High School of this city. His abilities soon won him the position of head instructor in mathematics in the Polytechnic High School, and it is safe to predict that he will make the best Superintendent of Public Instruction that the city has had for many years. He will doubtless inaugurate many useful and long needed reforms.

BOSWELL JR.

THE TWINKLING STAR

An Unconventional Interview With Cissy Fitzgeral.

Cissy kept me waiting three-quarters of an hour, which was unkind, seeing that I had sent up a big bunch of violets. For the first quarter I was worried, thinking she might mistake me for a Chappie, for the next I was nervous, wondering what I should say to her, and at last I was indignant at the delay, and cursed myself for having been punctual.

But finally I was permitted to open the door of No. 360, and there was Cissy, in her second-act dress, seated in a chair in the middle of a sheet that was spread on the floor. She looked for all the world like an island of blanc mange in a square lakelet of cream.

She seemed very young—almost too young, at least for the sort of person she is on the stage. I'm sure she must shock herself dreadfully. There was a maid with her, an elderly British maid, with a stiff white collar and hair that needed brushing; she seemed to be putting stitches into the second-act dress, but I felt she was there for purposes of artistic contrast. She tolerated me as if in great devotion to Cissy.

"Do you always interview people with bunches of violets?" began Cissy.

"But this isn't an interview," I replied, "it's a character study."

"Well, I'm glad," said Cissy. "I hate to be interviewed, but perhaps it will be fun to be analyzed. I suppose you'll begin with my looks—they always do. Tell me how you're going to describe me."

"Well," I said, "I shall say that the top of her head was a delicate amber, or citrus color, and that was where the hair was; her face was very, very clean, indeed. She had the sort of beauty that belongs to the gamine, and that gets its complexion from the consumption of Irish potatoes—the beauty that goes with eyes that open very wide and stare very hard, and with the mouth that opens like a curtain to show a very pretty tableau of white teeth, but doesn't talk much, being made more for laughing purposes."

"Is that all?" said Cissy. And Cissy winked.

"Do you mind if I say you remind me of a white mouse?" said I.

"Do you mean in appearance, or intellectually?" said Cissy. "My eyes are not pink!" And she opened them very wide for me to see.

"They're remarkably brown," said I, "but I expected you to be just a little tough, you know."

"But you haven't answered my question!" said Cissy.

"But I came here to ask questions, not to answer them," said I rudely. "Tell me, why are you sitting in the middle of a white sheet?"

"That's to save my dress from getting dirty on the edges," said Cissy. "This dress cost fifty paound, and it weighs thirty paound! It's something awful to carry araound. Just look at it!"

And Cissy began turning up the skirts and underskirts and lace petticoats, one after the other, as one might turn over the pages of a book. I stopped her at what would have been the fifth chapter, for it was growing too exciting; she had come to the pink and white things, and the denouement of black silk stockings was already foreshadowed.

"You must buy underwear by the wholesale," said I. Cissy pointed to a heap of lingerie in a corner, that I had been before too timid to mention. There were all sorts of mysterious white things piled up like whipped cream.

"They've been coming in all day. Of course I get a lot of money, but I always spend it where I make it. Besides, underwear is jolly cheap in San Francisco!" She made another remark about San Francisco underwear, but I decided to forget it.

"But what is your fortune, my pretty maid?" said I.

"My wink is my fortune, sir," she said.

"I'm afraid you weren't very well brought up," said I. "Don't you know it's very wrong for girls to wink?"

"It's very wrong not to, when one can do it as well as I can!" Cissy said this.

And Cissy winked. Now there is a wink that is a kind of snap-shot at the possibility of just how bad a girl could be if she wanted to. This has to be done subtly and without effort. But Cissy's naughtiness is all acquired, and quite superficial. A white mouse must be taught to wink, and when it does so the exertion is likely to be apparent. Cissy's wink is like that of the wax doll which has to be bent double before the eyes close. It is a wink that must carry clear to the gallery. She places her hands on her hips, she cocks her head on one side, she unfurls a broad grin, and shoots off the wink as if she was firing a pistol. And yet it has made her fortune!

"I suppose I ought to tell you the story of my life, next," said Cissy. "But as I was an English girl, it wasn't very interesting till I became famous, and as that was only two years ago, there isn't much to tell. I made up that dance in the 'Gaiety Girl' myself, but I was awfully frightened the first time I went on in New York, for I knew what good dancers you have here. But I woke up the next morning and found I was famous, and the papers have kept it up ever since. I've acted the 'Foundling' over 500 times, and I'm jolly well sick of it. I believe I could go through with it in my sleep by this time!"

"What a bad dream that would be!" I groaned.

"This is my first visit to San Francisco," said Cissy. "I think the climate—" But I interrupted her.

"I suppose you'll do Chinatown," I said. "One can do one-half, three-quarters, or the whole thing." And Cissy winked.

"Come here, Toodles!" said Cissy. "What do you think of my dog? He weighs three paounds."

I looked very carefully, and at length perceived a little naked calico puppy abaout the size of a tamale.

"He is very intelligent," said Cissy as the puppy yawned leisurely.

I thought this was a very good hint, and rose to go.

"Tell me, are you going to put in much that I really didn't say?" said Cissy.

"I won't promise," said I.

"Then you must promise to make me very clever and bright," said she.

"But I can't do that!" I protested.

"Then give the impression that I was much brillianter than you were able to describe," she insisted.

I said I would try that.

And Cissy winked.

GELETT BURGESS.

CISSY FITZGERALD IN A CONVENTIONAL ATTITUDE

ARCHITECTURAL SHAMS

The Efforts of San Francisco Architects to Achieve the Impossible.

The untraveled Californian is usually very well satisfied with himself and his environment, full of boasts of the climate and resources of his city, complacent when it is praised, but surprised and hurt when it is criticized. Years of contact with the independent manners and methods of the West have obliterated most of the finer sentiments of civic pride, he sees the rights of the public sacrificed by the corporations calmly enough if he is undisturbed in his own smaller tyrranies, and he acquires by a long acquaintance with abuses a fatalistic creed that the city is doing as well as might be expected. He forgets that one of the most beautiful sites the continent affords has been butchered into streets out of all harmony with topographical conditions, proud of the fact that so many acres have been reclaimed from the sand dunes and so many from the harbor. Miles of treeless, narrow streets content his soul, and he accepts the wooden boxes of the town without a protest against their ugliness, and calls them houses.

It is not so, however, with the tourist, whose sarcastic comments upon Western provincialism are usually as incisive as they are merited. To the stranger, San Francisco is par excellence the city of extremes. Romantic in situation and in the complexity of its population—cosmopolitan, picturesque, radiant with local color—it has, besides, the unloveliness of youth and crudity with the sordid and dreary aspect of the Philistine as well. The intelligent tourist who has done the "sights" of the town, who has seen the Cliff, the Park, and Chinatown, does not rely upon these stock shows for his estimate of the character of the city. He carries away with him, and describes first to his friends, Kearny street and the Western Addition—the painted faces of the women and the abominations of our so-called "architecture," and if a moralist as well as an observer, he sees a subtle analogy between the two which proves San Francisco to be a City of Shams. For as the women seek to counterfeit the charms denied them, by the use of rouge and enamel, so the men daub and spatter redwood to imitate marble and granite, copy wood-carving by machinery, and carry the deceptions of concrete and cement to indecent limits.

There is surely no better test of civilization and culture than the outward and visible signs afforded by architecture. A man's house is his castle, if you will; he may dwell in a wilderness of plush, onyx and "antique oak" furniture, but the outside of his dwelling is a part of the city itself, and within the province of criticism. His neighbors, indeed are likely to see more of the outside of his residence than the owner himself, who turns his back to it as he goes down the steps to hail the street car, and who often returns too late at night to feel a shudder at its horrors.

But the citizen's quarrel is, after all, not with the owner or resident, for if one's wife fancies a bright, sunny exposure, if there are closets enough, electric lights and bells that really work—if the drainage is all that is to be desired, and the kitchen attractive, the busy father has little time to waste in æsthetics or appreciation of the facade. It is the architect who should bear the brunt of the reviling contempt of the passer-by. He foists these edifices upon the ignorant tenant, and perpetuates the inartistic reign of terror, leagued with the Contractor upon the Installment Plan.

There are all grades of misdemeanors against Art, but the chiefest of them is dishonesty. An architect may fail in producing a beautiful building, but if he has had an idea in his head that he has tried to embody, an honest failure has a certain claim to the forbearance of the critic. There is this pathos about many San Francisco buildings—the architects have failed through ignorance and inexperience, but they themselves, no doubt, are often the first to profit by the lesson of their own dissatisfaction.

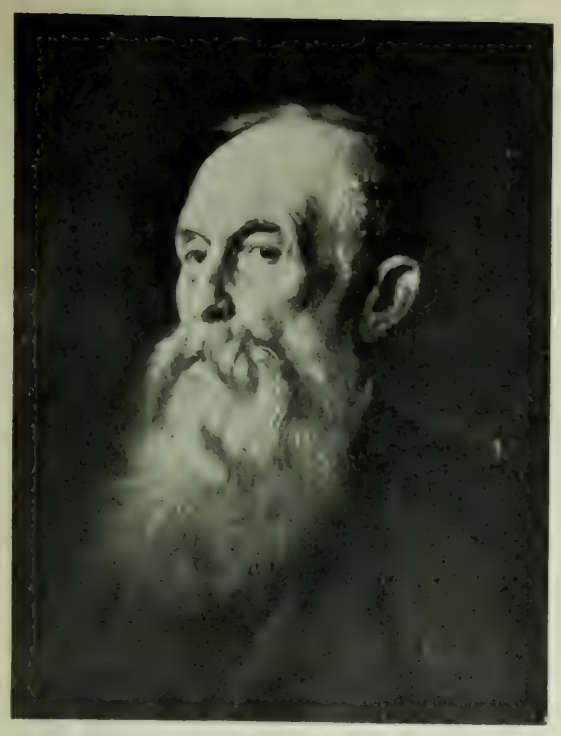
There are, however, thousands of houses erected without the professional advice of the architect, and the contractor and his foreman conspire together in the interests of discord. And here the result is usually an over-elaboratian of ornament; many a simple and inoffensive one has been ruined by "mill-work." It is the turning-lathe and the band-saw that have made the "gingerbread" house possible. The foreman has his stock brackets, borders, and panels at hand, and tentatively places one upon the first corner or unoccupied space he sees on the house-front. The contractor upon the opposite side of the street takes his cigar from his lips, yells "all right!" and the ornament is nailed forthwith. The process is repeated until the front is covered, and the result is an "artistic home,"—to be reproduced in half-tone in the Christmas edition of a local weekly as the "Residence of one of our most able and popular merchants." Bad as is this tawdry and conspicuous pretense, there is ignorance to excuse the effort, and the time may come when the laughter of the citizens may shake off the superfluous trimmings. Good taste proselytizes very slowly, but one of its first lessons is that of simplicity; that useless and meaningless ornament has no place in art. The virtue of omission should be easy to acquire, but the sin of omission in architecture is seldom found in the category of the offenses of the craft.

But there is no pardon or justification for dishonest construction, and there is no new town that is not given over to deception. And most often it is "an attempt to imitate something, which, if genuine, would not be appropriate." There is more than one two-story wooden house in the Western Addition that pretends to be marble—they can hardly be called lies, because they could never have attempted to deceive; there are, on the other hand, houses that, from the trivialness of their design, should have been executed in cast iron, though the imitation was never intended. Between these extremes may be found parodies of every shade of deceit; wire nettings covered with cement that masquerade as solid masonry, red paint striped to pass for brick-work, and so on to the scene-painting that simulates vines and balustrades in the Italian quarter. So much for falsity in materials—cheats too artless to fool children. There are similar frauds in construction, that pass for design, of which the massive unsupported corner column of the semi-colonial styles is the type, the foot barely holding to the base with its toes. Arches supported from above may be seen in almost any house in process of erection—brackets neither useful nor ornamental, nailed on, as if only to spite the commonplace.

By the column one may identify the degree of debasement to which the whole house has has fallen. In the early days the French influence was still felt, and the bay-window mansion of modest brown was treated with an innocent Corinthian charm. The portico was discreetly conventional, the formal elements of the order were carefully preserved to the very module. Base, shaft and capital, moulding, arch and cornice were quite according to law, and the carving was all the hand work of the artisan. A few of these are still preserved, and shame the modern vogue. Notice the columns of later edifices, and one may see the decrescence of taste; they are shorter or longer, bellied or concave, encircled with rings, capped with grotesque forms of infinite insanity: they become, in fact, "colyums," and the structure is distorted into a sort of appropriate ugliness. Bad design, dishonest construction, vicious in point of view of Art or Truth—such are three-quarters of the houses of San Francisco.

It would be hard to select the prize monstrosity. It should have the conical corner-tower, it should be built of at least three incongruous materials, or better, imitations thereof; it should have its window-openings absolutely haphazard; it should represent parts of every known and unknown order of architecture; it should be so plastered with ornament as to conceal the theory of its construction; it should be a restless, uncertain, frightful collection of details, giving the effect of a nightmare about to explode. It should be all this and more. Who shall choose amongst them? For there are a thousand such in San Francisco,—it is a city of wood, where all things are possible!

There is a new "Gibson girl"—very much unlike the old one, the tall, graceful creature with the wavy hair; very much unlike her, for the new-comer is very small and very tiny, and has hardly any hair at all. She made her first appearance about four weeks ago at the Gibson very much unlike her, for the new-comer is very small home in the "Life" buidling, and it is expected that before long she will make her public debut in the pages of "Life" itself. Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, the mother of "the girl," was Miss Irene Langhorne, a member of an aristocratic Southern family and one of six brothers and sisters, who still live upon the family plantation near Charlottesville, Va. She is twenty-five years old, very tall and well proportioned, and a splendid type of blond beauty. As a girl Mrs. Gibson was considered the best horsewoman in Virginia, there was nothing she could not ride and nothing she could not cross. She was able to outdance all the belles of Baltimore, and possessed a voice that would have gained her fame and fortune had she gone upon the stage. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are very much in love with each other, even more so than before their marriage.



JOHN LUTHER

COLONEL BUNTIN

JOHN BOWEN

PORTRAITS IN PASTEL BY JOSEPH D. STRONG

THE THAWING OF OLD FROST

By JOHN S. PARTRIDGE

I.

Above Blinkbonnie was the fold of the dead; below was the fold of the living dead; and Old Frost was shepherd of both. That is, he was sexton, and keeper of the poor house.

When Old Frost smiled, that was prima facie evidence that Blinkbonnie had reason to weep; for Old Frost was silent partner of the undertaker. When he frowned, the Board of Supervisors trembled, for they were "owned" by Old Frost—and that's why he had the contract to bury the county dead, and feed the county poor. The editor of the "New Era," who was the only man in the county not afraid of Old Frost, more than once hinted that it was better to be buried than fed by him.

His appearance, as he walked down the principal street of Blinkbonnie, did not give the lie to this insinuation of the editor. Old Frost's personality suited the weather very well indeed. It was cold, and Old Frost was cold. The sky was steely blue, and so was the nose of Old Frost. The air was keen, and so were his eyes. His eyes even twinkled, because it did not snow.

It is a serious thing in Northern California when it does not snow. In the first place, the reservoirs do not fill, and irrigation is impossible. Then the summer fallow is apt to be killed by the biting cold. But worst of all, there is the Diphtheria.

When the Diphtheria gets into one of these mountain valleys it is a caged tiger among a lot of innocents. It cannot escape and it cannot be killed; it lives and lingers, and in order to live it must devour. Detention makes it deadly.

So as Old Frost walked down the street, and casting his eye aloft, saw still that reflection of his nose, he almost smiled. He forgot to frown at some little boys who were dancing a passomezzo on the corner to keep warm. In fact, he was quite good-natured when he entered the undertaker's shop.

The undertaker's boy, who was warming his hands at the fire, fell to work with simulated zeal as Old Frost entered, and the undertaker himself, who was making a little coffin, tacked with renewed vigor.

"Ah, good morning," said Old Frost. "An infant, I see."

"Yes," said the undertaker. "It belonged to that new family down near the creek. It died of Diphtheria."

II.

Old Frost went out to hide his glee. As he started down the street he met an old man, a stranger, who yet appeared to know him, for he stopped him with the remark:

"You are Mr. Frost?"

"Yes."

"I am the father of the child that died last night. I had just money enough to pay for the coffin, and I want you to favor me by letting me dig the grave myself."

Old Frost had a happy thought.

"You are just from the chamber of death?"

"Not ten minutes ago," the man replied.

"Then come with me."

He led the old man down the street. They met several persons, one of them a woman, all of whom Old Frost stopped, and greeted with such unwonted cordiality that they stared in surprise. Together they went into Levy's store. Levy, who dealt in general merchandise, had set forth the most tempting array of Christmas goods. You couldn't help buying something if ever you went in, and that's why Levy had such a roaring fire. The half-dozen men who were gathered around the store, talking volubly enough, became silent when Old Frost came in. He went directly to the counter.

"Levy," he said, "give this man a pick and shovel. He's going to dig a grave for his child, dead of Diphtheria."

III.

Tapper Jack, having lost a front tooth—first muset in that row of baby pearls, alas! too-soon to perish—was expectorating at a knothole with a success that did credit to his skill as a marksman. Every time Tapper Jack spat at that knothole he winked at the baby, who lay in the cradle near by. The baby, appreciative, laughed aloud, and clapped her small hands together. Tapper Jack was perfectly happy, and he winked at the baby a more excruciating wink than usual, and the baby laughed louder than usual. Mrs. Rollervane stuck her head in and smiled.

The only thing you objected to when Mrs. Rollervane smiled was that she didn't laugh. You felt instinctively that such a smile must be the forerunner of a most delightful laugh, on the same principle that the boy is father of the man. And when she did laugh! Tinkle of ice in the pitcher on a hot midsummer day! Babble of all the brooks and gabble of all the Minnehahas that ever charmed poetic savage were nothing to it. She did laugh, in fact, on this particular occasion, whereat the baby laughed too, in imitation, like a little bell echoing a larger one.

At the same time John Rollervane was coming through the darkness. He was not alone, as he usually was, for two men walked by his side. One was Old Frost, the other a Stranger. For six months, since the baby had come, John Rollervane had returned from his work every night, instead of stopping at the corner as he had done before. He had wondered when Old Frost joined him, and asked to take the Stranger to his house. Wondered, but did not refuse. No one ever refused Old Frost anything.

They entered the house together. At the sight of Old Frost, Tapper Jack slunk into the corner, Mrs. Rollervane stared, and the baby even crouched under the covers.

"A pretty baby," said the Stranger.

"Yes," said Mrs. Rollervane. "Our first born."

"I, too, had a little baby," he returned. "But it died last night—of Diphtheria."

IV.

You could have told how much the matron of the poor house hated Old Frost by the way she ground her teeth when she heard him coming. That she was his slave was nothing. Everyone who came within the circle of his influence was his slave. The grudge she owed him lay deeper than any mere ill-treatment, however severe and systematic, could produce.

I say she ground her teeth when she heard his footsteps. She did more. She clenched her hands, and went into a paroxysm of rage and hate, from which she had scarcely recovered when he came in, accompanied by a Stranger.

"I have brought you company," said Old Frost." Give us something hot for supper. We have work to do tonight."

If the woman felt surprise at seeing the Stranger, she did not show it. She set them forth their supper, and as they sat down, the Stranger turned to Old Frost:

"Your wife?"

Old Frost laughed.

"I have no wife," he said. "She's the matron. The little boy we saw at John Rollervane's is her son."

"Ah," said the Stranger. "A sweet child. My baby might have grown to such a boy, if it had not died last night—of Diphtheria."

The woman, perceiving the true state of affairs, laughed out loud. She threw herself back in her chair, and shrieked and howled in most unholy glee. Then she burst forth: "He lied when he said that little Tapper Jack is my boy. So I have let him believe all these years. But it was mine that died, and his that lived."

Old Frost sprang at her, cursing. The Stranger laid his hand on the other man's arm.

"Come," he said. Together they went out into the night.

V.

If the sun—as M. Victor Hugo quotes Dubartas as saying—is the grand duke of candles, the moon must at least be princess of tallow dips. Regal she was when Old Frost and the Stranger went forth. Regal she hung, broad and white above the horizon. She was the Midas of a baser touch, and all the world was silvern.

The road was silver as they went along the edge of the town. The great firs and pines were silver. The river, when they cross the bridge, was silver, solid silver. Its music was hushed by the cold, and the waterfall by the planing mill was silent.

"Is there no escape?" asked Old Frost.

"None," said the Stranger.

"May not even he be spared—the little son I have found to-night?"

"He least of all. We will dig his grave in the pauper's corner."

"But I am rich," said Old Frost. "I will pay for his plot, if he must die."

"You may not," was the answer. "You made him a pauper, and a pauper he must die and be buried."

They reached the graveyard and climbed over the fence.

"We must set to work," said the Stranger.

He commenced to mark out graves with his pick—little graves, none more than five feet, and they fell earnestly to work.

Dig, Old Frost. Delve, mysterious Stranger. Dig, till the hard earth grows soft and warm. Delve, and toss those frozen clods, that clink like metal in the stillness of the night. Dig and delve. Oh, delve and dig, Old Frost and mysterious Stranger, for the housing of the harvest you have sown to-night.

The grave the Stranger was making lay further down the hill than the one Old Frost was at work upon. Above the clink of clods, and the rattle of pick and spade, Old Frost heard the Stranger's voice, low but penetrating and sweet:

"White over their mold, in the churchyard cold,
Will gleam and glisten the silent snow."

The snow? There was hope in the word. Old Frost leaned on his shovel, and listened. As he did so, a cloud floated across the moon. The voice continued:

"But here, right here, in this dead man's wold,
Here first in the spring will the blue-bells blow."

It was dark. The air was strangely warm. The sky was clouded everywhere, and a few flakes of snow fell on Old Frost's upturned face. Then, just for a moment, the moon came out again, and shone on the white wooden cross at the head of a grave. At the instant, the church clock in the town struck twelve.

Oh, blessed Master! Oh, blessed, pitying Master, on this day wert Thou born. On this day Old Frost melted, and some of him ran out at the eyes. You would have said he was weeping, if you didn't know it was Old Frost. "It is snowing," he called out.

There was no reply.

"I say it is snowing," he repeated.

His companion still apparently did not hear him. He ran down the hill to where the Stranger had been at work. He searched for him everywhere. The Stranger had disappeared.

The snow was now falling thick and heavy, as Old Frost continued his search, crying out in vain. It was getting late, and the snow was several inches deep when he made his way out of the graveyard and down the road to the town.

He went straight toward John Rollervane's house. It was broad daylight when he neared it, and still the blessed snow came down. He saw John Rollervane come out and stand at the door. At the same instant Dr. Elliott came riding up, from a visit to a patient in the country.

"Merry Christmas!" shouted the Doctor to John.

"Not a very merry Christmas, Doctor."

"Oh, you mean the Diphtheria. That's all a mistake, you know. The child died of croup."

"Thank God!" cried Old Frost.

Neither of the others had seen him.

"Yes, thank God again," he said. "John Rollervane, I have come for my little boy."

"Your little boy?"

"Tapper Jack, the little son I have found."

---

I won't say Old Frost made the greatest feast on record, whereat Tapper Jack ate himself into a pitiable condition. I won't say he married the matron. I won't say he became the heartiest old fellow, whose name didn't fit him. But if you go into Blinkbonnie on the stage some day, just ask for the most popular citizen.

And the Stranger? That's a mystery. There was once a lonely Man—but really, I do not know.

CHAOS AVENUE AN ARCHTECT'S NIGHTMARE

An honest failure

The chef d'oeuvre of a pioneer contractor. The porch and belfry executed by an intelligent but misguided foreman during a fit of melancholia.

The ubiquitous corner tower

STUDIES IN FANTASTIC "SKY LINES"

Showing how the beauty of the most picturesque and romantic spot on the Pacific Coast has been heightened by the erection of a wooden bird cage and a half-gross assortment of triangles

A gingerbread palace (white marble and redwood)

Details of typical "A," "B" and "C" flat entrance with "colyums" and porch decorated in the highest style of planing mill art; imitation stained glass a specialty

SAN FRANCISCO'S ARCHITECTURAL MONSTROSITIES

THE GUATEMALAN DIAZ

Personality of Little Barrios, Who Has Transformed a Republic.

The Guatemalan Exposition was formally declared open at noon on Monday last. There were appropriate ceremonies, musical and martial, a splendid assemblage of the planters and merchants, and all the dignitaries, both civil and ecclesiastical, who compose the aristocracy of the flourishing Southern Republic. It was the great event in the history of the nation, greater than all the victories of Ruffino Barrios, the predecessor of the little man who to-day guides with so firm a hand the destinies of Guatemala. The conspicuous figure of the celebration was this Jose Maria Reyna Barrios, President of the Republic, in the rich regimentals of his rank as commander-in-chief of the Guatemalan army. Well might he gaze around at the spires and turrets of the Exposition buildings and over the expanse of lawns and the parterres of flowers glowing amid the wealth of tropical verdure, for his genius had made them possible, indeed had brought them into existence. Yes, this little man in the three years of his term as President has transformed the nation, and has, by his great administrative ability, eclipsed the fame of his uncle.

Some six years ago any casual visitor to the Occidental Hotel might have seen, seated in one of the leather covered arm chairs that line the office of that caravansary, a strong-jawed, thickset little man, whose dark complexion and stolid visage told unmistakably his descent and nationality. A patient, immovable, thoughtful face it was, but it suggested little of the leader and administrator who is to Guatemala what Diaz is to Mexico. For months he sat there, day after day, mingling little with the guests of the hotel, making few acquaintances, reserved but most courteous of manner. The writer has often watched him at dinner, seated beside his wife, seeing everything with watchful eyes, but with never a word to say. His immobile face was relieved occasionally by a conventional little smile, but it relapsed at once into imperturbability. He was considered rather stupid there, though those who did engage him in conversation discovered he had more than a superficial knowledge of science and economics, that he knew besides English and his native Spanish both German and French. They learnt, too, that this Barrios had received a thorough military education, and was up in the mathematics of warfare and in methods of organization, that he had ideas and theories about government, that he was a shrewd and attentive observer of politics and that his immobility was not inertia but the patience of a man of definite aims, awaiting an opportunity. In the course of time Barrios returned to Guatemala, and was straightway imprisoned by President Barrillas, who feared the prestige of his great name in that country of revolutions. But the little man had influential friends, who came to his rescue. He was released, and in his quiet way he proceeded to plan an electoral campaign, which resulted in his election as President of the Republic. Then the genius of the man began to manifest itself. He set to work to reform the Government, to introduce improvements, to develop the resources of the country, to build a railroad which should traverse his dominions and connect his capital with an Atlantic seaport. He built roads through the country and street railroads; introduced electricity and the telephone; he established a national bank, the shares of which have trebled in value; he is constructing a magnificent sewer system for Guatemala city; has built a President's palace and a Government building for the transaction of business—all within the space of three years and without imposing any onerous hardships on his countrymen. It is a great record this Central American Napoleon has made, and he has earned all the honors and distinctions his subjects may shower on him.

MADAME BARRIOS
Kildare, photo, Guatemala

The tremendous difficulty of undertaking great public works without excessive taxation is one of the achievements which reflect most brilliantly the genius of Barrios. To make the beautiful park in which the Exposition buildings are set he has utilized the labor of the Indians, who by law are compelled to pay the government an annual tax of $15 or to render personal service therefor. These grounds, some two hundred acres in extent, are kept in condition by the young natives, who attend the Esquella de Indijanos, where they are taught agriculture. The boulevard, four miles in length, which connects the city and its pleasure ground, is the fruit of the same free labor. For the construction of the railroad, his greatest enterprise, the President has taxed all employes of the government ten per cent. of their salaries, in return for which they receive bonds secured by the road-bed and rolling stock. These bonds are valued at $100 each, and when the contributions of each civil servant reaches that sum he is given his paper in due form, and each month receives six per cent. on the investment. In this ingenious way the great undertaking has been financed. It is proposed subsequently that these bonds shall be redeemed out of the revenues of the road, the numbers to be paid each year being fixed by lottery.

Some Guatemalans think Barrios in his zeal for improvement has gone rather too far, and that the Exposition, which has involved an expenditure of five millions in silver, is rather in advance of the Republic. It seems the several important buildings were constructed in France, according to the designs of noted French architects, and shipped ready to be erected at the capital. A big steamer and five sailing vessels conveyed the wood and iron to the seaport of San Jose, whence it was transported by rail to its destination. Of course there remains much yet to be done ere the great show will be opened to the public, for the exhibits have but just begun to be installed. Doubts and hesitations, however, do not move the steady soul of this self-centered dictator, who has shown himself so wise and bold a ruler. He keeps his own counsel, has no advisers, and goes calmly about his plans as though there was no Legislature to approve or reject. But the Legislature invariably approves, for the Napoleonic little man has the secret of governing a Spanish-American republic. There are no responsibilities for the others. He is the man, and his will is law—law backed by an excellent military organization and the love and admiration of all Guatemalans. It may be added that President Barrios has shown himself a humane and moderate ruler, disdaining to revenge himself on those who in his period of adversity conspired against him. The laws are excellently and justly administered, and there is ample protection and encouragement for foreigners in all their enterprises. Another characteristic of Barrios is his partiality to the United States, which he regards as the protector of all the Central American republics against foreign invasion.

MONEY, THE PEACEMAKER

The Golden Power Which is Behind European Thrones.

Amid the rumors of a continental war which are being telegraphed daily from the Turkish storm-center, and in the anomalous position of the powers relative to Greece and Turkey, as well as the inexplicable forbearance of the Christian nations in face of the clamor of the public against the atrocities of the Turks, the plain American citizen, who is not up in the mysterious methods of modern warfare, is likely to become much confused. There is an African concealed in the timber somewhere, but what is the string that keeps these yelping dogs of war just out of each others' reach? It is money, as usual, that is the root of all this evil. It is money that is the power behind the thrones of Europe, and the families of Rothschild and Bleichroeder constitute dynasties that are to-day as powerful as any Pope who ever held temporal and spiritual sway over kings and emperors.

The enormous pressure that is being resisted by these syndicates of invested capital is evident to any one who takes the trouble to read the telegraphic dispatches. King George of Greece is easily the hero of the hour. Not only has he the enthusiastic support of his nation from legislator to peasant, but the outbreak of popular opinion in England and on the Continent, as well as the sympathy of the American continent, has swept against the "concert of Europe" like a tidal wave. Added to this influence, are ranged the expressed inclinations of the heads of almost all the reigning houses of Europe. The empress-mother of Russia is the favorite sister of King George of Greece, and is bound beside by the debt of gratitude to that Prince who saved the present Czar from death in Japan three years ago. The Princess of Wales is another sister of the King of Greece, while between the latter and the heir-apparent exists the closest of friendships. The Crown Prince of Greece is married to Queen Victoria's favorite granddaughter, and is a particular favorite of her British majesty, and all her sympathies are with Greece in the present crisis.

With Francis Joseph of Austria, too, King George stands on a particularly intimate footing, making several long visits to Vienna every year, while between Greece and France there exists a fraternity dating back to the early part of the century, when the latter nation sent an army of 8,000 men under le Marechal de Maison to fight for Grecian independence.

Yet in spite of these ties, Prince George of Greece now faces the batteries of the Czar, whose life he saved, he sees England's ironclads and the Austrian Kaiser's battleships training their guns on ships and towns over which the Greek flag waves, and the French fleet assisting in the effort to reduce the Hellenes to subjection to the will of the "Concert of Europe."

Thus the protest of an indignant public opinion that is steadily rising against the brutalities in Armenia and Crete, as well as the ties of kin and friendship, are sided against the "Princes of Finance," and it is too likely that the latter power will win.

How powerful is "la Haute Banque" (as the Rothschild and Bleichroeder syndicates are called) was learned in 1870, when it gave the sanction to the conflict between France and Germany, and arranged war indemnity by which the French paid for their defeat, and tested again in 1877, when it forced the crisis between Russia and Turkey. It was by a coup of the Rothschild clique that England was induced to occupy Egypt and by assuming control of the administration of the country to become practically responsible for the payment of the Egyptian debt to the Jewish financiers, who had manipulated and cornered the Khedive bonds.

Since then, the power of the money princes of London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna has grown steadily, and has defied every effort of statesmen to evade their control. The late Czar Alexander III., prompted by his aversion to the Hebrew race, tried in vain to dispense with the assistance of the Rothschilds, for nothing could be done on the foreign money markets in the face of their opposition, and Russia is now as firmly bound to the Rothschild association as is Austria, France or England.

The Bleichroeders and their following in Berlin, moreover, have found an ally in the War Lord of Germany, who alone of the Christian monarchs openly professes a desire to see Greece humbled and forced to bow in subjection to the mandate of the Great Powers. There has been no reconciliation since his sister, the Crown Princess of Greece, refused to submit to his dictation, and abandoned the Lutheran church, in favor of the Greek faith—that of her husband and adopted country—and Emperor William has absolutely ignored the pair, not even according the most formal reception usually accorded to royalty.

"La Haute Banque" has much to lose by a Turkish war. Its members hold almost the whole national debt of the Ottoman Empire, a matter of nearly $1,000,000,000. These bonds were bought for next to nothing when Turkey first defaulted, but through the efforts of an international commission organized to aid the interests of the bondholders, the finances of the Sublime Porte have greatly improved, and the securities have so increased in value that any war in which Turkey might become involved would lose to them all the benefits of the transaction. The Sultan would be only too glad of the excuse of war to repudiate the liabilities of the Ottoman Empire, a course to which he is constantly incited by his church, which teaches without reserve the doctrine that it is unnecessary for one of the Faithful to keep obligations contracted toward Christians or Jews. There are comparatively few Turkish bonds held in Austria and in Russia, but the Muscovite government, as well as the Prime Ministers at Vienna and Pesth, is coerced by the syndicate that have fastened themselves upon the governments of France and England,, and no loan opposed by the Hebrew clique of bankers can be floated on the foreign market.

It is these money princes who are the arbiters of continental destinies. It is they who have tied the bureaus of foreign relations hand and foot, who have bought the peace of Europe at the price of shameful alliance with the Turks, and who have used the warships of the Great Powers to bombard the Christian inhabitants of Crete when endeavoring to defend their homes from massacre, outrage and destruction by the barbarous followers of the Prophet. It remains to be seen if the Grecian David can overcome his Goliath.

REGINALD H. WEBSTER
Whom the Supreme Court has declared was legally elected Superintendent of Public Schools. See page 5
Sewell, photo

Henrich Ibsen, the Norwegian dramatist, possesses a temper that is in harmony with the general fierceness of his countenance. He was recently interviewed by Mr. R. H. Sherard, who used to do Paris correspondence for the "Bookman" interviewer, and Mr. Ibsen, along with other things, said that he drew all his characters from the people and the life about him in Christiana. This set the people of the quiet Norwegian capital in an uproar, and Mr. Ibsen has relapsed into a state of intense rage, making a general denial of Mr. Sherard's assertions and denouncing the journalist in most emphatic terms. It is a question now as to the one to be believed, the dramatist or the interviewer. Sherard is the man who used, in writing of the great French novelist, to say, familiarly, "Dear Daudet."

THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL

PRINCIPAL BUILDINGS OF THE EXPOSITION AT NASHVILLE, TO BE OPENED ON THE FIRST OF MAY

1. Stairway in Woman's Building. 2. Minerals and Forestry Building. 3. The Woman's Building. 4. Memphis Building. 5. Fine Arts Building. 6. The Rialto Spanning Lake Watauga. 7. View from Lake Watauga. 8. The Auditorium. 9. Transportation and Commerce Buildings.

AN ARTIST IN HAWAII

Fred Yates' Impressions of the Paradise of the Pacific.

It was at the invitation of Judge Hartwell of Honolulu that the opportunity offered for my visiting the Islands, and with little preparation for my journey beyond a goodly supply of painting materials I left San Francisco in October last on the City of Pekin, bound for Hawaii. It was the ordinary experience of a seven days' trip. We steamed out of the bay and crossed the bar with the usual accompaniment of a head wind and driving fog, the fog sirens booming, until after three hours' sailing we found ourselves beyond the reach of that part of our glorious climate! The trip was uneventful, beyond the fact that there were some handsome girls aboard and a more than usually gallant Captain, and, as for myself, and being alone, I gave by my presence a touch of seriousness to the general air of gayety of the other passengers.

Each day after sailing the temperature gradually rose, until on the fourth morning the sea and sky prepared us for the beauty that was to meet the eye on our arrival at Honolulu.

On entering the harbor a subject ready for the artist is at the ship's side. Young Hawaiian lads from ten to fifteen years of age are swarming in the water, watching wiht eagerness the passengers on the quarterdeck. Their beautiful forms and the reddish hue of their color is in lonely contrast with the greenish color of the water. By throwing a nickel to the boys instantly every figure is out of sight and vanishes into the depth below, the first boy appearing on the surface shaking the water from his head and smilingly showing the piece of money, deposits it, monkey fashion, in his mouth, and is ready for his next opportunity. On going ashore everywhere there is the picturesque—groups of native flower sellers and fruit vendors. They do not vulgarly press you to buy. They are neither beggars nor peddlers. They give you a smile of welcome. You pass on unmolested, and you have formed your first impression of the dignity of the race. It is this impression which remained by me unchanged to the end of my visit.

Pressing on beyond the business parts of the town one finds the streets animated with a large proportion of Asiatic races. The Japanese women wear the costume of their country, and shuffle in their picturesque manner through the streets, carrying their children on their backs. The Chinese. more respected at the Islands than in the United States, have a cheerfulness of manner, a sense of equality that is unknown to them here.

Honolulu appears to have been little frequented by foreign artists, judging from what one sees on the walls of the residences, but there is an association of local artists, who are of sufficient energy to give twice a year a very creditable exhibition. Their President is Mr. Howard Hitchcock. A man beyond the average of ordinary talent, Mr. Allan Hutchinson is a sculptor, his work being accepted at the Royal Academy in London and other galleries on the European continent, is also a prominent member. Mr. Hutchinson is now engaged on a commission from Mr. C. R. Bishop, of a series of life-size figures for the Bishop Museum, representing the life and customs of the natives. The strongest types of pure Hawaiian blood have been selected for models, and these have been rproduced by casts made in plaster, giving an absolute reproduction of the body to the minutest detail. As the native race is so rapidly losing its ancient customs, the value of this work scientifically can hardly be estimated.

As I was a visitor to the Island for but a few months, I was impresed with the certainty that to live always in a country does not necessarily imply that one sees its potent characteristics. One the contrary one becomes deadened to them. We see, as it were, rather by contrast. During the whole day there are transient effects continually changing, which here would be but the effect of the moment. A glory of color there from the first gleam of morning light to the moment of darkness ,is always paintable, and a possibility, which, in Cailfornia, we are obliged but to make mental note of, and take our chances of reproduction in the studio. At night, such is the brilliancy of the moon that on three occasions I was able to make sketches as though by the light of day, an assertion which I can verify by sketches brough tback with me. In the matter of form as distinguished from color, the charm of the Island rests in the latter. The characteristic forms are the mountains of Diamond Head, the cocoanut trees in silhouette and a tree known there as the monkey pod, but for the other parts of the Island upon which Honolulu is locaetd it is color alone which holds the spectator. On the beach there is the ever enticing subject, the Hawaiian fisherman, muscular fellows of gorgeous color, who are for the most of their time engaged in watching for shoals of fish, which come within their each beyond the carol reef.

SCENE IN WAIMEA, KAUAI, H. I.
Taber, photo

I must make but one other exception in regard to the matter of form as against the charm of color—the Pali, a gorge that opens between two high bluffs, from which is displayed a view beyond the power of the brush to describe, but to the artist remains forever in his soul, a view of a world beyond—the unattainable.

I have pased months on the island of Capri, which this island recalled, but with all the romance of ancient history attached to that place I have never experienced there the rapture that possessed me on seeing the view from th Pali on the island of Oahu. But I feel to have made the greatest advance in the art in what came to me in contemplation of the shell strewn along the sea shore. There one readily understands what locally affects Japanese art. On the island beach I sevxeral times picked up crabs, shells, sea urchins, which might readily have served as models to the Japanese designs, explained, I think, by the fact that the same ocean washes the two shores.

I shall exceed the liberty of space extended me if I touch on the social aspect of Honolulu, but allow me a remaining line to testify to the genial hospitality of the intellectual community with whom I came in contact, whose members showed a readiness to be appreciative, a readiness to accept our point of view, and, although critical, are a people with whom an artist will, if true to himself, "make a station" for which in after years he will remain forever grateful.

FRED. YATES.

THE TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL

An Exposition at Nashville with Imitative "Features."

It would probably be safe to say that there is always at least one international exposition under way, either inchoate or complete; and while the ground for one is being broken with the silver spade of the Director-General, the prizes for premium exhibits are being awarded by the committees of another. The old county fair has become an exposition, but the type remains very nearly the same, whether it be held in the West or the South. There are always "features"—the "tall feature" and the "broad feature," and some particular "feature" to which may be applied the characteristic American adjective ending in "-est in the world." The modern White City must have its suburbs, too, haunted with fakirs and swindlers of all degrees of novelty. A man might, indeed, if he could afford it, live in expositions all the days of his life, and feel quite at home among the ploughshares and folding-beds, for the international exposition we have always with us.

And next on the programme comes the Tennessee Centennial, which opens at Nashville on the first of May—an enterprise similar in scope and treatment to the California Midwinter Fair, being undertaken by the State of Tennessee to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of its admission into the Union. Almost the entire sum needed to defray the expense was raised by the citizens of Nashville and the railroads chiefly to be benefited. Congress has appropriated $100,000 for a government exhibit to encourage the work, and the New South will be likely to make a better showing of its public spirit and resources than was given even by the recent Cotton States Exposition.

The site selected includes the old West Side Park, and covers two hundred acres of high ground, having a magnificent outlook over the city of Nashville and the outlying districts of the Blue Grass country. The natural beauties of the park, which borders on the shores of Lake Wautaga, have been increased by the construction of lagoons and streams of running water. Upon the rising ground in the centre of the area stands an exact reproduction of the Parthenon, solidly built of brick and stone. This is to be used as a permanent Museum of Fine Arts, and faces a copy of the statue of Pallas Athene, forty feet high — the larg-"est in the world" ever modeled by a woman! The classic reproductions are, in fact, the "feature" of the Tennessee Exposition, for there is beside, a model of the Erectheum of the Acropolis in Athens, modified to suit the requirements of a History Building, a copy of the Great Pyramid of Cheops, reduced to one sixth of the original, contributed by the Memphis of the New World, and a fac-simile of the bridge of the Rialto in Venice, spanning one arm of the Lagoon.

The "tall feature" is represented by a flagpole three hundred and thirty feet in height, which will serve as a mighty exclamation point to advertise the show to the farmers for miles around. The Negro exhibit is likely to prove one of the most original features of the fair, an entire building being assigned to a display illustrative of the progress and development of the African Race in America.

The list and description of the other structures might go without saying in the description of an up-to-date exposition. There are the Administration, Commerce, Minerals and Forestry, Transportation and Agricultural Buildings, Machinery Hall and Auditorium, and buildings for both Women's and Children's exhibits.

The comedy element will be supplied by an adjoining Midway—the inevitable village of side-shows—here to be called Vanity Fair. Among the novelties promised are the Cuban Village, Pompey's Pillar, Edison's Mirage — the "Visage"—and a still more mysterious "Caboret du Neant."

The whole exposition is in size and character not unlike the recent California Exposition. Most of the buildings are treated in the classic styles, the Roman Doric prevailing, but monotonously treated and rather uninterestingly grouped.

VIEWS OF HAWAIIAN SCENERY
FROM STUDIES BY FRED YATES

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

Now, Diary dear, I must admit that in spite of Lent and in spite of Leila, I have simply had a capital time this week. I have literally reveled in the opera. Papa and I have been every night, and, oh, dear, I did have a week of it. There are some things one cannot be sufficiently thankful for in this life. One is a skeptical tendency; another the gift of tears. To realize this one needs be a member of a family such as ours. You see we had the usual family jar over the opera question. Mamma, Leila and Aunt Sybil said they thought it sinful to go to the theater in Lent. Fancy the absurdity! Especially, as I pointed out to mamma, that operas were entirely different, and that it is only in Lent that we have any real good music here. She said, so much greater would be the sacrifice. I argued that it was the spirit that made the sacrifice pleasing, and one offered unwillingly would not be received graciously. However, we were getting the worst of it, when Leila chimed in, and was so disagreeable that I simply wept from sheer rage. Oh, the forcefulness of that most powerful feminine weapon! Papa said he would not have his child made unhappy for any prejudice, and in her first season, too. So he and I for a whole week have just gloried in our iniquities. I persuaded mamma to get me the sweetest of opera cloaks in pale pink with an ermine collar, and I wore a low-necked frock and looked—well, modesty prevents my becoming too enthusiastic.

The first night was most exciting. We were seated in the California at eight sharp, and spent the ensuing twenty minutes watching our friends. Every one was there, of course, a truly fashionable audience, but I was horribly disappointed over the clothes, and papa could not credit the evidence of his senses. You know he was always an enthusiast, and used to rave about the grand operas of former years, the gowns, the jewels! So you can imagine his disgust when he beheld an ordinary first night audience in simple street costume with light bonnets and a scant sprinkling of opera cloaks. Mrs. Russell Wilson, Mrs. Timothy Hopkins, Mrs. Hod. Chase and a few more wore decollete gowns. Most of the girls were hatless, but the remainder of the audience was certainly not dressed for the opera. I liked everything, the music, the singing, the enthusiasm, but the long waits bored poor papa to distraction. I was afraid he would insist on leaving before it was over. I noticed that there were as many Catholics and Episcopalians among the audience as if it were not Lent, which shocked Leila horribly when I told her about it.

I went on Saturday night to "Miss Helyett" and on Tuesday to "Sigurd." I did not care for Saturday's opera, although the dialogue was amusing, and very wicked in places. Papa, whose French is rusty, actually thought it decidedly stupid. From that you may know how rusty his French is. Really we both had an infinitely more enjoyable evening on Tuesday. There was, however, even less attempt at dressing, and three-fourths of the audience wore hats. I noticed Mrs. John Darby in a box with a party. Colonel Crocker had a party in one of the loge boxes, while most of the men and maids one knows were scattered round the house. Mrs. Joe Tobin looked very stunning in her half-mourning. I do wish I could dress my hair as WAVE—GRIFFIN March 17 prettily as she does. I noticed Mattie Whittier, who was prettily gowned, and old Mrs. H. S. Crocker in white satin with gold passementerie—a gorgeous costume. Afterwards a few people went to the 'Varsity Club to supper. We were going, but papa thought it too late.

On Sunday evening we all went to the oratorio service at Trinity Church; it was really delightful. The singing was good, the sermon was not too long, and every one was there. The musical services always draw a crowd. I have joined the San Francisco Riding Club, and on Thursday nights we have the jolliest times at the musical rides. Mrs. Fanny Lent, Mrs. Webster Jones, Mrs. William B. Hooper, Miss Farquharson, Miss Kohler and a dozen or so others all ride. You would be surprised, too, to note how many people come in to watch the performance.

We are all so delighted that Mrs. Walter Hobart's baby is a girl, and are agog to know what her name is to be. I hope something pretty. If people would only consider beauty before family in naming their children how much more aptly named some of us might be. Now there is Leila, a thorough New Englander without a trace of the Orient. Priscilla or Deborah would have been suitable, and as for me, well my name is inscribed in the Bible, but no one ever has heard it in the family or outside. Mamma culled it from some novel, Cyclaneen Dolores, phew! Then Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels has a son, a perfect darling, every one says. I hope she will call it Rudolph. Ever since the "Prisoner of Zenda" I have just doted on the name.

By the way, I went to Anna Deuprey's wedding on Tuesday. It was very pretty and charmingly simple in all its details. There was not much attempt made at decoration, just some palms and lilies in the chancel. Anna looked sweet in a dear little frock of dotted Swiss trimmed with ruffles edged in lace. Her veil was of white tulle, and she carried lilies of the valley. The two little bridesmaids, Claire Deuprey and Lucille Tuttle, looked very pretty in pale pink silk veiled with organdie. The ushers were Mr. Douglas McBride and Mr. Percy Mills. Mr. Baldwin looks a very nice young fellow. He is a son of Mr. O. D. Baldwin, president of the Security Bank. The church was simply packed. Afterwards breakfast was served at Mrs. Deuprey's house. The young people are going to housekeeping immediately; they have taken a charming little cottage adjoining the Deuprey house.

And now, Diary, dear, I think I must leave you, as I have promised Leila to accompany her to church this afternoon.

MISS CRICKET.

The ministerial embroglio in the Pacific Union Club has been terminated by the resignation of E. W. Hopkins, president, and Russell Wilson, who, of the Board of Directors, were strongest against the projected moving of the club to Van Ness avenue. Under the circumstances they could not have done otherwise. I am only surprised they delay so long. It may be their point of view is correct and the club is misguided, but the will of the majority when properly invoked must be obeyed, and they should have recognized and bowed to conditions that existed. The selection of Mr. A. Cheesborough to be president is excellent. He is easily the best man the club could have chosen, as he possesses the necessary executive capacity and, moreover, likes that form of exertion.

The Sharon estate contemplates at Burlingame a series of improvements which will add greatly to the attractions of that charming suburb. It is proposed to lay out the environment of the station in roadways and building lots and to erect thereon villas for rent at moderate rates. The landscape gardening will form part of the architectural design as laid out by Willis Polk, and the general effect, as somewhat dimly expressed in the acompanying design, promises to be charming. Of course it is but a preliminary study of the situation, but that it is possible to make here a model village, whose beauty and architectural interest shall be for San Francisco what Pasadena is to Los Angeles no one denies, or doubts.

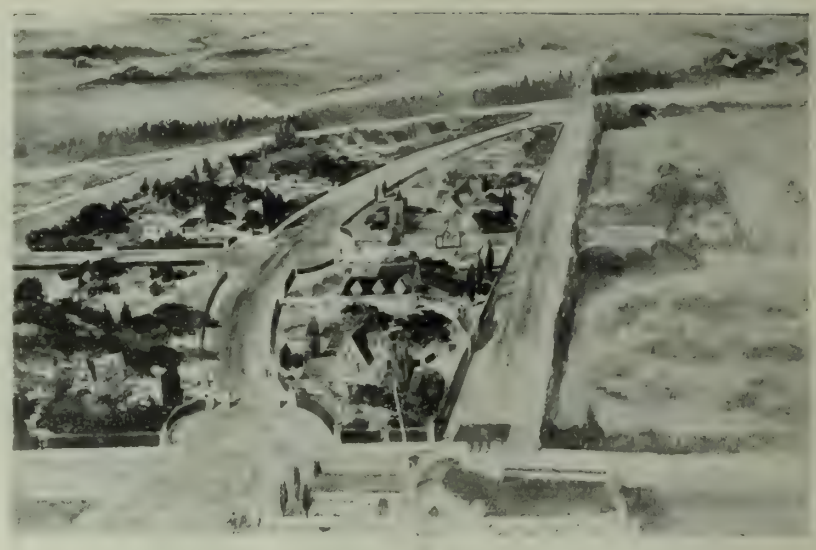
---

Lent has settled down upon social events in Oakland like a pall, and but for the few musical enthusiasts who have gone to the opera, nothing of interest has taken place during the past week. The usual number of literature classes have been formed, and I hear that the numbers of both Miss Rickoff's and Miss Musser's classes have increased since Ash Wednesday. Even teas have ceased to interest for the nonce, and the girls merely rest and repair their wardrobes. There is always a trend in the direction of amateur theatricals. I hear that the Young Charity Club is to begin preparation for its next performance. It will interest every one, as the play is in aid of the most popular of Oakland's charities, the Fabiola Hospital. The play is one of Raymond Russ', and is said to be bright and entertaining. Miss Marietta Havens, Miss Pauline Fore, Miss Florence Sharon, Misses Sallie and Carrie Quinan, Mr. Walter Starr, Mr. Sterling Carr, Mr. Will Smith and Mr. Joe Rosborough are in the cast. Miss Fore is undoubtedly quite talented, and is exceedingly desirous of making the stage her profession. She is a piquant-looking girl, decidedly French in type, and is pleasing and graceful. All the young people are members of the Friday Fortnightly Club.

A small but interesting wedding was that of Miss Gertrude Peck of Berkeley and Mr. Herbert A. Page. Mr. Page is connected with the American Type Foundry, and is a brother of Clifford Page, the musician.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.



THE NEW VILLAGE OF BURLINGAME
AFTER A DESIGN BY WILLIS POLK

A smart affair was the luncheon given at the Ebell Club on Tuesday last. Mrs. Gordon Stolp and Mrs. W. Gordon presided. The table decorations were of violets and wild flowers. After luncheon Mrs. Horace Wilson described her recent trip to Paris and her meeting with Flammarion, the astronomer. In spite of Lenten rules and regulations, the entertainments of the "21" Club continue with unabated zeal. The last meeting took place at the house of Miss Louise Simmons, when the young people played cards. Miss Rossiter carried off the first prize, a picture. The sole dinner on record this week was the big family affair given by the Crellins. I believe they are quite a formidable clan, although they do not, like the Al Millers, number all Oakland among their conections.

In Berkeley the students are busily engaged in preparing for Charter Day, March 23rd. A play is to be given in Shattuck Hall, "The Chaplain's Revenge," a story of life in the eighteenth century in four acts. The cast will consist of students of the English Department. There is to be an orchestra of twenty-three pieces, under the direction of C. C. Davis. In addition to this the members of the various fraternities purpose entertaining their friends at their houses.

SUMMER GOWNS

New Foulards and Grenadines at the Lace House.

When the hills are green and the trees in bloom the time is rife for sunny days and cloudless skies, for ribbons and laces and summer gowns. And such gowns that will be in vogue in summertime—dreams of color, of daintiness and delight! Foulards are the novelties this season, and at the new Lace House, on the corner of Sutter street and Grant avenue, they have them in the most bewitching colors. Although red is the most fashionable European tone, heliotrope and the various tints of light green are to be much worn. Spring and Easter dresses in foulard are supreme. They are made either with the new sunplaited skirts, or are muchly be-trimmed with lace. Plaid silks are to be worn next to the foulard, and the very latest Parisian idea is a plaid underskirt with an overdress of grenadine. The plaid beneath the sheer grenadine makes a most effective combination, and in this style of goods Mr. Samuels is, so far, the sole importer. A plaid that is especially pretty combines the shaded greens and blues with a soupcon of yellow and red.

The waists are frequently made with the bolero; the most effective ones come in the Russian lace, some plain cream, others with the design outlined in gold. At the Lace House I saw some very smart styles in stock—as new and as beautiful as the magnificent store. There I looked at laces in every variety, Duchesse, Point de Venice and Point Applique, and in grenadines there are beautiful things as fine as cobwebs, with all sorts of exquisite patterns fashioned on them. The grenadines come in blues and greens, and in all the new evening shades. The new silk skirts claim considerable attention—some are dreams of daintiness, others showy and effective. A particularly smart one is of black silk with three ruffles of purple silk in black lace; another a gorgeous plaid in reds and blues, and a third a shaded taffeta with three flounces edged in black velvet, which, besides being pretty, renders the skirt durable

Probably no private fete has ever been discussed to the extent of the Bradley-Martin ball, and the distinction conferred upon Moet & Chandon by the selection of their champagne, will be of lasting benefit to the wine, and stamps it with the approval of our ultra-fashionable set.—Bonfort's Wine Circular.

For fine custom-made Footwear, go to Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

VICTORIOUS AGAIN

GAIL BORDEN'S

Eagle Brand of Condensed Milk

PRONOUNCED by the CHEMIST of the BOARD OF HEALTH to be THE PUREST, RICHEST and BEST. An analysis of Dr. Wenzell, the Chemist of the Board of Health, shows GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND to have nearly double the strength of many brands of condensed milk or cream, and stronger than any brand now before the public.

The record of half a century again confirmed, showing GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND to be without a flaw, and stronger, purer than any brand of condensed milk on the market.

Consumers should note that Prof. Wenzell reports that all the alleged brands of condensed creams are not condensed cream and are nothing but evaporated milk, and are greatly inferior in richness and quality to GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND.

NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO.

MISS IRMA FITCH
OF MOROSCO'S
Thors, photo

LORENA ATTWOOD
LEADING LADY AT MOROSCO'S
Elite, photo

MISS JULIA BLANC
[illegible]
Elite, photo

DRAMATIC NOTES

"The Strategist," which was postponed on account of the success of "Jim the Penman," will be produced at the Alcazar on Monday night. The entire Alcazar company, including George Osbourne and Hugo Toland, will appear.

"Gismonda" will be continued until next Saturday night at the Baldwin, when "La Tosca" will be presented. To-night Miss Davenport will appear in "Fedora," and in honor of the event silver souvenirs will be distributed among the ladies on the lower floor.

Following Fanny Davenport, Otis Skinner will come to the Baldwin, opening on March 29 in "A Soldier of Fortune." In addition Mr. Skinner will present "His Grace de Grammont," "Villon the Vagabond," "Richard III.," "Hamlet" and "The Lady of Lyons."

The coming concerts of Mme. Camilla Urso occasion much interest. Mme. Urso, who is one of the conspicuous violinists of the day, will be assisted by her own company, which consists of Miss Minnie Methot, a soprano of much ability, Edwin H. Douglas, a tenor who has won the approval of Dresden, and George H. Wesley, pianist, an excellent interpreter of Chopin. The concerts will come off at Golden Gate Hall early in April. Mme. Urso promises some pieces new to San Francisco.

The opera for this evening at the California will be "The Voyage of Suzette." As the opera calls for over 125 people on the stage the production promises to be a notable one. "Les Huguenots" will be heard on Tuesday evening. The cast for this opera is excellent, and the ballet will be one of the features of the production. On Thursday the double bill, "Dragon de Villars" and "La Navarraise," will be given. In Massenet's opera Mme. Foedor is said to be especially good, and as both pieces have never been heard in San Francisco before, an immense audience is assured.

MLLE. MARGUERITE PASCAL
THE BEAUTY OF THE FRENCH OPERA COMPANY
Thors, photo

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be sung at the Tivoli next week. There will be an enlarged orchestra, new scenery and costumes, and a feature of the last act will be a ballet of fays and fairies. Miss Laura Millard makes her reappearance as Mistress Ford. The blustering Falstaff will be impersonated by W. H. West; John J. Raffael will be Master Ford, and Rhys Thomas Master Fenton.

During the second week of "The Foundling," at the Columbia Theater, Miss Fitzgerald will introduce her famous "hoop-skirt dance," and a new song written especially for her, entitled, "A Race-Track Winner." Following Miss Fitzgerald and "The Foundling," Mr. and Mrs. Russ Whytal will appear in a production of the play "For Fair Virginia."

The feature of the Orpheum bill this week is the performance of the Four Cohans. They do what the impresarios call a "mighty neat turn," and are of the high-salaried contingent which Manager Walter loves. The youngest girl is a decidedly graceful dancer, whose singing is really pretty and clever. John J. Burke is the funny man this week, and makes a great hit. On the first night he brought down the house by his allusions to the historic combat, the result of which was more painful to him than to the audience. The soft, rounded contours of Virginia Aragon on the tight rope shows that a woman may be an acrobat and yet be dainty and graceful. Alas, she is married. Married to the strong man of the Marlo-Marlo combination. The show next week promises to be particularly good, as it includes the participation of Edward Hill, who, as a mimic and impersonator, is better and more elaborate than Biondi.

As against my view of the Fitzgerald person, upon the authority of the "Examiner" critic we have it that Cissy "kicked herself into instant popularity," and that "she was greeted with storms of applause." The "Chronicle" tells us that "the lady made her initial wink before a San Francisco audience last night, and there is no doubt that they liked it. They liked her dance, the dance with the voluminous skirts and the rose dotted lingerie. And they even liked the song, though, as Miss Fitzgerald says, "I haven't a bit of a voice, but it goes." The "Call" critic is non-committal, but he does ascribe to Cissy a pair of big blue eyes, and describes her as "running her slender fingers through her fluffy blonde hair." The "Chronicle" critic gives to the young lady "big brown eyes, very round and wide-open." Upon the authority of these two journals the eyes of this young lady are quite as uncertain as her ability, and if you doubt as to which is right in this matter, I would advise you to see the young person for yourself.

Poodle Dog Restaurant, S. E. corner Grant Avenue and Bush street. Private dining and banquet rooms. Tel. 429. Blanco & Bruno, proprietors.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

Bookkeepers, students, and business men generally use Bank Stock paper. It preserves the sight. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay st.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

When you are selecting a wedding or a birthday present, go to S. & G. Gump's, 113 Geary street. They have a magnificent variety, just arrived from Europe, from which to select.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

Pupils for the Zither will be received daily at my studio, 22½ Geary street, from 1:30 to 3 P.M. Charles Mayer, Jr.

WINTHROP
RANGES
The keynote to good cooking, even baking, economy and successful housekeeping . . . . . .
Chas. Brown & Son
807 MARKET STREET
Flood Building
PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

AN EMPEROR'S WOOING

Personality of Mlle. Montijo — A Napoleonic Wedding.

It is with Napoleon rather than with the beautiful Spaniard whose marriage is one of the royal romances of the century that M. Imbert de Saint-Amand is concerned in his latest historical study, "Louis Napoleon and Mlle. de Montijo (Scribners'). Only in the latter scenes of the book does the graceful and fascinating figure of the woman we know as the Empress Eugenie appear. Her aristocratic pedigree, it is true, is presented in an extended reference soon after the details of the hero's birth have been stated, but the pages know none of the softer feminine graces until the coup d'etat. Then she swims into the literary field, and we are told, distantly and with extreme respect, the story of the Emperor's courtship and their marriage.

Though M. de Saint-Amand makes out of the Strasbourg conspiracy and Napoleon's miraculous escape from the fastness of Ham an excellent and graphic story, he fails to individualize Eugenie de Montijo. One has only the remotest impression of a girl who is described as "pretty, good and witty." The terms apply to dozens of other ladies of less exalted birth. Be it history or romance, the best narrative is that which renders the man and the woman so they grip the imagination by their human entity. Reduced to prose, Her Majesty is but a woman, who is wooed and loved like the rest of her sex. This beautiful Spanish girl, who must have been a creature of ardor and sparkle, a veritable "Diana of the Crossways," is portrayed as though she were a comet or an apparition of the Blessed Virgin. Of course one should criticise a writer rather for what he presents than for what he neglects, but what a virile book this might have been made had the historian but conceived Napoleon and the beautiful Spaniard as man and maid rather than Emperor and Empress. It is true the reader may supply the details of the imperial wooing, for the frame is here. It is possible to conceive Eugenie at Madrid, where she impressed as possessed of a "virile grace," but how can one vizualize a character which comes before us as "having made a great reputation by her daring imagination and the ardent vivacity of her character"? The terms might apply to Ella Wheeler Wilcox, apropos of "Poems of Passion." Again the lovely Spaniard is at Fontainebleu amid the enchanting scenery of the forest, riding a horse from the Prince's stables and appearing like an "intrepid Amazon." Indeed, it is not difficult to imagine her seated at the Emperor's table, he "listening to her lively and glowing conversation and seeking to gain her heart." But it is the reader who supplies the woman, not M. de Saint-Amand. A vital touch one finds at long and rare intervals, it is true, but it is discovered that some other pen is responsible. This, for instance:

THE EMPRESS EUGENIE

"M. de Maupas relates in his 'Memoires sur le Second Empire,' that on one bright autumnal morning during this stay at Compiegne, the Emperor, accompanied by a few persons only, among whom were Madame and Mademoiselle de Montijo, was walking in the park. 'The lawns,' adds M. de Maupas, 'were covered with an abundant dew, and the rays of the sun gave the drops still hanging on the herbage the glow and transparency of diamonds. Mademoiselle Eugenie de Montijo, whose nature was full of poetry, took pleasure in admiring the capricious and magical effects of light. She especially called attention to a clover leaf so gracefully charged with dewdrops that one might have thought it a real gem, fallen from some ornament. When the walk was over, the Emperor drew aside Comte Bacchiochi, who started for Paris a few minutes later. The next day he brought back a charming trinket, which was no other than a trefoil, each of whose leaves bore a superb diamond dewdrop. The Count had caused the leaf so much admired by his future sovereign on the previous day to be imitated with rare perfection. In the evening a lottery was drawn at the chateau. It was managed so that this trefoil should be gained by Mademoiselle de Montijo. In the Emperor's mind the trinket was the equivalent of an engagement ring. But no one except himself yet attached this idea to the poetic present the beautiful Spaniard had just received.'"

* *

To the immobility of the Emperor's visage, to his capacity to repress and conceal emotion and his ability at deception the author devotes much attention. It is certain no one suspected, save, perhaps, the clever Madame de Montijo, that the Emperor hovered on the verge of matrimony with her daughter. Though M. de Saint-Amand is far too reverential to hint at such a thing, it is certain that this august lady, who, prior to her sojourn in France, was "camarera mayor," which means, "First Lady of the Bed Chamber," to Queen Isabella of Spain, was as adroit a match-maker as the late Duchess of Beaufort. It seems there was an English lady who had possession of the Emperor (Miss Howard), and whom his friends feared would interfere with an appropriate settlement in life. We are merely apprised of this attachment, however, though politely informed that Napoleon sedulously avoided introducing her at state functions—which was very thoughtful and correct of him. However, the Emperor proposed and was accepted. This is how the betrothal was precipitated:

* *

"Mademoiselle de Montijo, who was leaning on the arm of Colonel de Toulongeon, having passed in front of the wife of a high official, the latter gave vent to her ill-humor in some offensive words. Very much moved, Mademoiselle de Montijo complained to Napoleon III., and made him understand that she should remain no longer in a court where she was treated in such a way. The Emperor answered her, 'I will avenge you.' And the next day he asked her hand in marriage. She was then living with her mother at No. 12 Vendome place, on the first story, very near the Rhine Hotel, where Louis Napoleon was lodging when he was elected President of the Republic."

* *

The announcement of the proposed marriage to the Legislature makes an interesting episode. It is followed by all manner of spectacles and rejoicings. At one of these the author sees the future Empress:

* *

"Mingled with the crowd in the court of the Louvre, I saw the procession pass. Seen through the windows of the glittering carriage, the Empress appeared an ideal being. Her pallor enhanced her sculpturesque profile. I shall never forget the impression produced on me by this sweet and radiant image. A nameless presentiment told me that like all incomparably beautiful women, like Cleopatra, like Mary Stuart, like Marie Antoinette, this admirable sovereign was destined to calamities as exceptional as her fortune and her beauty. I asked God to bless the Empress, to remove the chalice of bitterness from her lips, and not to make her some day expiate immense joys by immense sorrows."

* *

It seems extraordinary that the divinity could have been so ill-advised as to resist the prayers of M. de Saint-Amand, but this author was then young and unimportant, and his "Famous Women of the French" were not even in embryo. However, he gives us a spectacular description of the marriage ceremony in the glorious details of which he luxuriates, thus:

* *

"The great door opened, and the Emperor, giving his hand to the Empress, made his entry into the cathedral under a dais of red velvet lined with white satin, an orchestra of five hundred musicians executing a nuptial march meanwhile. In crossing the threshold of the ancient basilica where so many generations had kneeled, the Empress turned pale. The dazzling perspective of the cathedral, lighted by fifteen thousand candles, with its pillars hung to their capitals with red velvet bordered with golden palms, seemed to her a mystical, supernatural apparition. Advancing as in a celestial dream, with her trained robe of white satin, her cincture of diamonds, her diadem wreathed with orange blossoms, from which fell a lace veil which enveloped her like a cloud and fell to the very ground, the gentle and majestic sovereign experienced an emotion which communicated itself to all the spectators. There was something so tender and so frightened in her glance. Timid, and as if doubtful of herself, modest and seeming all astonished at her triumph, she appeared to be asking envy and hatred to spare her. She was imploring the affection of her new country. She was like an august suppliant.

"The ministers were placed on the right of the transept in front of the tribune of the Senate. On the left side of the altar sat the cardinals, archbishops, bishops and members of the metropolitan chapter. The husband and wife sat down on the two armchairs. The grand mistress of the Empress' household, her lady of honor, and her ladies of the palace took their places on a bench behind her. The great officers and the officers of the Empress constantly increased. General Tascher de la Pagerie, who was behind her throughout the ceremony, thought several times that she was going to faint, and heard the Emperor trying to strengthen her with tender words. Notified by the Duc de Cambaceres, the Archbishop of Paris bowed to their Majesties, who went forward to the foot of the altar and stood there, holding each other by the hand. 'You present yourselves here,' the archbishop said to them, 'to contract marriage in the presence of Holy Church?' They replied, 'Yes, sir.' The first almoner of the Emperor then presented on a silver-gilt plate the gold pieces and the nuptial ring to the archbishop, who blessed them.

"The archbishop then presented the gold pieces and the ring to the Emperor, who first gave the pieces to the Empress, saying, 'Receive the sign of the matrimonial conventions made between you and me.' Then, placing the ring on her finger, he said, 'I give you this ring in token of the marriage we are contracting.' Then the spouses kneeled down, and the archbishop, extending his hand over them, pronounced the sacramental formula and the prayer, 'God of Abraham, God of Isaac.'"

Those who want a fine quality of liquor for medicinal purposes or for home use, will find the Jesse Moore A. A. whiskey superior to any other brand. Sold by all druggists and the principal grocers. Jesse Moore Hunt Co., agents, San Francisco.

Egyptian Henna. Safe, sure, pleasant. A vegetable hair dye for restoring gray hair to its original color. Immediate effect. Free from all objectionable qualities. At all druggists and hairdressers. Langley & Michaels Company, agents.

The Occidental Restaurant, 337 Bush street. Headquarters for tourists. Separate rooms for families. Meals a la carte. Lunch 50c. Best French Dinner in the city, 75c. Munier & Jeuch, proprietors.

THROAT DISEASES commence with a Cough, Cold or Sore Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and sure relief.

How's This.

We offer one hundred dollars reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last fifteen years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRUAX, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo.

WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is take internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggists. Testimonials free.

Bank Stock pads and tablets are made from pure stock and are of high value from an oculistic standpoint. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Wise people seeking advice on important matters consult only the best authorities. THOS. COOK & SON are the recognized authorities on Travel in all Civilized Countries. The knowledge attained during their fifty-six years of experience as travel experts, is at the disposal of all intending travelers. San Francisco Office, 621 Market street.

$5,000 will purchase half interest in United States patent controlling one of the most profitable advertising devices ever offered to the public. The device pays 25% per month on cost. Over $4,000 has already been realized from the sale of the right for three counties in California alone. The enterprise is well worth the immediate investigation of the most cautious investor. Serious illness of owner necessitates the sale. Address R. A. L., care The Wave.

QUEEN LILY SOAP

BEST ON EARTH
FOR LAUNDRY USE

Patronize Home Industry

Polished
Hardwood Floors

$1.50 per Square Yard

Fine Work—First-class References

INLAID FLOOR CO.

602 Market St., Crocker Building

Telephone Main 5998

ELECTRIC..

Supplies
Construction
Repairs

CALIFORNIA
ELECTRICAL WORKS

409 MARKET STREET

"The Beer that made Milwaukee famous!"

Schlitz

has made itself

WORLD-FAMOUS

MADE ONLY FROM

CHOICEST HOPS AND MALT

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS

Sherwood & Sherwood

SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND LOS ANGELES

AMERICAN OIL AND PAINT CO.

19 Spear St., San Francisco

MANUFACTURERS OF

High-Grade Lubricating Oils
Compounds and Grease

DEALERS IN PAINTS AND PAINT OILS

Estimates Given on Lubricating or Painting Work

A Home

MAY BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A

GAZOGENE

BUT NOT

If you care for Aerated Water, or use Wine on your table. A simple method of making your own Soda Water. See

Justinian Caire

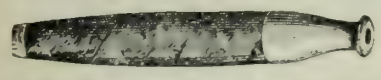
521-523 Market St., San Fran.



Have you a friend who a Smoker is,
Tell him there is just out a Smoker's Tip,
Which will prevent a cancer lip.

Mailed on receipt of three 2-cent stamps by

ELASTIC TIP CO.

Boston 735 Market St., S. F. Chicago

Wedding Invitations are properly engraved and in correct form, at ROBERTSON'S

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

22-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard

ALSO

Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks

From 30 to 120 inches wide

Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks

Manufactured by Murphy, Grant & Co.
Mount Vernon Company Pacific Coast
Baltimore Sole Agents

FRANKLIN K. LANE G. WHITFIELD LANE

LANE & LANE

Attorneys and Counselors

Room 202

Crocker Building, San Francisco

Mr. Fancis Stuart TEACHER OF SINGING

HAS REMOVED HIS STUDIO TO

901 Sutter Street

THE THEATRES

Fanny Davenport in "Gismonda"—Alas, poor Foundling!

"Gismonda" is a dash of red, another dash of red, and yet another. The grays are not much in evidence in the coloring of the play. Virtue and courage are richly rewarded, and vice and treachery are punished as faithfully as any Sunday school book would have them. Not that I object to virtue triumphant, and vice beaten and recumbent. I like to see it just as "Gismonda" has it. I like to see the villain die, and gloat over the killing of him, and likewise it gives me pleasure to glow with warm gratification over the victory of virtue. It is worth some one's while to work out this problem of human nature. However delinquent we may be in private life, we are shocked if the good old rule of rewards and punishments is violated by the playwright. I heard of a professional burglar who objected to "Chimmie Fadden" because the burglar in that play went unpunished. Think of it! Does this sentiment grow out of man's inherent sense of justice, or is it mental driftwood left over by the wishy-washy Sunday school books of youth? Here is a problem for Professor Jordan to solve. At our cheap vaudevilles if a serio-comic songster, with a voice as hard as adamant, sings discordantly about "Dear Old Mother," the gallery comes down with a tremendous round of applause, but, two to one, the fellow who is loudest in his approbation goes home and quarrels with the "old woman," and ends up by beating her unmercifully for some fancied interference with his prerogatives.

But to "Gismonda." It is superb. The story is dramatically interesting, redolent of human passion, of love, of hate, of pride, of ambition and of treachery. You are entranced to the last, and follow with deep interest the fortunes of Almerio, the falconer, offering up a silent prayer that the brave young fellow may capture the Duchess in spite of the devil. And when he does come out triumphant in his love, you feel that he has captured a devil in the shape of the Duchess.

Fanny Davenport's position on the American stage is unique. With no intention of overrating her abilities or underrating her faults, I fear me she will find it a losing game if she carries out the intention, ascribed to her by the daily prints, of forsaking the Sardou plays and confining herself hereafter to American dramas of her own. The drawing power of this lady is not due entirely to her own personality or abilities. Given an American actress of intelligence, with a repertoire from the master hand of Sardou, shaped and molded for the peerless Bernhardt; given, too, a faithful reproduction of the exquisite Parisian stage settings, fac-similes of costumes, of drapery and of hangings; given the elaborate effects and historical accessories that have been dragged out of their hiding places in history by indefatigable hands after infinite research, care and pains, and you have equipped that actress, whoever she may be, with a tangible something that gives her an immense advantage over the rest of the American stage world. The prestige of being the American Bernhardt and the exclusive delineator of the Sardou creations is something. It is a great deal. I don't believe there was a woman at the Baldwin Theater last Monday night who did not in her own mind imagine how Bernhardt would have received and repulsed and received and repulsed again the embraces of love-possessed Almerio in the third act. Indeed, the same feeling clung to us throughout the entire play. It is the association of the magic name of the divine Sarah, as well as that of Sardou, that attaches peculiar interest to these Sardou productions. Fanny Davenport, although talented and wise in things theatrical, must not blind herself to this influence that weighs so much in her favor.

The central figures of "Gismonda" naturally enough, are Fanny Davenport in the title role, and Melbourne MacDowell as Almerio. The rest of the company, something over two dozen in number, are as pieces of tapestry, convenient chairs, soft pillows, and mere accessories, any half dozen of whom could better have been dispensed with than could the scene at the Cloister of Daphne, the beautiful picture of Nymphs' Hill, or the magnificent church of Santa Maria. The story is told with a straightforward masterfulness, and pins your attention to the last. The stage settings and the costumes are gorgeous and irreproachable. Every act and scene is a picture, appreciation of which is testified by bursts of well-merited applause. The Almerio of MacDowell admirably suited his voice and figure, though I must confess I was better pleased with him as he turned his back to the audience. In the love passages he was tender and mellow-toned, but one could not resist the wish that he might exchange faces with Zaccarie, the villain, whose features had all the graces that the world associates with lovers.

Miss Davenport's gowns were exquisite creations of the dressmaker's art. It is natural to suppose that this lady is often charged with imitating Bernhardt, and this, no doubt, is what has led her to deny in the daily prints that she can imitate even a gesture. At the risk of being unpleasant, I am inclined to disagree with the lady, and ascribe to her power and ability in the art imitation, possession of which she is inclined to deny. Perhaps Bernhardt's "Gismonda" is a stranger to her, but if her half-closed eyes and set mouth that come and go throughout the play do not remind you strongly of the Bernhardt and her photographs, then I am a sinner. The eyes of the Davenport are not the almond eyes of the Bernhardt, yet at times they are so wonderfully like unto the Bernhardt expression that I should in the absence of the lady's disclaimer, certainly say she had studied the Bernhardt photographs for hours before her confiding mirror, and I should not blame her for the doing of it.

I think I may have seen worse plays than "The Foundling" and worse actors than those gathered together by Frohman with the Cissy Fitzgerald company, but though I have racked my brain I cannot for the moment recall where. I was fully prepared to enjoy the play, for the bills boastfully announced that it had run two hundred nights at Hoyt's Theater in New York. If this statement be true, then, indeed, is our American metropolis a theatrical jay town, where "anything goes." There were eleven people in the cast and one actor, just one. Thomas Burns—and how he ever managed to get into such a company worries me—is a comedian of ability. His role was hackneyed, and had been worn threadbare in a dozen better plays, but he was able to make himself interesting. The remainder of the company are sticks, and the famous Cissy is an animated bundle of flounces and laces, grins and winks. I think it was Alan Dale of the New York "World" who discovered Cissy and made her famous, for the doing of which he ought to be made to pay roundly to the American people. She cannot act; she cannot even talk. She cannot laugh. She has a pair of large dark eyes, which she puts in italics by wearing a blonde wig. She stares at you like an ox-eyed doll in a toy store window, and the smile glued to her face uncovers a not too even row of teeth and a considerable expanse of gums. Does she dance? From Mrs. Clark's Dancing Academy there are annually graduated a dozen youngsters more graceful and better equipped for stage dancing than is Cissy. She does nothing well. I cannot find any earthly excuse for this young lady outside of a vaudeville show, where she might be tolerated.

The performance opened with that well worn curtain-raiser, "Chums." I venture to assert that before nightfall a blind man would have no trouble in recruiting twenty separate companies of local amateurs who could present this comediette with more vigor and style and finish than did these professionals. I would not like to repeat the criticism of a very profane and very much disgusted young man who sat behind me. It was crisp and curt, but could hardly be repeated in print.

The wit of "The Foundling," which was the piece de resistance, was coarse and unpleasing. I like to take my shady stories and off-colored jokes upon a silver platter or done up in style as bon bons are, that is, if I have to take them, but no such delicate sense is discoverable in "The Foundling." There they blurt matters out with a gay disregard and abandon that is shocking to one who is only delicately bad. At first I resented the absence of Cissy in the opening piece of "Chums," for my interest was in her, and when the first act of "The Foundling" passed, and still no Cissy came, I felt outraged; for had I not braved the threatening storm to see this much heralded maiden with her wink and her kick? This, thought I, must indeed be a star par excellence, who does not come upon the stage until half-past nine. But lo, about the middle of the second act, in flounces this most wondrous maid. She speaks, she giggles, she smiles and stares, then dances. I utter a prayer of fervent thankfulness and gratitude for the managerial wisdom that has kept her off the stage so long and permits her to return so infrequently.

B.

MR. HERMANN SCHWARZE (known as Herman, at Strozynski's) has opened Ladies' Hairdressing Parlors at 225 Powell street. Telephone Main 5820.

The Mutual Life Insurance COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Richard A. McCurdy, President.

STATEMENT

For the year ending December 31, 1896, According to the Standard of the Insurance Department of the State of New York.

INCOME.

| | |
|---|---|
| Received for Premiums | $39,593,414 20 |
| From all other Sources | 10,109,281 07 |
| | $49,702,695 27 |

DISBURSEMENTS.

| | |
|---|---|
| To Policy-holders for Claims by Death | $12,595,113 39 |
| To Policy-holders for Endowments, Dividends, etc | 12,842,456 11 |
| For all other Accounts | 10,781,005 64 |
| | $36,218,575 14 |

ASSETS.

| | |
|---|---|
| United States Bonds and other Securities | $110,125,082 15 |
| First lien Loans on Bond and Mortgage | 71,543,929 56 |
| Loans on Stocks and Bonds | 11,091,525 00 |
| Real Estate | 22,767,666 65 |
| Cash in Banks and Trust Companies | 12,680,390 00 |
| Accrued Interest, Net Deferred Premiums, etc | 6,535,555 06 |
| | $234,744,148 42 |
| Reserve for Policies and other Liabilities | 205,010,633 72 |
| Surplus | $29,733,514 70 |
| Insurance and Annuities in force | $918,698,338 45 |

I have carefully examined the foregoing Statement and find the same to be correct; liabilities calculated by the Insurance Department.

CHARLES A. PRELLER, Auditor.

From the Surplus a dividend will be apportioned as usual.

ROBERT A. GRANNISS, Vice-President.

WALTER R. GILLETTE.....General Manager
ISAAC F. LLOYD.....Second Vice-President
FREDERIC CROMWELL.....Treasurer
EMORY MCCLINTOCK.....Actuary

A. B. FORBES & SON,
Mutual Life Building, San Francisco, Cal.

THE

P. ROSSI CO.

Art Importers

No. 117 Sutter Street

Bet. Kearny and Montgomery

Beg to notify their friends of the arrival of a large stock of

HAND-CARVED FURNITURE

Antique and Modern

Also, French Tapestries and Painted Window Shades—something worth seeing.

Electric Storage Batteries!

UNION IRON WORKS

AGENTS

222 Market Street, San Francisco

BALDWIN THEATRE (AL HAYMAN AND CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

Beginning Next Monday, March 22d, Second and Last Week of

Fanny Davenport

Supported by MELBOURNE MACDOWELL

Sardou's

GISMONDA

Saturday Night, March 27th, only time, LA TOSCA

Grand Souvenir Event

March 29th, Otis Skinner in "A Soldier of Fortune"

CALIFORNIA THEATRE (AL HAYMAN & CO. INCORP'D PROPS)

GRAND OPERA SEASON

THE FAMOUS

FRENCH OPERATIC ORGANIZATION

F. CHARLEY, Impresario

To-night, Saturday, Special Event, The Voyage of Suzette, a Beautiful Spectacular Light Opera

Tuesday the 23d, Les Huguenots

Thursday the 25th, a double bill: Dragon de Villars, romantic opera, and Massenet's lyric gem, La Navarraise

Saturday Matinee, March 27th Mignon

To be followed by Aida, Chalet, Pagliacci, etc.

Columbia Theatre.

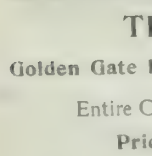
FRIEDLANDER, GOTTLOB & CO. LESSEES AND MANAGERS



Second and Last Week

See the famous Hoop Skirt Dance

Hear the new song

"My Race Track Winner"

New York's Jolliest Success

THE FOUNDLING!

Management Charles Frohman

The great and only CISSY FITZGERALD in her inimitable Dances. See Cissy Wink!

Monday, March 28th: For Fair Virginia

Orpheum

O'FARRELL STREET, BETWEEN STOCKTON AND POWELL

Week Commencing Monday, March 22

A Brilliant Artistic Novelty, HENRY LEE, in "Great Men, Past and Present."

The Comedian, Johnny Ray, assisted by Emma Ray

Three Vilona Sisters, Musical Artists

Werner & Rieder, Tyrolean Warblers

Dick and Alice McAvoy, the Hogan Alley Kids

The Three Richards, the Greatest Acrobats on Earth

Great Hit of the Four Cohans, Doll Dancers

Reserved seats 50 and 25c; balcony 10c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday

Tivoli Opera House

MRS. ERNESTINE KRELING : Proprietor and Manager

Commencing Monday, March 22d

Every Evening, Elaborate Production of Nicolai's Celebrated Comic Opera

"The Merry Wives of Windsor!"

Reappearance of MISS LAURA MILLARD the Favorite Prima Donna

Excellent Cast! Scenery, Costumes and Accessories from New and Elaborate Drawings!

Next, the Spectacular Burlesque, Don Juan Ad Lib

Popular Prices, 25 and 50c.

Alcazar Theatre

BELASCO & LA FAILLE : : : : MANAGERS

Last performances to-day and to-morrow, matinees and nights, of the greatest play of the century

Jim the Penman

Monday, March 22d, Another Laugh-Maker! The Most Famous of all Comedies

THE STRATEGISTS!

The entire company will appear in the play, including George Osbourne and Hugo Toland

15, 25, 35 and 50c. 'Phone for seats: Black 991

MOROSCO'S GRAND OPERA HOUSE

WALTER MOROSCO : : Sole Lessee and Manager

Last performances of EAGLE'S NEST And NAT M. WILLS' Funny Tramp Specialty

Commencing Monday, March 22d, Wonderful Scenic Production of

The Great Northwest

A romance of the Red River Valley of the North! Great Blizzard Scene! Wonderful Prairie Fire! Special engagement of the petite soubrette, Irma Fitch Splendid Scenery! Sweet Songs! Strong Specialties!

Evg. Prices, 10, 25, 50c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday

TREBELLI!

Golden Gate Hall This Afternoon at 3

Entire Change of Programme!

Prices, 50c. and $1

Last Recital To-morrow (Sunday) Evening at same Hall at 8:15

The Musical Event of the Season!

Camilla Urso

The Eminent Violin Virtuose, and Her Own Company will appear at

Golden Gate Hall

Monday Eve., Mar. 29, Friday Eve., Apr. 2

Saturday Matinee, April 3

MISS M. METHOT, SOPRANO

EDWIN H. DOUGLAS, TENOR

GEORGE H. WESLEY, PIANIST

Box office open next Thursday at Sherman, Clay & Co's

Prices, $1.50, $1 and 25c.

RACING

Changes in the Administration of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club.

The chief topic of interest in turf circles has been the changes that have been made in the officials of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club. At the end of last week it was announced, to the surprise of the general public, that Mr. A. B. Spreckels, the President, and Mr. W. S. Leake, the Secretary, had both resigned, for reasons that implied serious differences with regard to the manner in which the racing affairs of the club should be administered. When the actual truth became known it was seen that questions of finance, which concerned the stockholders only, were the cause of the difficulty, and that it was in no way due to anything affecting the racing management of the club. On an adjustment being made Mr. Spreckels resolved to relinquish his position as President, Mr. Leake also following him into retirement. Both gentlemen have earned the praise and gratitude of racing men by the manner in which they have fulfilled their duties, and they are entitled to every credit for the smooth and efficient working of affairs at Ingleside since it was opened last season.

As regards the future, there is reason to hope that the business-like management which has hitherto obtained will continue, although the Board as now constituted is not as fully identified in its personnel with turf matters as could have been desired. Senator S. M. Androus has been elected to the office of President, and Mr. J. Malowansky is a new addition to the number of Directors, as is also Mr. F. H. Green, who undertakes the duties of Secretary also. Mr. Corrigan, Mr. Henry I. Crocker and Mr. Walter S. Hobart, who are best known to horsemen, have shown that they mean to spare no effort to have the business of the club conducted in such a way as will give satisfaction to owners and the public, and it is believed that they can succeed in doing so. At the same time there is bound to be some uneasiness for a while, and the recent change is certainly regrettable, as these are not the times for changes which involve the loss of so liberal a patron of the sport as Mr. A. B. Spreckels has been.

---

With charming weather and a good track things have been running comfortably at Emeryville, though unfortunately several of the more interesting races have not fulfilled their promise, owners in too many instances being disappointed with the weights allotted in handicaps.

The handicapping at both tracks this season is being unfavorably commented upon so generally that the authorities will do well to make some effort to have things altered in this respect.

---

In the two-year-old division Mr. E. J. Baldwin's nice-looking colt Rey el Salto (Emperor of Norfolk-Jennie D.) has come into prominent notice, and is by many considered to be the best youngster that has gone to the post this season. He is certainly good-looking enough, and has won his races without having to make any great effort. Green B. Morris captured a race last Thursday with Gypceiver (imp. Deceiver-Gypsy Queen), a somewhat plain-looking colt, but one of the most forward of the youngsters we have seen out. He is well-grown, with lots of bone and muscle, and moves in good form. Free Lady scored another bracket on Saturday, but was decidedly lucky in the start, and as her appearance would lead one to think she is not doing altogether well, she may not hold her speed as the season advances. The Burns & Waterhouse colt Colonel Dan (Salvator-Fleurette) is one of the improving sort seemingly, and as he gallops in excellent form, he may be heard of in front shortly. His breeding is very attractive. He had to go down on Tuesday, however, to the smart filly Martha (imp. Dandie Dinmont-Louise T.), but only after a hot finish, in which the filly was handled in really good style by Marty Bergen, who seldom gets into the saddle nowadays except when riding one of his own.

The dead Morello has left some promising stock behind him, and another winner amongst his get has turned up in Sadie Schwartz, though her performance was not particularly striking.

---

The Oakland Handicap, one and a quarter miles, which promised at one time to produce an interesting contest, dwindled down to five starters. For the first half of the distance Lincoln II., 103 pounds, and Thelma, 86 pounds, with Howard S., 108 pounds, biding his time a length or so in the rear, proceeded in this order, the pace being good. Rounding the last bend of the course Howard S. came somewhat wide, and stumbling at the head of the stretch was fully three lengths in the rear of Lincoln II. Thorpe proceeded to make up his ground, and for a moment his success seemed a little doubtful, as the last named horse is known to be game and had evidently a bit of speed left. The son of Whistle Jacket, however, laid down to his work like a good one, and creeping up a few inches at each stride under Thorpe's vigorous handling had pushed his head in front by the time the judges' verdict was due. Time, 2:07¾, but a fraction short of the California record. It was a good race between two colts of high class, both well ridden, and fully confirmed the good opinion I have always had of the winner. The rest of the field were several lengths in the rear.

---

In the Golden Gate Handicap, seven and a half furlongs, on Wednesday last, a field of seven came to the post, the three-year-olds Candelaria 100 pounds, Scarf Pin 99 pounds, and Lincoln II. 105 pounds, being decidedly the pick of the basket. The second of the trio kept in front all the way to the stretch with Installator, 108 pounds, in close attendance. When the turn had been made Slaughter gathered Candelaria up, and carrying him to the head of the party placed him a couple of lengths in advance of Scarf Pin at the winning post, Lincoln II., who was running strong and making up ground as the stand was passed, getting within half a length of the last named mare at the finish.

---

An interesting and instructive piece of reading is the extended report of the London "Sportsman" on the contest to name the best horse to mate with the Prince of Wales' beautifully bred mare Thais. The judges selected Carbine, Australia's greatest racehorse and sire, now in England; and four of the competitors, one in America, one in Spain and two in Great Britain hit the mark. The successful American was Major Foxhall A. Daingerfield, who has charge of Mr. James R. Keene's Castleton stud in Kentucky, and he was awarded the first prize. The thoroughbred Record of Lexington, Ky., February 13, publishes the report in full, and no one who cares for blood horse lore should fail to read, mark and learn.

BENEDICT.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for Children Teething. 25c. a bottle.

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

J. W. CARMANY, 25 Kearny street, for a complete line of Spring shirtings and neckwear.

The Banquet Hall at the Maison Riche is the largest and best equipped in San Francisco.

DR. H. G. YOUNG—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM O. BERG, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,

Adm. of the Estate of Wm. O. Berg, deceased.

Dated at San Francisco, March 18, 1897.

J. D. SULLIVAN, Atty. for the Administrator.

Use Oakland Dairy Milk and Cream—it is absolutely pure. Depot, 320 Fulton street, San Francisco. Telephone Pine 1692.

Its Purity A Surety Of Its Excellence

Accept No Substitute None So Good None So Pure

Vina Brandy

Vina Distillery Co.

819 Market St., S. F.

CRESTA BLANCA WINES

AWARDED THREE HIGHEST AWARDS AT

THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION

OF SIX MEDALS AWARDED TO CALIFORNIA

Cresta Blanca Wines

OBTAINED THREE

WETMORE-BOWEN CO.

140 Montgomery Street

Under Occidental Hotel

FINE FUR AND SEALSKIN GARMENTS TO ORDER

Remodeling and repairing at prices far below those of any other furrier on the Pacific Coast . . . .

AD. KOCOUR

Fashionable Furrier

5½ Kearny Street

OPPOSITE CHRONICLE BUILDING

PACIFIC COAST JOCKEY CLUB

(INGLESIDE TRACK)

The Only Perfect Winter Track in America

Racing from March 22 to April 3, inclusive

Five or More Races Daily, Rain or Shine

First Race at 2 p.m.

Take Southern Pacific Trains at Third and Townsend Street depot, leaving at 1 and 1:20 p. m. Fare for round trip, including admission to the grounds, One Dollar. Take Mission-Street electric line direct to track.

The Androus Stakes Monday, March 22d

The Ullman Stakes Saturday, March 27th

The California Derby Saturday, April 3d

F. H. GREEN, Secy. S. N. ANDROUS, Pres.

RACING! RACING!

California Jockey Club

Winter Meeting 1896-97, Beginning MONDAY, March 8 to 20, at OAKLAND RACETRACK

Racing Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, rain or shine

Five or more races each day. Races start at 2:15 p. m. sharp

Ferry boats leave S.F. at 12 m. and 12:30, 1:00, 1:30 and 2:00 p. m., connecting with trains stopping at entrance to track; buy your tickets to Berkeley.

Returning, trains leave the track at 4:15 and 4:45 p. m., and immediately after the last race.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS JR., Pres.

R. B. MILROY, Secretary.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, the famous orator, statesman, railroad president and millionaire, in an interview said of his recent visit to Del Monte: "I visited Monterey, and I call it the most beautiful place in the world. Monte Carlo cannot compare with it. Its seventeen-mile drive is unparalleled for fineness."

When Mr. Depew says it is the most beautiful place in the world he knows what he is saying, and means it, for he has seen pretty much all the beautiful and interesting places in the world many times over. Address GEO. H. ARNOLD, Manager.

THE TAVERN OF CASTLE CRAG, the most attractive and accessible of the interior mountain resorts of California, 320 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the famous "Shasta Route." Elevation, 2100 feet. Luxury, good cheer, hospitality, and matchless scenery. GEORGE SCHONEWALD, Manager.

BELCHER SILVER MINING CO.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California; location of works, Gold Hill, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 2d day of March, 1897, an assessment (No. 54) of twenty-five cents (25c.) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, San Francisco. Cal. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of April, 1897, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction: and un ess payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday the 27th day of April, 1897, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. C. L. PERKINS, Secretary.

Office, rooms 37 and 38, third floor, Mills building, northeast corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

ESTATE OF JOHN PHELAN, deceased—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, A. C. Freese, Administrator of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at room 35, Chronicle Building, corner of Geary and Kearny streets, the same being his place for the transaction of the business of the said estate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

A. C. FREESE,
Adm. of the Estate of John Phelan, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, February 7, 1897.
J. D. SULLIVAN,
Attorney for Administrator.

A. K. DAGGETT

Drawing of Deeds and all Legal Papers a specialty

NOTARY PUBLIC
14 Montgomery St., S. P.
Telephone 305

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 18191—Dept. 9.—In the matter of the Estate of SARAH SMITH, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased, with the will annexed, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator, at the office of Frank P. Kelly, 101 Sansome street, rooms 21 and 22, San Francisco, California, the same being the place for the transaction of the business of said estate, in the City and County of San Francisco.

W. R. FELTER,
Adm. of the Estate of Sarah Smith, deceased.
Dated at San Francisco, February 25, 1897.
FRANK P. KELLY,
Attorney for Administrator.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE

Alta Silver Mining Company

Assessment No. 55
Amount per share, 5 cents
Levied March 4, 1897
Delinquent in office April 8, 1897
Day of sale of delinquent stock, April 9, 1897
J. E. JACOBUS, Secretary.
Office, room 33, Nevada Block, San Francisco.

Sent Free!

To any person interested in humane matters, or who loves animals, we will send free, upon application, a copy of the "ALLIANCE," the organ of this Society. In addition to its intensely interesting reading, it contains a list of the valuable and unusual premiums given by the paper. Address

THE NATIONAL HUMANE ALLIANCE
410-411 United Charities Bldg., New York

BAJA CALIFORNIA
DAMIANA BITTERS

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. (Send for Circular)

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market St., S. F.

P. D. BERNHARD

Shaving : and : Hairdressing : Saloon

4 Post St., near Montgomery

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE GREEN 143

DR. G. A. DANZIGER
DENTIST

22 Geary Street : : First Floor

The Younger Method of Implantation and Regulation of Teeth employed

THE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

510 MONTGOMERY ST., S. F.,

Reads all papers on the Pacific Coast, and supplies clippings on all topics, business and personal.

SCOTT & McCORD
HAY AND GRAIN MERCHANTS
OFFICE, 615 SIXTH ST

Thoerner & Roesli

FLORISTS

Choice Cut Flowers and Plants
Funeral Designs

Also Artistic Designs made of Imported, Dry, Natural Flowers for Export Purposes a specialty

809 Larkin Street

BETWEEN GEARY AND O'FARRELL, SAN FRANCISCO

BONESTELL & CO.

Dealers in PAPER

Fine Coated Papers a Specialty

401-403 SANSOME ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.

REMOVAL

Rountrees English Chocolate, Kohlers Swiss Chocolates, and all brands of Foreign and Eastern Confectionery, imported by . . . .

W. L. GREENBAUM,
of 205 SUTTER ST., will, after December 1st, be found in large and commodious quarters at

128 POST ST., Bohemian Club Bldg.

Brushes For barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bathhouses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candymakers, canners, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paperhangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS.
TEL. 5610 609 SACRAMENTO ST
BRUSH MANUFACTURERS

An Advantageous Offer!

Subscribe Now
Subscribe Now

IN order to thoroughly introduce THE WAVE in its new form, we have arranged in combination with certain of the most prominent of the Monthly Magazines a most advantageous offer. Beginning Febuary first we will send to any address for the regular subscription price THE WAVE, together with one of the following publications:

The Cosmopolitan McClure's Magazine
Ladies' Home Journal Munsey's Magazine

For three dollars per year, which is our regular subscription rate, you receive the ablest and best of the Pacific Coast weeklies, together with your choice of these popular monthlies.

Price of subscription must accompany every order.

THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street.

The German Savings and Loan Society

526 California St., S. F.

Guarantee Capital and Surplus - $2,040,201 66
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash - 1,000,000 00
Deposits December 31, 1896 - - 27,730,247 45

OFFICERS

President, B. A. BECKER
First Vice-President, DANIEL MEYER
Second Vice-President, H. HORSTMANN
Cashier, A. H. R. SCHMIDT
Assistant Cashier, WM. HERRMANN
Secretary, GEORGE TOURNY
Assistant Secretary, A. H. MULLER

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, N. Van Bergen, E. Rhote, H. B. Russ, D. N. Walter and N. Ohlandt.
Attorney - W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA ST.

Deposits December 31, 1896 - $22,885,377
Paid Up Capital and Surplus - 1,594,503

ALBERT MILLER, Pres. E. B. POND, Vice-Pres.
LOVELL WHITE, Cashier

DIRECTORS

GEORGE W. BEAVER ROBERT WATT
THOMAS MAGEE GEO. C. BOARDMAN
W. C. B. DE FREMERY DANIEL E. MARTIN
ALBERT MILLER GEO. TASHEIRA
E. B. POND

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate, and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.
No charge is made for pass book or entrance fee.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Capital Fully Paid - - One Million Dollars

Transacts a general banking business and allows interest on deposits, payable on demand or after notice.

Acts as Executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, or in any other trust capacity. Wills are drawn by the Company's Attorneys and are taken care of without charge. Safe Deposit Boxes to rent at prices from $5 per annum upward, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS: J. D. FRY, HENRY WILLIAMS, I. G. WICKERSHAM, JACOB C. JOHNSON, JAMES TREADWELL, F. W. LOUGEE, HENRY F. FORTMANN, R. B. WALLACE, R. D. FRY, A. D. SHARON, J. DALZELL BROWN.

OFFICERS: J. D. FRY, PRES.; HENRY WILLIAMS, VICE-PRES.; R. D. FRY, SECOND VICE-PRES.; J. DALZELL BROWN, SEC. AND TREAS.; E. E. SHOTWELL, ASST. SEC.; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, ATTORNEYS.

Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco

33 Post Street, below Kearny, Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital, $1,000,000

JAS. D. PHELAN, Pres. GEO. A. STORY, Cashier
S. G. MURPHY, JOHN A. HOOPER, Vice-Pres.

DIRECTORS—Jas. D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, C. G. Hooker, Frank J. Sullivan, L. P. Drexler, Robt. McElroy, Jos. D. Grant.

Interest paid on term and ordinary deposits.
Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Exchange on City Banks.
When opening accounts, send signature.

California Title Insurance and Trust Co.

Paid Up Capital, $250,000
Cash Reserve Fund, $25,000

A. J. CARMANY : : Manager

OFFICE, MILLS BUILDING

Policies of Insurance issued, guaranteeing titles to be perfect. Abstracts made and continued

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

OF LONDON

Incorporated by Royal Charter A. D. 1720

Capital Paid Up, $2,406,140 Assets, $21,584,413
Surplus to Policy Holders, $8,980,251

ROBERT DICKSON, Manager
B. J. SMITH, Assistant Manager
NATHAN & KINGSTON, San Francisco Agents
501 Montgomery Street

Why not

Get your clothes made by a wholesale woolen merchant who is also a tailor, and save the profit of the cloth jobber. I make suits to order from $13.50 upwards.

CHAS. LYONS

Wholesale Warehouse, 721 Market
Branch Stores: 302 Kearny St and 1212-14 Market St.

California Undertaking Company
Finest Funeral Parlors in the City
Tel. Main 971. S.W. Cor. Stockton & Geary

NEW STORIES RE-TOLD

Lady Londonderry, when visiting Constantinople, expressed a desire to be presented to His Ottoman Majesty. His own Minister for Foreign Affairs, Reshid Pasha, induced him to consent to receive her by representing that she had a quantity of valuable jewelry for sale. Lady Londonderry herself was merely told that she would be presented, and that the Sultan, having heard of the fame of her jewelry, had particularly requested that she would put it all on when she came. The conversation that took place at the audience was interpreted by the wily Reshid. On arrival at the palace Reshid Pasha conducted Lady Londonderry into the presence of the Sultan. Her dress glittered with diamonds, pearls, turquoises, and other precious stones. "Pekkei—good!" said the Sultan as Lady Londonderry curtseyed; "she has brought magnificent jewels!" Reshid, turning to the lady: "His Majesty graciously bids you welcome." Lady Londonderry bowed, and expressed her thanks in French. Reshid, interpreting: "She says she has other jewelry, but could not put it all on." Sultan: "Ask her what is the price of that diamond necklace." Reshid: "His Majesty inquires whether this is your first visit to Constantinople?" Lady Londonderry: "It is my first visit, and I am delighted with all I have seen." Reshid, to Sultan: "She asks a million of piastres." Sultan: "That is too much." Reshid, to Lady Londonderry: "His Majesty asks whether you have seen the Mosques? If not, offers you a firman." Lady Londonderry expresses her thanks. Sultan: "What price does she put on that set of turquoises?" Reshid, to Lady Londonderry: "His Majesty says that perhaps you would like to take a walk in the garden." Lady Londonderry expresses her thanks, and would like to see the garden. Reshid, to Sultan: "She says four hundred thousand piastres." Sultan: "Take her away—I shall not give such prices." Reshid, to Lady Londonderry: "His Majesty graciously expresses satisfaction at having made your acquaintance." Lady Londonderry curtseys low, and withdraws from his Majesty's presence to visit the garden with the amiable and courteous Reshid Pasha.

A traveling opera company was performing in a Massachusetts country town. The music was furnished by eleven of the villagers, one of whom — the cornetist — a tall, impressive-looking man with a dyed mustache, was evidently a personage of much importance. The house was crowded, and the musicians were playing well, when, about nine o'clock, a church bell near by commenced to ring. Its clang was heard plainly above the music. The cornetist dropped his cornet, listened intently for a moment, and then, seizing his hat, rushed up the centre aisle. He was followed by every member of the orchestra, and they in turn by two-thirds of the audience, to the utter amazement of the performers, who were completely dumbfounded. It turned out that a barn two miles off was on fire, and the cornetist, who happened also to be the foreman of the local fire department, together with the other members of the orchestra, who were volunteer fireman, had to attend to their duties of quelling the flames.

A certain husband and father recently purchased a pair of fashionable trousers. As they proved to be considerably too long he requested his wife to shorten them, but she, declaring the pattern too distinctly audible, refused, as did likewise the poor man's daughter and also his sister-in-law. At night the wife relented, and removed two inches from the garment very carefully, and laid it by ready for wear. Half an hour later the daughter, seized with regret for her unfilial refusal, took the trousers, and, cutting off two inches, hemmed and replaced them. And finally the remorseful sister-in-law felt the pangs of conscience, and she too removed an additional two inches. At breakfast the next morning the appearance of the good man resembled a Highland Chieftain.

An Englishwoman recently met with sudden death during a visit to St. Petersburg, and at the request of relatives in London the body was immediately forwarded to England. When the casket, a magnificent affair, arrived at its destination, the lid was removed to give the sorrowing relatives a final look at the departed. But instead of the emaciated remains of an aged woman, the portly corpse of a Russian General, covered with decorations and in the full glory of a state uniform, met the gaze of the mourners. Frantic messages were at once dispatched to the Russian capital, and in response to one of these, the following message was received: "Sadly buried yesterday with military honors. Please keep the general."

Ian Maclaren once visited the Holy Land. On his way to the centre of historic Palestine he met an American, who was making all haste to get away. After such greetings as two English-speaking men meeting in a foreign counrry might exchange, the American asked Dr. Watson where he was going. "To Jerusalem," was the reply. "Jerusalem?" exclaimed the American, in tones of unfeigned disgust. "You don't want to go there! I've just come away! It's a slow town. Why, there isn't a single daily newspaper in the whole place!"

A school-teacher, who had received unsatisfactory answers from the most of his pupils as to the difference between an island and a peninsula, put the question, in despair, to the last boy. "I can explain it, sir," he said. "Get two glasses, fill one with water and the other with milk. Catch a fly and place it in the water. That fly is an island because it is entirely surrounded by water. But now place the fly in the milk and it will be a peninsula, because it is nearly surrounded by water." And he went to the top of the class.

MATCHLESS IN EVERY FEATURE

THE CONCENSUS OF OPINION REGARDING

The Ladies' Grill-Room

. . OF . .

The Palace

Direct entrance from Market Street. Open until Midnight

Hotel Mateo and Cottages

SAN MATEO, CAL.

A charming resort, both winter and summer. A pleasant forty-minutes' ride by rail from San Francisco, with frequent train-service.

Delightful surroundings and comparative freedom from fog, together with all essentials to the comfort and pleasure of the guests, combine to recommend Hotel Mateo to those who appreciate such advantages.

Illustrated descriptive souvenir sent upon application. F. A. SHEPARD, Manager.

THE LICK HOUSE

Occupies the block bounded by Montgomery, Post and Sutter Streets

IT IS
——scrupulously clean;
——accessible to all street car lines and places of amusement;
——conveniently situated for business men;
——a quiet, model place for a family to spend the winter;
——moderate in price, yet first-class in every particular.

AMERICAN OR EUROPEAN PLAN

K. B. SOULÉ, Manager

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention

A QUIET HOME CENTRALLY LOCATED

OCCIDENTAL HOTEL

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, MANAGER

Golden Eagle Hotel

GRAY & TITUS, Proprietors

A MODERN FIRST-CLASS HOTEL

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

United States Laundry

Office 1004 Market St.

TELEPHONE SOUTH 420

Ask Your Grocer for the Old Reliable

DIAMOND "L" TEA

IMPORTED BY
E. L. G. STEELE & CO.
208 California St., San Francisco

Electrical Supplies

BROOKS - FOLLIS ELECTRICAL CO.

523 Mission St., San Francisco

H. WUKASH ADOLF JOHNSON

Johnson & Company

MERCHANT TAILORS

No. 24 Montgomery Street, Room 2
SAN FRANCISCO

Sunset Limited

The Southern Pacific Company takes this occasion to announce that the Season of 1896-97 of this WORLD-FAMOUS TRAIN

CLOSES

Saturday, March 27, 1897
From San Francisco Eastbound

Sunday, March 27, 1897
From Los Angeles

Thursday, April 7, 1897
From New Orleans Westbound

After which dates it will be WITHDRAWN

REMAINING TRIPS

EASTBOUND

| From San Francisco | | From Los Angeles | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Saturday | March 13 | Sunday | March 14 |
| Tuesday | " 16 | Wednesday | " 17 |
| Saturday | " 20 | Sunday | " 21 |
| Saturday | " 27 | Sunday | " 28 |

All who contemplate a transcontinental trip soon will contribute immeasurably to their own well-being by bearing these dates in mind and purchasing tickets via the Great Sunset Route. ∴ The trip between San Francisco and New Orleans over this famous route is vastly more than a dream of delight and profit—IT IS THE REALITY, as thousands of patrons of SUNSET LIMITED will gladly testify.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Steamers leave Broadway wharf, San Francisco, for ports in Alaska 9 a.m. March 12, 17, 22 and 27.
For British Columbia and Puget Sound Ports, Mar. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka, Humboldt Bay, Stmr. Pomona, 2 p.m. Mar. 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Newport, Los Angeles and Way Ports, 9 a.m. Mar. 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford, Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles, Redondo--Los Angeles--and Newport, at 11 a.m. March 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29 and every fourth day thereafter.
For Ports in Mexico, Stmr. Orizaba, 10 a.m. 25th of each month.
The company reserves the right to change, without previous notice, steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing
Ticket Office: Palace Hotel, 4 New Montgomery St.

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO.
General Agents
No. 10 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. "Australia," Honolulu only, Tuesday, Mar. 23, 1896, at 2 p.m. Special party rates.
S. S. "Mariposa," for Australia, Thursday, April 1, 1897, at 2 p.m. Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

Ticket Office 114 Montgomery St.
Freight Office 327 Market St.

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO., General Agents

HIRSCH & KAISER

Successors to HIRSCH, KAHN & CO.

Opticians

Will remove March 1st to

NO. 7 KEARNY STREET

Opposite the Chronicle Building

ORDER YOUR CARRIAGES AND COUPES OF THE

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

At Baldwin Hotel
200 Sutter Street, corner Kearny
48 Eighth Street, or
St. Nicholas Hotel, Market and Ninth Streets
Steamer and Train Service a specialty 'Phone 1950

HENRY ST. GOAR EDWARD POLLITZ
Members Stock and Bond Exchange

EDWARD POLLITZ & CO.

Commission Brokers and Dealers in Investment Securities. Eastern and Foreign
403 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The "Hello" Girl, by Gelett Burgess  A Lag's Release, by Frank Norris

THE WAVE

CALIFORNIA

VOL XVI. No. 13  SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 27, 1897  PRICE 10 CTS

THE WRECKER "WHITELAW" RAISING THE "SUNOL"

Photo by Charles Weidner

THE WAVE

's published every Saturday, at THE WAVE Building, No. 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Subscription, $3.00 per year, $1.50 six months, 75 cts. three months. Foreign subscriptions—countries in postal union—$5 per year. Sample copies free on application. The trade is supplied by the San Francisco News Co., 210 Post Street; east of the Rocky Mountains by the American News Co., New York.

THE WAVE is kept on file and is for sale at Brentano's, 17 Avenue de l'Opera, Paris, France; 31 Union Square, New York City; 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.; and 206 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Advertising rates and all other matters pertaining to the business of the paper, address THE WAVE, 24 Montgomery Street. Eastern Agent, E. Katz, 230-235 Temple Court, New York.

HARRISON M. PARKER, Business Manager

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter
THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 27, 1897

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|---|
| Editorials | 2-3 |
| A "Lag's" Release; by Frank Norris | 4 |
| In the Harbor | 5 |
| "For Greece and Crete": a Poem by A. C. Swinburne | 5 |
| "The Scoop": a Tale of the New Journalism | 6 |
| Things and People; by Boswell Jr. | 7 |
| The "Hello" Girl; by Gelett Burgess | 8 |
| A Piedmont Painter | 9 |
| In Society | 10 |
| The Theatres | 11 |
| Max Muller's Memories: a Review | 12 |
| A Boston Girl; by G. B. | 13 |
| Racing; by Benedict | 14 |
| New Stories Re-Told | 16 |

THE NICARAGUA CANAL AGAIN.

Our very brief allusion to the Nicaragua canal in "The [illegible] has brought forth the communication which we append. The writer is a gentleman who has a peculiar knowledge of the subject discussed, and his opinion is entitled to more than ordinary consideration. To his letter we invite the attention of Mayor Phelan and Mr. Dohrmann, the president of our Merchants' Association. We invite the presidents of the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade, indeed Captain Merry himself, to refute the arguments laid down by our correspondent. He says:

To the Editor "Wave:" Your editorial in issue of March 20th, under this caption, gives publicity to the fact that as regards San Francisco it is an open question whether the canal would be a benefit or not. In face of the seal of approval which has been stamped upon the scheme by the entire press, Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade and other public bodies; in fact of the frequent mass meetings, resolutions adopted and forwarded to Congress, your temerity in publicly intimating that there are two sides to this question is very disturbing to the self-complaisant attitude into which California, and San Francisco in particular, has been steered by the well directed efforts of the representatives of the Maritime Canal Company, whose bold scheme was recently exposed and probably given its quietus in Congress. We have been bombarded with one-sided arguments, until the public generally believes that the very existence of California depends upon the construction of the canal. All the arguments have been very subtle. It was not to the advantage of the Canal Company and its friends to have a pro et con discussion. At so-called mass meetings to express the sentiment of California in favor of the canal cut and dried resolutions have been ordered adopted and telegraphed to Washington as an expression of sentiment. Not one score people of the three score which attended the meetings were disinterested; but as these meetings were held under the auspices of the Chambers of Commerce or such bodies, the people at large were content to believe that their interests only were considered.

Now, Mr. Editor, if you choose to throw your columns open to a general discussion on this subject, you will find it a most fruitful theme. You will find some, no doubt, who will boldly take the stand, and declare that there is danger to California, and San Francisco in particular, in the construction of the canal. They will point out to you that when the first vessel passes through from sea to sea, the cannons booming in honor of the event will sound the knell of San Francisco as the metropolis of the Pacific Ocean. You will be told that through the canal will pour the merchant fleets of Europe, conveying cheap labor products to the uttermost parts of the Pacific Ocean, wresting away (by the aid of the United States through building the canal) what trade should belong to California and San Francisco by reason of their geographical position. You will be shown that the Australian, New Zealand, Hawaiian and South Sea Island and the bulk of the China and Japan trade will pass us forever, and that the west coast of South America, Mexico and Central America will be hopelessly lost to us as markets for our productions.

Some intelligent manufacturer will remind you that as railroad freights from the East declined, so declined the manufacturing industries of this State. With the advent of cheaper freights via canal will practically come obliteration.

If California, a seaboard state, intends to rely solely on its agricultural abilities, and cannot perceive the wealth and higher stage of civilization to be derived from promoting and protecting its manufacturing and commercial pursuits, it deserves to be buried in the heart of the country, and no longer to be allowed to occupy a position on an ocean, on whose borders and on whose bosom are the homes of hundreds of millions of human beings, who should find their channel of communication through the Golden Gate, with 70,000,000 American freemen. And yet we are asked by the canal promoters to forego, and have even petitioned Congress to remove, privileges bestowed upon us by our natural geographical position, and content ourselves with the possible benefits to be derived from bringing our agricultural products some few thousands of miles nearer a market. I say possible benefits; it is open to argument that they are probable. Freight rates on grain to England via Cape Horn will not average over $6.00 per ton during 1897; could they be cheapened by passage through the canal enough to reimburse us for our enormous loss in other directions?

However, this is too vast a question to be touched upon lightly either in one communication or by one pen; and my object in writing this will have been accomplished if it leads to a general discussion of a subject so cogent to the welfare of the State.

FREDERICK S. SAMUELS.

If there is any answer to our correspondent's position, which we must confess is our own, we would like to hear it. There can be one excuse for the Californian espousing the completion of this undertaking by the United States government, which is that the Panama canal, upon which so much money has been squandered, threatens sometime to be completed and under the control and dominion of a foreign power. So far as San Francisco goes, it is difficult to discover where she will profit through the canal or how the State at large will be benefited.

YOUTH IN THE LEGISLATURE.

The writer of the following communication is a gentleman of wide and wholesome reputation who has occupied a prominent place in high public office in this State. The young member of the Legislature referred to in this communication is unknown to us, and may be open to the objection which the learned writer makes. But youth in the abstract should not disbar a citizen from legislative ambitions or honors. It is a little difficult to say where one should draw the line. Our correspondent says:

San Francisco, March 22, 1897.

Editor of "The Wave": It appears from the published reports of proceedings during the closing hours of the Legislature that a Representative from San Francisco arose in his place, and, speaking to a question of privilege, appealed to the Assembly for vindication, saying, among other things: "I am a young man, just starting out in life, and I don't want my reputation to be blasted by the 'Examiner,' or any other paper." I have no doubt the gentleman was truthful and sincere, and that he deserved vindication at the hands of his fellow members. But what a commentary is this upon the course of the people in selecting their law-makers—the men to whom is committed the highest power, and the most grave responsibility, exercised by men on earth! In none, except the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, is vested so great a power as that which is committed to the men chosen to make the laws for a free people. What measure of confidence should induce a great people to impose so great a responsibility upon "young men just starting out in life," and whose reputations are yet to be made? Hundreds of honest and bright young men have had their "reputations blasted" for life by the weight of this very responsibility, which they were not yet fitted to bear, and the people themselves have never failed to suffer from the cause. The duty of making laws which affect the lives, the liberties and the properties of the people should never be committed to callow youth or senile age, but only to men of experience in the affairs of life, and in the full strength and vigor of manhood. Then we should have fewer but vastly better laws, and our halls of legislation would be free from scandals, where the suspicion of one crime is held to justify the commission of another—where a suspicion of bribery is held to justify the commission of highway robbery. CARLOS.

Of course, it is one of the theoretic presumptions of our Government that the people will select the wisest men for their rulers and law-makers, be their choice from among the young or the old. "Old men for council, young men for war," runs the proverb, and as the greatest danger to democratic government is haste, and age being generally slower and more conservative than youth, men well advanced in years are undoubtedly needed to balance and offset the impetuosity of younger but perhaps more brilliant minds. But the truth is, and we may as well frankly acknowledge it, that mature men fitted for legislative life cannot to-day be induced to become candidates for our State Legislatures. This was not so in the early days of American history. To be a member of the Virginia House or the Massachusetts Council early in the century was a distinction almost as great as to be a member of the House of Representatives. This condition arose, not out of any theory regarding the sovereignty of the States or their supremacy under the Constitution, but out of local pride and honorable tradition. In those days there were no great cities. Neighbor was intimate with neighbor. The political boss, as we know him, and the machine manipulator had not then developed. The test for fitness for legislative honors was the possession of eminent common sense, of exceptional forensic ability. Men of parts sought the Legislature for honor and their country's sake; men, young, and fired with ambition, sought this channel to make for themselves a name among their fellows and to win local, if not national, distinction. In short, to be a member of the State's law-makers brought honor. Time's panorama has placed another view before us. To-day a legislative seat is seldom sought with the hope of rendering service to the State, or with the hope that returning home the law-maker will be crowned with the blessings of his neighbors and the eulogies of his constituents. Men go to the Legislature to-day ordinarily with some private object in view, not generally corrupt, not often patriotic. Legislative honor being held in this light, we need express small wonderment that men of gray hairs and mature mind, who among their fellows have gained distinction for ability in business or professional life, should decline to seek nomination for a seat with a body whose integrity is held in but light esteem by the public mind, and whose acts can bring little of credit.

The view taken by our correspondent that young men are unfitted to be law-makers is not borne out by history. So long as the English speaking world recalls the careers of the younger Pitt, of Charles James Fox, of Sir Robert Peel, of William Ewart Gladstone, of Alexander Hamilton, of Samuel Adams, of James Madison and of Henry Clay, it will be quite unwilling to declare that youth, in the abstract, unfits men for a legislative career. The most notable legislation of the world's history has been either prompted or affected by men under the age of 35 years. This legislation, it must be remembered, has been remarkable because along somewhat radical lines. The young man generally is in closer touch with the spirit of his age than his senior. The names which shine out brightest on the scroll of history, and which are in this age most honored, are those of men who have been recognized as radical leaders rather than as conservatives. It may not be without value to state that in this day, when ignorance has so much power in its hands, there is no more need of the slow-moving mind of middle age than of the quick and hot-tempered spirit of youth.

In considering the problem as to what may be the trouble with our Legislatures, one is compelled to admit that our legislative halls are deserted by the able and the strong, and are given over largely to the incompetent and the reckless, for the manifest reason that the tone of our political life is so low that a gentleman recoils from the despicable methods and devious ways by which political success is achieved. The idea that this is a representative Government has been very largely forsaken. The mass of the incapable, instead of being moved by a desire to choose for legislative position the man best fitted, are now possessed with the idea that governmental power should be bestowed on those who are most typical of the great body of the voters. So a premium is placed on demagogy, and the distinguished in mind and character are put aside for the mediocre. The ignorant majority are largely responsible for the political degradation of which they now complain. If we are to have legislators of ability and honesty, we must make the legislative position honorable and distinguished. The revelations made concerning the Legislature which has just died have not come as a surprise to the people of California. No thrill of horror ran through the State at the startling revelation of political corruption and the criminal means by which legislation is effected. This tells of the decadence of the political conscience. We have lost our ideal. We no longer expect our public functionaries to act up to a high standard. We have come to regard them much as we regard a man in any other position—purely self-seeking and without consciousness of any responsibility to those who have made him. Indeed, we are inclined to expect less of our public servants than we do of our private employes—less of honesty and faithfulness to duty. There is no standard set by the public conscience which makes it imperative that our legislators should act as men of honor. This is the curse of all our ploitical life. The only method to pursue for the eradication of this evil is to raise the moral and intellectual standard of the people who make the legislators; then, and not till then, may we expect better public servants.

The reader must not presume that gentlemen never aspire to the Legislature, or that legislators are all wicked and governed by selfishness and impure motives, for such is not the case. We do not hesitate to affirm, however, that this municipality has never sent to the State Legislature a delegation that was thoroughly honest. Whatever of honesty there may be in that body usually comes from the interior of the State, and seldom from the cities.

THE CRETAN IMBROGLIO.

In the present attitude of the great powers of Europe toward the small kingdom of Greece and the adjacent island of Crete we have an excellent exhibition of the ease with which these great powers disregard every requirement of that international law which is supposed to regulate the intercourse of sovereign nations. No war has been declared, and we are assured that hostilities are not pending, yet armed forces blockade the ports of Crete, Piraeus and Volo, the latter being the sea base on which the Greeks would have relied in the event of hostilities with Turkey in Thessaly and Macedonia. No such proceeding as this is recognized in the international code as being among the measures falling short of war. The reasons for this departure from the rules of international war are not far to seek. Nothing but mutual fear and common selfishness of the great powers of Europe has succeeded in maintaining so far the so-called concert of the powers, which is after all only a concert of mutual fear and an inability to agree peacefully on the distribution of the spoils of the Turk. If the powers were able to agree on a peaceable distribution of the remnant of the Turkish dominion in Europe, or if any one of them had sufficient confidence in its prowess to be sure of obtaining a lion's share in a forcible scramble for these spoils, there would be no occasion for this maltreatment of the puny power of Greece; but with their well-justified and natural distrust of each other's honesty, and their inability to estimate accurately in advance of a conflict their relative degrees of military strength, they are prepared to put off a conflict and a division of plunder to the last possible moment, and to that end stand seemingly ready to bring Greece to destruction and to continue to support the anachronism of Turkish rule in Europe. The concert of the governments of Europe in this oppression of the weak would probably be complete if it were not for the tremendous force of public opinion in the French republic and in the United Kingdom. There seems to be no doubt that Hanotetaux and Lord Salisbury would cheerfully lend their support to these detestable measures if it were not for the well demonstrated fact that neither the French nor the British people would permit a continuance of a government which permitted the use of its armed forces for such purposes of oppression as those for which the War Lord of Germany and the White Czar of Russia seem willing to send their ships and soldiers in support of the Turk. If any example were needed to exhibit the wisdom of the policy which has kept our republic from joining in any concert with the European powers, it is furnished by this exhibition of the ease with which those powers can combine for purposes which would be denounced as corrupt and unworthy by every American citizen.

COMMUNICATION.

To the Editor: Dear Sir—At the very moment when he commenced to be of inestimable value for our community, there has been taken from us a man who was predestined to become one of our local heroes—Josef Blanther, the murderer. With his death our dailies mourn the loss of a year's trial, full of interesting incidents and stirring details; the artist's pencil, ready to perpetuate the prisoner in hundreds of different attitudes, must look for other subjects. Our editors mournfully realize the impossibility of publishing his poems (written in his cell). His journal, in which he might have written for the benefit of a sympathizing population and for the technical instruction of those eager to imitate him a full account of his crimes, minutely describing how he planned and how he executed, will never see type. All this is lost. And the public, deprived even of the honor of shaking hands with the man who murdered Mrs. Langfeldt, prevented from offering him flowers and cigars, will in vain go to the Edison parlors—the phonograph had not been in time to receive the message of the dying man. Perhaps it is not yet too late to secure at least his hat and shoes and to exhibit them on Market or Kearny street, as a small consolation for our afflicted citizens. A. D.

An illustration of the sort of recklessness that enables a cigarette smoker to sit on a powder keg is to be soon given in the Midi. The unmarried men of La Drome have just issued a call to the bachelors of the district, for a convention to be held for the purpose of protesting against the tax on unmarried men, recently proposed by several Deputies, to make up the French budget. But they have rashly invited, also, the maids who have taken the vow of celibacy to St. Catherine, and have reserved for them seats of honor in the convention, and at the banquet table! It is safe to predict that more than one bachelor of to-day will become exempt from the tax, after the meeting is over.

THE THIRTY-SECOND SESSION.

A REVIEW OF THE WORK OF THE LAST LEGISLATURE BY SENATOR F. S. STRATTON

The thirty-second session of the California Legislature has witnessed the enactment of some important laws. The prevailing idea that the greater part of the bills passed are vicious is not borne out by the facts. Under our present system of State Government it is inevitable that many bad laws should result. In fact, the commanding importance of giving a veto power to the Governor has been strikingly presented to my mind in view of the closing scenes of the late session. The vast majority of bills are measures which hardly interest the public. They are framed to amend certain sections of the codes of this State which have been found defective in their practical operation, or which need revision because of new conditions that have arisen.

The three most important measures, in my opinion, which have been passed, and which are so universal in their operations as to interest the entire State are, first, the new general primary election law, which must stand the test, first, of assault in the Supreme Court, and then trial of experience by practical operation. Secondly, the Torrens land transfer act, which has been taken very largely upon faith in view of its successful operation in other countries; and, thirdly, the altogether remarkable financial assistance given to the State University at Berkeley. The effect of the latter act will be shown in its influence upon our Western civilization for all time, and must be a factor in the evolution of the human mind. I deem it unfortunate that some measure of assistance could not have been given to the Stanford University, but the conditions prevailing at Sacramento left the result in doubt at no time.

Another important measure that was passed was the act for the appointment of a debris commission, and making an appropriation of $250,000 therefor. This was the result of a compromise between the miners and the farmers, and makes available a like appropriation from the United States, enabling the resumption of hydraulic mining in this State. In enacting the so-called dredger bill, and appropriating $300,000 for the purpose of improving the navigable rivers of this State, a departure has been made from the accepted theory that such work should be left to Federal supervision and control. While general in its terms, this in effect means that the Sacramento river is to be improved, and that, too, for the benefits of private land-owners. Even the promoters of this bill hesitate to say where the end will be, for it commits the State to a line of operations which is far-reaching, and open to many serious objections. A complete set of companion laws, some five in number, are now in the hands of the Governor, establishing a Bureau of Highways, providing a tax levy therefor, and creating a general system of State roads. This is the result of the agitation in favor of good roads.

A very involved and laborious task was the framing of a new county government act, a bill covering over 225 printed pages. The necessity of presenting this matter biennially to the Legislature, it is hoped, will be avoided by a Constitutional amendment to be submitted to the people granting home rule to counties, and providing for the framing and adoption by the inhabitants of county government acts for the respective counties. This amendment provides that each county may regulate and determine the manner and method of conducting both general and primary elections. The game and fish laws of the State have been very carefully revised, and a matter of passing interest to the interior of the State is the bill amending in very many material respects the Wright irrigation law, and relieving the situation of some of its intolerable burdens.

Laws designed by the labor unions and presented to the Legislature received but very scanty treatment. Bills which ought to have passed, and which were defeated, include the reform civil service bill, and the measure designed to reduce the excessive pilot charges of the Bay of San Francisco. In fact, it may be said broadly that bills aimed to remedy existing evils, and affecting individual interests, are generally certain of defeat. Any attempt to reduce salaries, or to abolish useless offices or commissions, will surely be met by strenuous opposition. These bills fail of passage, not through dishonesty on the part of legislators, but through weakness of humanity. Nearly every important measure is put through or defeated by the pernicious system of pledging votes in advance. The speeches for or against a bill are very largely, but not, of course, all the time, for the benefit of the reporters. Nothing could be farther from the truth than for the public to assume that the debates influence votes. After all, while some 1,700 or 1,800 bills were introduced, a very small percentage became laws. Probably not to exceed 250 of them passed both houses, and of these one-third will certainly and properly meet with executive disapproval.

The Constitutional amendments providing for new district courts of appeal, and also for the creation of courts of discipline for remedying abuses at the bar, were not passed. The responsibility for this is due altogether to the unfortunate rules which prevented these measures being dealt with in the early days of the session, and which finally prevented their proper consideration in the fearful rush and press of other more selfish matters which engrossed the individual attention of the law-makers. The existing evil of considering technicalities on appeal and reversing cases for trivial errors, it is hoped, has been avoided and corrected by the enactment of a law directing the Supreme Court to disregard all such technicalities, and compelling the party appealing to show affirmatively that a different result would probably have followed if the error complained of had not occurred. This is revolutionary, and if strictly applied by the Court must have a far-reaching effect upon all litigation.

The great demand on the part of most of the legislators is to secure appropriations for local institutions, or local improvements. This is regarded by many as evidence of practical ability, and seems to be looked upon as a tangible record to be pointed to with pride. General laws for the relief of the entire State call for no special gratitude on the part of individuals, whereas an appropriation is special, and has a local application which enthuses a modern constituency. After all, when the history of legislation in this State is understood, it must be conceded that good measures other than appropriations are the rule, and bad measures the exception. A vast amount of good legislation is defeated, it is true, and for this the best class of citizens in the State must hold themselves responsible. They permit themselves to be influenced into sending thousands of telegrams to Senators or Assemblymen to vote for or against a measure merely at the request of interested individuals. These appeals ought to be entirely disregarded by the sitting members, but they generally have their effect.

If I should be asked, however, as to what class of lawmakers California should elect, I would not commend the orators, nor even the brilliant men, but I would express the hope that this State could be represented by solid citizens of sufficient strength of character to say "No," not alone to fellow legislators, but to say "No" to the ill-advised demands of their own constituents. If bills in the California Legislature could but be debated fairly, and decided upon the merits of the debates, and not upon pledges generally given beforehand, then indeed a new era might be expected to dawn in this State. As it is now, nearly all classes, except the vicious, view a law-making session with terror. The entire State breathes a sigh of relief when the time of adjournment is passed, and Senators and Assemblymen, both good and bad, find themselves covered by the ignominy of universal criticism, and objects of general execration.

F. S. STRATTON.

March 25, 1897.

BULL-FIGHTING AS A SPORT.

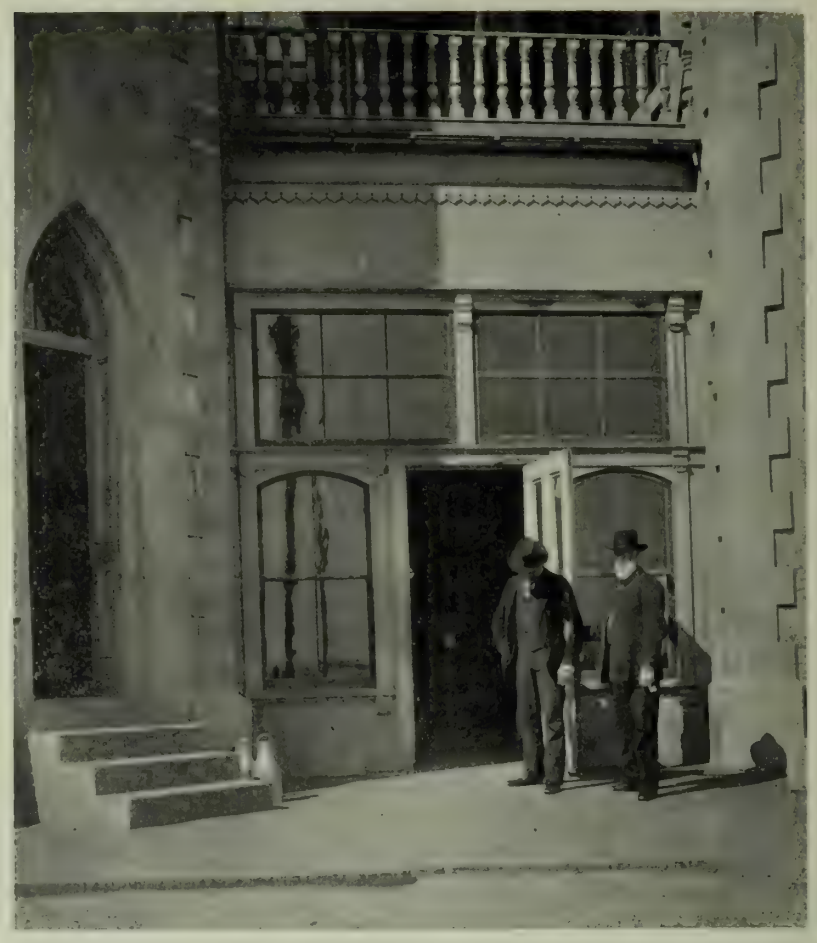
The manner in which a community amuses itself is an unfailing index to the character and intelligence of its people. Probably nothing could better illustrate this than the continued popularity of bull fighting as a pastime in Mexico and Spain. It is useless to look for any of the finer human attributes among a people whose pleasures are marked by butchery and coarseness.

In the early part of the month a series of these demoralizing exhibitions took place at Durango, Mexico, which were merely horrible butcheries of men and beasts of the most revolting character. The first bull entering the ring gored to death one of the matadors. Another man was killed in the twinkling of an eye by the second bull, and the third dispatched two unfortunate beings in quick succession. Four human lives, by this barbaric and inhuman entertainment, were hazarded and sacrificed to make a Mexican holiday. Eight bulls were killed, and four horses gored to death.

To produce these festivals of blood for the entertainment of the public, vast amounts of money, running up into the millions of dollars, are annually wasted by these people. Growing and impressionable youth is taught to believe these butchers heroes, and their calling honorable. During the last bull-fighting season in Spain, there were 478 bull fights, in which were killed over 1,200 bulls valued at $300,000, and over 5,700 horses valued at $200,000. Matadors were paid for their services over $220,000. The famous Guerrita appeared in sixty-eight fights, killed 174 bulls, and received $51,000. Bombita, another fighter, appeared forty-three times, killed 112 bulls, and was paid $21,000. Manzantina was in the ring twenty-nine times, killed sixty-eight bulls, and made $21,700.

Our Consul-General at Barcelona reports that the interest in bull fighting is not diminishing in Spain, but seems even more intense than ever. The mere wastefulness of money in such a cause by an impoverished people does not weigh for anything as an objection to it, beside the vicious influence such atrocious exhibitions must have upon the public mind. It is not difficult to understand that a people who take pleasure from such a barbaric sport could produce a Weyler. It is easy to believe that an army recruited from the citizens of Spain would be capable of all the unspeakable atrocities which are charged up against it in Cuba. We can readily understand how such an army would take pleasure in bayoneting wounded and unarmed prisoners of war, in striking down, debauching and murdering defenseless women, and in butchering in cold blood the terror-stricken babes and children of the enemy.

A NEW SUIT AFTER THIRTY YEARS IN STRIPES



FREE AT LAST: SAN QUENTIN'S GATE OPENED TO A CONVICT WHO HAS "DONE TIME"

A "LAG'S" RELEASE

How a Convict is Discharged from the San Quentin "Pen."

Everybody knows how a man goes to jail. A little legal jargon, a little "entering of names," a little posing for the Rogues' Gallery, a little trip across the bay, the shutting of a grated door — and there is your "con"— jugged in the "pen," perhaps for thirty months, perhaps for thirty years. During the time of his sentence the world knows absolutely nothing of him, and he nothing of the world. He is buried alive. Let us suppose he is a thirty-year man — consider for a moment what that means. Remember backward, if you can, for thirty years. Try to fix some event that happened thirty years ago, and then imagine that instead of that particular event happening, a prison door had closed behind you, and that all your life from that time till now had been spent in the "pen"— between four high cement walls. For recreation you had the yard to walk in, and the conversation of murderers and petit-larcenies and assault-to-kills; for occupation you wove one hundred yards of jute every morning: you ate, in enforced silence, three meals of beef, beans and coffee per day, and you were locked in your cell from three o'clock in the afternoon until seven the next morning. And this is your life for thirty years! The civil war was barely over thirty years ago. Then comes the day when your sentence expires.

I knew a "con" at San Quentin named Bob Davis who has been in prison for thirty-five years, and whose sentence expired last Friday. I went over to see Mr. Davis early Friday morning, to watch how they let him out.

Now, my friend Bob Davis is a sneak-thief. He told me so, and it is the only thing he told me that the prison officers thought was true. I would have preferred him a murderer, a highwayman, or even an assault-with-a-deadly-weapon, but he is none of these — he is a sneak-thief. At the time I got inside the court of San Quentin penitentiary it was after six in the morning, and the "cons" were going in to breakfast. They came across from the yard, eleven hundred of them, each with his hands folded across his breast, in singularly inappropriate attitude of devout resignation, like monks going to confessional. They tramped into the huge dining-room and the first man went to the farthest seat at the farthest table and began to eat as soon as he sat down. The last man in the line took the only seat left nearest the door, but by the time he was sitting down the first man was through and was filing out, with arms meekly folded.

A MEMORY OF SAN QUENTIN, FROM THE INSIDE

Davis was somewhere in the crowd of eleven hundred silent men, but I could not pick him out. I only met him when he came back to his cell after breakfast to get his bedding. I looked at him curiously then, as one would look at a man who is going back to liberty after thirty years of prison death-in-life. I was expecting anything. He might be elated over his thought of freedom; he might be depressed (I was ready even for this) at the idea of leaving his familiar all, and I thought of the prisoner of Chillon and of De Quincey's "mot" to the effect that there is a certain sadness in doing anything for the last time, and that even a prisoner quits his all with a feeling a regret. I had this last particularly in mind as Mr. Davis came up, and, as it were, I looked at him through it as through a colored glass. This liberation business is a little drama, and as star actor I hoped Mr. Davis would act up to his part.

Stolidity, indifference, phlegmatic unconcern — anything you like but excitement — was Davis' mood, and the worst of it was that he did not assume it. Set it down as an axiom, as a law to be carefully studied of writers of fiction, that the sensations of real life tend to the plane of the commonplace as inevitably as water seeks its level. Assume that everything is ordinary till it has been proven otherwise.

"Well," said I, "you're going out, Davis?"

"Yes," said he, tieing his blanket-roll, "I'm going out." As far as his demeanor went he might have said, "I'm going across the yard a minute." He rolled up his blankets, gathered together one or two bits of furniture that the prison provides, and (I following) went across the court to the "old clothes room."

The old clothes room of San Quentin is where the prison suits are kept — the clothes, caps, shoes, and all that. It is most like a country store—a counter, a stove and racks along the wall filled with wearing apparel. The only difference is that the clothes are striped. A guard met us here and took charge of Davis, and he did not leave him during the rest of the time he was in the precincts of the jail. In the old clothes room Davis stripped and bathed. Captain Jameson, who presides here, took his "con's" suit and stowed it away, and Davis dressed himself again in a completely new outfit that Jameson gave him. The clothes were gray shoddy of the cheapest kind. If my "con" felt any glow of returning self-respect at the feel of citizen's clothes again he did not show it. He was not sullen, he was not sulking—he was merely ordinary. He spoke little. Next we went to the office of the Captain of the Guard. There was some conversation here. Davis gave his number, not his name, and told the Captain for what crime he was serving. Then says the Captain:

"Here is a ticket to Sunol. You were arrested there."

"Yes," answered Davis.

"And five dollars that the State gives you" (pushing a gold piece towards him). The "con" pocketed it silently.

"And here is the money found on you when arrested—seven dollars and a half."

"Seven dollars and a half."

The Captain of the Guard turned away.

From the prison to Greenbrae, where you take the train to the city, is about three miles. A 'bus runs to meet every train, and the ex-"cons" generally go down in it. but said Davis:

"I won't wait for the 'bus—I'll walk." We went toward the outside gate of the prison. Once beyond this gate Davis was free. The crisis of this little drama of liberation was here. A turnkey swung open an inside grating for us. We went down a narrow stone passage to the outer gate, through whose grating one could see blue patches of the bay and of the sky. A second turnkey swung the outside gate, letting in a warm puff of air.

"Wait a minute," said Davis' guard, as the man who had been jailed for thirty years stepped forward. Davis stopped, and the guard handed him two or three folded papers with official seals.

"These are your restoration papers," he explained, adding, "They restore your citizenship to you." Silently Davis put them in his inside pocket. There was a pause. The turnkey stood holding open the grating. The guard drew back a step. I was in the background watching. Between the turnkey and the guard was the ex-"con." He was older than any of us, and taller. Suddenly, back in the prison, the whistle of the jute-mill blew, signalling the beginning of another day's work.

"Well," said Davis, breaking the silence, "anything more?"

"Nothing more," answered the guard; "go on."

Davis stepped across the threshold and walked down the road into the world. He was free.

FRANK NORRIS.

The summit of Mount Aconcagua, in Chile, the highest peak in America, has been reached for the first time by any human being by Zurbriggen, a Swiss mountain climber. The Swiss went to South America in company with the well known mountain climber Fitzgerald to make the ascent of Aconcagua. The journey took three days, and on the way up they were attacked by condors and handicapped severely by the intense cold. Just before the top was reached Fitzgerald gave way and Zurbriggen finished alone. Mount Aconcagua is an extinct volcano, 23,910 feet above the ocean. The natives of the region believe that the spirit of fire dwelt upon its summit. Both Fitzgerald and Zurbriggen received much attention in Chile over their remarkable achievement, receptions having been given them in the large cities and other privileges accorded them.

A London millionaire possesses a bedroom upon which he has lavished an expenditure of $300,000. The decorating of the ceiling cost $15,000; the draperies of the room, which are composed of the finest Brussels net interwoven with silk, $10,000; the bedstead, which is of solid ebony, inlaid with gold filigree, over $100,000 more; the rest of the furniture, consisting of dressing tables of solid silver and chairs of the same material, consumed the remainder. The fortunate possessor of all this gorgeousness, brushes his hair, if he has any, with brushes the backs of which are of solid gold mounted with diamonds. There is also in the apartment a porcelain washstand, costing $5,000, toilet tables mounted in gold, and many other trifles of a similar nature.

IN THE HARBOR

Launch of Twin Gunboats and the Wreck of the Sunol.

A pair of twin gunboats were successfully launched at the Union Iron Works last week, taking their first dip into the bay together. It was a very pretty ceremony, the two little war-craft starting simultaneously and racing down the slippery ways into the harbor, side by side.

The Marietta led her sister and took the water a half length ahead of the Wheeling. The latter vessel sheered slightly, and ran her steel stern into the other's quarter, but did no harm besides giving the workmen on board a momentary panic.

The launching took place at 11 o'clok on the morning of the 19th inst., in the presence of the customary audience, which included General Forsyth, U. S. A., Admiral Kirkland, U. S. N., and a number of officers of the army and navy.

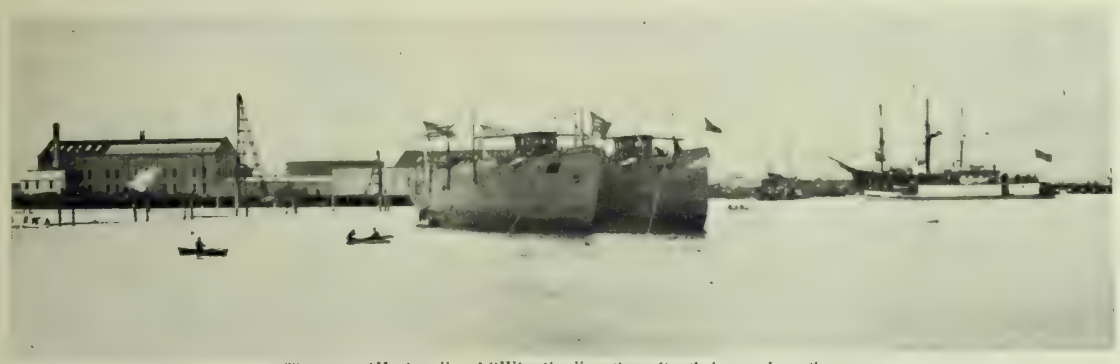
The office of godmother to the gunboats was performed by Miss Lucie S. Brown, who christened the Wheeling, and Mrs. H. Clifford More, who broke the champagne upon the Marietta's prow. Both Ohio and the city of Wheeling were well represented upon the stand of honor.

The two vessels are the first of a sextette of gunboats, each of 1,000 tons displacement. They are to be double-screws, and the contract requires a speed of twelve knots. The designs of the engines were made by the Union Iron Works, and approved by the Navy Department. The boats are to carry a battery of six 4-inch rapid-fire rifles, four 6-pounders and two 1-pound Hotchkiss guns. They will cost about $240,000 apiece, and will be completed ready for their trial trip in sixty days.

A much more serious collision than the little bump which was the only mishap of this launching, took place the afternoon before, when a frightful catastrophe was narrowly averted by the Captain of an incoming bark. Through some miscalculation of speed and cross-currents Captain Dye, of the stern-wheel river boat Sunol, ran his vessel across the right of way of the bark Olympic, which was coming up the harbor under half sail, and had his little steamer all but cut in two by the bow of the sailing vessel. The Sunol was laden with passengers, who were thrown into a panic at the collision, of which they had a few minutes' warning. A shocking loss of life was averted by the presence of mind of Captain Gibbs, of the Olympic, who kept his vessel forging ahead under topsails, thus impaling the wrecked steamer and holding her up until her passengers and crew were rescued. Some climbed up the bow of the bark, and all the rest were saved by the tugs in the vicinity. The Sunol filled and sank as soon as the bark was backed off by the tugs.

A watchman was placed upon the derelict to protect her from salvage hunters, and he spent the night in climbing out of the water as she rolled over. He had his knees beneath the surface when rescued, but stuck to his post like Casabianca until the wreckers arrived. The disabled steamer has since been raised, righted and towed to the docks, where she will be repaired and put into commission. The loss, including the damage to hull, machinery and cargo, comes to about $20,000, as the vessel was not insured.

Uncle Sam's new Gunboat "Marietta" just before the plunge into the bay



The twins "Marietta" and "Wheeling" resting after their race down the ways

Colonel John J. McCook, who was to have been Attorney-General in President McKinley's Cabinet, is a member of the family of fighting McCooks and is connected with the law firm of Alexander & Green of New York. He is the legal adviser of many corporations and trusts, and was born fifty-two years ago at Carrolton, in Ohio. When the war broke out he was sixteen years of age and a freshman in Kenyon College, at Gambier, O. He at once enlisted as a private in the Sixth Ohio Cavalry. In a few months he was an officer, and when he returned to college four years later to resume his studies he was a full rank major with the brevet of a colonel. When he finished at Kenyon he entered the Howard Law School, and after graduation located in New York, where he married the daughter of Henry M. Alexander. It was the fortunate marriage that gave him the start in his successful career of counsellor of the greatest moneyed interests of the country. Colonel McCook is a man of much personal charm, of admirable courtesy, and has the handsomest profile at the bar. He is a member of twenty of the leading clubs of New York, a trustee of Princeton University, and an elder in Dr. Hall's church. Some years ago he attained much note as prosecutor of Dr. Briggs in the famous Presbyterian heresy trial.

---

President McKinley has been fortunate in surrounding himself with a lot of competent men. Mr. Boyle, of his official household, who has been his private secretary ever since he was first elected Governor of Ohio, and who has shown singular discretion in the discharge of his difficult duties, will soon have one of the most desirable and important English consulates placed at his disposal. Captain H. O. Heistand, of the Regular Army, McKinley's confidential secretary, has been ordered to Washington by the Secretary of War to officiate in a similar capacity for the new executive. Still another member of the household, Joseph P. Smith, is also going to the National Capital. He is one of the most accomplished students of political history in the country, and his far-reaching and accurate knowledge of current politics and of active politicians have enabled him to be of great use to the new President in the bestowal of patronage.

In New York considerable attention has been given to the theatrical trust formed by nine prominent managers, and already fifty leading theaters of the country are under control of the combine. This syndicate practically rules plays and players, and by virtue of its power will soon force to the wall all the smaller managers, and the public as well as the profession will be at the mercy, or, as it sounds better, the discretion, of the monopoly managers of companies and of theaters.

FOR CRETE AND GREECE

Storm and shame and fraud and darkness fill the nations full with night:
Hope and fear whose eyes yearn eastward have but fire and sword in sight;
One alone, whose name is one with glory, see and seeks the light.

Hellas, mother of the spirit, sole supreme in war and peace,
Land of light, whose word remembered bids all fear and sorrow cease,
Lives again, while freedom lightens eastward yet for sons of Greece.

Greece, where only men whose manhood was as godhead ever trod,
Bears the blind world witness yet of light wherewith her feet are shod:
Freedom, armed of Greece, was always very man and very God.

Now the winds of old that filled her sails with triumph, when the fleet
Bound for death from Asia fled before them stricken, wake to greet
Ships full-winged again for freedom toward the sacred shores of Crete.

There was God born man, the song that spake of old time said: and there
Man, made even as God by trust that shows him nought too dire to dare,
Now may light again the beacon lit when those we worship were.

—ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
in the "Nineteenth Century."

The steamer "Sunol" after the "Olympic" "hadn't done a thing to her."

THE SCOOP

An Office Boy's Heroic Attempt to Become a "New Journalist.

"Supplement too wooden more crime cut out book page brighten lighten wire sales immediately must have fireworks. JOHN BILLIOU."

This dispatch lay on the Sunday Editor's desk when he got down to his office Monday noon. He had only had the supplement two weeks, and he had tried to make a record. He had held every desk in the office of the "Awakener." He had been sent up from the local room on the strength of a brilliant peek-hole interview. He had done the coast telegraph news, he had used the City Editor's desk—he had done special stuff to burn, he could do "leaders" with both hands at once, and his "heads" were so lively they almost jumped the sheet.

But then, everybody on the "Awakener" had done everything. Old Billiou held the wires, and made the staff puppets jump from room to room. No one bragged of his position on the "Awakener," for each knew the chessmen might be moved over night, and that to-day's pawn would be to-morrow's king—or queen, perhaps, for old Billiou played female space-writers for all they were worth.

The Sunday Editor swore softly to himself, softly because there was a woman reporter in the office—one of the few he respected. But he didn't worry much. No one worried much on the "Awakener." There was no credit to be gained except by a lucky stroke which might catch the whim of old Billiou.

There was no loyalty to the office—no esprit de corps, save that the whole staff hated the Managing Editor. It was their only bond. In the daily "council" the heads of departments quarreled for space like dogs over a bone.

There was a man named Guyson, who had been assigned to "brighten up the Supp." Guyson was strong on crime, and his idea was to "fill up bums on haschisch and turn 'em loose." But this would principally profit the Daily—and the Sunday Editor didn't propose to play into the hands of the Daily.

He and Guyson went over all the fakes—everything had been done. They didn't perspire much over the plot, for it didn't much matter anyway, for they might not strike Billiou's fancy if they did cook up a good thing, and if they did hit it off and sold 560,000 copies next week it wouldn't prevent their being put on the sporting work the day after.

The Supplement came out, with a "feature" to curl a man's hair, and "fillers" of every hue of coarseness, but the reported sales came to only 558,056 copies, duly certified to according to law. That Monday night the Sunday Editor said to the woman reporter—the only one whom he didn't call a "lady" reporter, by the way:

"See here, you're too good for this work—you'd better get out. I'm afraid I can't keep you much after this."

On Tuesday the Managing Editor received this telegram:

"Supplement reads like Pink Munsey Magazine do I own "Farmer's Friend" or "Awakener" put office boy on Sunday edition. JOHN BILLIOU."

Tuesday noon the ex-Sunday Editor took his place in the hall with a happy heart and took visitors' cards, and felt at last that he had a position of importance and influence. He spent his spare time in writing epithets on the plaster wall and guying the messenger boys.

The office boy was the only person on the "Awakener" who had preserved any ambition. He was young, and didn't know any better. So he, too, was happy, and sat down to the roll-top desk and lit a cigar.

"Now this is what I'll do," he mused. "I'll get a lady in pink tights to jump off the roof of the Boss Hotel at 2 a. m. for a dead-sure scoop, and I'll have a crowd there, too, so that the "Deadener" people can't call it a fake. And will write it up on Thursday and run about four acres of cuts and freak type, and heads three-inch caps!"

The new editor stood in with the chief, and got all the best men away from the Daily. He had outside artists do pictures, he bribed poets, and by Wednesday the matter was already—interviews with all the relatives of the heroine, physicians' certificates, autopsy reports, photographs of everyone in the Boss Hotel.

On Saturday night he had a regiment of reporters drilled for the work. Fire alarms were to be rung-in simultaneously from twenty boxes; there were men to yell and men to shoot pistols; there were men to spread the news in the swell part of town, so that the cultured classes should be interested. At 10 o'clock his deputies began to brag in the saloons, and at midnight the streets had begun to be a mass of restless people like an incipient mob.

The young Sunday Editor was eating a $3.50 dinner in the Boss Hotel grill room, when a messenger arrived from the Managing Editor. The boy took a gold piece tip away with him while the Sunday Editor slowly opened the paper.

"Have changed mind; don't dare risk boy at Sunday desk reinstate Hubbard make Supplement more conservative get college professors' ministers' symposium. "JOHN BILLIOU."

The ex-office boy jumped up with a curse three feet long. "By Greeley!" said the office boy. "I'll pull the whole thing off!"

And he did.

He called in every last reporter, he sent the heroine to bed, he telegraphed to the Fire Department, he notified the police.

But by this time the edition had been sent to press and was being run off at the rate of a hundred thousand an hour.

The Managing Editor had left instructions for special trains north, south, east and west. The towns for a hundred miles around were placarded with posters.

The sales that Sunday ran up to 972,000, but in spite of that old Balliou kicked about the things the "Deadener" said on Monday! JUSTIN STURGISS.

TESS OF THE D'URBEVILLES

Minnie Maddern Fiske's New York Success in the New Play.

NEW YORK, March 23.—It is rather late in the season for a genuine theatrical sensation, but New York has one of the first order, and for once the critics are unanimous, and the theater-goers with them. Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske has not merely made a "hit," she has not leaped into prominence, as the newspapers say, but she has conquered; she has taken the town by storm, for no one was looking for such a success as "Tess of the d'Urbevilles" has proved. The honors, indeed, are divided between Mrs. Fiske's conception of the character, and the play itself. There is but one more victory to be gained—a great American play given by a great American actress. When that play is written, may Minnie Maddern Fiske be there to play it, for she is easily the first American actress on the stage to-day.

We had thought that the reaction had come and the sex problem had given way to the romantic drama. We thought the soiled dove and the cigarette roue had retired for a long vacation; that the country was satiated with the discussion of the social problem, and that the time of the cavalier and the princess in disguise had come for a year or so, at least. But if there is one fact in life that will not down, it is the relations between men and women. Hide it out of sight of the Young Person as we may, it plays its part as the principal character in the drama of modern life. And if it is to be enacted, if woman's weakness and man's desire must be portrayed in the drama, it is as well to do it as cleanly and as truly as is done in "Tess of the d'Urbevilles," for it is the strongest presentment yet of the horror and shame of that injustice by which we accept one morality for men and another for women. No man who has witnessed the scene where Tess and her husband confess their past lives to each other can fail to feel a salutary contempt for the man who, after being forgiven for his own sins cannot pardon, in his turn, the wife's weakness. It is an epitome of the social question and man's superstitions anent women's virtue. The story of Tess, the victim of heredity, of environment and of poverty, is the story of a thousand women, who can bear just so much and no more. It is the story of the eternal conflict of free will and predestination, and it teaches the auditor to forbear to judge of the temptation or its resistance, so subtle and complicated are the influences that are out of sight—to hate the sin, but pity the sinner.

This is what Mrs. Fiske has achieved; to show a woman, not rising, a heroine, out of her environment and its temptations, but struggling and striving, the victim of some law of fate, erring and repenting, and falling again, eating of the fruit and paying the price of weakness, swept on in her inevitable career to the end, as in the old Greek tragedies. Her admirers compare her only to Duse; it was an artistic triumph, and she received a reward that has not been yet achieved by any American actress. The very fact that she speaks English was against her, for we must have Continental glamour to convince of real value nowadays.

The dramatization of the book failed chiefly in the last act. It was Hardy all the way through, but Hardy would never have mistaken the scene at Stonehenge for a climax to the tragedy. Here, where the Nemesis of her misdoings at last claims its victim, the effect of the drama is weakened by the cheap and meaningless forgiveness of her unworthy husband; it is not in such tardy condescension that a woman who has suffered as did Tess tastes the joy that robs death of his victory.

S. F. M.

The situation at Randsburg just at present is extremely interesting to mining men, who are anxious to determine whether the recent developments indicate a mere surface formation or are an index of immense deposits below. The latter hypothesis is, of course, accepted by the holders of claims, who are so intoxicated with the prospects of their surface bonanzas that it is hard to negotiate with them on a rational basis. As long as they refuse to bond their properties at anything like a reasonable value, there is little chance for the development of their properties. The deepest shaft in the district is sunk to about 150 feet, and it is quite impossible to decide from such indications whether or not the property is worth the exorbitant sum demanded. The region may prove another Cripple Creek, or it may be a second Transvaal. Until the depth of the formation is discovered, however, progress must be slow, inasmuch as there is no water available. Of course, if there is promise of a big devlopment, a water company will be formed and that problem solved, but in the meantime no one cares to experiment.

It seems strange that the Cretan imbroglio should figure as a factor in California's prosperity, yet such is undoubtedly the case. The disturbance of the English money market consequent upon the rumors of war has made it extremely difficult to gather together British sovereigns, and not a few important enterprises are languishing because of the difficulty in getting money with which to make the initial payment. There are in progress several big mining deals, over which all the preliminary work has been performed. Favorable reports have gone home, and only coin is needed to consummate them. The Turkish crisis has come at a most inopportune moment, the result being that experts sent out for investigations are living in luxurious idleness while waiting to hear from their principals.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Many and pitiful are the tribulations of a Governor. Though it is only whispered at Sacramento, and is a mystery at San Jose, the actual truth is that the idea of locating the feminine department of the Whittier Reform School at Santa Clara originated in the fertile mind of James Budd. The bill was drawn by him, the provisions arranged according to his desires, the patronage of the future institution had all been distributed according to political lines; in fact, everything had been arranged with no idea that any one would object to the location he had so adroitly selected. The site chosen adjoined the Santa Clara College, and one can imagine the feelings of the Jesuit Fathers when it was announced to them that they were to have as neighbors something like five hundred damsels of such varied degrees of saintliness, who were there to be subjected to the reforming process. They very promptly objected. The citizens of San Jose set up a howl, and then, to make the mess still worse, the "Examiner" took up the cause of the objectors, whereupon the Governor disclaimed the transaction, and announced that he would veto it if it came to him, which was very fine if not consistent. Another measure in which he was interested to the degree of drawing the measure was the coyote bill, which really was a very proper measure and certainly should have passed. I presume now, in the face of the scandal, he will reverse his former attitude and, possibly, deny the measure his approval.

***

What will the new tariff law do for California? The question is one that has a wide interest to all our commercial and industrial enterprises. It seems probable that the raisin men will be granted their demand that a sufficient tariff be put on foreign fruit to cover the entire cost of producing the domestic crop, in which case there is likely to be large fortunes made out of the business in the near future. The protective levy upon imported oranges will be a good thing for Southern California, especially as the competition with Florida has dwindled to almost nothing since the last frost in the peninsula State. The industry in Florida is almost crushed, and I am told that a number of her orange-growers have been buying land and planting groves in Mexico, but the tariff will, of course, drive them out again. Enough land is being planted with oranges in Southern California to supply the country in the near future, and leave a generous surplus for export. Seemingly, we in California never do anything without overdoing it. The tariff on wool will do much to revive an industry which, under the Wilson bill, has come almost to an end. One can buy grazing land now for $3 per acre, and the man who slides in and takes property of this character and grows wool will undoubtedly grow rich. Unfortunately for the wool men, the assistance comes a bit too late, because most of the big herds have been dissipated or killed for mutton. Those who have kept their sheep, however, will reap the advantage. The reverse side of the problem will be felt in the additional cost of cultivating arable lands and developing mines, for the price of agricultural and mining implements and supplies of all kinds will undoubtedly go up as soon as the new tariff goes into effect.

***

What seemed some time ago a misfortune for the Savings Banks that had taken outside real estate as security, is likely to prove soon a blessing in disguise. During the last four or five years these institutions have been compelled to take in immense tracts of land in various stages of cultivation, the owners of which were unable to meet their obligations. In acres they have become immensely rich. Indeed, it is said that the German Savings Bank, next to Miller & Lux, is the largest land-holder on the Pacific Coast. Just now, the advance in the price of grain, and the general movement in agriculture has created quite a lively business in ranch property, and it is not strange that the Savings Banks are the biggest dealers in country lands. Their sales are, in fact, much larger than those of most of the real estate agents put together. Shrewd country people are coming directly to these institutions to deal, and are obtaining excellent bargains, often getting the land for just what was loaned on it.

***

President Diaz could afford to give cards and spades to the political bosses of even a California "machine." He has made Mexico an up-to-date Republic. His manipulations of politics would do credit to an opera bouffe. When he comes up for election there is neither active nor suggested opposition, for it is not good for the health to oppose His Excellency. He is especially anxious to curb the influence of the Church in political questions, and at any interference with his plans by the clergy he puts his foot down with authority. An amusing example of this characteristic was given recently in one of the mining States on the occasion of a gubernatorial election. The principal candidate was a particularly popular man, both with the people and the prelates. The priests made an active canvass in his behalf, the religious influence was brought strongly to bear in every direction, and it seemed impossible to defeat him. One of the opposition candidate's supporters telegraphed the situation to Diaz two days before the election. On the morning of the election a telegram from the President came to the election officials: "Close polls. I will send a Governor." And he did. The new Governor is a capital fellow, and has made friends with all sides of the political situation in his State. In fact, Diaz seems to understand how to handle affairs in Mexico, on the basis of a benevolent despotism.

***

If ever any actor had good cause to call San Francisco a "jay" town, it is Mr. Henry Lee. He has not said so, however, though he is a little blue at the cool reception his "turns" have met with upon the Orpheum stage. For thoroughly artistic finish, for accuracy of detail and subtle rendering, his imitations have never been equaled

HENRI ALBERS

MLLE ANDREE SAVINNE

MLLE L OBERTY

M. MASSART

A QUARTETTE OF FRENCH OPERA COMPANY STARS

Photos by Thors

CAMILLA URSO
THE EMINENT VIOLIN VIRTUOSE
Thors, photo

OTIS SKINNER
WHO MAKES HIS APPEARANCE AT THE BALDWIN NEXT MONDAY
Morrison, photo, Chicago

MRS. RUSS WHYTALL
WHO DOES THE HEROINE IN "FOR FAIR VIRGINIA"
Dana, photo, New York

in this town. His costumes and appointments are remarkably faithful copies of the originals they represent, from the rosary of the Pope to the great Danish hound that accompanies Prnce Bismarck. Of all his impersonations, that of Rudyard Kipling is the cleverest—it is a long way above the comprehension of the "average" spectator at a vaudeville show. The lines written for the several parts are characteristic and well delivered, and the musical accompaniment is also well chosen. But an Orpheum audience does not like the waits between the acts, and short as they are, considering the thorough change of costume that Mr. Lee makes, the gallery gods get bored and impatient at the delay. Why might not Mr. Lee work with a partner so that one could make his change while the other is performing, and give a show with the curtain up all the time?

***

An interesting characteristic of Mr. Robert Fitzsimmons was told me by one of the men who serve the hero at the Baldwin restaurant. It seems that the champion is particularly fond of shrimps, but being a man with strong jaws and an appetite more vigorous than discriminating, he finds the shells rather heighten the pleasures of mastication, and he eats his shrimps without stopping to peel them. Everything goes with Bob—whiskers, head and tail. The favorite beverage of Corbett's conqueror is ice-water flavored with tomato ketchup with a dash of tabasco sauce. This is vouched for as an actual fact. Fitz is no sensitive plant, and his digestion is above reproach.

***

A very important event in the development of the industries of the State is the opening of the great coal mines at Corral Hollow. The coal, I am told, is of a fairly good quality, and can be disposed of at four dollars per ton, leaving a good profit for the owners. They cannot, indeed, fail to make an immense fortune out of their investment, which promises to be one of the best in California. The veins have enormous quantities to draw from, and are so situated as to make it possible to land the coal here at very low rates. It seems, indeed, that the building of the company's railroad was rather a superfluous enterprise, seeing that the Southern Pacific was willing and ready to make terms for transportation at most reasonable rates. The line from the mines to Stockton has been carefully constructed at very great expense, and is an excellent property. It will be made to pay its expenses by the local traffic. Everything related to the new proposition is designed to earn a profit for the investors. The immense electric plant, which is to use the coal screenings, will prove a profitable thing, and should materially aid the interests of the various Oakland enterprises that can readily be made to take power from it. The advantage to our various California enterprises of being able to obtain coal for four dollars per ton is incalculable, and will make a great difference in the cost of power and electricity throughout the State.

***

The next big fortune in California belongs to the man who finds a good sandstone quarry within a reasonable distance of San Francisco. Strange to say, our supply of stone comes for the most part from Oregon and Arizona, and though the Sierras are in sight, the Lord has not created them of material which makes a brilliant architectural effect. The gray sandstone out of which the Spreckels building is being constructed is quarried near Salem, Ore., and carried by railroad to Coos Bay, whence it is brought here on schooners. Owing to the geological formation of the quarry, the stone is extracted at great expense, and though a good rate is obtained for it, both the supply and margin of profit are small. The same rock is used in the Parrott building, and if enough could be obtained it would undoubtedly be used in other structures. The dignified effect which is obtained by stone buildings is beginning to be appreciated by our wealthy citizens, and it is probable that most of the new structures erected hereafter will be of stone or at least of some better material than brick or wood. The Ferry building is being built of Colusa stone, but though it is very good of its kind, the supply is also limited by the nature of the strata. It is hard to get at, and the constructors are much handicapped by the difficulty of getting the proper sized blocks. Just now the State is pretty well supplied with granite from the quarries at Raymond. Some few years ago there came here two young Scotchmen, the McClellan brothers, who were thoroughly versed in stonecutting, and had plenty of enterprise. They had only sufficient money to purchase the quarries, but none to develop them. They succeeded, however, in obtaining credit, and went ahead, something like eighty thousand dollars in debt. But their industry prospered, and they are now supplying the finest granite throughout the State and have an immense establishment. At the present time they are supposed to be worth about one million dollars, all of which was made by their own intelligence and cleverness. The quality of stone they turn out may be seen in the new bridge at Golden Gate Park.

BOSWELL JR.

THE "HELLO" GIRL

The Story of a Black-Frocked Sisterhood Who Must Not Smile.

THE MONITOR AT HER DESK WATCHING THE OPERATORS

If I were Alice Rix I might begin my vivisection of the "'Hello'-Girl" in this wise:—

"When I was shown through the great cigarette manufactory at Sevilla, there was a battery of ten thousand eyes to be faced—and most of them cross-eyes at that—there were ten thousand red lips that whispered 'uno centimo, senora' when the matron's back was turned, and the buzzing of their comments sprung up around me as if I had disturbed an industrious colony of flies. But here, though there were blondes and brunettes—both 'pronounced' and 'decided'—sitting close to the boards, elbow to elbow, like unsocial travelers at the lunch counter of a ten minute railway station, there were no roses stuck coquettishly into the hair of the girls, and no babies rocking in the cradles on the floor, as the little tubes fell, flip, flip, into the baskets—but here the operators wore little helmets on their heads, they muttered into little receivers hanging in front of their mouths, and played on the switchboard with both hands. They were soberly frocked in black or dark blue, and they looked neither to the right nor the left, and murmured only 'Number?' with varying accents up and down the line."

Alice Rix, too, would have been sure to see some girl jump nervously when nine shutters dropped at once, and signal, with a white face, for a substitute, and go down to the "hospital," and, hurrying after her, might get the "story" of a life—for girls do lose their heads sometimes in the strain of the busy hours, when they are attacked, seven to one, by females who "have been waiting ten minutes," and male rattlers of the telephone-hook—and it doesn't help a sick headache much either to watch two hundred numbers and remember what to do for a "switch" telephone, and what for a "ticket," and what for a "nickel"—besides the regular service.

But I'll not steal her pathos, though I will say that I've stopped rattling the telephone. I'd as lief ask a conundrum of the man who is adding figures. For I have met the young lady who answers me every morning and performs the gentle office of mediator betwixt me and Miss Vivette, and sweetly forbears to listen to our conversation. She showed me how I drop in on her every day and oftener, for I am, to her, a little white Maltese cross named "81" that jumps down and lights a red light, or is it Miss Vivette who lights the red light? I forget, but I know that something burns until the talk is over and we are shut up with a snap. She knows very well how often I call up West 9901, but she was very nice about it and took no advantage of the fact, and the next time I have to wait listening to the whirring crescendo that precedes the matutinal climax, I know that the girl at the board is doing her best to satisfy others almost as impatient as I, but that we all dropped in on her together and she may be a little rattled by the unexpected company.

If the girls hadn't been so pretty, no doubt I would have learned more about the business, for I'm sure I have a vague memory of spring-jacks and plugs and switches and boards and things that should be collated and boiled down into print. But it would be easier to describe a warship, and not quite as interesting. The fact that there were one hundred and fifty young ladies there, talking to men to whom they had never been introduced, strikes the young man who ventures in as being interesting enough in itself. One is likely to be jealous of the spasmodic tete-a-tetes, and try to steal a smile while the manager is reciting his explanations. But there was never a smile for me—nor for the spicy little conversation a girl might be rash enough to "plug" into, either—for there was the monitor at the desk in the centre watching for just such a demonstration of interest to cut into the eavesdropping herself and call up the offender. It is the chief operator, indeed, who has the credit of the office in her hands. She know just how long it takes each girl to make each connection, she knows if they smile, if they talk, if they yawn, if they forget, or if they make a little bit of a two-cent mistake. She has been an operator herself, and she knows all the tricks—how to head off complaints to "600 Special," how to get even with the brute who rattles his 'phone—she knows everything, or she thinks she does, and the girls come to think so too, and though an operator's "best young man" calls her up and proposes marriage, she must say only "Number?" and cut him off, or even connect him with some rival who has more leisure.

The chief operator sits on a throne in front of the line of girls, watching a little ballet of flashing numbers on her desk. If a number doesn't make its exit quickly enough and put out its light as it goes, the owner of that number is not doing "sharp, quick and accurate board-work," as the rules say, and she is not likely to be promoted, for it is a competitive system, and the cleverest operator gets the plum—each girl is trying to become a chief operator herself, and her fingers are all ready with the plug before the annunciator calls her and the little voice in her ear murmurs "Main two double-six five!" The express system does not provide for poor operators, and there are no dull tables, say the regulations.

The chief operator may cut into conversations on the line all she care to with no one to watch her, to see whether she smiles or not, but of course she doesn't listen except when it is necessary—when a five-party-line-subscriber has been talking for more than five minutes, for instance, in which case it is her place to transfer the franchise to one of the four other contestants, or when a subscriber is put on "test"—which is what becomes of you if you attempt to argue with one of her subordinates. And then she has the blessed privilege of talking back, for it is forbidden to an ordinary girl ever to have the last word—she may say only "Number?" "Number?" all day long. She is not even allowed to say, "Line is busy—call again!" or "Subscriber called for does not reply," but the phonograph does that for her when she pokes it up with her forefinger, and the irritable female at the other end of the line calls her rude, and reports her to 600 special. Conversations with subscribers even about a switch is strictly prohibited. "The use of an extra unnecessary word marks the distinction between good and poor operators, is easily detectable from the monitor's desk, and affects the operator's standing and advancement." So say the rules and regulations.

And if the chief operator is very good indeed, and the tall young lady who has the right of walking up and down and looking wise, decides to get married, she may become assistant manager some day herself, and have a desk of her own outside, with no plaguey little plugs and wires and numbers staring at her, and she finds she knows the talking capacity of the whole city. And out of years of experience with their calls she divides up the tables, and equalizes the number of plugs, so that each girl may get a chance to breathe and adjust her hairpins at least once every five minutes, and she studies the problem of "overflow boards," so that when those nine frantic subscribers call at once they may be waited on at another counter without delay, for even telephone girls have only two hands apiece.

But by this time she has nearly forgotten her apprenticeship—how she was "broken in" and sat watching the operator at her side all one day with her own hands in her lap; how she was instructed and reinstructed in the students' class, and at last was permitted to answer on a little kindergarten board, one subscriber at a time; how she became a substitute after two months or so, and learned to change telephone caps with a regular operator so quickly as not to cut off a single call. And how, after six months, perhaps, she had a regular board of her own, and gradually came to handle plugs by instinct, and felt, rather than thought, what to do when the rush came, and how to recognize the difference in sound between the drop of a nickel in the slot and on the outside of the box—the difference between the buzzer and a comb on the mouthpiece of the transmitter—how to remember to push the button of the "5 cents a switch" telephones and to register the ticket machines—and keep her sister, the "B operator" busy connecting up with numbers called for.

And I hope she has forgotten, too, how some times the plugs and the annunciators danced before her eyes in a streaked blur, and the wires seemed to squirm; and how, that day after her brother died, the whole familiarity of the board suddenly vanished and she lost the automatic grip of her fingers, and the little cams and levers in front of her had no meaning. It was as if one who had known French so well as to be unconscious of the effort in talking lost the whole vocabulary in an instant. She was all right after the forenoon recess in the library, but she never saw No. 13 drop on the 700 board after that without a little gasp of terror, and she got herself changed to another table as soon as she was reinstated.

It is different in the "Sunset" room, where the operators have to listen to every conversation, to cut off when they are through, or help along the deaf and the stupid. I tried to find the one who helped out too well with a talk of mine once with Miss Oakland's mother. I know I was very careful to say Miss Gertrude, but our interlocutor made me seem very much too familiar. There was a Sunset girl who was timing the talk with a stop-watch and rubber stamp; there were the ten-minute tickets that proved 6289's talk to have been much more prolonged than he seemed afterwards to believe, and the record of the experience of a gentleman whose wife in Los Angeles was so delighted that baby had a tooth that the fact that she was describing it at the rate of $1.50 a minute seemed a minor detail.

NO. 600. THE BUREAU OF INFORMATION

THE TIMEKEEPER IN THE SUNSET ROOM

OPERATORS' LIBRARY DURING FORENOON RECESS

And there, downstairs, was the lunch room where I lost my nerve at last before a hundred eyes that were resting from the sight of the annunciators, and they wreaked their vengeance on poor me and gave no quarter. And there were fifty pretty mouths that were pretending to eat, and not to comment upon the only man in the room. There was a little sign in the room that politely requested the ladies not to discuss the company's business at lunch. But it did not forbid them to discuss me, and so I got out as soon as I could.

"And here," as Alice Rix might say, "it was not so much different from the cigarette factory in Sevilla, after all, for here the girls were permitted to smile as much as they pleased!"

GELETT BURGESS.

A Pittsburgh dry goods firm recently sent in an advertisement to a local paper to the effect that they were going to sell a number of wrappers at 98 cents. In handling the forms the figure 9 dropped out. A tremendous crowd of women were at the store early the next morning, some coming shortly after daybreak to get these wonderfully cheap 8-cent wrappers. The firm realized that a mistake had been made, but it kept faith with its patrons, and every wrapper was sold, but a bill for $405 was sent in to the newspaper to cover the loss. It was paid without a protest.

MR. ARTHUR ATKINS

The composers of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci" have each written a new opera. The title of Mascagni's is "Iride." It is founded upon a Japanese story, and the music is strongly Japanese in coloring. Leoncavallo's work is entitled "La Vie de Boheme." It his taken him two years to compose the opera, the libretto of which is founded upon Henri Muryer's familiar novel. Both operas are intensely dramatic, and have tragic endings. A project has been under way to bring Mascagni and Leoncavallo to America at the head of an Italian opera company, to produce cycles of their compositions.

At the investigation of Cecil Rhodes and the Jameson raid, the Prince of Wales was an interested spectator. It will interest many Americans to know that His Royal Highness wore a long frock coat of a dark gray material, trousers of the same pattern of cloth, a double-breasted waistcoat of black cashmere, with a white spot on it, no watchchain, a black and white tie fastened in a bow, a collar with the points well turned down, a tall hat with a narrow hatband, and exceptionally curly brim, light brown kind gloves and patent leather shoes. A servant carried an overcoat for the Prince, which was thickly lined with astrachan fur.

Emperor William of Germany is finally convinced that he is doomed to die by the bullet of an anarchist, and as a measure of defense invariably carries a loaded pistol whenever he leaves his palace. It seems that this sort of a death has been predicted to the Emperor not once, but many times, and he is evidently determined to be prepared to return the compliment.

Of all Queen Victoria's daughters, the Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, alone retains attractiveness of her younger days. She possesses considerable ability as a sculptress, was a pupil of Boehm, and has added much to her income by executing statues and busts of the different royalties. The statue of the Queen recently unveiled in Kensington Gardens is from her fair hands.

A PIEDMONT PAINTER

The Work of a Young Artist Who Has an Original Point of View.

The work of an artist who sees for himself, and that in a new way, uninfluenced by the traditions of the schools, has usually a merit that is distinct from the qualities of technique. It has a charm, too, when honest rather than an end-of-the-century striving after effect, that is independent of the artistic value of the work. It is almost always the case, however, that the discoverer becomes the master of the new territory—the genius that invents is more likely to succeed than the lagging imitators. The collection of paintings exhibited last Saturday at the studio of Mr. Bruce Porter proved that California landscape has a phase heretofore unseen by our artists, and that Mr. Arthur Atkins has made his own the familiar aspects of the Oakland hills. Of the thirty paintings shown, the majority are studies made near Piedmont, but all are characteristic of the vicinity, full of the bigness of the hills, swinging in simple lines and full of the repose of dignified masses. Three of the pictures shown had been bought by Mr. Fred Yates; of the remainder were those loaned by Mr. C. B. Bishop, Mr. James Gibney, Mr. W. K. Vickery, Mr. W. Romer, and others.

What is most significant in Mr. Atkins' work is the indication of promise that is shown in the originality, simplicity and strength of his paintings. Although only 23 years of age, he has shown himself certain of his point of view and possession of a self-control that will be likely to preserve his independence in the face either of praise, or the authority of the Parisian masters. He is not likely to lose his head, for his pictures convince one that with all his modesty he is sure of his point of view, and stands upon his own feet.

The quality of Mr. Atkins' work that gives it most artistic value is this very freshness of translation. His paintings have a certain architectural composition that indicate intent, and an extremely artistic intent. The lines are well designed, and the pictures fill the canvas in an interesting way. His color, too, is his own; his palette is almost meagre, but while true to nature he sees his landscape on canvas, not photographically. He has tried his hand at producing art rather than coloring nature. No one who knows the Piedmont hills can fail to be convinced by these canvases. The subjects would seem monotonous but for the boldness of Mr. Atkins' treatment. The great sweep of drumlins, the harsh accent of the eucalyptus tress, have been waiting for his brush. The scenes have seemed almost too big, too simple to be painted. They are big in his pictures, too, and yet honestly attempted with a very admirable naiveness that will enable them to hold their own with any landscapes that have been painted with more technique.

Mr. Atkins is to leave for Paris early next month, where he is to study. He will do well to hurry. A young artist of 23 years of age, who has been painting for little more than a year, and sells thirty landscapes in thirty days, is an anomaly in California, and if he misses having his head turned in the operation he is a greater one still. But though he has won his fame a little too easily for the proper schooling of genius, a few years in Paris will settle that, and meanwhile he is himself, no doubt, more surprised at his success than any one.

Victorien Sardou is a firm believer in spiritualism, and has been, according to his own statement, a wonderful medium for forty years, and in his new play, "Spiritisme," puts forth his belief in the unseen very plainly, and the dramatist claims that it is the first time that any one has dared to put spiritualism on the stage.

PIEDMONT HILLS PAINTED BY MR. ARTHUR ATKINS

A DEBUTANTE'S DIARY

Entertainments and Happenings In Town and Out.

I am becoming disgusted, dear Diary, with the dreariness of the long Lenten days, so lacking in interest and incident. I wish some one would get up those needle and thimble parties they had two years ago in aid of the orphanages. Mrs. Salisbury, I think, arranged them then, and, Leila says, they got rid of some of the time. Now, all one can do is to go for a walk or a ride. I usually stroll down town two or three times a week for variety's sake. It is quite amusing. I find I hardly know my city, after all. And, dear me, how many poor artists there are among the women. They all paint—positively, they treat their faces as sign painters treat the fences. First they daub a quantity of camelline or velveta, then dab a blotch of rouge on either cheek and on their lips. Then dip the brush into some black stuff, and generously pile it on eyes and brows. After that take the powder puff and go over the whole surface again. I thought once that that sort of thing was confined to vulgar women and second-rate actresses, but, alas, I find it is merely a question of quantity. At the opera the other night most of the women around me had had recourse to the rouge pot. I hate it so, especially when young girls do it. It is as superfluous as wearing solitaires going to market or making cake with all one's rings on.

On Thursday night papa and I went to "Cavalleria Rusticana." It was pretty good, and the house was well filled, but I preferred Emma Juch. Do you know, she seemed so much more in touch with the play. Then, too, the stage setting was poor. Fancy a Sicilian village with a street of brown stone houses! I could not reconcile that. On Saturday afternoon I stole off to the matinee at the Baldwin, and found everybody there. You would never have dreamt it was Lent. I was so pleased, as I hate to be the only sinner, and to find I was one of many was comforting. Leila and mamma went to Trebelli, and found it most delightful. Leila continues to go to church every afternoon. On some days she goes to Grace, on others to Trinity, and again to St. Luke's, as she says even in religion variety is the spice of life. It seems there are not nearly so many worshipers as there were a year ago. After the matinee we all went to Mr. Bruce Porter's reception, which was charming. The studio is quite unexpected in its style—does not at all resemble one's preconceived ideas. You know, one fancies a studio more on the novelist's scheme—a great big room with skylights and windows, draped with Oriental rugs and things. The floor of stained oak, with handsome bear skins thrown over it; divans, dust and bric a brac galore. Mr. Porter's, however, is primarily a workshop, not a show room, and is infinitely more attractive, I think. However, that is a matter of opinion; some of the girls were quite disappointed. Mr. Atkins' pictures were in a little room off the main studio, and were really charming. There were several views of the different places near here, familiar spots, and were exquisitely done. Little bits of Oakland, Piedmont and Thermal Vale. A big picture over the mantel I particularly liked. Mr. Porter's windows I simply went wild over. The St. Christopher window intended for Mr. Worcester's church is an exquisite effect. Then there were so many interesting people, as well as the crowd of fashionables.

In the evening we went to the opera, but as the dialogue bored papa we left after the third act. On Sunday I went out with a party to Trocadero, and found a crowd there. We went on the drag. I noted there were several wheeling and riding parties, the Hoopers, Webster Jones and a number of others. They have an excellent restaurant there now, and we had a delicious little luncheon.

Is it not too bad about the Cohen house in Alameda having been destroyed? Ethel feels dreadfully about it. They lost so many beautiful things that they can never replace.

So Aileen Goad is to be married in April—very quietly, I am told; no fuss or feathers. She does not believe in an ostentatious wedding, wherein she shows her good judgment, I think. She has spent much time choosing her trousseau, which is a perfect dream. The lingerie especially delighted me.

The only evenings in the week I have any real pleasure are on Tuesdays. You know that is Mrs. Salisbury's evening at home, and we all go. Nearly all the members of the Fortnightly drop in, and we dance. In popularity these affairs really rival any of the ante-Lenten dances. Mrs. Salisbury is a splendid hostess and understands the art of making young people happy. The floor is lovely—you know that big, glorious music room of the Younger's. All the debutantes come, and wear simple organdie frocks. If only every night were Tuesday I should not mind if Lent lasted forty weeks instead of forty days. So now, for another week, adieu. MISS CRICKET.

Quite the most interesting engagement of the season thus far is that of Mr. A. R. Baldwin and Miss Jessie Glascock of Oakland. Mr. Baldwin is a bright and active young man with a future. He is well known in society on both sides of the bay. Miss Glascock is the daughter of ex-Mayor Glascock of Oakland. She is a very pretty and very graceful girl, who has been a belle ever since her debut.

It will interest prospective residents of the Hotel Del Monte to learn that the institution has been converted to what is known as the European plan. The big dining room has been rearranged, and, the Lord be thanked that those huge, square tables have been relegated to obscurity. In their place are tables of varying degrees, from the tete-a-tete tables, at which two may sit and be happy alone, to large round tables, at which one's family may be accommodated. There are other changes also. The old reading room

MISS ROSALIE NEUSTADTER
Whose engagement to Mr. Albert Ehrman was recently announced has been converted into a cafe, and a special kitchen is attached to it something on the style of the Palace Grill, so that those who want their chops and steaks cooked under their own supervision are afforded that blissful privilege. It is not intended, however, that these changes will involve any essential difference in prices, but they will certainly be more comfortable for the guests. Excellent as the alterations seem, I fear the management may live to regret them. The set menu was ever an opportunity for the kickers to kick, and now that they are privileged to order whatsoever they please they are absolutely deprived of objections, and will therefore be reduced to the unhappy condition of silence.
Thors photo

There is more building activity at Burlingame than elsewhere throughout the State. The Kruttschnitts, Crocketts and Mountford Wilsons have completed their purchases, and their mansions are under way. Frank Van Trees, a scion of the late Page Brown's office, is at work on plans for their homes, and the sylvan solitudes will soon resound with the clamor of hammer and adze. This activity is but a symptom of a vigorous move in the direction of San Mateo, which is destined undoubtedly to be the fashionable suburb of San Francisco. I hear of new people inquiring about the environment, and I should not be a bit surprised if there were a dozen villas in process of construction there before the summer begins.

Of the suburban hotels, the Mateo seems destined to receive a generous share of the summer patronage this season. I hear of some very well-known people who have taken cottages, and there are any number of applicants for rooms. The prospects for an excellent season are most encouraging. The luck of the Hotel Rafael seems to have changed since it came into the possession of General Warfield. There is an excellent prospect that most of the rooms will be occupied this winter, and, indeed, a generous attendance is already a certainty.

The event to-night is the formal opening of the new home of the Cosmos Club, which will be christened to the uses of its members with appropriate ceremonies. It should prove a very interesting event.

***

There is a keen interest among the young people in Oakland and San Francisco over the Bal Masque to be given in the Ebell Hall on the evening of Tuesday, April 20th. The lady patronesses are Mrs. Drown, Mrs. McNutt, Mrs. Orestes Pierce, Mrs. Glascock, Mrs. Spiers, Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. John B. Mhoon. It is to be a subscription affair, but only those who receive invitations will be able to procure tickets. The ladies purpose making it very smart, and all the young people have been requested to wear fancy dress.

Outside of this and a few church entertainments Oakland has been exceedingly dull during the past week, and bids fair to continue so until the close of the Lenten season. Afterwards a number of subscription parties are to be given in aid of the Woman's Exchange by the lady directors. Mrs. Sharon is to give a tea; Mrs. C. W. Randall of Piedmont a garden party. The congregations of St Paul's and St. John's churches have decided to remain separate, and the latter meet and hold services in a hall. St. Paul's church has taken a great stride in popular favor since the advent of the girl choir, who not only sing well, but look charming in their mortarboard, capes and long cloaks. On every Sunday evening the church is packed, and the collections have augmented to a considerable extent. Mrs. Robert Watt gave a sewing bee last Friday afternoon for the benefit of the West Oakland free kindergarten. Each guest was fined twenty cents, and was obliged to promise to work for the children. Refreshments were passed during the afternoon. These sewing bees are to be quite fashionable, and several of the ladies nave announced their intention of following in Mrs. Watt's wake. By the way, the latest idea in Oakland is the "Grandmothers' Club" started by Mrs. Costigan and Mrs. Wheaton. All the young grandmothers are to meet every week, the object being to sew and discuss the respective merits of their grandchildren.

On Friday last Mrs. Peter E. Bowles gave a smart little dinner to the Dinner Club. The table was daintily decorated in pinks. Very enjoyable, too, was the reception given by the Alpha Chapter of the Theta Club Fraternity last week at the home of Mrs. W. H. Creed. The string quartette gave several selections, and the remainder of the evening was passed in dancing. A jolly little reception was given by Mrs. Shelby Martin to celebrate the anniversary of her marriage on Thursday evening last. The home was prettily decorated with spring flowers.

Coaching parties enjoy a marked degree of popularity across the bay, and are among the favorite pastimes of the younger set. A particularly jolly affair was chaperoned by Mrs. J. C. Campbell last week. They went to Castro Valley, and found the roads quite good in spite of the recent rains. Misses Campbell, Curtis, Dibble, Otey and Lathrop and Mr. Jones, Mr. Dibble and Mr. Carmen were among the party.

An interesting engagement is that of Miss Rose May and Mr. Carl Dahlstrom that has recently been announced. Miss May is a pretty little blonde. Mr. Dahlstrom is a Norwegian, and after the wedding, which is to take place in April, purposes taking his bride to Norway to visit his relatives there.

A most unique collection of curios, comprising some very ancient Bible papers dating from 1661, old coins, currency, carvings, rare corals and shells, ancient Aztec pottery, cabinets of minerals containing specimens of gold, copper and other ores from all parts of the world, a grandfather's clock one hundred years old, skins of moose, elk and reindeer, is to be sold at public auction commencing on Tuesday at seven-thirty and continuing until the collection is all sold. The collection is of great value, and promises to draw buyers from all those interested in antiques. The collection can be examined and catalogues obtained at 543 California street after March 22nd. The sale is to be conducted by William Butterfield, the well-known auctioneer.

In these days of sackcloth and ashes the monotony of time is relieved by a box of Ice Cream Chocolates—a superior make, prepared only by Gruenhagen, 20 Kearny street. Try his latest novelty, "The Log Cabin."

S. Strozynski, 24 Geary street. Expert European hairdressers and cutters employed; no apprentices; prices equal to others. Artistic hair work and shampooing by a modern process. Telephone Main 5697.

Maison Tortoni French Rotisserie, 111 O'Farrell street. Private dining rooms, banquet hall. S. Constantini, proprietor.

Bank Stock paper relieves, strengthens and saves the sight. Made in five different qualities. The Mysell-Rollins Co., 22 Clay street.

Dr. H. G. Young—Bridges and teeth without plates a specialty. 1841 Polk street.

Maillard's Chocolates, half and one-pound boxes, at Roberts', Polk and Bush.

For health and strength: Damiana Bitters.

The Maison Riche serves the best lunch in the city for 75 cents.

Dr. C. W. Decker, Dentist, 806 Market Street

Rubber heels: Easy walking, no fatigue. At Dietle's, 235 Bush street.

The Original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

The Maison Riche serves an elegant dinner at popular prices.

VICTORIOUS AGAIN

GAIL BORDEN'S

Eagle Brand of Condensed Milk

PRONOUNCED by the CHEMIST of the BOARD OF HEALTH to be THE PUREST, RICHEST and BEST An analysis of Dr. Wenzel, the Chemist of the Board of Health, shows GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND to have nearly double the strength of many brands of condensed milk or cream, and stronger than any brand now before the public.

The record of half a century again confirmed, showing GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND to be without a flaw, and stronger, purer than any brand of condensed milk on the market.

Consumers should note that Prof. Wenzell reports that all the alleged brands of condensed creams are not condensed cream and are nothing but evaporated milk, and are greatly inferior in richness and quality to GAIL BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND.

NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

DRAMATIC NOTES

The Alcazar company does not appear to advantage in "The Strategists." Few of the players do justice to themselves or to their parts, even George Osbourne falls below his usual level. The piece itself, although humorous at times, is out of date, and altogether too far-fetched and improbable. Two of the best bits of work in the performance are the Capsicum Pepper of Gordon Foster and the Rev. John Mildman of Charles Wyngate. If such an Irishman as F. B. Clayton's Terence O'Flam ever existed he should either be confined in a mad house or carried about in a cage with a circus. May Buckley made a pretty Araminta, and Adele Belgarde looked and dressed charmingly as Nellie Howard.

